NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OUR present issue contains the Introduction and First Lesson of Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training. The facts and principles will, we believe, bring new light to many respecting the memory and its working. It is questionable if so much information on the subject has ever been compressed into so small a compass in any language. It is of the utmost importance that these Facts and Principles should be thoroughly studied ; and although it may seem a trial of patience to wait for the next Lesson for a fortnight, we are sure that Mr. Kilburn has been well advised in giving no less than the time available during twelve working days for meditation and study and exercise in these foundation Facts and Principles.

Our readers will bear with us in pressing upon them our request that they will endeavour by every means in their power to interest their friends in this special feature of THE CHRISTIAN in the New Year, and so seek to extend its sphere of usefulness. And not on this account only, but on account of its evangelical, and evangelistic and missionary character, and as a medium for the interchange of thought on every Christian subject. We beg our readers' prayers for our work through the year now entered.

There are few things more difficult to retain with advancing years than a faith in the power to make new beginnings. Young people are full of good resolutions with the New Year, and they go cheerily into its early days, hoping to fulfil them all. As life advances, the memory of so many broken vows tends to paralyse us, and thus many pass into the New Year under a cloud of discouragement rather than an impulse to well-doing. Against this feeling we should fight hard, and "It is never too late to mend" for anyone, except the man who has lost faith in the power of God to help him. A more excellent way than binding down the will to an elaborate programme of reformation is to give ourselves into the hands of One who can carry out all betterment. No man was ever saved by good resolutions; the best can only attain victory by self-surrender, which is the beginning of life.

The Welsh pulpit has had more influence on the national life than that of any other country, and this largely because there has never failed a supply of eloquent and earnest preachers. One of these has just passed away in the person of Dr. Herber Evans, Principal of Bangor Theological College. He was one of the very noblest pulpit orators of his generation, and had immense influence among his fellow-countrymen. His style of preaching was a marvellous mixture of the pathetic and impetuous ; and his favourite themes were the sympathy and love of the Saviour, and the mystery of his Cross. Dr. Evans had often been tempted across the English border, but though he could preach with great power in English, and had held the chairmanship of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, he steadfastly refused to forsake his native land for the best churches in London, or the pulpit itself for Parliament. He acted on the principle that the pulpit gives a man fitted for its demands the very best channel for spiritual influence ; and he died in the assurance of having done noble service in his day and generation.

A short time since the writer sat down at the Lord's Table with an evangelical and spiritual body of Christians. The communion with the Lord and his people was refreshing, but the wine was fiery, and had he had a companion to whom drink was a temptation, it would have been felt to be a solemn duty to advise him not to taste it. Even if it were true that the unfermented juice of the grape were not wine, that would not touch the question, for the word "wine" is never used in connection with the Lord's Supper. It is always "the fruit of the vine," or the "cup." The hymn which says :—

> The juices of the Living Vine
> Were pressed to fill the cup, does not suggest a fermented, much less a fortified, wine.

Can there be any doubt that God's faithful Apostle Paul would have extended to the cup at the Lord's Supper the principle and exhortation : "Let us follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another." "Overthrow not for meat's sake the work of God." "All things, indeed, are clean; howbeit it is evil for that man who eateth with offence. It is good not to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.... We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." Will not the strong brethren, for pity's sake, use the juice of the grape, the fruit of the vine, according to the words of the Lord Jesus, instead of the fermented wine which He did not ordain ?

We turned in, on the first Lord's Day morning of the New Year, to a meeting where, at the Lord's Table, the "cup" contained the unfermented juice of "the fruit of the vine," In conversation at the close with the presiding minister, touching upon various experiences, pleasant or painful, he said: "We have a solvent for all our difficulties. Some of our sisters are women of prayer and of faith in God. When any trial arises we name it to them, and in secret as well as in their meetings they lay it definitely before Him, and it is soon removed." A church blessed with women of this pattern must be a blessing wherever it is found.

Our friend also gave us to understand that their Saturday night prayer-meeting was like a well of water, refreshing them during the coming day and week. Amongst much that is saddening there is not a little that is bright; and the Saturday night prayer-meeting is in many places a living institution. At the East London Tabernacle it has been for many years one of the principal meetings of the week, with hundreds in attendance.

We are rejoiced to know that such meetings are on the increase. The coming revival must come by the way of prayer. For "Thus saith the Lord, Make this valley full of ditches. For thus saith the Lord : Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain, yet this valley shall be filled with water, that ye may drink, both ye and your cattle and your beasts. And this is but a light thing in the sight of the Lord ; He will deliver the Moabites also into your hand." Not only shall his Israel be refreshed, but He will give victory over the forces of the enemy.

We recently called attention to the type of "dispensational" teaching which sets up the words of Paul against those of Christ, holding the Apostle's teaching as for the Church, while the Master's belonged to the kingdom, and was Jewish rather than Christian in character and substance. Evangelical Christendom, in some cogent remarks on our notes, says :—

> If Paul is the only Apostle with whom and whose writings we have to do, and if Peter, John, and James, and Jude wrote only for the "Kingdom," and not for "the Church of God," their writings, as well as the Epistle to the Hebrews, which have hitherto instructed and guided and comforted Christians throughout the dispensation, will be very apt to be put aside and neglected as not intended for us. Dispensational truth, no doubt, is important, and the old-fashioned wholesale application of the prophecies of the Old Testament to the Church, has wrought much mischief to prophetic interpretation. But has not in this case the reaction reached extravagance ?

As our contemporary well says, if "rightly dividing the Word of Truth" is urged upon us, there is such a thing as wrongly dividing ; and the worst kind of division is that which practically robs us of some of the most precious portions of Holy Scripture which are as much intended for us as for those to whom they were first addressed.

Dr. Fairbairn touches the real weakness of a good deal that is going on in the churches of to-day when he says that :—

> Men think so much of modes, love so much sensuous elegance, richness of detail, and harmony of effect, that the conduct of worship is becoming a sort of depraved fine art.

The chief thing is too commonly lost sight of. Not the worship, but its accompaniments, are the theme of conversation and the object of anxiety. But if once the spirit of worship dies down, everything dies with it. The income, the members in attendance, the interest and brotherly regard, the unity of peace of the churches suffer. Churches exist for one thing—the glory of God—and no other object can hold them together for long.

In a most admirable and informing address on the "Newspaper Press during the Queen's Reign," given at the Crystal Palace by Mr. A. E. Fletcher, late editor of The Daily Chronicle, some weighty words were uttered as to the responsibility of newspaper conductors in their choice of reading matter. The lecturer said :—

> When I think of the terrible competition amongst editors to supply their readers with information which is not worth knowing, and to give them a record of events which had better be forgotten ; when I remember the large amount of space which they devote to revelations of the divorce courts, the betting rings, and the gambling hells, and the small amount they give to what is going on in our Universities, churches, and learned societies; when I think of the rivalry among them to let people know what the worst men are doing rather than what the best men are thinking, I am bound to admit that the Press has not altogether fulfilled that high mission which those who fought so gallantly and so fearlessly for its freedom fifty years ago thought it was going to achieve.

No living man has a better right to rebuke his brother craftsmen in such cutting and dignified terms, for it is an open secret that Mr. Fletcher vacated his position as editor of one of the most powerful daily prints of modern times rather than foster the gambling mania by the publication of the betting odds. We could wish there were many more such examples of readiness to sacrifice position and emolument for the sake of high moral principle. Mr. Fletcher's lecture is reproduced in Mr. Nankivell's Reporter's Magazine. (4d. Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons.)

Rev. T. G. Selby was guided by true insight into the needs of the times when he chose as his subject for the Fernley Lecture, "The Theology of Modern Fiction" (C. H. Kelly). Theology has taken a large place in fiction since Scott laid down his pen; truth and falsehood are held in solution in those fascinating volumes, which multiply like leaves in spring. Though the interest may, for most readers, lie in the plot, the influence of the author's theological views is all the time being imbibed. They are not presented in an abstract form, and are really recognised for what they truly are, but they are not the less powerful on that account. One of the most deadly errors taught in the unfolding of fictitious character is a false idea of the Divine Government of the world. Mr. Selby remarks:—

> Things could turn out as Thomas Hardy represents only if the universe were under the direct sovereignty of the devil.

A book like this ought to have a sobering and classifying effect upon novel readers. If modern fiction is, in the main, imparting wrong ideas of God and of the human will, it could hardly be doing a worse work.

The pace at which we are living in these days of quick intercommunication has a very serious side. It is exhausting and unfitting men for the highest kind of work and service, and while the process of deterioration is going on there is a depressing sense of weariness and incompetency. Emotion, too, is being spent at an alarming rate. Fiction consumes the hearts of thousands; they are excited, moved, melted, over sorrows that never existed, and their hearts are left barren and dry, without the power, or the desire to sympathise with real trouble. The jaded feelings also call for a fiercer stimulus, and hence the exaggerated tone of so many recent novels. The corrective is the soothing and calming influence of sacred Scripture, and attention to the duties of daily life.

If a battle had been fought this last year by our army, resulting in the death of nearly four thousand men, and the wounding of fifty thousand more, the event would have stood out as one of the blackest in the record of 1896. Yet such was the loss inflicted on the great army of labour. The sea claimed most of the dead, next the mine, next the factory, and next the railway. The factory, the workshop, and the railway claimed forty-two thousand of the injured. It is impossible to estimate how much misery is represented by these totals—widows and orphans made; poor and aged persons deprived of their only stay; little children and feeble women compelled to face the struggle of life for themselves and for "father," who now can work no longer. And this goes on every year! How much is preventable we cannot say, but where employers are liable for the results of accidents there are far fewer accidents than where they are not. It is surely time that all were made liable, and no "contracting out" permitted.

The Van Mission of the Church Association has done good work in many country parishes during the past year. Its purpose is to spread the knowledge of the Bible and of Protestant principles among the agricultural population. Many clergymen welcome the visit of the colporteur, and give them every help in their power. It is significant that some on the other hand do all they can to put obstacles in the way of the work. One of them forbade two colporteurs to hold a meeting in his parish. They naturally persisted in their purpose, whereupon the unwise man came out at the time of the meeting in his official robes and forbade his parishoners to remain. We are glad to hear that no one left, and that the next night the whole population turned out as a protest against this clerical tyranny. In another parish the vicar "had masses for the conversion of the colporteur"! In spite of this opposition, and partly because of it, the work is succeeding admirably in its purpose.

The venerable Major Conran writes to us, describing from past Indian experience the unspeakable horrors of famine in that land. He makes the suggestion that a public subscription in aid of the famine fund should be organised in commemoration of the Queen's long reign. We are sorry to find from Lord George Hamilton's letter to Lord Kinnaird that the Government do not apparently take a very serious view of the situation.

How little civilisation, apart from religion, tends to bring right thoughts into men's hearts towards others of alien race and colour is sadly shown by Mr. Selous (the African explorer) in his new book on South Africa. That enterprising traveller writes regarding the native races of South Africa, some of whom are now in revolt in Bechuanaland:—

> The Kaffirs whom we sought to destroy with as little compunction as though they were a pack of wild dogs are not men and brothers, but monsters in human shape, that ought to be shot down mercilessly like wild dogs and hyenas.

If this is the attitude of the average South African settler, is it any wonder that there are occasional reprisals in the shape of massacre and murder, and that periodical revolt breaks out against the contemptuous tyranny of the white man?

Dr. W. P. Martin, who went to Hong Kong in 1850, gives in his book "A Cycle of Cathay" (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier), a hopeful view of China, as we believe all men do who can remember it for forty or fifty years, and can contrast now with them. He found when he went between 100 and 200 converts; now there are between 50,000 and 60,000; there are 1000 organised companies of believers, and hundreds of native pastors. It is to these native pastors he looks for the evangelisation of the whole nation. Even if it took a thousand years to do it, "China for Christ" ought, he says, to be the war-cry of the new crusade. But with the growing multitude of native agents, "the work of evangelisation may be practically completed in the tenth part of that time." There is no danger of too many workers from old Christian lands entering this great harvest field of China; but Dr. Martin says that weak and ignorant men and women are out of place there.

Seventy-five years ago the firm of Whitall, Tatum and Co., of Philadelphia, U.S.A., glass manufacturers, decided not to manufacture things which could be used either in the trade in intoxicating drinks, or for warlike purposes. They have never made a whisky flask, nor any description of spirit bottle; and have frequently declined orders from the Army and Navy departments of the United States. Adherence to these fine principles has not injured them. No doubt the complications of business make it very difficult for some firms to keep clean hands, but is it not in such circumstances that we see the worth of the discerning conscience, and the upright will, and the obedient trust in God? The difficulties and losses in the path of the Christian are not things to be avoided, but to be triumphed over in the strength of Christ. More of this separation from "the world" in business, would produce an immense impression in favour of the Gospel.

Progress in Spain.

WRITING from Linares (Cambronenas 27), Jaen, Spain, to his old friend, Rev. J. T. Dunn, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, S.E., Rev. J. P. Wigstone says:—"First, as to our preaching. We preach salvation through Christ (as Acts iv. 12), salvation for the lost sinner, salvation to be had at once, salvation which includes repentance, pardon, justification, holiness, help for this life and glory by and by; and that this salvation is revealed in the Holy Scriptures, which are the Word of God.

"Then as to Rome. My experience of twenty-three and a-half years in this country, where Rome has had all her own way, is that she is what she professes to be, 'always the same.' She is this in the sense of being the bitter enemy of God's Word, God's salvation, and God's people. We see her here as Merle-d'Aubigné describes her in his 'History of the Reformation,' and we find Chiniquy's statements more than borne out by facts of everyday occurrence here. In England Rome shows the sheep's clothing, and appears, in the Pope's letter, for instance, to be desirous of promoting Bible reading; here she is in favour of Bible burning! In England she speaks of her 'Nonconformist brethren;' here she persecutes unmercifully, and says that a thief, an assassin, an adulterer, is to be preferred to an Evangelical Christian.

"As to liberty, let the experience of the Archbishop of Dublin speak. The meeting place in Madrid, which he so warmly promoted, still has its front door shut. It is next to impossible to get permission to erect the plainest buildings for the preaching of the Gospel. I have seen the priests accompany the authorities when entering by force the houses of Evangelicals; I have seen them, in spite of the protests of the father, take the dead body of a child, and bury it in the Roman Catholic cemetery. O England, where would your liberty be if Rome ruled!

"Then, as to our work. Our meetings here are better attended than they have been for a long time, and within the last month two new villages have invited us to take the Gospel to them. We have more on hand than we can well manage; but what we are most thankful for is that from among the converted men some are being raised up to carry the Gospel to their fellow-countrymen. I have just returned from a visit to places in the north-west of Spain. In Morgandanes a man was converted through seeing the priests stone us. That was in 1878; he is now at all times ready to take the meeting. At Marin, one who was converted in 1877, works at his trade, but is ever ready to preach the Gospel. There are many others in the north-west. Here we have three or four. On a recent Sunday one of them made a tour of four villages, speaking in all of them, and in the evening preached at Carolina. This is nothing exceptional with the friend in question."

Papers on Missions.—6.

THE CHURCHES AND THE SOCIETIES.

WE have been at some pains in the preceding papers to show that to Christ and his Church God committed the privilege and responsibility of being his witnesses. We know how perfectly the only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father revealed Him; how fully the Son of Man who is in heaven, spake that which He knew, and testified that which He had seen, of heavenly things, which none but He who came down from heaven could have known or spoken; how He witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate, and sealed his testimony with his blood; how the Faithful Witness, the Firstborn from the dead, promised that his apostles and disciples should receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon them, and should be his witnesses to every creature throughout the world.

We know how nobly the eleven apostles and Stephen, and the believers scattered abroad by Saul's persecution, and Paul the Apostle (as one born out of due time, yet in God's own time), went everywhere preaching the word; how James followed Stephen in martyrdom; and how the murderous Herod proceeded to take Peter also, but the Lord delivered him. These indeed were the days of unleavened bread—the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. But those days passed, and human history has no sadder story than the subsequent cold indifference, growing into actual opposition, of the Church of Christ, to the fulfilment of the last command of the risen Lord, that repentance and forgiveness of sins should be preached to every individual among all the nations.

But a hundred years ago, and since, although the churches as a whole have fallen far short of their duty in regard to Missions, a few men like Ward, Carey, and Marshman, Henry Martyn, W. C. Burns, Dr. Duff, and many more of the like spirit, were awakened to the command of Christ, and inaugurated and continued the Missionary movement of these latter days.

The various existing Societies have been the result, and a noble work they have done, and still are doing. For whether the churches are or are not alive to their high privilege of sending the Gospel through the world, no such work can be carried on upon an extensive scale without an organised and organizing executive body. This leads us to consider the true relation of the societies to the churches.

Evidently if the churches are divinely entrusted with the evangelising of the world, the societies stand to them in a relation similar to that of the directors of a company to the shareholders, or the executive of a society to its members. But the indifference of the churches to the great commission received from their Lord has forced upon the societies a more prominent relationship, so that, instead of the societies serving the churches, the churches may be said to serve the societies. Instead of the churches accepting the work committed to them, and employing the societies as their executive, the societies have undertaken the work and appeal to the churches to help them to accomplish it.

The theory or the method may seem of little consequence, so long as the work is done. And the successful conduct of any work, depends not so much upon the system as upon the men who manage it.

Nevertheless, God's pattern cannot be departed from without loss, and the Gospel cannot be made known in any other way so well as by the method which He has devised. While, therefore, giving all honour to the societies which have supplied the churches' lack of service, if God's work is to be done it must be done according to his plan: just as a cathedral must be built according to the architect's design. (See Ezek. xliii. 7-12.)

There has been no more effective cause of the decline of the Church, and of her loss of Pentecostal power, than her failure to recognise that to her every member was committed the ministry of reconciliation; and that the power of the outpoured Spirit was promised for that sole purpose. Any retrocession from that responsibility on the Church's part, and any committal of it to a section of its members, weakens the Church, and burdens the organization which undertakes it with a burden greater than God has laid upon it. It is impossible for the evangelization of the world to be accomplished according to God's design, unless every member of the body fulfils the function which its Creator has assigned to it.

The Church is by God's appointment the great Missionary Society, and nothing in the world's history is more appalling than the heartless neglect which has left generation after generation of the heathen world to perish, without ever having heard the name of Jesus, or the good tidings that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son" to die for its salvation.

With regard to the Constitution of Societies and Missions, the membership of some older Societies consists of the subscribers, while the missionaries themselves are not recognised as members.

On the other hand, some younger Missions constitute the missionaries the members, and the contributors are contributors and nothing more, so far as membership is concerned. But the missionaries, even in this case, are not members of the society in any responsible sense.

Thus the elder "Societies" and the newer "Missions" are alike in this: that the missionaries are practically the agents of the societies or missions, rather than "the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ."

The churches, not the societies, are mainly responsible for this state of things. And we respectfully commend this view or the case to all evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and urge upon them the necessity of declaring the whole counsel of God—and that every one who is delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the Kingdom of God's dear Son, receives by the very fact of that deliverance and translation, the obligation, by every means in his power, to make known God's great salvation to every creature, at home, in neighbouring countries, and to the uttermost part of the earth.

THAT WE ARE SAVED TO SERVE,

The delegation of that responsibility and privilege to any other body, and the assumption of that responsibility and privilege by such body, even though it be a part of the Church itself, diminishes the individual Christian's sense of responsibility and privilege, to his own great loss, to the limitation of the work, and to the falling short of the glory of God.

We have no intention to assume an ex cathedrâ tone, or to attribute anything but honour to those who, individually or in association, are sowing the word of the Kingdom at home and abroad. And we shall be very glad to receive the help of correspondents in the consideration of this most important subject.

Three Veteran Saints.

A FRIEND has written to the three brethren whose names are given below, each of whom has passed his ninetieth year, asking for a brief testimony as to their experience. Each has given his consent to his reply appearing here:—

Beloved brother in the Lord, — I have never been happier in the Lord in my whole life than now; and every disciple in the Lord Jesus may be so, if attaining to old age.

The conditions to be attended to are:—(1) Habitually to trust in Jesus alone for salvation; (2) to treat Him habitually, under all circumstances, as a Friend; (3) to read diligently and habitually the Holy Scriptures with (a) prayer, (b) meditation (with practical application), (c) to carry out in our life what we read.

Acting according to this, our peace and joy in the Holy Ghost will increase more and more.—Yours affectionately, in our Lord,

GEORGE MÜLLER (aged 91).

New Orphan Houses, Ashley Down, Bristol.

Dear Brother,—"By the grace of God I am what I am." In looking back at the trials that have been allotted me, I can from my heart say, "Goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life." I have strong cause for gratitude that my Heavenly Father saw fit often to cross my purposes. In heavy trials I have had to fall back upon the promise, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." He has thus far led me in my pilgrimage, and will still do as He has said. We need to take all our cares and wants to Him.

Whilst in this time state for a short while I desire to be a witness that God is right in all that He does, however dark and mysterious his ways may appear. "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory."—Yours sincerely,

22, Hornsey-rise, N. P. TERRY (aged 91).

My dear Brother,—I send you in return for your loving words, "Whither the forerunner is for us entered." Oh that word "forerunner"! He is waiting and longing for the time when He shall "come again and receive us to Himself, that where He is there we may be also."

My day of birth natural is January 4, 1803. I have known Christ by the Word and Spirit of our God more than threescore years and ten, all happy, all blessed. I am giving thanks continually, and in my constant review of all my life I see more and more cause for thanksgiving to God, and praising his Holy Name, together with deeper and deeper reason for self-abasement before Him. The God of love and peace be with you and all among whom you are serving Christ. Farewell.

Affectionately yours in Him who is quickly coming, ROBERT C. CHAPMAN (aged 94).

Blind in Palestine.—As it is found that blindness prevails more in Palestine than in Syria, it is proposed to establish a Home and School in Jerusalem. Already a few young girls who are very anxious to learn have been placed in our care, and a day school has been commenced where they are learning to read, write, and make their own clothing. We desire to give the Scriptures to those among the blind who can read. These Scriptures will have to be written chiefly by hand (in Arabic Braille), and will therefore be an expensive work, but we hope to employ the blind themselves when they can write correctly. Further information may be obtained from Miss Ford, c.o. American Consul, Bethel, Jerusalem; or (in England) of Mr. A. F. Lauder, 65, Lansdowne-road, Croydon. M. J. LOVELL.

"Back to Christ."

SINCE the foundation of the Church by our Divine Lord, nearly every generation of Christians has been blessed or afflicted with some imposing cry which voiced the agony of enslaved souls that yearned for liberty, or the discontent of those to whom perpetual novelty was the summum bonum of life. Thus, the watchwords of the Reformation and of the Great Evangelical Revival are regarded with admiration and gratitude by all true Christians, while, on the other hand, some of the cries of partisans which issued in factions and heresies are properly regarded by us with horror.

Among the many cries which resound in our hearing to-day there is one which at first seems to be true and helpful, but which upon closer examination turns out to be most misleading. It is that cry which is echoed from many pulpits, and by much of the current religious literature—"Back to Christ."

In so far as this cry represents a real desire to return to simpler New Testament ways, and to a fuller recognition of Christ's Mastership, it must be hailed with delight: but in so far as it expresses a desire to ignore the later Apostolic teaching, professedly in favour of certain ethical teaching pronounced by our Lord in his early ministry, it must be received with very grave suspicion. For there is no question that the cry really means "Back from the Apostles"—chiefly from Paul—to the Master Himself." It is impatience with the Apostle's dogmatic teaching that has resulted in the present "backward" movement. It is said that the Pauline conception of the Atonement is not justified by anything which the Master ever uttered; that, in fact, Paul misunderstood, and consequently misrepresented Christ; therefore he is directly challenged, and it is proposed to retire from him to the ethical teaching of our Lord. This pitting of the Master against Paul has recently been done (in a most graceful literary fashion) by one who has won his reputation as a writer of pleasing Scotch stories, and his book has commanded much attention.

Now, while we shall be most unwise to object to a new teaching simply because it is new, we shall be equally foolish if we permit ourselves to accept every new thing for that same reason. We must still "try the spirits, and see if they be of God." Let us, therefore, try this new spirit, and see whether its claim is justified.

And first, let it be clearly understood that the Christ to whose teaching we are asked to return is the historic Christ, the Christ of the Gospels; the Christ who voluntarily limited Himself; the Christ who often deliberately veiled his speeches so that many of his hearers of uncertain mood "might not understand"; the Christ who said at the close of his ministry that He had "many things" to say unto his disciples which at that time they "could not bear"; and the Christ who distinctly said that his teaching was not final, but that it should be supplemented and developed by the Holy Spirit.

To one of the earliest sermons of this Christ we are told we must return, and for this we must renounce whatever in the Epistles appears to contradict the word of the Lord Himself. This is a tremendous demand to make, and the more closely it is examined, the less satisfactory it appears to be. These professed partisans of Christ seem to have forgotten what Jesus Himself said about the development of his teaching by the Holy Spirit. Indeed, the cry, "Back to Christ," is uttered in ignorance of the presence of the ever-living and teaching Spirit. Those who most loudly clamour against the "bondage of creeds" are most illogical when they seek to bind us to certain of our Lord's words which were frequently (so He Himself said) a concession to the denseness of his hearers. The men who were most in contact with the historic Christ understood Him the least: for this he frequently chided them; but after Pentecost, when the whole life of the Church was lifted into a higher sphere, they understood clearly what the Master had taught, and they understood it in the true and larger sense.

To return to the ante-Pentecostal Christ would be a distinct and irreparable loss: The glory of our dispensation is that we live in the time of the Holy Spirit, and of the exalted and uncircumscribed Christ. The office of the Holy Spirit is that of the Church's teacher, and his teaching must be progressive. So our Lord Himself said: "He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you."

In this light, it would be most surprising to find in the Epistles a mere echo of our Lord's earthly words. If we believe our Lord at all, we naturally look in the Epistles for an amplification and an exposition of those truths which He spake with reservation in the days of his flesh. And we are not disappointed. The Atonement, as expounded by the Apostle Paul, does not "contradict" the Atonement as stated by Jesus—it amplifies and develops it, and sets it in its true relation to all the other cardinal Christian doctrines. The Apostles in our Lord's lifetime did not understand the Atonement at all—they sought to dissuade Him from the Cross; but after Pentecost, under the discipline of the Divine Teacher, they perceived its grand meaning, and so expounded it to their hearers. Compare, for example, Peter's pre-Pentecostal, "Far be it from thee, Lord," with his post-Pentecostal, "Ye were redeemed with the precious blood of Christ." Similarly, with the subject of the "Kingdom," we are told that if Christianity is to live it must go back to the Sermon on the Mount, and move away from the dogmas of the Epistles. But, as a fact, the Epistles simply amplify the Sermon on the Mount, and, what is vital to the whole question, they reveal the secret of living out that Sermon. It is one thing to admire the Sermon on the Mount as a code of ethics; it is quite another to live out its principles. For that secret we must go to Paul and the other Apostles, who, instructed by their Divine Teacher, show us that that Sermon in practice is the fruit of the Spirit. To appeal from the Apostles to Christ in this manner, is to appeal from power to picture.

This appeal from the Apostles to the Christ of history is very lame and out of place when it is fairly examined. Its faults are upon the surface, and it is a matter for astonishment that so many have been misled by it. One thing that also seems to have been almost entirely overlooked in this discussion is that we owe to the Apostles the very records of the Gospels which are pitted against the other writings of the same holy men; and, further, that the Gospels were written long after the doctrines were formulated. The First Epistle to the Thessalonians is older than the earliest Gospel—its admitted date is 52-3 A.D.—and in it will be found a complete body of Christian doctrine. Let this fact be weighed. Moreover, the Gospels were not the text books of the Apostles, but they were the outcome of apostolic life and preaching—the literature of a living society, written to account for that society.

No! we will not heed this hollow parrot cry, "Back to Christ." We do not desire, nor do we need to go back to limitations, when within our grasp is a perpetual amplification. Christ is exalted; the Holy Ghost is here. What we need is to be brought into line with the exalted Christ, through the Holy Ghost, and then move ever onward, guided by our unerring Teacher.

Among West End Poor.

By Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.

PERHAPS the most terrible hindrance we have to contend with in work among the poor of West London is the ignorance of those who could help us if they would, and who would help us if they knew the condition of things almost at their doors. Not long ago a lady in the West-end said to one of our Sisters, "If you work amongst the poor, of course you come from the East-end." Another lady said, "Of course there are no slums in the West end."

The houses now occupied by the people of Soho and in the streets off Tottenham Court-road were originally built for a family of eight or ten persons. All the arrangements are in accordance with this purpose. There is still what was the kitchen, and here is found the only convenience for cooking. It is now a living room where you may find a man and his wife with three or four children and sometimes a lodger. The other rooms have only a grate, and here the cooking must be done as best it can. On one occasion one of our Sisters wanted to prepare some food for a sick woman: the only cooking utensil in the place was a fork with one prong.

The day before Christmas I went with one of our nurses to some half-dozen houses opening off a main street, bearing the name of one of our most prominent peers. Rough passages led into courts of two-roomed houses of the most miserable description. The first room I entered was almost filled with a bed and a table. The atmosphere of the place was choking. The mother was out, but a sharp little lad who held the baby told me all that I wanted to know about the place. The father of the family earned 17s. 6d. a week as a parish road-man, he paid 5s. a week for rent. His wife came in whilst we were there, and said proudly, "He always brings home his money, and there isn't a better husband in London." There was the lad the nurse had come to visit, little Jimmy, suffering from hip disease, and who began to dream of heaven when a real half-crown was given him to buy some Christmas cheer.

The next room we visited it was difficult to get into, and more difficult to stay. A space of 8ft. by 4ft. was filled with furniture, and in a recess was the bed. On it lay a poor girl of seventeen, dying of consumption. Here lived a wife and children, and the husband, when he was at home, sharing the bed with the invalid girl. He is a ship's cook, and when in work earns £2 to £3 a month. They pay 4s. a week for the room. Here, too, all the cooking had to be done in an open grate, and all the household work in the room where the dying girl lay. To this family a half-crown meant more joy than scores of families in the West-end have spent pounds to secure.

Here is a fact that puts the condition of things very concisely. Those who have taken the poor children from the West-end into the country will tell you that neither the boys nor the girls had any idea as to the purpose of a night-gown. Sometimes it was put over the other clothes, sometimes the clothes were put on again over the night-gown. When at last, after a bath, the white night-shirt was donned, one of the little fellows said with awe, "I suppose we're angels, now."

In comparing East or South London with the West, that which aggravates the condition of our people is the enormous rent they have to pay. A third of the income must go to pay for a decent room in which to live.

Anything you can do to arouse an interest in the poor of West London cannot fail to render a great service.

West London Mission.

A Threefold Motto.

A NEW YEAR'S ADDRESS,

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.*

THERE are many thoughts that crowd in upon us to-day as we stand on the threshold of a new year and of a new century. The one thought that presses most on me is the great dearth of great men. One year after another is decimating the ranks of our leaders. As we look into almost every branch of human life, we are struck with the paucity of commanding minds. Surely this indicates the near approach of the King of Men. It is as if the space were being left vacant that his predominance might be more apparent.

Then there is the great concentration of thought upon the east of Europe, which has always been the focus and scene of God's greatest work. The great question which has baffled the ages is still to the front, and must be to the front until it is solved. There is but one solution for the Eastern Question—in the advent and deliverance of Christ. It seems as if He were saying to the nations of the world just now, "Stand by; this is one of those knots that I Myself must untie."

We are also struck, I think, with the growing materialism and apostasy of the professing Church. Every year we are more alarmed at the inroads of Ritualism and Roman Catholicism. It seems perfectly appalling; but it must be so. The Harlot must be revealed before the Bride of the Lamb stands forth in her true beauty. We must not be at all surprised, therefore, to be assailed on all hands by tidings of the great apostasy of professing Christendom. But in the heart of all this—amid the great events which are convulsing modern Europe; amid all the tumult and turmoil which are causing men's hearts to fail them for fear, God has his inner circle, those who are hidden in his secret place, those who speak often one to another as the advent of the Lord draws nigh. Thus gathering together we have reason to believe that we are very near the mighty advent of the Latter Rain. As the dispensation preceding this closed with a blessed Pentecost, so surely is this dispensation going to close (and those who live nearest to God are more and more sure of it) with a mighty outpouring of God's Holy Spirit. "Ask Me for rain in the time of the Latter Rain." This is the time of the latter rain; let us ask for rain; let us gather together more and more throughout the country to wait upon God for the latter rain.

It is very remarkable that just at this time there should be an outbreak of revival work in America. I should think, from all that I hear, that Mr. Moody has never been in such a work as in New York lately. And I am sure that the great quickening of the hearts of God's people in our own country within the last few months or years is significant that God, through them, will mightily work upon the ungodly. Lift up your hearts, and be sure that God is going to do a work which we shall marvel at. I believe, too, that we shall see the Lord's working in our conferences; there will be more praying in our gatherings. I believe the Spirit of concerted prayer will be poured out on all parts of the church. Oh that, forgetting all our divisions, we may come together and wait on God for a new baptism of the Holy Ghost.

All these things lead me to give you the threefold motto which I take from Luther's Bible: "Be silent to the Lord, and let Him mould thee; fret not." Our own English version gives the words thus: "Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him; fret not," but I like Luther's version, as I have quoted it. There is a great deal of fret among God's own people. I will speak of it in three directions—fret in prayer, fret in usefulness, and fret in the growth of the Christian life. In each of these three departments the message of God to us to-day is, "Be still; rest in Me; wait for Me, and I will mould thee."

First, as to Prayer. With many of us it is rather a mental exercise than a waiting on God. We gird ourselves to agonize and strive with God, with too much of the energy of the flesh. We desire the conversion of our Sunday-school class or our congregation; for the success of this work or that. We frequently go to God in prayer as though by the intensity and impetuosity and vehemence of our ejaculations and agonizings we will appease Him. I have sometimes met with people who reminded me of the priests of Baal, who cut themselves and cried, "O Baal, hear us!" from morning even till noon, as though we were going to compel God to do as we will. A man does not prevail with God that way. In your own home, what is it that prevails with you most? It is not the boisterous strength of some child that will have his way; but the helplessness of the little cripple that lies in that bed. As that little helpless one looks up to you there is more that touches your heart in its mute appeal than in the strength of the other.

So it is in Dealing with God. True prayer is getting into sympathy with God; in knowing what God wants to give us; in understanding the mind of Christ revealed by the Holy Ghost. In your prayers this year be less eager to impress certain things on God than to let Him impress things on you. Instead of going to God with a certain programme, let God inculcate upon you his programme. If in your daily prayer you would quietly wait and stay your fever, your passion, your vehemence, till the Holy Spirit moulds you, you would find yourself presently more vehement, more intense, more ardent; not with thoughts and desires generated in your own heart, but with thoughts and desires that have descended to you from God out of heaven.

So much of our praying time is wasted time, because we are not in the current of God's thought, we are not in a line with God's purposes. We want this and that, as the woman did who came to Christ about her daughters. She had to learn to put Christ in his place, and take her own place amongst the dogs, and then the answer came. You say you must have your child converted. Yes. But if you "be still" about it, and trust God, you will find that his desire will animate your prayer. You will not pray for the child to be converted because it would be such a relief to your house and to yourself to have her sympathy; but you will want her converted because God seeks it for Christ's glory.

So also about our Christian work. I know my own heart, and judge by it of the hearts of other believers. There is so much Christian activity, so much advertising, so many new methods, so many rather sensational appliances in our Church work. We do so much more philanthropic work than our forefathers did; we are so thick on the ground; we want to keep our church well to the front; we are eager not to be left behind in the busy rush. We say we want to do as much good as we can, and probably we mean it, but yet we take care still to be well in evidence.

Here, again, comes our motto, "Fret not." Do not be so impassioned. Do not be always seeking new methods. Do not be always looking into the papers to find some new thing that you may adopt. Do not be tearing leaves out of other people's diaries, so as to reproduce them in your own life; they may not at all pertain to your disposition or idiosyncrasy.

A great deal of the work that we have done in the world will not bear inspection; we might as well not have done it at all for all the good it has effected. We promoted it. We threw ourselves into it. We collected the funds. We sustained it. The whole thing emanated from us, and ended with us. If we would do less, and quietly permit God to mould and fashion us, He would show us just what He wants. If other men did more work, made more show, it would be sufficient for us to stand before Him and say: "It is enough for me to serve thy purpose in the world; I will not fret myself."

You say, "Do you not think that might lead to indolence and inactivity?" Put your question to Paul, and ask him what he makes of it. You find that all through his Christian life he is perpetually talking of work; "yet not I, but God who energises in me mightily." The result in his life was that he could not be in a city for an hour without talking to a demoniac; he could not be in prison, but before midnight he convinced and baptized his jailer; he could not stand before a Roman Governor, but he almost persuaded him to be a Christian; he could not be tied to a soldier for a few hours, but he would speak to his guard in the power of Christ. Talk about taking things easily! When you have the dynamics of the Holy Ghost in you, as well go to an engine and suggest that it should take it easily along the line when the furnace and the steam are in full blast.

A word in closing about character. I have often met those who say they are not making as much growth in grace as they would like. They rush to this convention and to the other; they read a variety of devout books; they try all kinds of methods, and they are perpetually endeavouring to acquire something. A friend of mine put it so truly the other day. She said that for four years she had been trying to attain something; now she saw she had to obtain it. There are plenty of people trying to attain to something—Holy Ghost fulness, Pentecostal power, deliverance from sin, and so on—always trying, fretting, and worrying over it. Whereas the true way to be really holy, really full of God, is to be still. I have found such help lately in my life in sitting still before God—not in trying or reading or agonising, but simply waiting with all the windows and doors of the soul open to the south wind. That is the way to get holy—let God into you. Fret not therefore in prayer, in regard to Christian work, or to Christian character. So may God give to each one of us years full of Himself, till Jesus Christ come.

The Threshold of the Year.

LORD, where thou callest, I will go,
Upon that word relying—
That Thou my help wilt ever be,
My soul's deep need supplying.
The way in which Thou leadest me
May dangerous seem, and hard to see;
But I will tread it undismayed
By danger or by gloomy shade.

For why should doubt oppress my heart,
Or anxious fear assail me?
I lean upon Omnipotence,
That arm can never fail me.
What need to me of creature aid?
Upon the Mighty, help is laid;
And paths most rugged and most drear
Are gates of heaven when He is near.

Yes, where was desert waste before,
The streams of life are springing;
And where the hush of sadness reigned,
Are angel voices singing.
And mine, too, mingles in the song,
As with glad step I move along—
Thy faithfulness and love, O Lord,
Unending themes of praise afford.

Thyself, the True and Faithful One,
Art pledged to me for ever—
Sure is thine own unshaken word—
"I will forsake thee never."
To-day as yesterday the same,
To-morrow mine again to claim;
Happy the journey, blest its end,
In company with such a Friend.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, January 10.

"O, RESTORE US AGAIN."—Psa. lx. 1. (R.V.).

CAST off! There is a sense in which that can never be. God will not cast off from salvation any soul of man that has sheltered under the covert of his Almighty wings. He may withdraw the sensible enjoyment and realisation of his presence, but He cannot cast off for ever, in the sense of consigning any fugitive to his foes or to the fate he dreads. "The gifts and calling of God are without repentance."

And yet there is a sense in which we are cast off, when we have been unbelieving and disobedient. Allowed to take our own way, that we may learn its bitterness; permitted to hunger and thirst, that we may know how evil a thing it is to seek our supreme good anywhere else than in God; given over to the tender mercies of the gods we have chosen, that we may be taught their helplessness. It was thus that God cast off his people. He showed them hard things and allowed them to reap as they had sown.

But now they cry for restoration. Put us back, they say, into the old place; be to us what Thou wert and make us to Thee as we were. Restore us again. He did it for Peter, putting him back to the front place in the Apostolic band; for Mark, allowing him, who had gone back in his first missionary journey, to write a Gospel; for Cranmer and many more, who in the first burst of fiery trial shrank back, but to whom He gave more grace. Believe in the restoring grace of Christ, who not only forgives, but puts back the penitent and believing soul where it was before it fell away.

"LEAD ME TO THE ROCK THAT IS HIGHER THAN I."—Psa. lxi. 2.

Can you not see that rock? All the desert is baking like a furnace. The very pebbles burn the hand like cinders. Nothing can abide the scorching glare but the little green lizards that dart to and fro among the stones. Sunbeams strike like swords on the head of the luckless travellers that dare to brave their glittering edge. But yonder there is a rock, rising high above the shimmering sands, and casting a deep black shadow on one side. Little lichens hide in its crevices, streaks of vegetation are enamelled on its steep surfaces, and at its foot there are even a few rock-plants growing as best they can in the arid soil. That is the higher rock—the rock higher than the traveller's stature. He makes for it; or if he is too faint and overwhelmed, he is led to it, and beneath its gracious shadow finds instant respite and repose. The shadow of a great rock in a weary land!

Jesus will be all this to thee, dear heart. Thou hast got to the end of the earth and of thyself; call out to Christ, and He will lead thee, faint and ready to die, to Himself as the Shadow from the heat. The Man of men can be this for thee because He is higher than thou art. His cross casts a shadow over the ages; hide in it. And if thou canst not win thy way to it by reason of thy faintness and deadly fatigue, at a call thou wilt find thyself in a tent from which thou needst never again go out, or in the covert of wings from which the enemy can never dislodge.

"MY SOUL WAITETH ONLY UPON GOD."—Psa. lxii. 1.

Dr. Kay gives as the literal translation: "Only toward God my soul is in silence," or, "Only for God waits my soul all hushed."

This is the test of true waiting. Wait before God till the voices, suggestions, and energies of nature become silent. Then only can God realise his uttermost of salvation. This was the secret of Abraham's long trial. He was left waiting till nature was spent, till all expedients proving abortive were surrendered; till all that knew him pitied him for clinging to an impossible dream. But as this great silence fell on him, the evidence of utter helplessness and despair, there arose within his soul an ever-accumulating faith in the power of God. His expectation was from God, and there was no obstacle to God's realising all, and beyond all, because all the glory accrued to Himself.

This is why God keeps you waiting. All that is of self and nature must be silenced; one voice after another cease to boast; one light after another be put out; until the soul is shut up to God alone. This process prevails equally in respect to salvation from penalty, deliverance from the power of sin, and our efforts to win souls. Oh my soul, be silent! Hush thee! Wait thou only upon God! Surrender thy cherished plans and reliances. Only when death has done its perfect work, will He bestow the power of an endless (an indissoluble) life.

WEDNESDAY, January 13.

"MY SOUL FOLLOWETH HARD AFTER THEE."—Psa. lxiii. 8.

This is a marvellous saying. The metaphor which underlies it is obviously borrowed from the Psalmist's familiarity with the wilderness. It is a dry and thirsty land, where no water is: one says that he knows of a secret spring, whose waters are clear and cool, and offers to lead the thirsting one to its margin, lined with mosses and grasses. Instantly the soul starts in pursuit, and follows hard on the footsteps of the pioneer.

So when we are athirst for God, He comes, and, in the person of Jesus, leads us to Himself. He is Guide and Guerdon, Prompter of the impulse, and Promoter of its satisfaction. He excites the desire, offers to show us its sufficient supply, and finally brings us to his own lovingkindness, which is better than life. It becomes us, then, to follow hard after Him. Let us do as Jonathan's armour-bearer, to whom the young prince said, Come up after me. And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and feet, and his armour-bearer after him, and the Philistines fell before Jonathan, and his armour-bearer slew after him.

Follow hard after Christ, over hedge and ditch, through stubble and gorse, across dyke and brook, sometimes down the steep fall into the hollow, and again breasting the mountain slope, in the teeth of the pitiless blast. He has left an example that we should follow his steps. The scent lies lightly; catch it ere it fade. What though the fresh blood marks the track, follow hard. Follow on to apprehend that for which thou wast apprehended. Press toward the mark. Let there be no needless space between the Master and thee.

THURSDAY, January 14.

"THE RIGHTEOUS SHALL BE GLAD IN THE LORD."—Psa. lxiv. 10 (R.V.)

Are you glad in your Christian life? Gladness is the perquisite of children and childlike hearts, and there is nothing which is more distinctively characteristic of the work of grace in the heart than Christian gladness. The world may simulate it, but it is conscious of its dreary failure. Often faded worldlings will come to the true Christian saying, What is the secret of your perennial gladness? "Give us of your oil, for our lamps are going out."

The glad heart is conscious of the love of God, knows that it is reconciled through the blood of the cross, realises that there is nothing between itself and the light of the Father's smile, is conscious of rectitude in intention and tenderness of yearning love and pity. In every difficult circumstance it recognises the Father's appointment; in every archipelago of rocks it is aware of the presence of God aboard the vessel, holding the helm and keeping the keel in the deepest current.

Oh, souls, get right with God; avail yourselves of the perfect righteousness of Christ; see that there is nothing between you and Him; walk in the light as He is in the light, and see whether He does not make you glad in proportion to the days in which He has afflicted you, and the years in which you have seen evil. The sad heart tires in a mile. The glad one mounts up with wings as eagles. After his vision Jacob "lifted up his feet, and came to the land of the children of the East" (Gen. xxix. 1 R.V.).

FRIDAY, January 15.

"BLESSED IS THE MAN WHOM THOU CHOOSEST AND CAUSEST TO APPROACH UNTO THEE, THAT HE MAY DWELL IN THY COURTS."—Psa. lxv. 4.

I would be one of those favoured ones, my Saviour. There is nothing that the heart can conceive, which is to be compared with this blessedness. The light of nature, the joy of friendship, the fascination of art and books, can give no such delight as this approach unto Thee, this dwelling in thy courts. But the longer I know myself, the surer I am that Thou must cause me to approach, that Thou must put forth extraordinary means in making me dwell. So cause me to approach that I may dwell.

When thy soul has put up such a prayer as this, be sure that an answer will come. Thou mayest be brought nigh by an invisible but all-penetrating attraction, as when the sun draws the earth, or the magnet the needle: or perhaps God will answer thee by terrible things in righteousness. There will be deep humiliations, solemn heart-searchings, sharp crucifixions, cherished purposes thwarted, the keenest pain, the most searching fire. But through all, there will come a growing tenderness and desire.

It was said by the late Mr. Spurgeon that he was not conscious of spending a quarter of an hour of his waking moments without a distinct recognition of the presence of God. And this will be true of us if we will trust the great High Priest to bring us within the vail, and keep us there. He entered that we may enter. He abides that we may abide. He stands in the Holiest that He may cause us to have a place of access among those that stand before the face of God.

SATURDAY, January 16.

"THOU, O GOD, HAST PROVED US; THOU HAST TRIED US AS SILVER IS TRIED."—Psa. lxvi. 10.

Silver is tried by fire, and the heart by pain "We went through fire." But in the fire thou shalt not be burned, only thy dross shall be removed. The smell of burning shall not pass upon thee, for the form of the Son of God shall be at thy side.

Be still, and He shall mould thee for his heritage of rest;
The vessel must be shapen for the joys of Paradise.
And if the great Refiner in furnaces of pain
Would do his work more truly, count all his dealings gain.

The main end of our life is not to do, but to become. For this we are being moulded and disciplined each hour. You cannot understand why year after year the stern ordeal is perpetuated; you think the time is wasted, you are doing nothing. Yes, but you are situated in the set of circumstances that gives you the best opportunity for manifesting, and therefore acquiring, the qualities in which your character is naturally deficient. And the Refiner sits patiently beside the crucible, intent on the process, tempering the heat, and eager that the scum should pass off, and his own face become perfectly reflected in the surface.

Only be satisfied, with Archbishop Leighton, that nothing can befal thee but what has first passed concerning thee in the courts of heaven. And say with the saintly Fletcher: "I felt the will of my God like unto a soft pillow, upon which I could lie down and find rest and safety in all circumstances. Oh, it is a blessed thing to sink into the will of God in all things. Absolute resignation to the Divine will baffles a thousand temptations; confidence in our Saviour carries us sweetly through a thousand trials."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

A New Year Letter.

THE first thing I must do in this week's number is to wish my young readers very heartily a Happy New Year, and to say how pleased I am at the steady interest they have taken in this page. We are quite a large family now, and I thank those who by their influence have induced others to join the Bible Searcher. Nor must I forget the parents and teachers who have so patiently lent their aid to the preparation of the papers week by week. It has been most gratifying to me to note the diligence and regularity with which the Bible has been searched, and I trust, above all, that the knowledge thus gained will prove of real present and future blessing to all.

We have been learning by experience during the past year, and in spite of occasional mistakes that we have made (because you have found me making one now and then) we have got beyond the stage of making experiments, and are able by this time to know pretty well what sort of questions should be set, and how they ought to be answered.

But I hope we have learned more than that. I know one of the boys who had a pretty box of sweets given him at Christmas, but he was not satisfied with looking at the outside, nor even with knowing how to open it; he did not rest until he had enjoyed its contents. I am sure you will easily guess what I want you to learn from that little story, and I hope you will learn to love the Bible, first because it is God's own book, and second because it will make you "wise unto salvation," as St. Paul said to Timothy (second Epistle iii. 15). Indeed, I hope you will all read verses 14 to 17, and that they will be true of each one of you.

I read some time ago of a young man who had to go abroad to France to earn his living. He was very sad at leaving home, because he was very fond of his father and mother. Before he went away, they gave him a new Bible and begged him to read it. But like some other "clever" people, young and old, he thought he could get on very well without their advice; and so, in the bustle of getting off and the excitement of new scenes, he forgot all about it until long afterwards. Meantime, he had not made his fortune as quickly as he expected, because somehow people did not value him quite so highly as he valued himself; and, after losing more than one situation, he fell ill, and one day woke up to find himself penniless as well. What to do he did not know.

Then there came thoughts of home and of the dear ones he had left behind; and as he lay thinking, their words came to his mind, and he remembered the little Bible which lay buried at the bottom of his trunk. After a good deal of fumbling about he felt it and drew it out. He would turn to God and his Word now he was in distress, though he had been too proud to do so before. He opened it at a Psalm, and a cry of joy burst from his lips, for there, stuck upon the page, was a little gold five-franc piece. Eagerly he turned the leaves, and here and there found several more. His parents had placed them there in the hope that he might turn to the Bible for guidance some day, and it was only due to his pride and neglect that he had not found them before. But he found something better still not long after, for he read how "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life"; and that was better than all the gold, because it gave him what no money could buy.

Dear children, may you, in this New Year, learn more and more, not only about God, but to know God Himself; and not only read his Word, but through it learn of Jesus, and know Him "whom to know is life eternal."

Now about your holidays. I have been thinking that sometimes they become tedious if you have nothing to do, so I am going to tell you about—

Something for Wet Days.

THE gifts sent for the poor children have been greatly appreciated, and I am asked to thank you most heartily, and to wish you a very Happy New Year from very many of the poor children who received them. Would any of you like to help further in this good work, trying this time to reach the fathers and mothers? Such things as these would be very useful, and you may have time before school begins to make a few—knitted cuffs, "comforters," baby-shoes, vests (made of two straight knitted pieces, sewn up the sides, and worked on large needles), little bags (made of any pretty material) filled with lavender, kettle-holders, needle-cases, pincushions, &c. I am afraid I cannot tell you exactly how to make them, as I am not much of a hand at that sort of work. But I don't think you will have much difficulty in finding some kind friends who will gladly explain them all. To each article a text should be fastened.

Other useful articles, of which I can use a great many, are little "blotters" made of two Christmas cards fastened up the back and tied together in front with narrow ribbon, containing inside a piece of blotting paper with a sheet of writing paper (folded) and an envelope. These are to give away to soldiers when leaving England for a foreign country. Ladies and gentlemen visit the troopships before they sail, and as the soldiers have to be on board a long time before the vessel starts, they occupy the interval by talking with them and cheering them up, because some of them are very sad at going away. A little present makes a good introduction, and as many forget to take any note-paper with them, they are so glad to have these little "blotters" which hold just enough paper for a letter to be posted at the first port until they have an opportunity to buy more. The men are also delighted with little needle-cases, with a few buttons as well. Many a rough face has been softened and hard hearts touched by such little acts of kindness, and not a few have been led to Jesus through them. So work away, boys and girls, and you will have lots of thanks from big folks as well as little ones, all of which will help to gladden your own holidays.

UNCLE TOM.

A New Quarter.

Answers to these weekly "Searchers" are acknowledged in two lists:—

1. Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue. 2. Those received later, in the one following.

But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the competition appears.

No concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the question may be explained when necessary.

A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly.

Let every child try and get as many "Searchers" as possible right, so as to be able to compete for the next

PRIZE COMPETITION IN MARCH.

To be eligible every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 51).

1. Five. (a) The Sabeans carried away his oxen and asses and killed his servants with the sword. (b) A fire fell from heaven and burned his sheep and servants. (c) The Chaldeans carried away his camels and killed his servants. (d) A great wind blew down his eldest son's house, killing all his sons and daughters. (e) He was smitten with sore boils all over his body.

2. Three friends, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite. They sprinkled dust upon their heads, and sat seven days and nights with him without speaking to him.

3. (a) A perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil. (b) That Job was only righteous because God had blessed him with riches and health; but if those were taken away then Job would curse God to his face. (c) "I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes," or "Behold, I am vile."

4. (a) "Curse God, and die." (b) "What? Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?"

5. Seven sons and three daughters, both before and after his affliction.

6. When he prayed for his friends. He lived 140 years after this.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 53).

Make a Bible alphabet—that is, give a text beginning with each letter (one for each). Say where each is found.

A star (*) will be given to those who give the most verses on any one subject, but the name of the subject must be given.

[Children under TEN do six; those under THIRTEEN do twelve.]

The questions for next week's Bible Searcher will be set from the first eight chapters of Genesis.

A Test of Honesty.

THE following incident in the life of the late Dr. Wm. Marsh is a good example of honesty in circumstances of strong temptation for a little boy not then four years old. For some small offence he had been shut up by his nurse in a store-room, and left there until long past his dinner-hour. The nurse had forgotten that dishes of oranges, apples, and cakes were arranged there within his reach. On looking through a window, she saw the hungry little boy gazing at each by turns, with his small hands firmly clasped behind his back, and she heard him saying to himself over and over again: "Billy must not touch them, Billy must not touch them, they are not Billy's own." I wonder how many of my young readers would have stood a similar test. I hope none of you would have failed.

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER FIRST.

INTRODUCTION.

AFTER a course of lectures to the students at the Johanneum, Barmen, Inspector Haarbeck wrote: "It is not too much to say that through the Rev. J. D. Kilburn's system, at the same outlay of power and time, from three to five times as much work can be accomplished." When I began teaching my System I never expected anyone to be able to say such things, especially anyone occupying such a position, and so truly able to form an opinion, as the one whose words are quoted above.

Whether I can attain the same results by written as have been attained by oral teaching, remains to be seen.

The results, however, which are attained by any course of Lessons depend quite as much, and sometimes more, upon the way the Learner attempts to learn, as upon the Lessons which the Teacher teaches.

I am convinced of two things: (1) that if these Lessons are to be helpful they must not be hurried over. Inspector Haarbeck, after the words quoted above, adds: "It must, however, be remarked that the thing does not allow itself to be hurried; to the Rev. J. D. Kilburn's system belongs its own slow but progressive method." It is only thus that the results are sure and the benefit lasting. (2) That they must be practised. Knowledge which belongs to practical life is only useful when practised. Without this it would be useless, and the time spent in acquiring it would be wasted time. These Lessons have to do with practical life almost entirely. Their suggestions will help, if used; they will not help if they are not used.

It is these reasons, amongst others, that led me to decide to send them out, Lesson by Lesson, rather than as a whole in book form. I see no reason why the written Lessons should not be as helpful to many as the oral ones have been to some, if each Lesson is thoroughly mastered and practised, as it is given, before proceeding to those which follow.

As many desire to study the two courses in The Christian and The Life of Faith* together, I may say that it will be best so to study them. One Lesson should, however, be practised for a few days before the other is begun. This can easily be done, seeing the Lessons in each paper only appear fortnightly. As some may not wish to study both courses, the Introduction must be the same in each, so as to make each course as complete as possible in itself.

Some have said that I have discovered new and startling laws. This is not correct. I believe that all the laws which regulate the working of the human mind have been known for centuries. I think that I have indicated some new applications of some of the laws. That, however, is very different from discovering new laws.

My aim is to show Christian workers how to apply the best results of mnemonical teaching, gathered from a somewhat wide range of special reading, for the work in which they are engaged. If I can so do this as to help them to the extent that others have been helped by personal instruction, I shall be exceedingly glad.

I shall never hesitate to use some application of a principle, if it is good, merely because it is old.

These lessons are copyright; they cannot, therefore, be reprinted or translated without permission; but as my desire is to help as many Christian workers as I can, in whatever land they may live, or to whatever Church they may belong, I am quite ready to consider the desirability of giving this permission to any who may apply for it.

In conclusion, let me say to each: (1) Nothing can help without God's blessing. Look to Him, as you begin each Lesson, for that blessing, and He will not withhold it. (2) However much these Lessons may help you in some senses, they will injure you in the highest sense if they lead you a single step away from God, or make you feel that you are less dependent upon Him. All good comes from Him. If these Lessons benefit you, acknowledge Him as the giver of that benefit, and praise Him for it.

LETTER SECOND.

FACTS AND PRINCIPLES ON WHICH THE SYSTEM IS FOUNDED.

1. Memory consists of two parts—Retention and Reproduction, or, as it is often called, Recollection.

2. The mind cannot reproduce what it does not retain.

3. When a thing is clearly grasped by the mind, it is very doubtful if it is ever forgotten.

4. When a thing is not clearly grasped by the mind, it cannot readily be recalled.

5. Retention depends on attention.

6. Attention is of two kinds—volitional and spontaneous.

7. As far as mere memory is concerned, spontaneous attention is more effective than volitional attention.

8. Recollection, like attention, is of two kinds—volitional and spontaneous.

9. Important though volitional Recollection is, spontaneous, or, as Aristotle calls it, Involuntary Recollection, is much more important.

10. As Retention depends on attention, so Recollection depends on association.

11. We can best recall by a law what we have learnt by the application of that law.

12. Some parts of the memory are stronger than other parts.

13. The stronger parts of the memory ought to be used to strengthen the weaker.

14. A part tends to recall the whole.

15. Things which have been distinctly united in the consciousness recall each other.

16. Similars suggest similars.

17. Contraries suggest contraries, but not to the same extent that similars suggest similars.

18. Concrete things are more easily remembered than abstract terms.

19. The strength of the memory, like the clearness of the mind, depends to a great extent on the health of the body.

20. In the natural sphere we succeed just in proportion as we work according to law, and we fail just in proportion as we do not. It is the same in the mental sphere.

21. In the mental sphere, as in the natural, the nearer things are brought together, the more firmly they are united.

22. Though the memory cannot reproduce what it does not retain, yet it can reproduce all it retains, provided (1) that it be distinctly associated with something else, and (2) that that with which it is associated can be reproduced.

23. The ease with which things can be reproduced depends (1) on the distinctness of their association with something else, and (2) on the ease with which that can be recalled with which they are associated.

24. The difficulty of reproducing things which the mind retains depends (1) on the indistinctness of their association with something else, or (2) on the difficulty of recalling that with which they are associated.

25. Interest and feeling help to quicken the memory, and deepen its impressions.

26. That which is learnt by mere repetition tends to burden the memory without doing much to sharpen the intellect.

27. That which is learnt by reason and the application of mental law, tends to sharpen the intellect without doing much to burden the memory.

28. The more you think of a thing, the more it will be impressed upon the memory; the less you think of it, the less it will be impressed upon the memory.

Many of the above statements are self-evident. The others are equally true. They are given here, not that they may be committed to memory, but that they may be considered and thought about. All that can help and strengthen the memory in the succeeding lessons comes from the application of one or more of these principles. Many have been surprised at the results which have been achieved by these lessons. There may, however, be more important results in some respects, for it is possible that there may be more important applications of some of the principles than any which have yet been made. The careful consideration of the statements contained in these Facts and Principles will help to give a clearer view of the memory as a whole, and also to prepare the better for the study of the lessons which are to follow.

In considering the mental application of the truths they contain, do not lose sight of the spiritual and other applications. Some of these are equally important, if not even more important. Take, for instance, principles 3 and 4: ought they not to suggest some important truths to preachers and teachers? Again, take principle 15, all know that that is true. All psychologists have laid stress upon it. But, if that be so, how careful we ought to be what mental associations we make with other people, especially with those with whom we have frequently to do. And how careful we all ought to be as Christian workers, what mental associations we lead other people to make with us. The sight, mention, or thought of those with whom we have a mental association will recall that association, be it pleasant or unpleasant, be it helpful or injurious. What is true of our mental associations with people is also true of our mental associations with places and things.

Keep these Facts and Principles; they will be needed during the lessons.

The Blind.—The Deptford and District Association for the Improvement of the Blind reports the various meetings well maintained, with 150 members. Help has been rendered in many ways in cases of need and sickness. Information may be had of Miss Cock, Hon. Sec., 17, Tressillian-road, Brockley, S.E.

Lamb and Flag Ragged School Mission.—According to the latest report the Bible schools are attended by 500 scholars, and the whole varied operations, educational and evangelistic, reaching old and young, are vigorously maintained. The open-air meetings on Clerkenwell Green are still a special feature of the Mission's work. The report records a new departure amongst the crippled children of the neighbourhood. Much good, in various ways, is being done by this branch, and a cordial invitation would be given to any who would volunteer personal assistance in it, or in any of the other meetings. The secretary is Mr. George Kirk, 1A, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Rev. Richard S. Storrs, D.D.,

BROOKLYN, U.S.A.

THE massive and manly face which looks out from this page to-day is that of Dr. RICHARD SALTER STORRS, who has served the Church of the Pilgrims in Brooklyn for the long term of fifty years. The occasion of his ministerial jubilee has recently been celebrated not only by his congregation, but by other bodies of Christians and citizens who have been associated with him in his public life. The speakers on these occasions have vied with each other in whole-hearted expression of personal esteem and appreciation of his services to the American people. Though his fame has been mainly won as a pulpit orator, it has been with Dr. Storrs a ruling principle of action to carry his religious faith and principle into every relation of life. Therefore all sections of the best people in the Brooklyn and New York communities have united in paying tribute to the worth of his long career. Indeed, he almost seems to have qualified for the reprobation addressed in holy writ to those of whom all men speak well. But if the whole truth were known, probably it would be found that no contributions have come to his jubilee testimonial from the traffickers in unrighteousness against whose doings his scathing eloquence has often burst forth with great effect when the fitting time had come.

Early in life Dr. Storrs showed that he had inherited the gifts of father and grandfather, both of whom bore the same name. It is related that when young Storrs, fifty-one years ago last summer, was delivering the valedictory of the graduating class at Andover Theological Seminary, his father, who was present, was so moved by the pathetic and thrilling speech of the son that he bent his head between his knees and wept. The power thus early revealed has been easily maintained to the present hour, so that at the age of seventy-five he is spoken of as the greatest orator in America.

After a short pastorate in Brookline, near Boston, he was invited, at the age of twenty-six, to minister in the Gospel to the first Congregational Church in Brooklyn, now called the city of churches. The congregation had been formed some two or three years before. There he has remained for over half a century, and it may be assumed that the Church of the Pilgrims will continue to claim him till his harness is put off, by the lapse of years and the decay of his physical powers.

In a brief sketch no detailed reference can be made to endeavours extending over such a lengthy period of time. The records show that during Dr. Storrs' pastorate in Brooklyn the Church of the Pilgrims has received into its membership nearly 2600 persons. It has carried on a large and successful mission work in the city. Indeed, the Pilgrim Mother Church has been the fruitful parent of other organised bodies of believers; there have been no fewer than nineteen offshoots established as self-governing churches during its honourable history. While giving his first and his best to his own flock, Dr. Storrs has lent the aid of pen, tongue, and influence to many good causes and societies. We cannot begin even to enumerate these secondary but important efforts of a busy life. Recognising the great power of a Christian press, he was one of the founders of the New York Independent, and has been a prolific writer in the columns of that journal, which has long been, and still is, the most ably conducted and most powerful religious organ of public opinion in the United States.

We have said that the repute of Dr. Storrs as an orator is almost unique among living Americans. Much that is interesting has been written on this feature of his career. A marvellous memory has contributed to his wonderful success in the art of extempore speech, and his historical lore is said to be as remarkable as his mnemonic capacity. These are priceless possessions to one who has stood so long in the same pulpit proclaiming the Divine message of mercy to men.

As to his message itself, we cannot do better than quote a few sentences from a sermon he preached in his own church last November, to celebrate the completion of his jubilee. The text was "The glory of the Gospel of the blessed God," and in the discourse the venerable preacher said :—

Theological systems, including that which I hold myself with profoundest conviction, have not had much discussion in this pulpit in specifically theological terms, or in the form of philosophical presentation. In my earlier years the Seminary impressions were strong upon me, and I preached systematic theology perhaps more eagerly than the simpler gospel of the Divine teaching and promise. I wrote sermons then, and have many of them still; and I believe to-day every one of the doctrines which I then felt it a duty and privilege to set forth. The evangelical scheme of truth, with its profound and majestic premises of the immaculate purity of God, of the perverse and rebelling will in man, of the Bible as God's unique and authoritative book for the world, with its matchless discoveries of atonement for sin, of regeneration by the Divine Spirit, of repentance and faith as essential conditions of the life everlasting, of the relation of this life to the immortal experience to come, and of the assize beyond the grave, at which personal character shall finally appear, and personal destinies be determined —I hold this still, with a faith that is not weakened by years, and that does not waver before any assault. Observation and experience, with the study of the Scriptures and the intent study of Christian history, have only confirmed the faith in which I began.

As to the power of such a Gospel, the testimony of this experienced preacher is most emphatic :—

This is the Gospel which I have preached. Not in the pulpit alone have I preached it, but in pastoral services yet more frequently, and I am sure with ampler efficiency. Here lies the dignity, here the power, of the pastoral office—in seeking to surcharge the atmosphere of earthly homes, if so one may, with an influence from the world unseen; to lift life out of the commonplace; to bring light into darkness; to give solace to sorrow, and peace in trouble. So have I gone, in fifty years, with those to whom I have loved to minister, through almost all scenes of pain and grief which can be known to human hearts; through bitter experience of financial loss, and the fear for others which that has brought; through the pain which comes with a clouded repute, to those whose fame had been stainless before; through the terrible anxieties when children, friends, the beloved of the heart, have been wrestling with disease and apparently momently coming nearer to death. I have been with the dying, as the scenes of time receded from sight, and the shadows of the great Eternity fell more heavily on the face. I have been by the graveside, when the closed coffin was finally shut over the noble or lovely form, and when every clod seemed falling on the hearts of those around, and I have been afterward in homes from which beauty and delight appeared hopelessly banished, because, amid whatever earthly decoration, they had taken into them of the silence, the darkness and the chill of the tomb. And I have been nowhere where the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ, if truly received, has not sufficed to conquer and dispel the gloom, to give songs in the night, to turn the shadow of death into the morning.

Every reader, especially those who personally know Dr. Storrs, will be glad to join in the closing words of an editorial in the New York Independent: "He is at seventy-five not an old man, and we see no reason why his strength should fail, or why his powers should not be maintained for years to come."

The Rescue Society.

"PLEASE, sir, may I stay in the Home?" "What! stop here for ever?" "Yes, sir, I should like to be here always with Miss ——."

No wonder the poor girl finds it a happy place after her sad life. She is but eighteen years old; her only relative is a soldier brother in Egypt, her parents having died before she can remember. Brought up as a pauper, her early childhood was not of the brightest; and being, perhaps, not safe-guarded by a careful moral training, what marvel that she fell an easy prey to designing men. After a time she found shelter in a refuge from which she was transferred to a penitentiary in the country. Alas! after some months she became restless and determined to leave, so was returned to London.

Happily she was soon met by a lady, who brought her to our care, where she has been for nine months, and on visiting the Home recently the above conversation took place. Surely in such a comfortable Home, with lovely large garden, and kind friends who bear with her waywardness, and who love her for Christ's sake, it is not to be wondered at that, for the time being, it is for her one of the brightest spots on earth. Eventually we hope to place her in service, for we do not anticipate that she would be content to stay for ever, though the above was said in all seriousness.

We have many such whose history varies, but who all need for a time the sheltering hand, the loving care, or the firm yet kind discipline and training, before again going forth to earn their bread. They are weak, foolish, and some, it may be, are thoroughly wicked; but all are of the legacy left by our Lord, when He said, "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good;" and we rejoice in knowing and having abundant evidence that our "labour is not in vain in the Lord."

Nearly two hundred are dependent on our funds for daily bread, clothing and shelter, and we are now in very urgent need of help. Two booklets entitled "Among the Breakers" and "Saved from the Wreck and Set Afloat," by Rev. John E. Linnell and the secretary, will be sent to any desiring further information.

Demon Possession.

WHETHER considered psychologically or in relation to Scripture story, Demonology means something very different in the minds of different people. Yet, as a result of discussions in recent years, the subject is to-day regarded more thoughtfully than was the case a generation ago, when a solution of all questions and an end of debate was often found in reducing the term demon-possession to a form of speech implying no more than a mental disease, and sometimes even less than that. An inductive study of Scripture statements and allusions has done much to revive interest in the subject; while a similar investigation of present-day phenomena is deepening and enlarging the importance of the theme. A worthy worker in this field of inquiry was the late Dr. Nevius, the well-known Chinese missionary, whose book, Demon Possession and Allied Themes,* has already reached its second edition, with corrections and supplements.

The opening chapters of the book describe experiences in China, especially in Central Shantung, with fulness of detail. Account is given of persons being possessed, controlled, and vexed by evil spirits; of the failure of doctors and exorcists to release the victims; and of cases in which the demons have fled from the presence of Christians, native and foreign, the possessed being left "in their right minds," and on-lookers being convinced that "even the spirits are subject" unto Christ. A Christian Chinaman in Fatshan, in a communication to Rev. H. V. Noyes, of the American Presbyterian Mission, Canton, narrates a case of a very distressing character. Tsai Se-hiang's wife said: "My husband has been afflicted for a long time; we have wasted our substance on physicians, but without avail. All the day long he moans and mutters; he has almost ceased to be a man. In the night his malady is still more severe." In her extremity the poor woman sent for the native preacher, who, with a companion,

VISITED THE DISTRACTED HOME.

The preacher writes: "I said to the woman, 'Do you believe in Christ?' She replied, 'I believe.' I said: 'If you believe, kneel with me and pray. After prayer we looked at Tsai Se-hiang, and saw that his countenance was peaceful and natural. All the family were wild with delight, and their astonishment knew no bounds. Very strangely and unexpectedly, about ten days afterwards, Mrs. Tsai Se-hiang again worshipped idols, and from that time her husband's malady returned. She sent her brother-in-law to inform me of what had happened. We told the messenger to tell his sister-in-law that she herself ought, in sincere repentance and reformation, to trust in the power of Jesus, and in simple faith to pray without ceasing; then she might hope that her husband would again be restored to health. The wife followed my direction, and continued in earnest prayer night and day; and the evil spirit was driven away, and entirely left her husband. From that time

HE WAS COMPLETELY CURED."

A catechist in connection with the Methodist New Connexion Mission (Tien-tsin), relates the story of a woman who was grievously tormented for fifteen years. She frequently appeared on the streets declaring to the people that the teachings of the Christian religion came from heaven, and that men ought to believe and reverence this religion. One day, out of compassion for the woman and relying on the name and power of Christ, three Christians prayed for God's help in the matter, and proceeded to the house of the afflicted person. Before they arrived, the woman said: "There are three believers in the heavenly doctrine coming." Addressing them by name, she said: "You are the disciples and servants of the God whom I greatly fear." They then asked: "What is your name?" The answer was: "My name is Kyuin (Legion)." The three men then charged the demon to leave the woman's body. The demon replied: "I have helped this woman for fifteen years. She has not an ornament on her head or her feet which she has not obtained by my assistance." After a violent fit of weeping, the demon promised to leave the woman on the tenth day of the first month. And on that day, agreeably to its promise, it left.

From many parts of China, also from Japan, Dr. Nevius collected information on the subject. He also examined records of spiritual manifestations in European and other countries. He began his investigations in the hope that the Scriptures and modern science would furnish the means of showing to the Chinese that the phenomena of the so-called "possession" need not be referred to demons at all; but at length he concluded otherwise. Reviewing the facts established, he unhesitatingly declares in describing which he maintains that the normal personality of the victim is for the time displaced by another personality, which presents traits of character utterly different from those that properly belong to the subject; the change of character being, with rare exceptions, in the direction of moral obliquity and impurity. While demon-possessed, many give evidence of knowledge which cannot be accounted for in ordinary ways; they appear to know of the Lord Jesus Christ as a Divine Person, and show a fear of Him, an aversion to Him. The concluding clause of the "Facts Established" is: "Many cases of 'demon possession' have been cured by prayer to Christ, or in his name, some very readily, some with difficulty. So far as we have been able to discover, this method of cure has not failed in any case, however stubborn and long-continued, in which it has been tried. And in no instance, so far as appears, has the malady returned, if the subject has become a Christian, and continued to lead a Christian life."

After examining the various theories, evolutionist, psychological, and medical, by which the phenomena have been explained, Dr. Nevius shows very clearly that the Scriptures do not confound possession with disease. He proceeds to discuss the allied themes of Spiritualism and Hypnotism. At length he unfolds the Biblical theory of the phenomena, and in the course of a lucid chapter says:—"Actual communication with unseen spirits; their influence on the acts and destinies of individuals and nations; and demon-possession, are taught clearly and unmistakably in both the Old and New Testaments...The Bible recognises not only the material world, but a spiritual world intimately connected with it, and who have access to, and influence for good and ill, the world's inhabitants. Our Lord represented demons as connected with, and as the agents and representatives of Satan; and casting out of demons as open war upon his dominion (Luke x. 17, 18)...We believe that the language of the Bible with reference to demon-possession is to be interpreted in its ordinary literal sense; that it represents actual occurrences; that there were unseen spirits in Judea; that they sought opportunity to possess themselves of the bodies of men; that they did so, and while in possession of those bodies gave evidence of that possession which was palpable and unmistakable. They conversed through the organs of speech of the persons possessed, and gave evidence of personality, of desires, and fears, and acknowledged God's authority over them. Our Saviour cast them out by his word, and gave the same authority to his disciples, though it does not clearly appear in the Scriptures how long that power was to continue."

Dr. Nevius holds that there is complete and circumstantial correspondence between modern testimony and primitive record, and in order that this may be clear he examines at length the doctrine of Holy Scripture regarding Satan and demons. "The Bible clearly teaches us that in all Satan's dealings with our race his object is to deceive and ruin us by drawing our minds away from God, and inducing us to break God's laws, and bring upon ourselves his displeasure. These objects are secured by demon-possession. Superhuman efforts are produced, which to the ignorant and uninstructed seem divine. Divine worship and implicit obedience are demanded, and enforced by the infliction of physical distress, and by false promises and fearful threats. In this way idolatrous rites and superstitions, interwoven with social and political customs and institutions, have usurped the place in almost every nation in history of the pure worship of God. As regards the demons themselves, it appears that they have additional personal reasons. The possession of human bodies seems to afford them a much-desired place of rest and physical gratification." (Matt. xii. 43-45.)

Addressing himself to the question why these manifestations should occur, to-day as of old, in remote and inaccessible places, and among ignorant rather than civilised races, Dr. Nevius suggests as an answer that to his own ends. A form of possession adapted to advance his ends in heathen lands may only be suited to subvert them in Christian lands. For Satan to practise demon-possession in Christian lands, would be to reveal himself in his true character, and thus excite suspicion and opposition. In China the uniform testimony of the demon is: "I cannot live where Christ is; I must go."

Other chapters give an historical sketch of demonism, also an account of spiritualism, and describe the various stages of possession. Mr. H. W. Rankin, of E. Northfield, Mass., who edited the work for publication, contributes a very useful chapter on the facts and literature of the occult, and also supplies a Bibliographical Index, as well as many helpful notes and appendices. Though not suggesting that the book solves all mysteries, or settles for good every question raised, we have no hesitation in declaring it a work of substantial value, and a highly serviceable contribution to the discussion of a subject of deep interest to the student of Holy Writ, and, indeed, to all thoughtful people.

Work at Transvaal Mines.

OUR work at the Nigel Mine, Johannesburg, having been inaugurated, we went out to pay our first visit of inspection and encouragement, taking a small magic lantern and slides to enforce the truth in presenting it to eye and ear. On the Wednesday night we had an audience of about 100 natives of various tribes at the service. No response was made to the appeal for anxious souls to come out to the penitent form, although the attention had been marked, and the impression deep. At the close five young natives waited for personal conversation, and for a clearer explanation of the way of salvation. Brother Allister has had the joy of seeing several penitents forward during the month he has been at work.

On Thursday we visited the compound of the Nigel Deep Company, and conversed with the natives, principally Swazies and Zulus, in their huts. In the evening we had over 160 at the lantern service. Conviction was deeper, and on inquiry being made for any who wished to flee from the wrath to come, fifteen came forward. We had intended returning to Johannesburg the following morning, but were constrained to stay for another meeting.

On Friday we rode over on our bicycle to the Florida Mine and had some interesting conversations with the Zulus there employed, who seemed quite eager to listen, and expressed a great desire to have the Gospel preached to them. Just as we finished in one hut we heard a voice behind us in prayer. Turning round we confronted a Zulu youth of perhaps twenty-four years of age, clothed in his blanket only. The manager of the mine, Mr. Murray, kindly gave us permission to send out an evangelist to preach to the natives in this compound. At the evening service we had about 170 natives present. As this mine (the Nigel) is surrounded by public houses, and the natives are being terribly demoralised by the drink traffic, we exhibited some slides showing the horrors of the traffic and the tragic end of many of the victims. Then we presented Christ as the power of God for the breaking of the chains of habit and the dawning of a new life in the soul. In addition to several of the penitents of the previous evening three more came forward. We do not consider these as converts, but treat them as inquirers needing instruction.

We asked the manager of the mine whether he had any complaints against our workers or the way the work is conducted. "No," he said; "rather the reverse! The boys are not drinking so much since your church was opened. I asked one old fellow who used to be a great drunkard why it was he was not now spending all his money in drink, and was surprised and pleased to hear him say, 'No, maas, I find it does me more good to spend my Sunday in the church than in the canteen." This was an encouraging testimony.

Last Lord's Day we took charge of Brother Carr's work in the Salisbury Mine, he being ill in hospital with typhoid fever, and utilised his native helpers in our other open-air work. At the Wolhuter Mine we were instrumental in preventing a big fight and consequent blood-shedding and possible loss of life. Resuming our service at the Basuto Compound we had a large and attentive audience. We then went into the Matchopi Compound, but had to contend with three big drums and a lot of rattles, so confined our service to singing. In the Shangaan Compound a whirlwind enveloped us in a cloud of dust and scattered our congregation. In the evening, however, we went from room to room and had most attentive and appreciative hearers.

We held our second Communion service in the afternoon in our hall at the City and Suburban Mine. It was a blessedly solemn time, and at the close a Morolong came out as a seeker. We have baptized twelve, and have five under instruction prior to baptism at this centre. We hope shortly to open another temple in the vicinity of Germiston from which several large compounds will be reached.

Evangelist Johannes, one of our zealous and devoted native helpers has entered into rest. He was converted over thirty years ago, under the ministrations of Rev. J. Allinson, and has for many years been a consistent worker and local preacher or elder in the church of Rev. J. Bruce (Free Church of Scotland), Pietermaritzburg, Natal. He worked as a trolley driver during the week, and preached for us on the Lord's Day. He was a powerful speaker, and knew the Zulu, Basuto, and Dutch languages. He will be a great loss to us, but the Lord will not suffer his work to languish.

The licensing board holds its first sitting under the new law about the middle of this month. The sale of intoxicating liquor to natives is to be totally prohibited, and we are praying and working for a large reduction in the number of licences for the sale of liquor to whites. We are busy, too, with the crusade against the State regulation of vice. Pray for us!

Christ's Mission, New York.

THE converted priest, Rev. James A. O'Connor, who has been labouring in New York for many years for the evangelisation of the Roman Catholics, reports much progress in the work during the past year. Mr. O'Connor began preaching in a large hall in 1879, and ten years ago he opened a Mission for the reception of priests who desired to leave the Roman Catholic Church. As many as fifty priests have come to him during the years he has been labouring in New York, and many of these are ministers of the Gospel, pastors, and teachers in various Protestant denominations.

"Christ's Mission" is the title under which the work is carried on. At first it was designed to organise a missionary society under the title of "Christ's Mission for the Conversion of Roman Catholics," but the power of the Roman Church at that time was so great in New York that even the judges of the Supreme Court interposed objection to the incorporation of a society with that title, lest it should give offence to the Roman Catholic voters by whose suffrages they were elected to the judicial bench.

Besides affording a home for priests who leave the Romish Church the Mission is daily used for conferences with inquirers. Their number has been larger last year than in any year in the history of the work. Mr. O'Connor has personal knowledge of 5000 Roman Catholics who have been converted since he began his work, and who are now members of various evangelical churches.

As the work is undenominational, it has been sustained by voluntary contributions, and the confidence reposed in Mr. O'Connor has been such that besides meeting the current expenses for the last seventeen years, a building worth 30,000dols. has been secured for the Mission, on which 22,000dols. has been paid. The debt remaining on the Mission is 7500dols. As this is the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. O'Connor's ordination to the Roman Catholic priesthood, being also the fiftieth anniversary of his birth, it is the desire of his friends to contribute towards the payment of that burdensome debt.

The board of trustees of the Mission is composed of prominent business men, members of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches, who hold the property as a corporate body. Mr. William Campbell, of 18, West Seventieth-street, New York, is the treasurer. Mr. O'Connor's residence is in the Mission building, 142, West Twenty-first-street, New York.

HENRY DOELLINGER.

The Week of Prayer, 1897.

FOR many years it has been the custom to begin the year with united waiting upon God. The Week of Prayer is now an established institution in all lands, and everywhere it has proved profitable that God's children, associated with different denominations, should meet on one common platform to seek that reviving and blessing which so many are longing for.

During the present week these special gatherings are being held (as shown in our list of "Forthcoming Meetings") at many well-known centres in London. The West-end meetings, in St. Martin's Hall, have so far been fairly well attended.

On Monday General Sir R. Phayre presided, and after prayer by Revs. Dr. Gritton and H. Colley, read a portion of Scripture and briefly introduced the subject:—

Praise and Thanksgiving: For the countless mercies that have crowned the past year; for special "times of refreshing," and for the general prevalence of peace.

Humiliation and Confession of Sin: For slothfulness in Christ's service, for losing opportunities for witnessing for Him, for conformity to the world.

Prayer for more entire consecration of heart and life, for a more steadfast "looking for the coming of the day of God."

Rev. J. G. Train, in connection with the subject, read and expounded the story of the defeat of the Moabites recorded in 2 Kings iii., and especially the miraculous supply of water to the perishing hosts. Those armies were suffering by reason of self-will. Jehoram, "who made Israel to sin," had not consulted the Lord, while Jehoshaphat, righteous as he was in other respects, had in this matter sinned in that he made alliance with Israel. The kings and their armies got into difficulty. Then inquiry was made for a prophet of the Lord. Elisha was called, and he rebuked their sin, while he assured them of God's gracious supply of the water they so sorely needed. Thus our own perversity often leads us into trouble, but if we have learned to call upon God, He will, while correcting us, surely deliver. But now, as of old, the first thing is to make room for the blessing: "Make the valley full of ditches." So we have to prepare for the coming in of his fulness. This digging and making ready, in a dry hot desert, is no easy work; nor is it always a light task to make room for the blessing of God. Old habits and prejudices may often have to be removed, and this is hard and humbling work. But it is worth it all when the fulness comes and the dry ditches are filled with water. How are we to make ready? Let us seek to be emptied of self, and self-will, and self-pleasing; let us seek to be more entirely consecrated to Him so that He may flood our souls with blessing. It may come silently without wind or noise, and in the most unlikely place and way; yet it will come and God will be glorified.

At the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., Mr. M. H. Hodder presided, and the address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Barlow, of Islington. Founding his remarks on Exodus xxxiii. 12-23, the speaker dwelt upon the urgency of individual duty, and the spirit in which it should be discharged. No man can transfer to another the obligation which God has placed upon him—in the home, in business, or in social or official life. Moses is an example of devotion; he was such because he enjoyed the presence of God (verses 14, 15). That presence means power, spiritual peace, usefulness, rest, and joy. Whereas some regard the presence of God with fear and hesitancy, Moses earnestly desired it, and, in fact, was indisposed to face the future without it. "If Thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence." God's gracious assurance was, "My presence shall go with thee, and shall give thee rest." If we realise the presence of God during the year upon which we have entered, we shall find ourselves elevated above the cares and sorrows of life, and enabled to rest in the Giver of the many good things which we daily enjoy. Like Moses, we must find the glory of the Lord in his goodness, his mercy, and his sovereignty (v. 19).

On Tuesday, Col. Douglas-Jones, who presided, read 1 Thess. i. 5-8, and called attention to the importance of the subject of the day:—

Prayer that the whole Church of Christ may be more separate from the world; that there may be more true oneness of heart among her members, and that this oneness may be manifest; that what is formal and sensuous in worship may be swept away, and that there may be instead of it a soul-thirst for God.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in speaking on the unity of the Church, said that we were called to meditate on the Church, with a capital C. as distinguished from the churches with a small c., or in other words, the various denominations. This Church includes all of every tribe and nation who by faith are united to the Lord Jesus Christ, whether outside or inside the churches. Turning to the Epistle of the Church—Ephesians—we find deep and wonderful truths concerning the Church of which Christ is the head. In the first chapter we find that our Father hath put all things under his feet, and given Him to be head over all things to the Church. Here we have the true centre of unity, the living, risen, and ascended Christ. In proportion as a just conception of our Lord in the heavenlies enters into our soul, we apprehend and enjoy union in the one body of Christ. Varied as our opinions, and even practices may be, you hold the head, I hold the head, and thus we are members of one body. This unity is accomplished. We cannot make a unity. God has made it, we enter into it. So in chapter ii. 21, 22 (R.V.) we find this beautifully brought out. As ancient temples consisted of a series of courts or chapels, so it seems the temple of God is being formed of the numerous courts and sections of the churches on earth—if only they be members of Him. Thus, amid the wreck and ruin of nations there is growing up this glorious temple of God. Then, in chap. iii. 10, we see that as the light streams into a temple through the many-coloured windows, so the light of the glory of God streams forth through the different members of his Church. Passing on to iv. 2, we find the gifts which He bestows on his Church and the purpose for which He bestows these gifts. These appointed servants are not merely to work for Christ, but being articulated to Him as his joints and members they are to let Him work through them to fulfil his glorious purposes. This same wondrous unity is shown in the last chapter of the epistle, in the conception of the oneness of Christ with the redeemed host, as the bridegroom with the bride—one woman for one man—God's own great portrait and analogy of the union for ever between Christ and his members; between the scattered members of his spotless bride, of his glorious body; the Church which is the fulness of Him who filleth all in all.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

To counteract the dangers of the New Year's festive season, a series of meetings have been carried out under the auspices of this Mission. Hogmenay re-union, held on the last evening of 1896, was a signal success. The large hall of the Mission was crowded by some 1500 persons under the presidency of Mr. T. R. Marshall. Mr. G. A. Barclay gave in a report of the past year's work in the Gospel temperance and other branches of the Mission. The results had been very encouraging. Addresses of great force and pointedness were given by various friends of the work.

On New Year's night, the hall was crowded by Christian workers, Mr. Wm. Robertson presiding. Testimonies were given by converts, showing that this Mission continues to be a centre of Christian life and activity.

The large hall was filled on Saturday night for a Gospel temperance demonstration. The Sabbath evening meetings both in this hall and in the Free Assembly Hall were also marked by much blessing.

A Druse Doctor.

REJOICE with us that we have the privilege of welcoming the native doctor of our medical mission into the fold of Christ. Last September he was baptized openly in the mission room of our house in Baakleen, in the Lebanon, and truly by doing so he has left all for the Master. He had to fly for his life, and is now in England with his wife and three children.

His great hope is to go back to his own country, and while healing the sick, tell the story of Jesus. But the time is not come for this in Turkey. The hand of the Moslem is against Christians in every part of it, secretly, if not openly. Dr. Ali has good diplomas, both from Constantinople and from the American Protestant College at Beyrout, where he was educated, and where the professors testify to his moral worth and uprightness of character; but in England these qualifications will not obtain him employment.

We desire to send this Druse doctor to Egypt or some neighbouring country, where he will be a step nearer home, and where he can be used of the Lord for the salvation of souls. He speaks English well, and loves his profession. To anyone who knows the bigotry and darkness of the Druse religion his conversion is little short of a miracle. Praise the Lord, these people, who have long sat in darkness and in the shadow of death, have at length the beams of the Light of Life beginning to shine on them.

The Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission is a humble one; it penetrates into households, and by speaking of Jesus to the weak women and often suffering children, and bringing them relief and comfort, commends Christ's love and pity. The Lord often chooses the weak things of this world to confound the strong. Communications may be addressed to the hon. sec. of the Mission, 143, Clapham-road, S.W. M. L.

From New Zealand.

IN an interesting letter to Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mr. George Soltau, writing from Lambton Quay, Wellington, N.Z., says:—"Our present work for the Lord is to go through New Zealand slowly and patiently, visiting as many places as we can, large and small, emphasising the claims of holiness as well as the Second Advent, with its practical bearing on the claims of the foreign field. We have been already eighteen months, and can see about eighteen months more work, or thereabouts. In 1898 we hope to be sent homeward again for the sake of the children, most of whom will be making final equipment for the foreign field, and we want to have them all together once more and see them launched out.

"It has been so delightful to find your books in this colony in the most out-of-the-way places imaginable. I have been up and down among the miners, the sheep-run holders, the small farmers, all sorts, and, getting into their houses, have been surprised and delighted to find 'Moule,' 'Hopkins,' 'Meyer,' in little shaky bookcases in a mission house or a shepherd's hut, or a run-holder's more solid shelves. Your influence has told, and is telling, wonderfully for God in a quiet way through your books in all sorts of places. I thought you would like to know this.

"God has been giving us much blessing in our work. Small 'Keswicks' have been held for bringing his people into full possession by full surrender to his will. In Napier an evangelist finished three weeks of remarkable blessing amongst all classes. There were conversions every night, and in the meetings for Christians beautiful illustrations of consecration. Gifts for the mission field have been forthcoming, savings having been withdrawn by poor people full of thanksgiving and faith. In one church forty-seven joined the Christian Endeavour Society, thirty-seven of whom were actives, and the majority men, the cathedral organist and the Presbyterian organist both joining hands for the Lord, the former having thirteen of his choir boys brought in also. We shall have some fine recruits from this place for India and China. In smaller places, too, the Lord has given great increase of blessing, and ministers have been much refreshed and stirred."

Pastor A. G. Brown.

THE thirtieth anniversary of Pastor A. G. Brown's work in East London was celebrated on Monday by a tea and public meeting. The spacious Tabernacle in the Burdett-road was, for two hours, the scene of much animation, being filled with friends who wished to witness what had been sorrowfully anticipated as the closing scene of a truly remarkable Gospel ministry. For reasons best known to himself, and acting on impulses which he holds to be of the Lord, the Pastor recently gave the church notice of his intended retirement, and the brief term of one month (stipulated in the trust deed) has now expired. The closing sermons were preached on Sunday last, on the evening of which day the motto text for the year was the subject of discourse—"He faileth not."

Mr. H. E. LUDBROOK, one of the deacons, who has long filled the office of treasurer, presided over the gathering. He struck the key-note of the proceedings by praising God for the great things He has done in connection with the Tabernacle. Naturally, he acknowledged the well-known fidelity and signal devotedness of the Pastor. As to the future he was silent, beyond making the bare announcement that a statement would be made by the Pastor at a meeting of church members that had been called for the following Wednesday.

Pastor BROWN was received with the cordiality which his numerous flock always extends to him. His address had to do with the past; and he magnified the grace of God, as abundantly shown in the work of which the Tabernacle had so long been the centre. There has not been a month in which souls have not confessed Christ by baptism; and in other ways there have been signs of God's presence and blessing throughout the past twelve months as in all previous years. With regard to his resignation, the Pastor said with emphasis that there had been no jarring note in the vestry, no breach in the loving relations that had so long subsisted between himself and the deacons. The motives or arguments that led him to resign were neither small nor light. Mr. Brown followed with an account of the "outside" work, in the mission halls and soup kitchens, among the sick and poor, for the orphaned and distressed. In the financial statements there were good balances on the right side. In conclusion, he acknowledged the hand of God in the work done, declaring that it had been his joy not only to give himself, but to devote what he could spare in the way of money to send forward the various enterprises connected with the Tabernacle.

An address of warm sympathy having been delivered by Rev. G. P. McKAY, of Stoke Newington, another of the Tabernacle deacons spoke. This was Mr. G. W. OVENDEN, who closed a capital speech by moving (with the consent of the executive) a resolution, which regretted the pastor's retirement, and after expressing sincere sympathy with him in the domestic trials he had experienced and the impaired state of his health, urged him to take a prolonged rest and change, in the hope that his health might thereby be re-established. The resolution, which closed with a clause calling upon the Pastor to reconsider his decision, was seconded by Mr. R. PINNEY, another deacon, and carried unanimously and with loud cheers.

Addresses were also delivered by the Pastor's brother, Pastor E. H. BROWN (Twickenham) and his son, Pastor A. D. BROWN (Herne Bay); and finally Mr. GEORGE NOKES said some cheery words. The meeting began with a sorrowful sense that the Tabernacle work would soon lose its directing head; but before it closed there were many grounds for hoping that Pastor Brown would reconsider his decision, and, after a season of rest, resume his much-loved work.

The Lord's Day.—A New Year's address has been issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, giving the latest facts as to Sunday labour and Sunday defence. During the year 281,000 publications of the Society were issued; 110 lectures and addresses were delivered.

Aged Christian Blind.—On the last afternoon of 1896 a number of ministers and friends assembled at the Homes for Aged Blind Men and Women, Crouch Hill. The account of their year's work was satisfactory. During this year it is proposed to provide a seaside home for the blind at Southend, which, inclusive of furnishing, will cost £2150. Of this amount £900 has been subscribed.

The McAll Mission.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

THIS Mission will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary in a few days, Dr. M'All having opened his first hall in Paris on Sunday, January 17, 1872. After so many years of work, it seems to those in the field as if the Gospel was never so needed in France as now. The more the work deepens, the more does the depth of the need make itself felt. So we should be encouraged to greater efforts and more persistent prayerful labour for the Lord in this land.

We are in the midst of annual Christmas gatherings in our schools. About 7000 children in Paris and the provinces take part, almost all of them of Catholic parentage, gathered in to the Sunday and Thursday schools. Many parents and friends hear the Gospel from the children's lips, as they listen to them repeating the portions of Scripture and singing the hymns chosen at these fêtes. A goodly number of young people will be found as teachers and helpers, who were themselves a few years ago thus gathered in to the schools and taught of the Saviour's love. One young man is now training in England to go as a missionary, he hopes, to the Congo, whose parents have done all in their power to try and prevent him giving himself to the Lord, by offering him a good position, if he will stay in the religion of his fathers.

Many instances can be cited of blessing lately given among old and young. Now it is a medical sutdent, a Corsican, brought to Christ in the meetings in a provincial town; or a Jewish lady who has lately been baptized and taken her place in a little Free Church, confessing her faith in the Lord Jesus and her joy in finding the Messiah. Again, an old man and his wife started off to go to the theatre in Paris. They found at two theatres pieces were being played that they had seen before, and at the third there was no room. So strolling homeward, disappointed of an evening's entertainment, they passed by one of our halls, and were warmly invited to enter. Something they heard laid hold of them, and they began to come regularly. After a certain time they left Paris and settled in the country, and found out the Protestant church in the little town where they resided. But, like all Parisians, the love of Paris was too strong to allow them to stay away, so back they came to the much-loved boulevards and streets, and soon found us out. The husband is most clearly converted; the good wife has not yet got free from old superstitions, but we are sure that both will be found ending their days in the peace that the world never gives and cannot take away.

Our little boat is still at work near to Mélun. The damp season and consequent floods have not been helpful to us, but we have none the less had many good missions in lonely hamlets and towns where the Gospel is not a thrice-told story, but where it has come as something altogether new to many eager listeners.

The funds are at present low. We hope to reduce our deficit to £1600 at the close of the financial year. We have a generous offer from a friend in California to find half this sum if we can raise the other £800 before April 15. We earnestly hope to be able to accept the offer, and thus stand free of debt.

The Deaf and Dumb Institution, Derby, has issued an attractive booklet, setting forth the claims of the Institution, and describing the work being done for 113 afflicted ones, who are boarded, clothed, educated, and trained to earn their own living. Copies may be had of the Superintendent, Friargate, Derby.

A Medical Mission Home and Orphanage has been recently established in Calcutta. Hospitals and medical institutions existed, but, for the blind, cripples, and incurable destitute orphans, with no soul on earth to care for them, there was no home! These unhappy waifs have continued knocking at the doors of non-medical orphanages, in some instances, for over a year, but only to be turned away again and again. No one would undertake the great responsibility of receiving such pitiful cases. The Medical Mission Home and Orphanage supplies this great need, but it is entirely unsupported, save by a few who have identified themselves with the movement. Mrs. Norman is the hon. secretary, and will be pleased to answer any inquiries.

A New Year's Hymn of Praise.

"The Lord hath been mindful of us: He will bless us."—Psa. cxv. 12.

GOD of love, eternal Father,
Grateful songs our hearts would raise,
To extol thy faithful goodness,
Shown through all the vanished days.
Never has thy mercy failed us:
Thou hast always mindful been;
Thou hast heard our faintest sighing;
All our tears thine eyes have seen.

We would praise Thee for thy patience,
For thy wise restraining hand;
For thy tenderness in trials
Which were hard to understand.
For the strength of the assurance
Of thy presence always near,
Whether through the gloomy valley,
Or upon the mountain clear.

We would praise Thee for the mercies
Thou hast showered on our way;
For the deep and precious lessons
By thy Spirit taught each day;
For the humbling of our failures,
For the gladness of success,
For the knowledge of our weakness
And of Thine almightiness.

Thus we raise our "Ebenezer,"
And with heart and voice will bless
Thee, our loving Guide and Helper,
For thy perfect faithfulness.
May thy wonderful forbearance
Fire our hearts with purpose true,
Nerve our wills with firm endeavour
Thy most holy will to do.

Cheered and strengthened by thy goodness,
May we upward, onward press;
Joyful in the gladsome knowledge
Of thy love and changelessness.
In thy hands we leave our future,
All the hidden, unknown way,
Praying Thee to keep and guide us
Till we reach thy perfect day.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

ONE of the most remarkable features of the work of these evangelists in Edinburgh has been the revived interest in the noon prayer meeting. During the past fortnight it has been held in the Moncreiff Hall, Free Assembly Hall, where the leading theme has been, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." Different ministers took part each day, and their addresses, as well as the daily words by Major Whittle, were greatly appreciated by the large audiences which gathered each day at noon.

Another feature of the work has been the deep interest created by the young people's meetings. The last one of these, held on Christmas Day, was made a means of marked interest to the children; many were deeply touched.

With regard to the evening evangelistic meetings, those held on the Sabbath evenings were attended in each case by crowded audiences, but the plan by which the place of meeting was altered each week made the work on the week-nights very up-hill. Major Whittle's addresses have been marked with great power; Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins have also endeared themselves greatly to the Christians who came in touch with them.

Manchester.—One of the most profitable gatherings in this city is the New Year's Day prayer meeting, held at the City Mission Rooms, 100, Corporation-street. This year there was a large attendance of Christian workers. Dr. Wood, of Southport, gave a most faithful and helpful address on "The Church and Kingdom of God." The marks were as follows:—What is the Church? Ecclesia, "called out." Separation from the world is her first mark. Without this her work is useless, as gunpowder mingled with ground glass loses its explosive power. What is the work of the Church? To witness, to baptize, to heal. What is the kingdom? Not church buildings and denominations, but "righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." This is the kingdom we are to "seek first." How often we fail to put it first. E. K

Words of Wisdom.

If thou wouldst have an unction from the Holy One, sink to the level of a babe in wisdom.

If thou wouldst have Him work mightily in thee, cease from thine own doings.

If thou wouldst have Him to dwell with thee, be poor in spirit.

If thou wouldst have his strength exerted for thee, be weak.

If thou wouldst hear Him speak to thee, be silent.

If thou wouldst have Him move thee, be still.

If thou wouldst have Him lead thee, forsake thine own desires.

If thou wouldst have Him impress thee, forsake thine own thoughts.

If thou wouldst have Him control thee, be slow to speak.

If thou wouldst have Him mend thee, accept his discipline.

If thou wouldst have Him bless thee, see Him in all things.

If thou wouldst catch his whisper, shut thine ear to other sounds.

If thou wouldst have Him change thee into his likeness, hold thyself at all times peacefully in his presence.

If thou wouldst have Him all to thee, sink into nothingness before Him.

In short, if thou wouldst have the inner temple of thy being filled with God, go out of it thyself and abandon it to Him.

London Laundry Workers.

It was very pleasant to a number of Christian ladies and gentlemen to meet, on Saturday evening last, in the large ironing room of the Hygienic Steam Laundry Company, Limited, at Clissold Park, to see the delightful way in which the girls and women working there and their friends spent their first social evening. A very pleasant time was spent. The programme included games, sacred songs, and a Gospel temperance address. The beautiful buildings and machinery have recently been erected, and we understand that, though worked on strictly commercial lines, the entire profits will go towards evangelical mission work in London. The honorary directors are all Christian men. A Gospel meeting is held in the dining-room every Tuesday night, and on Fridays, at noon, a short service is conducted by some of the young ladies at "The Willows." God's blessing is resting on the work, and already some of the girls have decided for Christ.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—New Year's Day will be remembered by the workers at this society's headquarters in Ratcliff Highway as a season of spiritual power and blessing. After some social functions, nearly 200 seamen attended a meeting conducted by Mr. W. H. Seagram. Large numbers signed the temperance pledge, and many also accepted Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Similar gatherings were held at most of the society's stations round the coast.

Armenia.—The International Association of the Friends of Armenia has issued six new leaflets in continuation of the series published by the Information (Armenia) Bureau. The subjects dealt with are: Our Treaty Obligations; the Story of Ourfa, as told by Vice-Consul Fitz-Maurice; Mr. Curzon's Speech in the House of Commons, with a note, bringing the figures up to date; a Report on the Daily Operations in the District of Kharput; Mrs. Rendel Harris's Account of the Massacre at Egin and a Special Appeal to Churchmen. Specimens and prices can be obtained from Mr. Charles Hecht, 3, Bridge-street, Westminster, S.W.

Christian Instruction Society and Deaconess' Mission.—The annual tea and conference was held on New Year's Day at Bishopsgate Chapel, there being a large gathering of members and friends, who devoted themselves to a discussion of the objects and methods of the society. The object is "to advance evangelical religion and Christian charity by helpful co-operation with the churches." As to the methods, house-to-house visitation is carried on in the most needy districts. Open air and tent services are held, and books and tracts distributed. Poor people are relieved, and the sick cared for. A special appeal is now being made for funds. Rev. R. Mackay is the secretary, the offices being at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. The deaconesses of the society visit the homes of the needy, when practical sympathy is given. Thirty-three devote the whole of their time to house-to-house visitation, and casual wards, hospitals, infirmaries, and workhouses are also systematically visited by volunteer workers.

Famine in South Africa.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton, writing on December 11, says:—"We have heart-rending accounts of the famine and its results all over the Transvaal, Zululand, and Swazieland. What with rinderpest and the locust plague, the outlook is very gloomy. In Zoutpansberg the supplies are brought by mules and donkey wagons, but the former are dying from 'horse-sickness,' and the latter cannot draw their loads through the heavy ground. Kafirs are parting with their little girls, or giving them in pledge for oxen, which they kill immediately. From the Crocodile River reports come that they are exhuming and devouring oxen that have been buried for months. A Relief Committee has been formed in Johannesburg.

"My heart is full of praise as I review the past year. God has greatly blessed us. We have opened another Zulu church, which is packed at the meetings, and souls have been saved. In Swazieland also we have opened another station. Moreover, in Zululand we have been granted sites for new stations, and hope soon to extend them. We have likewise commenced work among the 53,000 Indians of Natal."

"Robin Dinners."

Last year between thirty and forty thousand little ones were given a Christmas feast and entertainment. A far larger number of children from every part of London could easily be found this winter. But that we may not disappoint our many guests, who are already looking forward to their annual treat, it is essential that funds should be raised at once.

One of the largest of the Robin Dinners and pleasant evenings for the children will be held at Bermondsey Town Hall, on Friday, January 8, at 6.30 p.m., when 1000 Robins will be invited. The children on this occasion are drawn from amongst the poorest parishes in South London.

A representative committee, who know the poorest parts of London, and labour amongst them, carries on the work, founded by Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., and by them the funds will be carefully and economically disbursed. There are no office expenses, and the whole funds go straight to the children. The hon. secretaries are Messrs. C. Ashton Bullock and John Kirk, The Robin Dinner Fund, 7, Paternoster-square, E.C.

Blind in Pekin.

Sir,—I read in your issue of Sept. 17 an appeal by Miss Gordon-Cumming for help to enlarge the accommodation at Mr. Murray's School for the Blind at Pekin. Mrs. Wallace and I were in that great city last week, and had the privilege of seeing something of the good work in which Mr. and Mrs. Murray are engaged. We are glad to add our unqualified testimony as to the real value of the work, and the need for more room for extension and development.

The work has been very successful in the past, in teaching many to read the Scriptures by the adapted Braille System which Mr. Murray has invented, and which is also easier for old and illiterate people to learn than the complicated Chinese character. The girls are taught type-setting, and print and bind the Scriptures and tracts for use in Pekin and elsewhere.

This is a true and beautiful work of faith, for a large and needy class whose lot is very hard and hopeless, and Mr. and Mrs. Murray should be cheered and encouraged at this time by a prompt and liberal response to the appeal on behalf of the proposed enlargement.—Yours, etc., Robert Wallace.

Chefoo, China, Nov. 2.

Ecuador.—Pastor W. E. Reed, of the First Congregational Church of Avoca, Iowa, has sailed for Ecuador as its pioneer Protestant missionary. General Alfaro has promised him the utmost protection, and will encourage the mission. Rev. Alex. F. Irvine succeeds Mr. Reed in the pastorate at Avoca, which is one of the most enthusiastic missionary churches in Western States. It is in close touch with the China Inland Mission and Gospel Union.

The House of Rest.—Dr. Montague Miller gave a New Year's address in the Pillar Room at the monthly meeting Friday afternoon. The way, he said, to have a happy New Year was for the Christian to have no will but God's will, to wait God's time in everything, to be always in an attitude of receptiveness, and to live one moment at a time. The usual prayer-meeting was held at 6 o'clock, and Lieut.-Colonel Oldham spoke during the evening on Eph. v. 20.

Scottish Notes.

A New Year's Conference of believers was held last week in Aberdeen.

The union of the Congregational and Evangelical Union bodies in Scotland has been celebrated by united Communion services in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other places.

The town of Campbeltown, Argyleshire, has recently received a distinct addition to its list of helpful institutions in the shape of a cottage hospital. It is mainly the thoughtful gift of Mr. Peter Mackinnon, lately resident in the town, and now of Ronachan, Clachan. Some friends contributed towards the cost of building and partial endowment.

On Christmas Day there passed away an Edinburgh citizen who in his time was one of the sincerest workers among the Grassmarket poor. The late Mr. John M'Lachlan for years acted as Chairman of the Grassmarket Undenominational Mission, and along with the late Mr. James Fairbairn conducted this mission to criminals with the greatest success. At times Judges of the Court of Session addressed meetings largely composed of persons who had been sentenced by them. Mr. M'Lachlan was an unobtrusive temperance advocate, and one of the few survivors of the Evangelical Union movement in Edinburgh.

Irish Notes.

There are now seventy branches of the International Bible-reading Association in and around Belfast, with 7,200 members.

The first of three suites of school buildings provided by the generosity of the late Mr. Hugh H. Boyd was opened last week in Belfast.

Watch-night services were held in nearly all the Methodist and also in several of the other Protestant churches throughout Ireland, and were largely attended.

Gathered Gold.

It is not you that are to shine; it is your light.
Punshon.

I never trusted Christ but I found Him faithful, nor my own heart but I found it false.
Vavasor Powell.

This is our New Year's bliss—
He is mine and I am his.
All the days,
All the ways,
Lead us home;
Let us pray, let us praise.

THE HEART AND THE TREASURE.

The heart follows the treasure, as the needle follows the loadstone, or the sunflower the sun.
Matthew Henry.

PRAYER.

Prayer is not eloquence, but earnestness; not the definition of helplessness, but the feeling of it. It is the cry of faith to the ear of mercy.
Hannah More.

WHAT IS MAN?

Humboldt travelled the world over, and saw everything; and he recorded in his diary at the last, what sounds almost like an aphorism: "The finest fruit earth holds up to its Maker is a man!"

TRUST.

The greatest censure we can pass on a Government is a vote of want of confidence in it; and this is what we who do not trust Him wholly, are doing towards God all our life long.—The late Rev. C. E. Steward.

DISTRESS ABOUT SIN.

Have you not known someone very much distressed about a sin that to you seemed insignificant? It is little in human eyes perhaps, compared with your sin, but the difference is, he saw Christ's look when he sinned.—The late Rev. C. E. Steward.

DAILY CARES.

Bring your cares to God by prayer in the morning; spread them before Him, and make it appear by the composure and cheerfulness of your spirits that you have left them with Him. Daily prayers are the best remedy for daily cares.—Matthew Henry.

CHRIST'S YOKE.

Christ's yoke is easy, and his commandments are not grievous—not because He lowers the standard of duty, but because He alters the motives which enjoin it, and gives the power to do them. Christ's yoke is padded with love, and his burden is light, because, as St. Bernard says, it carries the man who carries it.
Dr. Maclaren.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE CAUSES OF CHURCH DECLINE."

SIR,—I am inclined to think that whatever the influence of any in particular, such causes form a large class whose name is Legion, and are probably themselves to a great extent the signs of deeper and less discernible causes. We may blame "higher criticism," but more likely that which has produced the decline has also provided soil for it, just as a neglected garden will grow weeds as well as decline in fruitfulness. Let anyone, say for an hour, consider the life principles, the inner character of the Son of God, or let him ponder the spiritual laws, precepts, and forces of the Gospel as described in the Epistles, and then contemplate the general practices and the working principles of what we will call the Church of God to-day. Would he not be made painfully conscious of contrast and contrariety in drift, and spirit, and detail? Is he not almost face to face with two different systems with, chiefly, names and words only in common?

To what a pitiful extent religious circumstance is mistaken for spiritual cause, as though it were more necessary to have men's persons in some special place than the incorruptible seed permanently lodged in their souls! How largely the pastures for piety are external rather than internal to the Word. Instead of appeal to the conscience, to the soul, as in the sight of God, the appeal is rather to the material and carnal parts of our nature. Even the worship that the saints should offer is largely under the regulating influence of what will please or not offend the unconverted taste. "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit," says the Book. Nay, the flesh can be made door and pathway for the Spirit. Some stray and mysterious arrow may find its way, though the bow and the archer are not always the subjects of stern provision.

Contrast the Scriptural and Apostolic reason for money service with the multitudinous ways that have to be adopted to induce Christians to part with their money for the Lord's sake. What playfulness and artfulness, to say nothing of other and worse. Again, what measure of seriousness, conscientiousness, and principle in religious things is found among the generality of Christian people? Where is the man "of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord"?

These are but indications—a few of many—that imply something more general than the outcome of one specific cause. As secrets, and at the same time as symptoms, three things at least appear to me. (1) The Bible has lost none of its truth, importance, or power, but it is losing its hold on the loyalty and the sense of Divine supremacy in the minds of Christian people. Of this the want of enthusiasm in its world-wide circulation will be to some sufficient evidence. (2) There is a great drift from a true conception of the moral and spiritual nature and responsibilities of salvation. Believing in the Son of God is not apprehended to involve following, serving, knowing, possessing the Son of God. (3) Teachers and preachers do not sufficiently realise the direction, the volume, the strength of the currents that are more or less peculiar to our day. There are many "other things" and their power is great.

These call for corresponding and counteracting power. On a smooth sea, this horse-power can make its knots an hour, when against wind and tide it may go back or be kept at a standstill. A world that is more awake calls for a Church that is still more awake. A lively day will demand more reality of faith. Worldly forces must be met with equally definite spiritual forces. Instead of this, comprehension is injuring emphasis and punctuation, modern charity is re-moulding dogma and doctrine, and the pursuit of numbers disguises the Gospel, or deprives it of its more conspicuous garments. So far from confronting there is an inclination to accommodate, as though the streams of our time flowed generally towards the kingdom. What wonder that we hear of decline? And so it will be until Christians have a more single eye for God, and seek first his kingdom and its righteousness in the way that He Himself decrees. W. F.

DEAR SIR,—The question of Church Decline is an intensely solemn one and throbs with living interest. It is bound to press itself more and more into prominence, and should be looked at earnestly and frankly from all sides.

Men who are Christian in the vital sense cannot be indifferent to the interests of vital Christianity One of the first evidences of saving grace in our own hearts is a solemn concern for the salvation of others. "Is 'modern criticism' responsible for this decline?" Mr. Moody asks, in reference to religious life across the Atlantic; and in your last issue "A Church Member" presses the same question in reference to church life in this country. There is little doubt in many minds that the prevalent spirit of "criticism" is a fruitful cause of very much that is now being deplored on all hands. But should we not, while reflecting upon what has been preached, also take into account what has been left unpreached?

In Ephesians iv., where the Christian ministry is traced to its true source, we see that when the Head of the Church made provision for its sure foundation in apostles and prophets, and for its upbuilding and development in pastors and teachers, He also provided for its extension in the gift of evangelists. Now is not this evangelistic provision being largely overlooked?

It is not enough for a church to be evangelical, Christ meant it to be also evangelistic. The risen Saviour's eye pierced the ages, and compassionately regarded the many who would need his grace, and in order that these should be gathered in He gave "evangelists." "Do the work of an evangelist," it was said once to a young minister, in view of a season of "Church decline," when many would be turning away their ears from the truth. "Do the work of an evangelist." When is this injunction attended to in many pulpits? If we neglect our Master's provision for extension, can we wonder that accessions are not made to the Church from the world?

It has been suggested that the churches should be open for evangelistic service on Sunday evenings. Yes, so far good, but to begin at the beginning, the first need in many cases is the evangelisation of the morning congregation. The writer recently heard a sermon preached by the pastor to his Sunday morning congregation of nearly 2000 people, which for simplicity of evangelical teaching, for incisiveness and solemnity, and for tenderness of appeal, might have been delivered by Mr. Moody himself in an evangelistic meeting. That minister does not close his eyes to the sad fact that many of his morning hearers are destitute of vital religion. It was not surprising to hear that in that church there are no signs of decay and decline. On the contrary, the place swarms with men and women whose hearts burn with devotion to the Saviour and with enthusiasm for the salvation of souls.

There are, thank God, many such congregations where the evangelistic element still has its place in the pastor's heart and preaching, where the impenitent sinner is warned of impending and unutterable doom, and where the atoning blood and merit of the Redeemer as the sole ground of the sinner's acceptance with God is the central theme, and where the absolute necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit is definitely taught, and where men are from time to time urged to immediate repentance, and faith in the Lord Jesus. And when the unchanging Gospel of God is preached in the tenderness and power of the pentecostal spirit, souls will be added to the Lord and to the Church.

Our Railway Men.—A large number of our metropolitan railway men are still unsupplied with monthly packets of Gospel literature. God has greatly blessed these silent messengers, which go forth with much prayer. Miss Jackson, 42, Upper Addison-gardens, Kensington, will gladly send names of men to those wishing to help.

Requests for Prayer.—For a three weeks' mission at Bridgerule and Marmanchurch, Devon, by Mr. and Mrs. Clegg, from Jan. 10.—For a mission by Mr. Henry Lukin, St. Albans, Bevington, Liverpool.—For a mission at Broadwas, Jan. 7 to 17, to be conducted by Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—For much blessing upon special services, to be commenced on Jan. 10, at Great Saughall, by Mr. James Walker.—For blessing on a mission by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander, at Kentish Town, commencing Sunday next.

Temperance Notes.

ONE of the earliest of the Preston veterans, Mr. Myles Pennington, has passed away at Toronto, in his eighty-third year.

A bill condemning the use of a drinking bar in the American Senate House was approved of by 104 representatives, only seven voting against it.

In America a plan has been set on foot to cure rich drunkards. A company has bought up an entire island in the South Pacific Ocean, on which patients will be housed until cured.

A generous subscriber to the Church of England Temperance Society has sent the Society a cheque for £250 in commemoration of the preferment of a total abstainer to the primacy of All England.

Lord Salisbury, replying to a memorial, has promised to consult with the Secretary for the Colonies as to the advisability of adopting more stringent measures for the restriction of the liquor traffic on the West Coast of Africa.

Niger and Yoruba Notes for January devoted a large part of its space to dealing with the results of an inquiry, set on foot by Bishop Tugwell, showing that drunkenness is increasing to an alarming extent in Western Equatorial Africa.

Keepers of clubs in Cardiff have been fined, one to the extent of £100, for retailing beer without a licence. The Head Constable stated that the practice of taking liquor from the clubs prevailed to an enormous extent in that town.

A united meeting of representatives of temperance organisations, recently held in Manchester, resolved to hold a National Convention for advocating the prohibition of the liquor traffic at Newcastle-on-Tyne, under the presidency of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., April 5 to April 9.

There are now seven bishops of the Church of England who are pronounced teetotalers—viz., Carlisle, Durham, Lichfield, Wakefield, Newcastle, Chichester, and the Bishop-designate of Peterborough. These, with the Archbishop of Canterbury, make a goodly temperance phalanx.

A remarkable temperance meeting at Plymouth is described by The Western Evening News. Fourteen commercial travellers were staying at one house, and during the evening the talk turned on temperance. The senior commercial related the appalling effects drink had had upon him, and how he was given his last chance by the house he still travels for, and he took the pledge. That was ten years ago, and he told of the change in his life which had resulted. As soon as he had finished speaking, six of his fellow-commercials took the pledge, and another followed next morning.

Notes from Prague.

THE CHRISTIAN renders a marked service in Prague. After reading it myself, I pass it along from helper to helper who can read English. Some of its items find their way into our monthly papers, of which we publish three—two in Bohemian and one in German.

During the month of December, I offer Bibles and Testaments at half price to those who will give them to the poor and destitute. It often happens that in the Christmas month we circulate more Scriptures than during the other eleven.

There is much cheer in Bohemia. The first free Gospel church was organised in my house in 1880; now there are twelve such churches, with fifty preaching places. The members number 800, and the adherents 1600. Including the suburbs of Prague, we have regular meetings in fifty places.

Smichov, Prague. ALBERT W. CLARK.

The Mission to Draymen and Coachmen, conducted by Mr. J. H. Fearnsides, of Batley, continues its useful work on behalf of carriers, cabmen, and coachmen. At the eighth annual tea-meeting 183 horsemen were present. After tea Gospel addresses were given, twelve men signed the pledge, and others testified to definite blessing. Meetings are held once a month, specially for godless men whose only place of worship is most frequently the public-house. Prayer is asked on their behalf.

Ross Bible Carriages.—The new report tells of constant itineration in Herefordshire and the surrounding counties. The workers with their van have laboured in quiet villages, in busy markets, in crowded fairs, in large cities with teeming populations, and among the crowds on the sands by the sea; scattering seed from Bible Stalls, Bible carriages, and market stalls, and proclaiming the Gospel in tents, chapels, halls, and workrooms, as well as in the open air. Bibles and Testaments have been largely sold, and thousands of tracts distributed. There have been many tokens that God has greatly blessed the work. Copies of the report may be had of the superintendent, Mr. John Coates, 3, Canteluporoad, Ross.

Obituary.

REV. EVAN HERBER EVANS, D.D.

THE intimation of the death of this famous Welsh preacher must have been a surprise to many. Born in Pantyromen in 1836, he was brought up by godly parents at Pontseli. At the expiration of his apprenticeship, he removed to Liverpool, and while residing in that city the turning-point of his life came. Rev. John Thomas, D.D., then minister of the Welsh Tabernacle, recognised that young Evans possessed the gift of preaching, and encouraged him to preach his first sermon. So satisfactory was the result that business was forsaken for the Normal College, Swansea, and subsequently the Memorial College, Brecon. His success as a student became so marked that the Tabernacle, Morriston, one of the largest churches in Wales, called him to its pastorate, and waited more than a year so that he might complete his studies. He was ordained in 1862, but North Wales had its attractions for him, and in 1865 he removed to Carnarvonshire, and there for over thirty years he wrought his life's work. For over twenty-eight years he was minister of Salem Church, Carnarvon, then Principal of the North Wales College, at Bangor, an institution which has under him made considerable progress during the last three years.

At the great Cymanfa gatherings, when thousands came together to the large open-air services, Dr. Evans was one of the most popular preachers; but he was more than that, for few men read more or studied harder than he did to the very end of life. At Exeter Hall meetings he was a popular speaker, and at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle he preached several times. In May, when the Colonial Missionary Society met at the City Temple, under the presidency of Sir Donald Currie, Dr. Evans delivered his last speech in London, pleading for Welshmen in Greater Britain. He then stated that his first English speech in London, many years ago, was at the anniversary of the same Society.

Dr. Evans was a poet—a Welsh poet. Many of his hymns have found their way into recently-published Welsh hymnals, but they are little known in England. The following translation of one—"Light shall be at Eventide"—may not be inappropriately quoted. It will be new to thousands of English readers—who will easily observe the picturesqueness which accompanies Welsh hymns.

Keep me very near to Jesus,
Though beneath his cross it be;
In this world of evil-doing
'Tis the cross that cleanseth me.
Should there come distress and darkness,
Let this hope with me abide;
After all the gloom and sorrow,
Light shall be at eventide.

Bring to mind my past experience,
That shall take my fears away;
For thy goodness and thy mercy
Shall be mine till close of day.
Through the tears the clouds, the tempest,
Shine on me, O Crucified!
There's a promise in God's rainbow—
Light shall be at eventide.

Lead me onward to the future,
Where I fear one step to move;
Still the love of God will keep me—
Love beyond a mother's love.
Calvary has said sufficient—
Hear them sing on yonder side;
Though the Cross stand in the pathway,
Light shall be at eventide.

MR. W. T. BROOK, MANCHESTER.

Union Chapel, Oxford-street, Manchester, has recently sustained a great loss by the death of Mr. W. T. Brook, who for the last twenty years has been the superintendent of the branch mission school at Wilmott-street. Through his efforts the mission was enlarged, and its spheres of usefulness greatly extended, until it became one of the most effective agencies in Manchester. The poor of the Wilmott-street locality have lost a benevolent and loving friend, and none will more deeply deplore his death. He passed away on the 22nd ult., after considerable suffering, which he bore with that brave fortitude which had always beautified and ennobled his life.

REV. THEOPHILUS WOOLMER.

This able and earnest servant of Christ passed away on the last Sunday of the year at Worthing. Though retired from the active work of the ministry, and latterly unable to preach, save with his pen, he maintained his interest to the last. Even in what John Keble called its "calm decay," his life was by no means useless, as the neighbours in Worthing can testify. The son of one of the old Methodist preachers, he rapidly rose in the Connexion, and early received the appointment of governor and chaplain of the school for the sons of ministers at Kingswood, Bath. Most of his lengthened ministerial life was associated with London, having held pastorates at Southwark; Great Queen-street, Holborn; Islington; Stoke Newington; and Kentish Town and Deptford. In 1875 he was appointed secretary of the Fund for the Extension of Methodism in Great Britain, and subsequently he became book steward at the Conference Office, City-road, which post he held for ten years. Since his retirement he has resided at Worthing. He was in the eighty-second year of his age, and the fifty-fifth year of his ministry. He leaves a widow and family.

Evangelistic Notes.

Manchester.—Gipsy Smith has begun a ten days' mission in the Central Hall, preparatory to the mission in the city by Mr. McNeill, which opens on Sunday next.

Fleet, Hants.—Mr. Sidney Vivian, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a successful fortnight's mission in Fleet Hall. The services have been well attended. Sinners have been brought to a knowledge of the truth, and Christians have been blessed and revived in spiritual life.

New York.—Mr. Clement Palser, who has been evangelising in New York and its vicinity during the past two months, recently held a special service for the convicts in Sing Sing Prison. Some seven or eight hundred men were present, and at the close a number expressed spiritual anxiety. The evangelist has also conducted an evangelistic service in the Tombs Prison, New York City. His health continues to cause considerable anxiety.

Stoke Newington.—On Sunday, Mrs. Harrison Lee conducted three services at the Primitive Methodist Church, near Abney Park. In the morning, a powerful discourse was delivered to hearers of all ages, from the children to aged men and women, on the words, "Be ye holy, for I am holy," urging the necessity of the correlated duties of temperance and purity of life to holiness. An address was given to school children in the afternoon, and in the evening to a crowded congregation an intensely earnest appeal was made to the unconverted on the Parable of the Wedding Garment. A pleasing feature was the singing of several solos by Mrs Owen. The unction of the Holy Spirit was manifestly present, and a solemn and impressive after-meeting closed a day's successful service on the part of our gifted and devoted Australian sister, who seems filled with "burning charity Divine." We trust her fervent zeal will not disable her, and that during her stay in this country, abundant and permanent blessing may attend her endeavours.

Rev. T. W. Bowen, of Idaho, a minister of ten years' standing among the American Presbyterians, has been compelled, by family circumstances, to come over to this (his native) land for a time. While here he would be glad to engage in evangelistic and similar service. His address is 50, Manor Park-road, Harlesden, N.W.

Personalia.

Rev. Walter Bradbury has been evangelising in Southsea and Barnstaple, and is expected on a mission in Jersey in January, where formerly he was minister of St. James's Church.

Mr. R. C. Morgan has left London for a stay of some weeks in North Africa. He asks his friends to accept his grateful acknowledgment of the many kind communications for Christmas and the New Year.

Rev. Robt. and Mrs. Wallace, of the Marchmont Home, Belleville, Canada, are at present in China, visiting stations of the China Inland Mission, and seeing something of the Lord's work in that great and needy land.

Dr. Edward Bickersteth, missionary bishop of South Tokio, Japan, has been ordered by his medical advisers to return to England to complete his recovery from a severe illness. He is expected to reach England in January.

Pastor Chiniquy is laid aside by serious illness. He is lying at the house of a friend in West London, but earnestly trusts he may be able to fulfil his engagements. Prayer is desired that this valiant defender of Evangelical truth may be spared yet a while, though he has now reached the age of eighty-seven, to carry on his work, and win yet further trophies for Christ from among his former co-religionists. Many may be glad to show sympathy by helping to relieve him of that financial burden which has brought him to this country in his advanced years. Any help sent through us will duly reach him.

Y.M.C.A.

A free breakfast to 120 destitute men was provided on Christmas morning by the Newcastle-on-Tyne Lodging-house Mission Band in the hall of the Association. After a substantial breakfast, an interesting Gospel service was held.

Dr. A. W Clark, of Smichov, Prague, writes:—"The past year has been one of very great blessing among men. We have been privileged to organise eight new associations during the year, and the statutes for the month are already at the Governor's office."

The fourth National Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of India was held in Calcutta last month, on December 26-30. A good number of the foremost Y.M.C.A. men in India were present. The Nagpur Association has opened a fine new building.

The secretary at Lydd (Mr. F. E. Wootton, Ness Villa) is making a very strong effort to save the Association from collapse. Notice was given to quit the rooms occupied at Michaelmas last, and the time was extended to the end of the year. Apparently the work must now cease unless funds be provided to secure other premises.

The Dumbarton new buildings were formally opened on Saturday week by Lord Overtoun. In spite of the drenching rain, the members of the Association and friends paraded the principal streets of the town accompanied by two bands. At the building itself Lady Overtoun received the guests. Lord Overtoun formally opened the building, and emphasised the benefits of the Y.M.C.A. Other speakers were Mr. Daniel McBride (president of the Association), Mr. Dugald Campbell (the secretary), Col. J M. Denny, M.P., Mr. W. M. Oatts, and Rev. John McNeill. In the evening a social meeting of members and friends was held, at which Mr. W. M. Oatts gave a very interesting limelight lecture on "Association Men and Buildings of the World." The new buildings consist of a large hall, capable of seating about 300, a well-fitted gymnasium, a reading-room, reception-room, bath-rooms, and several smaller rooms.

Christian Endeavour.

The Leicester churches and C.E. societies are organising a special mission for the third week in January.

Miss L. A. Bovey, secretary of the Newton Abbot C.E. Union, left on Jan. 4 to undertake missionary work in China.

The West-street C.E. Society, Dunstable, has held a three days' mission, conducted by Miss Gregory, of London.

Mr. E. Pitchford, president of the Chester Union, is contributing a series of articles on "Christian Endeavour Principles" to The Chester Chronicle.

The Endeavourers at Waverley Park, S.E., conducted a successful seven days' mission at an undenominational mission hall in the immediate neighbourhood.

At Stamford the Congregational Y P.S.C.E. has held a special eight days' mission, conducted by Rev. T. Cope Deeming, of Wigston, assisted by two lady missioners, resulting in a great blessing.

In Chico, Cal., it has been the custom for years past to have a ball on Thanksgiving evening. This year the Christian Endeavourers decided to provide a counter-attraction, and the result was the largest church in town filled until there was hardly standing-room.

Y.W.C.A.—The annual meeting of Bury St. Edmunds branch was recently held in the Athenæum Hall, Rev. L. Fawcett, vicar of St. Mary's, presided. Miss Ardill spoke of the increased work of the Association at home and abroad. Rev. J. S. Pratt spoke earnest words to the young women present.

Mexico.—Mr. Eglon Harris, writing from Orizaba, says:—"I have lately spent a week at Pachuca, the capital of the State of Hidalgo. As it was our first visit there, the thousands of tracts were well received. Doubtless the priests will prepare for a second visit, for such has always been the case in other towns. But after the second and third distribution, things change again, and instead of the curious interest of the first, and the rage and threats of the few succeeding times, we feel we have almost come to harvest time. The printing-press has no chance to rust. We are finishing 15,000 copies of 'El Sembrador' and 6500 of 'God's Way of Salvation,' as many as our stock of paper would allow. The good hand of our God is seen in the fact that since commencing in May 1894, we have printed and gratuitously circulated 3,010,652 pages. This of course does not include 'Pilgrim's Progress,' which is still unfinished." Copies of the latest circular-letter regarding the work may be had from Mr. John Mercer, "Harburg," Fallowfield, Manchester.

International S.S. Lessons.

January 17.

A MULTITUDE CONVERTED.—Acts ii. 32-47.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 39.

PENTECOST was the beginning of a new dispensation. We may justly expect remarkable results now that it has begun.

This lesson tells the story of the first sermon preached after the Holy Ghost was given. Wherein does the New Power appear?

I. LOOK AT THE AUDIENCE.—It must be a very large one, for it is called a "multitude" (6), and must have included thousands (see verse 41). How were they gathered together? Neither by big posters, announcing popular preachers on taking themes; nor by clanging bells, nor loud-sounding drums. The Spirit of God is his own advertisement. The barest announcement is enough to gather the people to where his power is at work. By the effects which He produced (6) the people were constrained to come. Who were they? It is certain that some were strangers gathered from all nations to the great Jewish festival (5). But the larger number were men of Judea, and of Jerusalem (14). Such men formed a difficult audience to preach to. Many of them had heard Jesus Himself, and so far from being won by Him had taken part in his crucifixion (22, 23). What can Peter do with a people who have hardened themselves against the words and works of Jesus?

The Spirit of God manifested his power first of all in gathering such a congregation to hear the truth concerning Him whom they had put to death.

II. LOOK AT THE PREACHER.—He is known to many of the people who hear him (14). Perhaps some of them saw him in the High Priest's palace, and heard him, with oaths and curses, deny all knowledge of Jesus. He is not afraid now, but fearlessly charges upon them the great crime of murdering their Messiah. "Ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain" (23). "But, Peter, the same men that murdered Jesus may also murder you." The thought does not seem to enter his mind; or if it does the prospect has no terror for him. The Spirit of God gives men courage, and makes even the naturally timid to be brave for Jesus. Is not that the secret of the endurance of the martyrs?

But there are greater changes in the preacher. This is he who drew the sword and was ready to do battle against those who touched his Lord (Jno. xviii. 10). Where is his sword now? His antagonism is changed to love, and his only weapon is the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. His desire to destroy is changed to a desire to save. Did not the Holy Spirit effect that change? The Spirit enables us to love those whom we formerly hated.

When we listen to his sermon another remarkable effect appears. After three years' companionship with Jesus Peter appeared to have learned very little. His views, like those of the rest of the apostles, were very carnal. An immediate earthly kingdom was still before them as the object of their hope. But in this sermon what a remarkable knowledge of Scripture appears; and how clearly and intelligently he understands its application to Jesus! Trace the course of the sermon from its quotation from Joel (15-21), through its references to the death of Jesus, and its explanation of the Resurrection in the light of Scripture (22-36), to its powerful and persuasive application (38-40). How can this change be explained? Has not "the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him" (Eph. i. 17) been given.

III. LOOK AT THE CONVERTS.—The power appears in this remarkable firstfruits of the Pentecostal harvest. Their number surprises us (41). The Church began the day with a hundred and twenty members (i. 15); before the day closed it had increased by thousands. The promise of Ezek. xxxvi. 37, 38, and the further promise of John xiv. 12, found fulfilment. Preaching or teaching, when accompanied with spiritual power, is effective.

And remember who the converts were. Some had taken part in the crucifixion, and in the streets of the same city had cried, "Crucify Him!" For fifty days they had felt no special sense of guilt for what they had done. Now they break through all propriety, and interrupt the preacher with the cry, "What shall we do?" How explain the change? Not by Peter's words alone, but by the Spirit's power that accompanied his words. Conviction of sin is the Spirit's work (John xvi. 8, 9).

The quality of the converts is another evidence of the Spirit's power. They fearlessly confessed Christ by baptism (41). They remained stedfast in their fellowship with the Church (42); neglecting no ordinance, and using every means of grace. And their love among themselves was as great as their faith in the Lord Jesus (44-46). What but the power of God could convert such sinners into such saints?

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Prize Reciter, Reader, and Speaker is a capital monthly for temperance organisations and Bible classes. The First Series, made up of last year's parts, contains about 300 poetic recitations for young and old, 70 short orations by eminent speakers, 24 complete stories for public reading, mutual improvement studies, etc. (2s. A. W. Hall, 28 to 32, Hutton-street, E.C.)

The King's Highway. Vol. XXV. Edited by Rev. John Brash. (C. H. Kelly. 3s 6d.) A journal devoted to the interests of Scriptural holiness, according to the interpretation of our Methodist brethren. Christians of all schools will find help and stimulus in many of the vigorous papers, which are contributed by various writers, and deal forcefully with the doctrinal and practical aspects of the Christian life.

The Converted Catholic is a valuable publication, a storehouse of information on the questions at issue between the Roman Catholic Church and the Protestant faith. The thirteenth volume, composed of the monthly parts for 1896, is full of facts and instruction. The articles by the editor, Father O'Connor, throw much light on the policy of Romanism. (New York: James A. O'Connor, 142, West Twenty-first-street. 1dol. 50c.)

The Christian Irishman, Vol. XIV. (1s. Mecredy & Kyle, 49, Middle Abbey-street, Dublin.) The year's parts of this useful monthly contain a large budget of information. There are articles on the catacombs of Rome, sketches of Saints and Fathers, talks with Irishmen on Christian doctrine and practice. St. Patrick is the subject of several chapters, as interesting to Saxons as they are charming to our brethren of the Celtic race.

The British Messenger is an excellent evangelistic monthly, and the year's parts make a volume (1s. 6d.), which should be placed in all village libraries and be used with diligence by district visitors. The contents are good and varied, and include a serial story, as well as some deeply interesting sketches, entitled "McCheyne from the Pew." The Gospel Trumpet (1s.) is in large type, and distinctly arresting in its contents. Good News (4d.) is a third budget of Gospel reading fully illustrated. (Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.)

CHURCH HISTORY SKETCHES.

Lectures on Ecclesiastical History, delivered in Norwich Cathedral. (7s. 6d. Nisbet.) This handsome volume contains a series of addresses, fifteen in number, on the so-called Fathers of the Early Church and their works, not overlooking other monumental illustrations of the faith and practice of Christian antiquity. Dean Lefroy, in a lucid preface, points out what soon becomes obvious to the reader, that the work is really a series of chapters of ecclesiastical history, each period being associated with the life of its leading character. The book is not so much for the scholar as for the average inquirer; but we venture to think that most scholars will read with peculiar interest the essays in which familiar stories are narrated with such freshness as in these pages. Thoughtful persons who make their first acquaintance with Church History through these lectures, are sure to want to read more, and all will admit that, although not specially illuminating, the story is not without many and deeply important lessons for all times.

In the opening lecture on St. Ignatius and St. Polycarp Dean Farrar strikes a proper note, showing that the writings of the Fathers must be read and weighed just as those of other good men; this literature "is human, and in no sense whatever is it coordinate with the one legitimate authority which alone the Church of England recognises, the authority of the Word of God." The other lectures include:—Justin Martyr, by Canon Meyrick; Irenæus, by Dr. Stanley Leathes; Cyprian, by Archdeacon Sinclair; Chrysostom, by Dr. Kingsmill; Tertullian, by Rev. G. A. Schneider; Clement of Alexandria, by Dr. F. H. Chase; Origen, by Rev. A. E. Brooke; Eusebius of Cæsarea, by Professor Gwatkin; Athanasius, by Professor Ince; Ambrose, by Bishop Barry; Jerome, by Rev. T. W. Drury; and St. Augustine, by Dr. Handley Moule. This list shows the ground covered, and indicates the standpoint of the lecturers. Two other chapters should be specified—the Apology of Aristides, by Professor J. Armitage Robinson; and the Church in the Catacombs, by Rev. Henry Gee. From first to last this is a reliable and readable book, and would be welcomed as a present by many a poor preacher and student.

The Home Blessing is a new monthly issued by the Sunday School Union (6d.) It is intended for and will interest and instruct young people, not the juveniles, but rather elder boys and girls.

CASSELL'S MONTHLY MAGAZINES.

Among Cassell's monthlies a prime place must be given to The Quiver (6d.), the January issue of which opens with an article on work among waifs and strays, by the Duke of Fife. Cassell's Family Magazine (6d.) has much bright reading, the sketches including one on life at the Spanish Court. Little Folks (6d.) is in a new cover, and includes an album of entertainment, with musical selections and pieces for recitation. The Magazine of Art (1s. 4d.) is as rich as ever, the frontispiece being a reproduction of "Requisitionists," by A. C. Gow, R.A. Work (6d.) is an ideal periodical for mechanics, every department having relation to the practical and useful. The Building World (6d.) is a journal for workers in many trades. The pages are luminous with plans and designs. Cottage Gardening (3d.) touches various domestic interests and pleasant occupations, and deserves all its popularity. Cassell's Saturday Journal (6d.) is a repertory of stories and sketches. Each part carries a railway insurance of £1000, and a cycling insurance of £100. For the boys Chums (6d.) has rare attractions in picture, story, and breathless adventure.

Aluteh. By Eleanor Stredder. A tale written to re-echo the cry of victims of opium, showing the feelings and statements of the Chinese themselves in regard to this traffic in poison. Her Father's Honour. By Katharine A. Richards. The story of a loving daughter's self-sacrifice and the blessing it brought to herself and others. (G. Stoneman. 1s. each.)

An Illustrated Bible. Many, it is true, object to pictures in the Bible; but others believe these to be helpful in attracting the young and inducing them to read. Such will welcome a new series, issued by Gowans & Gray, Glasgow. This edition is well printed, strongly bound, and admirably illustrated. The pictures are wholly views of places mentioned in Scripture history, and not attempts to portray persons and events from the recesses of an artistic imagination.

Fallen Angels. By One of Them. Popular edition. (Gay & Bird, 22, Bedford-street.) As the title indicates, the main contention of this treatise is the extraordinary one that "human beings were angels, and dwelt originally in purity and light, as emanations from the Divine; but that, having fallen, we are being graciously led back to heaven by gradations of instruction." The thesis is against Scripture as faithfully interpreted, and in our judgment is without any basis in fact or reason.

The Dead Pulpit, by Rev. H. R. Haweis, M.A. (Bliss, Sands, & Co.), startles us by its drastic and effective title, and if its constructiveness were equal to its criticism it would be a most valuable book. It abounds with truisms tersely and quotably expressed, mingled, according to our thinking, with many serious fallacies. The author is well known as a pronounced Broad, or, to use his own term, Liberal Churchman. He throws his mantle over the Stage and Ghosts, and desires re-statements on many important subjects, e.g., he says:—

> Dogma is dead; doctrine is living.
> The Bible is the Word of God—that is dead dogma.
> The Word of God is in the Bible—that is living doctrine.
> The Bible is an inspired history—dead dogma.
> The Bible is the history of an inspired people—living doctrine.
> The Bible is infallibly inspired—dead dogma.
> The Bible is inspired, but not infallible—living doctrine.

We have no doubt that our readers, with ourselves, hold firmly to what Mr. Haweis calls "dead dogma," and would not, to save our lives, accept what is here called "living doctrine" in its place.

The first chapter treats of "Prophets of the Transition." They were F. D. Maurice, Robertson of Brighton, Charles Kingsley, Dean Stanley, Jowett, etc.

In his prologue Mr. Haweis says: "The future historian of the English Church will mark the translation of Dr. Temple to Canterbury and Dr. Creighton to London, as a turning-point in the destinies of Broad Church theology." For "those who suppose that the future of Anglicanism is with the Sacerdotalists are mistaken. The future of Anglicanism is with the mystic (not rationalistic) Liberals."

Mr. Haweis is outspoken and intelligible. He does not pose as one thing and say another. He does not pretend to be an Evangelical while he writes as a very Broad Churchman. It is instructive to know the point of view of an extreme Broad Churchman, who, apparently, would re-state principles to harmonize with modern practice, rather than raise practice into harmony with ancient and fundamental principles; and would prefer the Church to make peace with the world, rather than to come out and be separate. It is difficult for an Evangelical Christian to take seriously as from a professed minister of Jesus Christ the views expressed in this book.

ALIVE FROM THE DEAD. By George Goodman. (Children's Special Service Mission. 6d.) Plain earnest words of serious counsel for young people lately won to Christ, and in need of help and guidance in regard to daily life and walk.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Canon Trefusis has been appointed suffragan bishop of Crediton.

Dr. Earle, Bishop of Marlborough, is suffering from a serious attack of diphtheria.

Rev. J. R. Eyre, vicar of the parish church, has been appointed Archdeacon of Sheffield.

A Children's Festival Service was held in York Minster on Holy Innocent's Day (Dec. 28).

Rogation Sunday (May 23) has been fixed for sermons on behalf of the Bishop of London's Fund.

Rev. R. Wilkes Gosse, curate of St. John's, Reading, has been appointed Association Secretary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society for Ireland.

A new mission and colportage van has been presented to the Church Army for work in the Lewes Archdeaconry. Another van has been presented anonymously, for work in the diocese of Norwich.

The children's service in Westminster Abbey, on Innocents' Day (December 28), begun by Dean Stanley, has been continued by the present Dean, and on Monday week was as well attended as ever.

Rev. Thomas Hulme, who has been vicar of Brightside, Sheffield, for nearly half a century, having resigned, the Archbishop of York has appointed as his successor Rev. Ben Lewis Parkin, of Hessle.

The late Archbishop Benson some time ago arranged that the next Lambeth Conference, or Pan-Anglican Synod, which usually assembles at Lambeth Palace every ten years, should be held in the summer of 1897, a year earlier than customary, so that it should coincide with the celebration of the thirteen-hundredth anniversary of the arrival of Augustine in this country.

Congregational.

A ten days' mission has been held at Wrington by Rev. John Thomas.

Rev. Thomas Wilkinson has resumed his ministry at Paul's Meeting, Taunton.

Rev. Frederick Sweet, of Romford, is making satisfactory progress towards recovery.

Rev. N. MacNeill has concluded his ministry at Bedford Chapel, Charrington-street, N.W.

Rev. W. and Mrs. Huckett and Rev. A. W. Wilson have arrived home from Madagascar.

Rev. Dr. Leach begins his ministry at Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, on the first Sunday in February.

Rev. George Campbell Morgan, of Birmingham, has accepted the call to the pastorate of New Court, Tollington Park, N.

Rev. E. Le Mare, who for several years has been honorary secretary of Fleetwood branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, has been appointed Association Secretary of the South and West district of England.

It is understood that Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers has been appointed to fill the vacancy in the Coward Trust caused by the death of Rev. Josiah Viney. It is one of the most valuable trusts in connection with the Congregational churches.

Amongst the L.M.S. Missionaries who have just left for their posts are—Rev. J. P. and Mrs. Ashton, returning to Calcutta; Dr. and Mrs. Cochrane, proceeding to Mongolia; Rev. A. W. MacFarlane (son of Rev. Dr. MacFarlane), proceeding to Hiau Kan, Central China; and Miss Bovey, appointed to Shanghai.

Dr. Horton, who entered on the chairmanship of the London Union with the commencement of the year, convened a meeting at the Memorial Hall on Wednesday, for special prayer on behalf of London. He intends to hold, during the year, a conference in each of the districts of the London Union with a view to strengthening the work in the districts.

Calls.—Rev. Ira Boseley to Russell-street, Dover (accepted); Rev. C. H. Vine, of Sudbury, to Ilford (accepted); Rev. W. E. Ireland, of Oxford, to Sligo; Rev. H. Gardner to Tettenhall Wood (accepted); Mr. John Hey to Earl Shilton (accepted) Rev. T. Masterton, of Edinburgh, to Ardrossan.

Resignations.—Rev. F. W. B. Weeks, of Upperton, Eastbourne; Rev. D. M. Jones, of Queen's-walk, Wolverhampton; Rev. A. F. Bartlett, of Bacup.

Baptist.

A larger chapel is to be built at Rochester.

The Welsh Baptists held their annual Eisteddfod at Cefn Mawr on Christmas Day.

On Wednesday week Pastor Thomas Spurgeon opened Beulah Chapel, Bexhill, the foundation-stone of which he laid some months ago.

At Gosford-street, Coventry, twenty-six members have been received by baptism during the ten months' ministry of Rev. W. H. Higgins.

On Thursday night Pastor C. B. Sawday preached at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and later a Watch-night service was conducted by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

Over £7000 has now been secured towards the £12,000 which is being raised to provide an endowment fund in connection with the Brighton Grove College, Manchester.

It has been decided to build a Seaside Home for delicate children in connection with Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanages. About £10,000 will be required to purchase the land and complete the home.

It has been decided to purchase the site at Brixton on which Gresham Chapel, destroyed a year ago by fire, stood, and to erect a new chapel. The services at present are being held in the Brixton Hall.

Since the Rev. John Mitchell has taken charge of the Clarence Park Chapel, Weston-super-Mare, there have been many indications of interest. At the first public meeting, held on Wednesday, addresses were delivered by the pastor, Revs. T. J. Longhurst, W. C. Miniie, and John Douglas, Dr. J. W. Smith, and others.

Calls.—Rev. Stanley Flook, of Athlone, to Carrickfergus; Mr. E. Ballard Warren, of Shoreditch, to West Drayton; Rev. S. J. Somers, to Appledore (accepted); Mr. Hugo Gruber, of Rochdale-road, Manchester; Rev. J. F. Taviner, of Pastors' College, to Elgin (accepted).

Methodist.

Miss Costin has held successful missions at Bradford and Blackburn.

Rev. J. H. Goodman has been delivering in the Central Hall, Manchester, special sermons on "Last Things."

Rev. W. J. Ward, of Market Rasen, has been appointed by the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society to Jamestown, West Africa.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon has consented to preach the annual sermon in connection with the Methodist Free Church Home and Foreign Missions at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Thursday, April 8.

Rev. C. M. Tate, missionary to the Indians of British Columbia, has arrived in this country, accompanied by his wife. He has laboured among the Red Indians of the Pacific Coast for twenty-seven years.

Mr. J. Ward Ambler, an ex-Joyful News evangelist, and at present one of the managers in Mr. James Keith's Mission to Sandwichmen, has been appointed to assist Rev D. Murley, president of the Bible Christian Conference, in conducting a series of evangelistic missions in the country around Bideford, Devon.

Mr. Cadman, an old Richmond student, is at the head of the Forward Movement in New York, and pastor of the Metropolitan Temple. During the past year 284,925 people have attended the Temple services—an average of 5450 per week. The social status of these is principally of the middle and professional classes, with a thick sprinkling of the wealthier members of the community. There have been 340 additions to the membership for the past year, and 656 reported conversions.

Dr. Randles, president of the Wesleyan Conference, has issued a New Year's Pastoral, in which he enlarges on the necessity of "fulness of spiritual life." "A more valuable New Year's gift God could not bestow. A loftier object you could not pursue. Nothing else could so ennoble your character, enrich your experience, or invest you with divine energy." The Pastoral goes on to say that wanting it, all the machinery and activity of Methodism will go for little, whereas the possession of this fulness would flood all their religious assemblies with gracious influence and exclude the little forces of pride, vanity, envy, sensuality and selfishness that spoil the vines, whilst rapid and large would be the conquests of the Gospel. The prosperity of the Church can only be maintained, the pastoral points out, by the spiritual prosperity of individual members. He concludes with an exhortation to the young to use their enthusiasm and gifts for the extension of the Kingdom of God.

Presbyterian.

Mrs. Baeyertz has conducted a sixteen days' mission at Trinity Church, Kentish Town.

Mr. George Barbour, of Bolesworth Castle, has forwarded £500 to the English Presbyterian Church as executor of his mother, the late Mrs. Barbour.

The fourth anniversary of Rev. J. G. Train's settlement at Upper Norwood has been celebrated. The whole work seems full of vigour and encouragement.

A donation of £1000 has been given by Mr. S. Williamson, of Liverpool, towards the threatened deficiency of £5000 in the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Fund.

The report of the Bible-class and C.E. Society connected with Newarthill Church, Motherwell, shows vigorous and successful work on a most encouraging scale.

Calls.—Rev. A. S. Berry, of Orkney, to Arthur's Hill, Newcastle; Rev. John Ritchie, of Edinburgh, to Ardwell; Rev. J. Kelman, of Petterculter, to New North Church, Edinburgh (assistant); Rev. B. Davidson, of South Kingarth, to Buchanan Memorial, Glasgow.

Fallen Asleep.

At Newton Park, Leeds, on 30th ult., Rev. R. G. P. Bullock, aged thirty-six, the active and devoted vicar of St. Martin's, Potternewton.—At Luton, on 28th ult., Rev. James O'Neill, a thoroughly Evangelical clergyman, who had been vicar of the parish for thirty-four years.—At Halifax, on 24th ult., Mr. Robert Haddon, aged forty-six, a well-known worker.—At St. Anne's-on-the-Sea, aged sixty-five, Mr. James Orr, a worker and generous giver.—At West Bournemouth, on 25th ult., Mr. Frank Braham, aged forty-two, a willing helper in the Lord's work.—At Preston, Mrs. Robertson, a useful helper, for over fifty years, at Cannon-street.—At Milton, Wisconsin, on December 8, Rev. W. Walker, for thirty-three years a most valuable missionary at Gaboon, West Africa.—At Kinnoull, N.B., Rev. Dr. John Anderson, minister of the parish.—At Portmadoc, Carnarvon, Rev. William Thomas, aged sixty-two, a leading Welsh Wesleyan minister.—At Bruton, Mr. George Amor, a devoted Sunday-school superintendent for many years.—At Nanstallon, Mr. W. Parsons, a leading helper in Methodist circles.—At Dunsly, Lincs., on 26th ult., Rev. Alfred Jones, for many years an energetic clergyman, and the author of various books, including "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures Explained and Illustrated," a volume of "Twenty Sermons," and a volume entitled "Light and Darkness, as manifested in Genesis i."—At Nonnington Lodge, Bromley, on 25th ult., Mrs. Chalmers, aged eighty-five, widow of the late Rev. F. Chalmers, vicar of Nonnington, and for many years a noble helper of Christian institutions.—At Courtrai, Belgium, Mr. Wm. Ballagh, of Sigoneil, co. Antrim.—At Waterford, Mr. Wm. Moore, an earnest Christian worker.—At Mullinroddy, Irvinestown, Mrs. Knox, mother of Revs. Andrew and Robert Knox (Methodist ministers), and an earnest Christian.

Tower Hamlets Mission.—At Watch Night Service the Great Assembly Hall was crowded in every part, many standing. Mr. F. N. Charrington presided. A short address was given by Mrs. W. R. Lane, and at the close 216 persons voluntarily signed the temperance pledge.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, January 4, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

☞ Subscribers will greatly facilitate our business arrangements by remitting overdue subscriptions at once to THE CHRISTIAN Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

On another page we give an extract from a very important magazine article by General Hutchinson, on the history of Christian work in India. Students of missions will read it with special interest; but the story embodies an important lesson which deserves the attention of all.

All lovers of peace and concord will hail with satisfaction the announcement that a general treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States of America has been signed in Washington by the American Secretary of State and the British Ambassador. The Daily Chronicle of Tuesday gives the full text of the treaty, and properly describes it as "a momentous and epoch-making document." We doubt not it will be duly ratified on both sides of the Atlantic, and a great step taken towards the longed-for goal of brotherhood among the nations of the earth.

"The year of shame" will be the name attached to 1896 in the minds of the future historians of Europe. It has been chosen by Mr. William Watson as the title of his recently published volume of poems, dealing with the attitude of the nations on the subject of Armenia. The Bishop of Hereford, in a strong preface, has little faith in the nerve and resource of our statesmen. He says:—

> They seem to be overawed, on the one hand, by the demoralising influence of the financier, the bondholder, and the speculator, an influence which threatens to become as disastrous in modern Christendom as it was in ancient Rome; and, on the other, by those great military empires which have strangled the conscience of Europe.

On the other hand, Mr. Gladstone, in a recent deliverance, speaks of his "inextinguishable hope" that we are on the eve of better things. Let us pray that 1897 may not become much older ere this hope is realised.

There is need for private charity as well as Government aid to check the effects of the Indian famine. Missionaries in the affected region have sad tales to tell of want and woe, notwithstanding the large number of persons who are employed on the relief works. The difficulties inseparable from dealing with a famine are increased by the action of the corn dealers, in whose hands there are said to be large supplies of corn, and who, at the commencement of the distress, ran up the price to an exorbitant extent, or refused to sell to their poorer neighbours lest they should want the grain themselves. The fall of rain brought the price down rapidly, though it still is generally twice its usual height. The Foreign Secretary of the L.M.S. thinks that ten or twenty thousand pounds distributed among the various missionary agencies in India, without regard to religious opinion, would be an incalculable boon, as they can make a wise use of the money.

The annual gatherings of the Free Church Council are to be held in London in March next, and as many as a thousand delegates are expected to attend. Prominent Churchmen, including the Bishops of London and Rochester, Canons Sinclair and Scott Holland, and others, have offered their hospitality to the visitors. This interchange of courtesies is most healthy, and while it ought not to create any false impression of unity in matters where Episcopalians and Free Churchmen differ, it cannot but tend to soften the asperities of religious controversy, and bring into prominence the common ground of faith that underlies all differences dividing Christian people.

The discussions of the Council will embrace many subjects of a non-controversial character, including "Woman's Work in Foreign Missions," "Evangelistic Work," "Lay Preaching," "The Claims of London," "Christian Endeavour," the "Puritan" and "Methodist" types of spiritual life. The militant aspect of Free Churchism is to be far from prominent, and the political scarcely touched on at all. A great opportunity will be afforded to the speakers of lifting the spiritual standard of life in the churches to a higher level. That this sadly needs doing no one can deny, and that the future of all the churches depends on it is equally certain. Amidst all our activities, which were never greater, there is a widespread feeling that the "life of the spirit" is not cultivated as it ought to be.

An enterprise is on foot to bring about a friendly conference between Churchmen and Nonconformists in view of the Education controversy. Whether such a conference can issue in a practical via media remains to be seen. It would certainly be an excellent means of helping to clear away the prejudices and misconceptions of the open-minded on both sides. Setting aside the extreme parties—the Sacerdotalists on the one hand, and the Secularists on the other, there are vast multitudes of people on both sides who are not divided in aim so much as in method. If these could be brought to a better understanding of one another's position, a great deal might be done to relieve the controversy of some of its worst features. Mutual suspicion has always played too prominent a part in religious controversies.

General Booth told Mr. Gladstone in the interview which he recently had with him, that so far as he knows continental countries the Protestantism in them is "very broad, very cold and inactive," and so far as practical godliness is concerned one country appears to be no better than another. A good work is being done in some parts of Holland. If there is anything that could meet the many and pressing needs of the Continent, it surely is a quickening of all the churches; but they are as oppressed by the civil law as by a cold theology. They have to be brought out of a coffin and a tomb.

Many of our readers will be interested to learn that Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness, the younger son of Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, is leaving for China in February, as a missionary of the China Inland Mission. He will also represent the Keswick Missionary committee, as he is to be supported from their funds. A farewell meeting under the auspices of the Inland Mission, will be held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday, January 27, at 7 p.m, when Mr. Albert A. Head will preside. Revs. J. Hudson Taylor and E. W. Moore, and Mr. Eugene Stock will speak.

"In the year of Augustine, 1300," is the title of an article in which The Church Times enlarges on the "truly remarkable year 1897." It links together the name of Augustine, who came to England to make it an appanage of the Roman Catholic Church, and that of our Queen, who is plighted to the maintenance of Protestantism, and who would be untrue to herself and to her high position were she to forget that millions of her best subjects are Protestants of Protestants. We hope the nation and those in authority will discountenance every attempt to promote the patronage by Royalty of Romanism, and to degrade a national celebration of the Queen's long and wonderful reign into a sectarian demonstration.

The inner history of the Pope's Bull denouncing Anglican Orders is beginning to be become public. "Catholicus," in The Contemporary Review, affirms that the real opposition to their validity arose, not from the Pope, who was personally in favour of them, but from Archbishop Vaughan, who has all along held that to recognise Anglican Orders would be subversive of Catholicism in England; that English Catholicism, to a large extent, lives by the belief that they are null and void. The dreaded consequence is more likely to follow the present decision than the contrary. It was the undefined position of the sacerdotal party that made it so easy to step over into the Roman camp; and now that the English Church is permanently declared to be outside the "true body of Christ," we shall in all probability find that a new Protestantism, not Catholicism, is likely to benefit by it.

Dr. John Watson sends to The Christian World, as his New Year message to the Churches, one sentence, expressing his conviction that the most needful thing for the Free Churches (we would say all churches) is a revival of religion in the hearts of professors; and to this end all should pray for ministers "to be baptized anew into the passion of our Lord Jesus Christ." But why should not everyone pray for that for himself? No doubt a revived ministry will bring a revived church, but a revival may as easily break out among half a dozen private members. Better not wait for the ministers or for anybody else.

It is high time, to our thinking, that the Licenser of Plays turned his serious attention to the disgraceful burlesque of sacred things of which of late the London stage has become the arena. We have heard even worldly people, whose practical interest in spiritual matters is nil, denounce the irreverence, not to say blasphemy, of some of these scenes. And each successive production of the kind is worse than its predecessor. Yet, strangely enough, professing Christians encourage them. Truly, the Lord is "wounded" by those who claim to be his "friends."

The publication of the sensational details of "Society" trials is one of the saddest features of modern journalism. It would be difficult to tell how much harm is wrought on young and impressionable minds by such reports. There are some things, as the Apostle says, "of which it is a shame even to speak." This kind of shame is fast dying out of our newspapers.

The charges recently brought against a Manchester superintendent of police, and which caused his dismissal from the force, without a pension after long service, show the degrading effect of official association with evil. When police authorities are in league with keepers of disorderly houses, as this case proved, public protests are of little use. We hope the Manchester Town Council will take steps effectually to purge the force of those who are inclined to show leniency to law-breakers.

Another matter in which the police often seem to fail in their duty is in taking action against publicans who serve drink to those already intoxicated. Last week one of the Metropolitan magistrates made some strong observations on this subject. What is the use of enacting laws if they are treated as a dead letter by those who ought to see to their due application?

A police court is not the usual place to find an illustration of the great law of intercession, nor a convicted thief a likely source of disinterested friendship. Last week at the Mansion House one prisoner pleaded hard to be allowed to add the punishment of another to his own, on the ground that while he had nothing to say in his own defence, his fellow was a respectable and striving man whose future would be ruined by imprisonment. The magistrate was able to give the latter the benefit of the doubt, and was evidently touched into passing a lighter sentence on the other, whom he recommended to try and redeem his character when his time was served, "as there was evidently some good in him."

"Not sermonising—oh, no—or talking at people, but with and to them." This is a sentence from a contemporary in describing a gathering of men and women of various denominations, met to discuss religious work and opportunities. We quote the words because they illustrate a favourite way of expressing the common prejudice against preaching, as though sermons implied an offensive assumption of superiority—a "talking at" or "down" to the audience. Whence has such an idea arisen? If it represents a real fact, then preachers guilty of such a practice are very unworthy of their office. To take up such an attitude is an offence, not only against the audience, but against the Gospel itself.

There is no one who should aim so assiduously at reaching people through the open door of their affections and sympathies as the preacher. It is his business to present the truth to men in such a way as to turn their thoughts away from himself to the great centre of adoration and love, the Lord Jesus. This should be done with all persuasiveness of manner, and with every effort to merge himself in his message. When he has brought men to the feet of the Saviour, and made them look into his face, his own work is done. The idea of "talking at people," which expresses the feeling that many have of preaching, would then never suggest itself.

The tendency, at one time very strong, to close churches and chapels in poor and declining neighbourhoods, and to build, out of their sale, places in new and populous neighbourhoods, has received an effectual check. If the poor cannot come to the rich and cultivated, the rich must go to the poor, and use for their benefit the church property which stands among them, while the suburbs help themselves. The process is entirely healthy; nothing will either enable the well-to-do to understand the poor or to sympathise with them except being among and working for them. In this movement we have one of the best antidotes to the money-making selfishness of the age.

The discovery of the Röntgen rays with its wonderful practical developments has made a deep impression on the scientific world in two directions: first, by stimulating inquiry into the unknown; and, secondly, by promoting a renewed sense of the world of mystery that still bounds our little circle of knowledge. Professor Silvanus Thompson touched on this point impressively in a lecture at the Royal Institution on Saturday. These rays, he said, illustrate the principle that there are more things in heaven and earth than were sometimes supposed to exist. The old intellectual arrogance, which spoke so dogmatically of the limits of the possible, etc., is out of date. In mental and spiritual as well as in material things we are surrounded by a universe of possibilities, and the great condition of being permitted to peer into its depths and learn something of its meaning is humility and teachableness. It is the "meek" that "inherit the earth."

There is a fashion in morals as well as in manners. It is one of the strangest facts of history that each age has its favourite virtues, which it cultivates to the neglect of others equally or more important. One of the neglected virtues of the present day is reverence. In the home, the street, the church, we do not show the respect for things above us that marked the demeanour of our forefathers. The unveiling of so many mysteries by the hand of science, the distinction between externals and essentials in religion, and the lack of reserve in the literary handling of sacred subjects, are, among other causes, partly responsible for the change. This is an incalculable loss, and one difficult to restore. The hope of the future is to make it an essential element in the training of the young from their earliest days.

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell.

Loyalty Islands are under French rule and Jesuit domination. The Christians there, so made before the French arrived, have suffered greatly; nevertheless a glorious revival of religion is now going on in the group. "The good time," says the Protestant missionary, "for which we have so long prayed and waited, seems at length to have come." Religion is a power which is dislodging worldliness and sin from the high places; even the officials of the government are interested in the religious work, one of the "high" ones testifying that Protestant Christians are more loyal than Roman Catholics. France will also duly find that to be the case in Madagascar and everywhere.

Mission Homes in Paris.

THE sapling which was planted in faith twenty-five years ago has gradually but surely been taking abiding root in the frivolous city of Paris. The storms which have from time to time passed over it have caused it to "take root downward, and bear fruit upward."

Of the many visits I have paid to these Homes, none have pleased me more than the one I have just concluded. True it is that funds are urgently needed, also that more workers are required, as the older ones cannot abide for ever, and their places must be filled up sooner or later by others; but there the work stands, a monument of God's sustaining grace and goodness. It is his work, and He will most surely provide. It was a great sorrow to all of us, and to none more than to Mrs. Lewis and her husband, who had come all the way from Canada to spend their Christmas at the Homes, that through illness they were detained in London, and unable to proceed to Paris.

I attended as usual all the festivities, addressing the children at the Orphanage after their Christmas dinner, the working men and their wives at the Mission Hall, and the annual gathering of the young women connected with the Mission Home in the evening. The next day I took a similar part in the treat given to the mothers' meeting, and in that to the children connected with the Sunday-school.

Miss Mitchell is still at her post at 77, Avenue Wagram, where the Free Registry is getting more widely known as the years go by. The Home is very full just now, and I had the privilege of conducting evening worship on several occasions, when I was pleased to see nearly the whole household assemble, which has not always been the case. After 20 years of faithful service Miss Carmichael is no longer able to take an active part, but her place is ably filled by Miss Myers, who is hard at work at the Mission Hall. She, however, sadly feels the loss of those excellent workers, the Misses Watton, who were unable to come to Paris this winter.

I was very pleased with the attendance at the Bible Reading at Washington House, 18, Rue de Milan, on the last Sunday in the year. Miss Ayerst has nobly continued her difficult work among the artists and students, by whom she is much beloved. She is seeking to raise funds to meet the interest on the mortgage, and needs every encouragement in her endeavour. At the adjoining Dépendance, Miss Freeman still carries on her excellent work amongst the shop-girls.

On New Year's Eve, Mr. Frank Debenham (a co-director) and myself attended a very interesting soirée at Washington House, when about seventy young ladies were present. We also visited the Orphanage, where the children were having a little fête. Miss Lawer is certainly in her right place here, amongst the forty-six children under her charge. They were all looking remarkably well, and the whole tone of the Orphanage is decidedly good.

I had thought of giving statistics of each branch of the work, but as I should take up far too much space, I must refer my readers to the annual report and also Echoes from Paris, both of which can be obtained on application to Miss Rhoda Mouncey, at 22A, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W., the London office of the Association.

Before closing, however, I must refer to the soup-kitchen, where I gave two Gospel addresses to the hungry men who came to get the soup. Last winter this kitchen was attended by 1985 of the very poorest of our country people, and it grieved me much to be compelled, before leaving Paris, to order it to be closed.

From the last annual report it will be seen that the deficiency of income amounted to over £800. It is therefore manifest that unless we get more financial help the usefulness of these Homes will be sadly crippled. Thomas A. Leigh.

The God of Jeshurun.

FOR THE OPENING YEAR.

AN eventful life—probably, with one exception, the most eventful ever lived—was nearing its close. A man who in his own person united the qualities of prince, patriot, general, law-giver, prophet, and poet, stood in the presence of the people he had loved and served so well; and as, upon one after another of its tribes his words of benediction and farewell were breathed, he burst suddenly into a crowning note of triumph. He was leaving them, but their God remained, and to the hearts of the hushed and sorrowing multitude his words would come with strong consolation—"There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky."

On this point Moses could speak with authority from the vantage ground of experience. A Hebrew brickmaker's son, he had been dedicated to Israel's God even in his cradle of bulrushes; he had, "when he came to years," chosen His service rather than the pleasures of sin with which he was surrounded; had been sent on most delicate and difficult embassies in that name; had during forty years of wilderness travel witnessed a brilliant succession of miracles wrought on behalf of the people whom he was commissioned to lead to the promised land; and throughout that time had maintained an intercourse with Jehovah as close and familiar as that of a man "who talketh face to face" with his friend. And now the God of Jeshurun was about to take his faithful servant aside and Himself anoint him for his burial.

"And had he not high honour?
The hillside for a pall,
To lie in state while angels wait
With stars for tapers tall,
And the dark rock pines, like tossing plumes,
Over his bier to wave;
And God's own hand in that lonely land
To lay him in a grave."

No man knew of his sepulchre, but we may suppose that Satan found it out, as Jude refers to the controversy between him and Michael concerning the body, held, perhaps, when the archangel was sent for it to equip Moses for his appearance on the mount of transfiguration, that he might

"...stand with glory wrapt around
On the hills he never trod,
And speak of the strife that won our life
With the incarnate Son of God."

It was in that supreme moment of his life, as he looked his last at his dismayed and mourning people, that faith in "the God of Jeshurun" enabled Moses to utter this jubilant farewell—"Happy art thou, O Israel, who is like unto thee, oh people saved of the Lord!"

None knew better, too, than Moses, the obverse side of this picture, for he had had opportunities, denied to most men, of studying the limitations of merely human resources. That grand mother of his, whose love to her beautiful boy made her strong to resist the king's commandment, how little, after all, she could do to save him, and how conscious he must have been that, but for the God of Jeshurun, the frail ark of bulrushes would have proved his sepulchre. And when he stood face to face with the world's greatest monarch, he had seen in anticipation the civilisation, and treasure, and warlike resources of Egypt, "sink as lead in the mighty waters," because the God of Jeshurun was not Pharaoh's God.

It mattered not with what hostile powers he was brought into contact, were they magicians of Egypt, or gods of the heathen, or warlike tribes of the desert—he was always brought to the same blessed conclusion, "There is none like the God of Jeshurun," and he knew no better legacy to bequeath to his people than its solemn utterance under circumstances that would give it peculiar significance and force. They were standing on the threshold of the land of promise, and amidst the excitement and conflict through which they must enter it, and in presence of the heathen snares and idolatrous worship which would meet them there, the words of their leader would often be remembered.

We have just passed into the untried New Year—its aspects to some so friendly and bright, to others so lowring—and can we adopt a better motto? Whatever the paths, be assured that there is none like the God of Jeshurun as a Companion and Guide. New Year's gifts may be lovely and pleasant, but the greatest gift of all, and one alas! which so many overlook, is the offered gift of a God, not merely that we may worship and serve Him, but that He may serve us—the love that gave us our dearest friends and best earthly treasures, yearning to lavish itself on us in fulness of blessing and, in a word, to "supply all our need." I pray that these words may be real to those who read them, that the blessed Spirit may unfold to all hearts a conception of the wealth that will be theirs if they enter the New Year in covenant relation with the God of Jeshurun.

Many, if not most, of my readers, have been made children of God through faith in Christ Jesus, yet how few are beginning this new period of life with the bright assurance, "If children, then heirs, and whatever comes of need, or anxiety, or sorrow this year, my Father's riches are mine, and I have only to draw upon them." It would be a happy New Year indeed that would then number out its days to the trusting child of such a Father; and the example of Christians whose trials were only the dark background for Divine deliverance, would be an eloquent witness for the God of Jeshurun.

I was reading the other evening one of those tragically pathetic items of news that are sometimes told so mechanically in the daily papers. It was of a poor woman convicted of shoplifting. Her husband was ill and her children were starving, and the mother's passionate love, taking counsel only with the god of this world, could devise no better plan for their help than stealing for them! And then her sensitive conscience shrank from the pressure of the crime, and she sought relief in confession; but justice [?] consigned her to prison for four months with hard labour. May she and the poor helpless ones at home be pitied by the God whose help she did not seek! But if she had sought it!

Instances crowd upon one's thought of the faithfulness of the God of Jeshurun to those who—in direst need—have trusted Him. "He rideth on the heavens in our help, and in his excellency on the sky." We cannot look round corners of perplexity, or over hills of difficulty. He can. Like a general who, from an eminence, directs his forces, our God, in his exaltation, has the armies of heaven and the wealth of the universe at his disposal, and if we are Christ's they are ours, too, and all that is needed in any circumstance of trial is the child's cry to the loving Father—"Call on Me in the day of trouble, I will deliver." Truth is many-sided, and I can only indicate one aspect of it here, but it is one that is so full of comfort that it refreshes my own spirit, and will, I trust, by its hearty reception, help to make this year a very happy one to every reader.

A Rich Man's Question.

Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?—Acts ix. 6.

SUGGESTIVE SCRIPTURE ANSWERS.

1. "What thou doest, do quickly." Life is so short and so uncertain. Death often comes so suddenly; there is no time to lose.

2. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." Make it a matter of special and earnest prayer that you may arrange your testamentary affairs in accordance with the whole tone and tenor of Christ's teaching. Consider how the matter will look in the eternal future, and from the heavenly standpoint, and let not worldly ambitions or custom or appearances decide a matter of such moment.

3. "How much owest thou unto my Lord?" Bring your wealth to the foot of the cross. Consider what Christ claims and deserves from you after all He has done for you. Ponder the question: "How much owest thou to thy Lord?" Think of the needs, temporal and spiritual, of your neighbours, and of the whole world; and decide upon the disposal of your property so as to do the largest amount of good, and so as to secure the "Well done, good and faithful servant," of the great Judge of all.

4. "A good man...will guide his affairs with discretion." Sit down calmly, with pen in hand, and decide these questions:—

(a) How much of your personalty (apart from your realty) you ought to leave to your family, without running the risk of putting temptation and a snare in their path, while ensuring to them continued competence and comfort.

(b) How much should you distribute in your lifetime, so far becoming your own executor, and enjoying the bliss of doing good and of reaping the gratitude and love and prayers of those whom you thus relieve and bless.

(c) Then settle how much you should leave by will to Christian and charitable purposes.

5. "Therefore know and consider what thou wilt do." Make a selection of the societies, institutions, spiritual and charitable, etc., that command your warmest sympathy, or are doing the largest amount of good, or are in direst need of help; such as Bible and Tract sellers, or any Societies, Local or General Benevolent Institutions, as Hospitals, Orphanages, Schools, and other Christian or benevolent Institutions.

6. "Thou has broken the yoke of his burden." As the Legacy Duty is a heavy tax, and a serious drawback on needy Institutions, would it not be very desirable to make all bequests DUTY FREE?

7. And having done all, say, "We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do."

AMICUS.

Why are there Few Conversions?

MANY are trying to account for the few conversions and the little interest shown in religion. The cause is put down to many reasons, such as worldliness in Christians, want of obedience, of faith, of prayer, of humility; but we seldom hear the most likely reason—want of LOVE. This may be more plainly seen if we consider the following texts:—

John xiii. 34, 35.—A new commandment give I unto you that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another.

1 Pet. i. 22 (last clause)..See that ye love one another with pure heart fervently.

John xv. 12, 17.—This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. These things I command you, that ye love one another.

1 Pet. iv. 8 (first clause) R.V.—Above all things have fervent love among yourselves.

Rom. xiii. 8-10.—Owe no man anything, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.

Dr. Parker's Mid-week Service.

For more than a quarter of a century Dr. Joseph Parker has continuously conducted a religious service in the heart of the City of London, on Thursdays at midday, with only the usual holiday intervals. The attendance has been fully maintained from the beginning until now. In an age supposed to be marked by a decline of general interest in Biblical exposition, of the evangelical and doctrinal stamp, we have here a remarkable phenomenon. It seems to show that any falling off in the attractive power of revealed truth is due, not to the inherent quality of it, but rather to the mode in which it is presented.

No one can deny that Dr. Parker has brought to his task, all these years, an enthusiastic dogmatism born of strong personal conviction ; as well as intellectual gifts that are almost unique, and a power of eloquent, dramatic utterance that has not been exceeded in the history of the modern pulpit. But these would not have sufficed to uphold the popularity of the mid-week service, in such a busy centre, if the truths delivered had not found a responsive welcome in the minds and hearts of the hearers. The audiences, it must be added, have been in the main composed of the more thoughtful and cultivated sections of the community, embracing many public teachers from all sections of the Christian Church. They have been gathered also from many and far-away lands, so that one may truthfully regard Dr. Parker as standing week after week beneath the biggest sounding-board in Christendom.

Another year of the Thursday morning service was begun last week, when the congregation quite filled the lower part of the City Temple. The subject of discourse was Separation unto God, founded on Lev. xx. 26, "I, the Lord your God, have separated you from other people." The preacher in his introduction showed that this principle of selection, or separation, is one that is constantly acted out in daily human life—in the choice of friends, of books, and so forth. There is, therefore, no ground for surprise that God should show his electing grace, whether in the case of nations or individuals. In applying the doctrine of the text to those of his own calling, Dr. Parker strongly set forth the view that the religious teacher, preacher, or pastor, is set apart for his special service, not that he may assume or exhibit any personal superiority, or that he should lord it over God's heritage, but that he may have the fuller opportunity of studying God's revelation and of applying it in all its saving and uplifting efficacy to his fellows.

This thought of mutual service was vigorously and practically applied in different directions. Referring to the industrial war in North Wales, Dr. Parker said he knew nothing, either of Lord Penrhyn or his men, but he had one simple rule in all such matters of dispute—he was on the side of those who were willing to submit the whole case to impartial arbitration. He is the truly great man who, having a giant's strength, uses it moderately, gently, and generously. God gives great advantages or talents, not that they may become monopolies, or foster selfishness, but that they may be put to great uses. He gives eloquence that we may open our lips for the dumb. He gives the right arm of strength that we may protect the oppressed. It is the business of the strong ever to go down to the poor, the weak, the helpless, and the solitary.

In words of much force and eloquence the preacher pointed out that the Christian is to follow the example of Jesus Christ, who did not despise contact with that which is evil and low and degrading. He went down among the publicans and harlots, not because He was indifferent to the sin, but that He might lift them out of it. Pure as a sunbeam Himself, He contracted no defilement by contiguity with sin or vileness. You cannot pollute the light. At the same time a word of caution was spoken to the young and inexperienced, to beware lest they should find the influences of doubtful company too strong for them. It is dangerous to make experiments with fire, which is only useful in the degree in which it consumes itself. The concluding thought was that we have been called to separateness and consecration, not that our advantage may be a monopoly, but a Divine trust and responsibility to be used for the highest good of others.

Tides.

The waves come in from the sea,
Through the islands in the bay ;
So the tide of time flows on
With another New Year's Day ;
So our years come one by one,
And like wavelets pass away.

We joyed at the Old Year's birth,
We dreamed it should be the best ;
But now at its death we sigh,
It dies so like the rest :
Our great designs how vain !
The world so little blest !

Although you have tried and failed,
Have you still your work to do ?
Then remove the failure's cause,
And you'll pass triumphant through ;
For your work which God has given
Can surely be done by you.

And the tears of the contrite heart
Are a mirror for heavenly light ;
And the brightest mornings rise
On the rim of the blackest night ;
And the fiery pillar's glow
Makes the darkest desert bright.

So we consecrate our souls
Once more at the New Year's Day,
As in spirit, and heart to heart,
At the Master's feet we pray :
"Lord, make us whatever Thou wilt,
And lead us in any way" !

Thus, whether we wake or sleep,
Or toil in a foreign clime,
The grace of God shall prove
The spring of a life sublime—
A pearl for the diadem
Beyond the tides of Time.

Jews in Turkey.—Mission work amongst the Jews is difficult. Mission work in Turkey is difficult. Mission work amongst the Jews and in Turkey combines the twofold difficulties. And our Constantinople Mission (says the F.C. of Scotland Monthly) has had to contend with all these. Most Jews are very ignorant of Christianity, and the treatment they have often had from Christians predisposes them to think the worst. In the East this is specially true. Around Constantinople the Greek Church chiefly represents Christianity ; but its churches are full of pictures, and where it has the power, as in Russia, it has fiercely persecuted the Jews. All this makes the missionary's work very hard.

Qua Iboe Mission.—Mr. S. A. Bill states that Sunday, Sept. 13, was a great day. There were over 400 in the church this morning when David Ekon preached from the words—"Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." Then in the afternoon when I preached there were over 300 present, many more than the old church would have held. Truly, the Spirit of God is working in Ibuno in a way and on a scale never experienced here before. The sight of so many, old and young, with such earnest faces, stirred me so deeply that I could scarcely command my voice to pray and sometimes to speak to them. Praise God for these tokens of his presence, and may this day of salvation not pass until many Ibunos have been brought savingly to Jesus. There were hundreds in the church on Sunday afternoon at David Ekon's enquirers class, and he told us that he could not get to bed on account of people remaining in his house—people who had followed him from the meeting in the town—begging him to explain further the way of salvation. On Monday, Oct. 5, John Ewainan brought the news that after Mrs. Heaney left Big Town, the people who are willing to "follow God" gathered and burnt down their large Juju house.

Christian Work in Dublin.

The Christian work in Dublin, of which the Christian Union Buildings have been so long the centre, is carried on with unabated vigour. The most conspicuous result of Mr. Moody's memorable visit twenty-three years ago, it is still characterised by the enterprise, the catholicity, and spiritual tone first given to it by this evangelist.

For these twenty-three years the fire has been kept burning upon the altar of its Daily Noon Prayer Meeting. The average daily attendance is not large, but latterly those responsible for its management have had their hearts cheered by many remarkable answers to prayer.

For twenty-three years the annual Christian Convention has afforded a meeting-place for Christian people of all denominations, and from all parts of the country. Missions are held as opportunity offers and as God raises up the men. In the course of a short mission held last year by Mr. William Thomson, of Glasgow, over 300 inquirers were personally dealt with.

But it is perhaps in connection with the work among the poor that these buildings have been most honoured by God. Dublin with its 300,000 inhabitants has more than its share of this class. During twenty years the Sunday Morning Free Breakfast has never been interrupted for a single week. Congregations of the very poor, averaging about 600, have been supplied Sunday after Sunday in the roomy basement of the buildings with a comfortable meal. Christian workers from all ranks and classes in the city are delighted to come and sing to them and to minister to their wants. The value of this work it is impossible to estimate. The Gospel is faithfully proclaimed, and the eagerness with which the message, so strange to many of the hearers, is listened to, is at times touching to witness. In connection with some Gospel Temperance services recently held for this class, no less than 232 pledges were taken, and, better still, some have accepted Christ as their Saviour.

Efforts like these have year by year been quietly and steadily at work among the masses of the city with wholesome Christian influences. Dublin is now one of the most tolerant of cities. Open-air work can be carried on without opposition in almost any quarter. Judges and magistrates say that were it not for intemperance Dublin would be an almost crimeless city.

It is hoped this new year will be rich in blessing in every department of Christian effort. D. M.

Pastor Chiniquy.

Pastor F. H. White, of Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, W., writes: "Our venerable and beloved Chiniquy is recovering from his grave illness. I saw him on Sunday, finding him just able to rise from his bed, but full of cheer and hope.

"The old man is a bit cast down at times for his lay-aside in the midst of his last and most prosperous testimony in England. There is yet hope, however, of his resuming his labours before very long.

"Meanwhile, I trust your kind appeal in last week's issue will not be lost upon his friends near and afar. I have just heard that a staunch friend of Protestant truth and testimony has promised him a donation of £50, in the earnest hope that his example may stir up a few others to contribute a like sum, and so make the heart of the old man glad in his sick chamber. He is tenderly nursed by a loving Christian family in this neighbourhood."

Missionary Societies.—The American Board of Foreign Missions after careful inquiry estimates that the income of the various Protestant foreign missionary societies of the world during the last twelve months has been about £3,108,000. This is nearly £200,000 more than the income of the previous year. There are 267 societies, 4525 stations in foreign parts and 14,036 out-stations, 6336 male and 5675 female missionaries, 60,164 native labourers, and 1,221,175 communicants. The number of communicants increased in 1896 by 64,000.

Rev. J. McNeill in Manchester.

THREE WEEKS' UNITED MISSION.

(By Our Special Reporter.)

JUDGED by the opening Sunday, the United Mission in Manchester promises great things. We have seen much of missions in various cities and under diverse circumstances, but we can hardly recall a parallel to the scenes in Peter-street last Sunday evening. Three great buildings—the Comedy Theatre, the Free Trade Hall, and the Grand Theatre—within a stone's throw of one another—were open for evangelistic services; the street was blocked by dense masses making for one or other of these places, and by 7 p.m. the whole three were filled to the door. In other words, some ten thousand people were gathered to listen to the story of salvation as presented by Rev. John McNeill, Gipsy Smith, and Mr. and Mrs. Evens. The secret of this interest seems to be careful preparation, earnest waiting on God in united prayer meetings, and hearty co-operation among Christians in the city.

But to begin at the beginning. Those who had been working hard for the coming mission must have felt themselves rewarded when, at the afternoon meeting, the Comedy Theatre was crowded in every part. Well might Mr. McNeill declare the gathering a herald of coming success. All classes were there, from the wealthy merchants and their families, the keen men of business, to the alert and questioning workers from the mill, foundry, and factory. It seemed a difficult audience to grip, but the Scottish evangelist quickly put himself at ease with the crowd in front of him by a few happy remarks on the opening hymn.

Mr. McNeill preluded his sermon by saying:—"I have long looked forward to this mission in Manchester, and I am glad it is now started so well. There is no denying, this is a splendid meeting for a Sunday afternoon—for an unusual meeting, at an unusual hour, and certainly in an unusual place for many of us. It may have been a little risky to start with such a big theatre as this, but nothing succeeds like success. Now I have two or three things I want to say in opening. Some people have a kind of irritated feeling about such meetings as these. What do these wandering preachers come for? Who wants them? We have our churches and chapels and regular preachers; what's the use of these evangelistic tramps? Well, I don't object to the term. I am one of them, and I am thankful to know that Paul was one of the first of us, and that a Greater than he was at our head. However, I am bound to say that I am not here in a self-bidden sort of way. I never push myself on anybody. I am here at the request of a united committee of clergymen, ministers, and Christians of all denominations. These men have asked me to come, I have not thrust myself upon them.

"Some people strongly object to the sensationalism and excitement they suppose to be attached to meetings such as these. I often notice these are the very people who, in other things, seek after excitement themselves. The only one thing that is to be as dull as ditchwater is religion. Their parties, their balls, their stock exchange news, their papers—they get excited about these, of course; but when we come to speak of a man's eternal interests, his destiny for eternity, oh then we must be serious, sober, and sedate. Well, if these objectors come at all—and they seldom do—they will find we have serious business in hand, and are too much in earnest about it to run after sensationalism.

"But now about the work before us. This is really a united mission. Our committee is a capital example of Christian love and unity. It is not 'only these Dissenters'—though even if it were, Dissenters count for something, for God is with them—but it is the common Christianity of Manchester, united in a grand stroke for the souls of men. I want every Christian in the city to elect himself or herself on our working committee, and go in for bringing the people to these meetings.

"But some have still a sly suspicion there is something behind it all—something called a second meeting, where they are to be caught somehow. Well, I do not know how other men do. I am not their master, neither are they my models, but I tell you square I have nothing up my sleeve in this way. I put the Gospel before you, as straight as I know how, and I leave the issue with God, who has promised to bless his own Word. Some young men are wonderfully troubled with sceptical difficulties; but I do not believe these come from science or Huxley at all, but from too close an application to the sporting columns of the evening papers, and to the trashy snip-snap and other weeklies of the present day. Give some portion of your time for the next week or two to God. Give his Gospel a fair chance, and He will capture you, and change you, and use you for his glory."

Having read the story in Mark iii. of the healing in the synagogue of the man with the withered hand, Mr. McNeill expounded it in his own characteristic and homely style, picturing the poor maimed stonemason, with the starving wife and children at home, creeping into a back seat, and suddenly finding himself called upon to stand forth in the midst and stretch forth his hand, to the confusion and discomfiture of the contemptible Pharisees, ever on the watch to find fault. All this and much more became in the preacher's hands a telling setting forth of the sinner's helplessness, and the love and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The evening address was on "Turning," which Mr. McNeill readily confessed was only a Saxon rendering of the Latin and much-controverted word "conversion." Taking as his text Psa. cxix. 59, 60, he divided it thus—Here is a man who thought for himself; who thought about himself; who thought to purpose, for when he found himself going wrong he turned right about and went the other way; and lastly, he acted promptly, "I made haste." It is easy to see, handled in Mr. McNeill's fashion, in these points the outline of a straightforward Gospel address, full of terse, happy sayings and phrases which cling to the memory, and clenched everywhere in startling and emphatic style as "for you and not simply for your neighbour."

It is no idle phrase to say the address caught hold. All around us men were wiping their eyes, and listening breathlessly with that rapt engrossment which reveals the intense hold the preacher has gained. To us, as a spectator, it seemed as if an inquiry meeting must have proved a time of abundant reaping; but if God has touched these souls they will doubtless be gathered in. All the same, we could not help feeling that many in the audience seemed to need but a loving and wise word to bring them to decision on the spot.

During the present week the meetings, evening and midday, are being held in the Y.M.C.A. hall. Later on it is hoped they may be held in the Free Trade Hall. All will pray that great blessing may rest on this sustained and united Mission, and on the faithful and glowing testimony of this gifted evangelist.

GIPSY SMITH AT THE CENTRAL MISSION.

The leaders and workers at the Wesleyan Central Mission are co-operating heartily in Mr. McNeill's meetings; moreover, they have had a preparatory mission, conducted by Gipsy Smith, who opened on New Year's Day and continued till Sunday last. Four meetings a day had been held—chiefly at the Oldham-street Hall—and much blessing has been granted. It is said here that during the past week more than 500 have professed decision for Christ in the inquiry-room. We record the figures as indicating a real awakening, but the results are with God, and not with man.

On Sunday morning in the Central Hall, and in the evening in the Free Trade Hall, Gipsy Smith was full of power, and many seemed to be convicted of sin. Nor was this spirit of inquiry less manifest at the Grand Theatre, where Mr. and Mrs. Evens were the speakers.

In connection with these services a special effort has been made to reach the fallen, the outcast, and the victims of intemperance. A band of sisters have gone nightly, in the strength of the Lord, into the lowest public houses, seeking to get hold of men and women, frequenters of the worst resorts. Midnight meetings have been held for such, and night after night touching scenes have been witnessed in these gatherings of the wreckage of sin. Those who have had much to do with this rescue effort assure us that many have been snatched as brands from the burning.

The special and sectional missions now cease, for the time being, in order that all effort and sympathy may be concentrated on the United Mission being led by Mr. McNeill. From this great things are hoped for. The first day has encouraged all hearts, and a wave of prayer is going up that many may be the slain of the Lord in this busy city of Manchester.

ON a recent morning there lay stretched out the corpses of two men who had killed themselves with drink on New Year's Day. The younger one's last journey was to go to the spirit shop to buy a half-crown bottle of drink. A few minutes after his return he dropped dead on the floor. The place was like the prophet's roll, "written within and without with lamentation, and mourning, and woe." As these men lay in that cheerless house on that Sabbath morning, their upturned faces toward the open skylight that they could not see, they seemed to charge some one else with their guilt.

See a young man leaning against a shop window too intoxicated to walk; beside him stood his little girl, about three years old, crying bitterly, because he would not come home. He was too besotted to be conscious of the sorrow of his child. Her tears as they splashed on the cold street sounded in the ears of God. Who is responsible for the tears that fall and the hearts that break unseen? The cry of sorrow is drowned in the noise of sin.

A working man who often came home the worse for drink, when warned by his wife, said, "Oh, if God only gives me two or three days to repent on my death-bed, I shall be all right." He came home one Friday night, went upstairs, reeled backward at the top, fell to the bottom, and broke his neck.

A pilot said, "You may lecture me as you like; it is no use unless you do away with the whole trade in drink. I know all you can tell me, and if they would agree to abolish the whole trade I would sign for it with both my hands. I can come home after having fasted for hours, and bear to be put off with my dinner, though I see it ready before me; but when the thirst for drink comes I must have it—nothing can stop me."

The signs of depravity this Christmas seem to be without a parallel in the history of Sunderland. It is enough to make the whole Christian world mourn. What are the Churches doing to oppose this enormous organisation for the destruction of men? If we do not do all in our power to stem this scourge of our land, our prayers are but a mockery. No wonder that in many of our churches the heavens are as iron and the earth is as brass.

The Jews have a legend that Rachel is still weeping for her children. Who weeps for the children of the drunkard? At the judgment to many a parent to whom God entrusted children the question will be asked, "Where is the flock I gave thee—thy beautiful flock?"

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, January 17.

"God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him."—Psa. lxvii. 7.

THIS Psalm is full of yearnings for the salvation of mankind. The selfish desire for the exclusive blessing of the chosen people is lost sight of in the catholic yearning that all the earth should fear Jehovah. Indeed, this is the ground on which the Psalmist rests his claim for the Divine blessing. It is as though he said, "We only ask for gifts of grace, that through us they may be transmitted to all mankind." Turn us again, O God, that times of refreshing may come from Thy presence to all men; only let the peoples praise Thee.

We are reminded of those noble words of Andrew Fuller, to whom the initiation of modern missions to the heathen is so largely due: "We met and prayed for the heathen. We were drawn out of ourselves. God blessed us while we tried to be a blessing. Our hearts were enlarged, and we were baptized into a deeper sympathy with the soul-saving purposes of the Redeemer."

Are we infected with this noble passion? Do we echo from our hearts the repeated prayer of this Psalm: "Let all the peoples praise Thee"? Do we ask for blessing from our own God, that we may be able to be a greater blessing to others? Oh that we might be carried out to sea on the tide of God's purposes, and yearnings, and pity; and long as the Psalmist did that his saving health might be known among all nations!

Whoso hath felt the Spirit of the Highest Cannot confound, nor doubt Him, nor deny:
Yea, with one voice, O world, though thou deniest,
Stand thou on that side, for on this am I.

"Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden."—Ps. lxviii. 19 (R.V.).

Never tired, or out of patience, that mighty God of whose advent the Psalmist is so full, daily bends beneath our burdens, and sets Himself to help us through crushing difficulties. They are unbearable to us, but to Him only a very little thing. He taketh up the isles as a very little thing; surely your heaviest burden must be less.

But our mistake is that we do not realise that God is bearing our burdens. We think that we must cope with them; we let ourselves worry, as though we were the loneliest, most deserted, most pitiable beings in existence, when all the while God is going beside, ready to bear our burdens. The burden of our sins; of our anxieties about ourselves, and about others; of our frailties and infirmities; the responsibility of keeping us; the pressure of our daily need—all these rest daily on our God.

'Tis enough that He should care;
Why should we the burden bear!

Oh, do not carry your burdens for a single moment longer; pass them over to Him who has already taken your eternal interests to his heart. Only be patient, and wait on Him, and do not run to and fro seeking for help from man, or making men your consolers and confidants. Such as do this have their reward. But for you, anoint your head and wash your face, so as not to excite the pity of others. "Cast thy burden on the Lord, and He will sustain thee." Only, when it has been cast, leave it there. God loves to be utterly trusted.

TUESDAY, January 19.

"Save me, O God: for the waters are come in unto my soul."—Psa. lxix. 1.

Matters sometimes become desperate. For days the waters have been out on the low-lying lands, and slowly rising against the embankment, in the shelter of which some house is situated. Now, however, they have undermined and swept it away. With a crash it has fallen into the yellow, foaming waters. A moment's agitation, and then not a trace of it. There is nothing now to keep back the flood, and it comes into the home, rising stealthily up the walls. In the life of the soul such a crisis comes not unfrequently. You have dreaded something, and the cold chill of fear has cast a shudder over you; but surely it could never come to you! There is that protection, that barrier, of position, money, wealthy friends. But one by one these are swept aside, and the waters come ever nearer, till there is nothing between them and the soul. They come in unto the soul.

It is well for a man to be able then to turn to God with the "Save me" of the Psalmist. God must have our entire trust of soul. He takes away all that lies between Him and us, that we may hang on Him, and lie naked and open to Him in our utter helplessness. From the midst of your sorrows, from the deep sin in which you are sinking, from the deep waters that overflow you, cry to God. He knows your foolishness; your sins are not hid from Him. He will stretch out his right hand and catch you, saying, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Then our crying and tears will be turned to joyous shouts. We shall praise the name of God with a song, and magnify Him with thanksgiving; for the Lord heareth the needy, and despiseth not his prisoners (30, 33).

"Make haste unto me, O God."—Psa. lxx. 5.

"Make haste!" Our frail patience gives out full often. We think that God is never coming. So many days I have waited for Thee, and as yet there has not been one symptom of thine approach. Why are thy chariots so tardy? Lazarus is dying; a few hours more, and life will have ebbed away. Provisions are failing and water is scarce, and still the enemy is entrenched in proud security. The world scoffs, but Thou comest not down the mountain slope, bringing salvation. Where is the Pentecost of which Thou speakest? Where thy Second Advent?

But God is making haste. On the wings of every hour, quicker than light leaps from world to world, He is on his way. Delays are not denials, but are necessary to the perfecting of his arrangements. "Lo, I come quickly!" is still true, though 1800 years have passed. "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." "A thousand years are as one day."

We do not wish the destruction of our enemies, but their salvation. We long that God should be magnified, and souls saved. We yearn for the setting up of the Kingdom of God, which is peace on earth, and blessing. And for this end we desire that God should accelerate his coming. O God, make no tarrying. Thine enemies boast themselves, our spirits faint for fear, men are sinking into perdition. Make haste!

Thy God will not be a moment overdue. When the fourth watch breaks, He will interpose. Not too soon for education, not too late for deliverance. But dare to believe that He is never absent. He is near thee all the while, bending over thee and all men, with tender pity, only waiting till He can see, with infallible wisdom, the best instant to interfere.

"Thou which hast showed me many and sore troubles shalt quicken me again."—Psa. lxxi. 20.

God shows us the troubles. We stand beside Him, and the mighty billows break around, but are shivered into myriads of drops. As we ride beside Him in the chariot of salvation, He points out to us the forms of dreaded evils, the ravines, the glaciers, the awful steeps; but it is as though we were cradled in some soft golden cloud which fringes the edge of the precipice, and glides along splintered cliffs where the chamois could not find footing. Look at this, saith our Guide. These are the troubles that overwhelm souls, and drain their life! Behold them, but thou shalt not suffer them! I show you them that you may know how to comfort and help those who have been overwhelmed. Sometimes, as this part of our education is being carried forward, we have to descend into "the lower parts of the earth," pass through subterranean passages, lie buried amongst the dead. But never for a moment is the cord of fellowship and union between God and us strained to breaking; and from the depths God will bring us up again.

Never doubt God. Never say that He has forsaken or forgotten. Never think that He is unsympathetic. He will quicken again. There is always a smooth piece in every skein, however tangled. The longest day at last rings out the evensong. God turns again, and comforts. And when He begins, the heart which had forgotten its psalmody breaks out in jubilant song, as does the Psalmist's.

FRIDAY, January 22.

"Like rain upon the mown grass."—Ps. lxxii. 6.

Amos speaks of the king's mowings. Our King has many scythes, and is perpetually mowing his lawns. The musical tinkle of the whetstone on the scythe portends the cutting down of myriads of green blades, daisies, and other flowers. Beautiful as they were in the morning, within an hour or two they lie in long, faded rows. Thus in human life we make a brave show, which passes away like the beauty of grass, before the scythe of pain, the shears of disappointment, the sickle of death. There is no way of obtaining a velvety lawn but by repeated mowings; and what is the very object of putting down land for grass except to secure hay? How constantly the Word of God compares man to grass, and his glory to its flower! But when grass is mown, and all the tender shoots are bleeding, and desolation reigns where flowers were bursting, it is the most acceptable time for showers of rain falling soft and warm.

O soul, thou hast been mown. Time after time the King has come to thee with his sharp scythe. Much of the glory of thy life is dead. It is that thou shalt bear better crops than ever; but that thou mayest do so, lo! He comes down as spring rain. He comes down; thus you have the miracle of his condescension. He comes down like rain; there you have the manner of his gentle advent. He comes on the mown grass; there is his expectancy, showing that his reason in mowing, followed as it is by the gentle raindrops, lay in the direction of new beauty and use. Do not dread the scythe, it is sure to be followed by the shower.

SATURDAY, January 23.

"Only good is God to such as are pure in heart."—Psalm lxxiii. 1 (R.V. marg.).

God is only good. Such is the better rendering of the original. He makes "all things work together for good to them that love" Him. However unlike goodness something in your lot may be, turn from the suggestions of sense to the affirmations of faith, and dare to say,

His every act pure blessing is,
His path unsullied light.

Nothing so glorifies God as when a Cowper, rescued from the border of despair, snatched from committing suicide, dares still to cling to his belief in the goodness of God.

Our faith is sometimes assailed as Asaph's was, by the anomalies we meet with in the world. The wicked prosper, whilst the waters of a full cup are wrung out to the people of God. The scribes and Pharisees greedily devour widows' houses, and prey on the helpless; and earnest merit seeks for work and recognition in vain. It is a strange world, full of contradictions, perplexities, and insoluble questions, but through it all God's children must dare to affirm that He is only good. You do not feel it? Nevertheless, reason, Scripture, experience demand that you should assert it. The fact is, we have lost the standpoint of vision. The Psalmist found these things too painful till he went into the sanctuary of God, and then he understood. Do not take earth as the centre of the universe, but the sun. Do not look at God from circumstances, but at circumstances from God. Live continually with Him. Let Him hold thee with his right hand, then will mystery become unravelled, and dark problems solved.

Good Cheer.

WHEN Christmas was here we spoke of it as the time of "good cheer" because it recalls the beginning of the Gospel, or the coming of God's good news to this earth, when Jesus was born at Bethlehem. We gave and received messages of love, and tried to make others happy because Christ came to bless and save.

After Jesus had grown up to be a man He "went about doing good," and speaking kind words, and teaching people that true happiness is only to be found in blessing others; that those who make others blessed are the ones to whom He will say, "Come ye, blessed," and only in blessing are we truly blest. We find Jesus saying to people in need and trouble, "Be of good cheer." Four times did the Saviour speak these words, and once did He inspire his disciples to say them.

The first time was (Matt. ix. 2) to the poor man brought to Him by four friends; the room was so full that they could not enter with the sufferer, but had to go outside and on to the roof, and let the sick man down through the ceiling. Then Jesus said, "Son, be of good cheer." He did not say, "Be thou whole," or "I will make you well," but something better than that—"Thy sins be forgiven thee." Sometimes Jesus kept the best till the last, but this time He gave the best first. Jesus did the greater and more important work before he healed the man's body. It is as if Jesus said, "The worst is over, be of good cheer." Sin, that is worse than suffering, is pardoned; now all will be well. Jesus did this, not only for the man's sake, but for the sake of all the people that stood round, that He might teach the great lesson that there is no really good cheer and true gladness without the pardon of sin. Then he said, "Arise, take up thy bed, or mat, and go unto thy house," and he obeyed, and walked home.

The next time (Matt. xiv. 27) Jesus uttered these words was when the disciples were on the Sea of Galilee in a dreadful storm at night, and were sore afraid they would never see land again. Then Jesus came to them walking on the troubled sea, and the disciples thinking our Lord was a spirit or ghost, cried out for fear at once. Jesus answered not their prayers of faith, but the call of terror, and said, "Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid!" That was enough; their fears departed, their doubts vanished, their hearts were at rest. Peter was so bold that he thought he could walk on the sea, and so he might have done if he had not lost faith again at the fury of the winds and waves, but Jesus saved him from sinking, and then the wind ceased, and they all worshipped Jesus. Jesus still comes to those in darkness, danger, and dismay, saying, "Be of good cheer, I am with thee, be not afraid." So, by his word of hope and blessing, courage and peace can be in the hearts of his disciples, even before the storm be stilled.

The third time Jesus spoke these words (Matt. ix. 22 and Luke viii. 48) was to a woman afflicted with a disease no physician could cure, and who seeing Jesus in the press of many people, came behind, and, touching the border of his garment, was made whole. Jesus asked, "Who touched me?" and the woman came and fell down at his feet, and told Him all the truth. Then Jesus said to her, "Daughter, be of good cheer, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace," that is to say, not my garment, but thy trust in Me has healed thee, be of good cheer, keep the blessing faith has won. The secret working of her faith had found its reward; being made whole in body, she could henceforth go in peace of heart and soul. Here the gift of inward peace followed the cure. The simple touch of faith and love had wrought in Christ's mercy the perfect healing. Therefore Jesus said, "Daughter, be glad, be comforted and happy," because the fulness of Christ's blessing had come to her on that never-to-be-forgotten-day.

Lastly, to the disciples, after the last supper, when about to leave them for the agony of the garden and his death on the cross, Jesus said, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world" (John xvi. 33). This was to be their hope in separation, their comfort in the midst of fears, their assurance of victory in their conflict with sin and mammon. While the disciples were to be left to the cruel heartless persecution of their foes, these words would ring in their hearts and give them encouragement and confidence. Because Christ had conquered sin and death, and overcome the world and all its influences that might destroy their faith, though the little band of disciples might be few and weak, yet they would tread the path of certain triumph, as they followed Christ they would be led into his victory, for they would share in his conquest. This word of "Good cheer" was to be the inspiration for these men at the moment of their greatest trial and need, and as they went out with Jesus for the last time they sang with Him "an hymn."

The only other time these words occur in the Gospels, is in the account of the healing of the blind man at the gate of Jericho (Mark x. 49).

When Jesus heard the repeated cry of the wayside beggar He stopped, and commanded those about him to call the blind man. They went saying "Be of good cheer; arise, he calleth thee." Some had told Bartimeus to hold his peace; now the message of hope and gladness is taken to the poor man, he responds at once, leaping up for joy, casting away his outer garment, that he may come with all speed. The result of these words of "good cheer" is faith and confidence revived, he told Jesus what he desired, and Christ gave him sight, his night is turned to day, his darkness becomes light, adversity is transformed to prosperity, and the end of the story is that "he glorified God, and followed Jesus in the way."

We keep our words of "good cheer" for Christmas and New Year, for birthdays and seasons of festivity, for times of success and congratulation. Jesus spake his words of "good cheer" by the wayside, to strangers in need, to the sinful man and the suffering woman, and to the disciples in fear and sorrow. There are occasions of extreme need when we might think words of "good cheer" perhaps rather out of place. Jesus made the opportunity of uttering these words of hope, which were always followed by deeds of greatest blessing. So may we learn that kindly words are precious as silver, but gracious deeds are more precious than gold.

MY nephews and nieces, who so kindly helped Santa Claus in his work this Christmas among the poor children, will be glad to know how many little suffering lives they brightened by their kindness. A letter of thanks from Mr. Boyer, of the Drift and Crippled Children's Mission, gives a few instances of the pleasure afforded. Four women and ten children assembled in one home to rejoice with the crippled boy over his new treasure; apparently a toy is almost an unknown gift in that home, and very great excitement prevailed. Another was the case of a little helpless girl, who seldom goes out and is many hours alone; toys are to her almost sacred, and her joy was unmistakable, and the gift will probably be treasured long after it is forgotten by the giver. A little suffering lad, who had no toys to make him forget his pains, visibly brightened when the visitor brought him a toy to while away the weary hours. Another sufferer, who by reason of poverty and distress is even looking forward with pleasure to returning to the hospital for an operation, gladly shared in the bounty. The writer of the letter adds: "I am sure if your nephews and nieces could have seen how much gladness they helped to give, they would feel more than repaid for their self-denial."

The secretary of the Cripple Department of the Ragged School Union writes saying what joy was given by the toys sent. A doll in a cradle tenderly and joyously cared for by a little sufferer who never knew such dainty coverings as dolly had. A little boy with only one hand was gladdened by a top, his teeth helping him to spin it again and again. Boxes of beads, marbles, thimbles, and little trifles made riches where there was little. Music, whether musical or not, gave pleasure, and "when mother is out and one is alone, noise was company"—so said a boy cripple. Not only was there something for the babies, but little helpless children who looked after them were made perfectly happy with a book, which could be read when baby was asleep.

These one or two cases will show you what your "little deeds of kindness" have done, and there are many more in the hospitals, &c., to whom a toy or card from you came like a ray of sunshine in the midst of their suffering and sadness.

Other mission and hospital helpers give similar testimony to the happiness these loving gifts brought with them.

A. B. C. Texts—F.

Forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.—Ephesians iv. 32.

THIS was not the old text for F. I changed it, because I thought this one might be more useful to you children. One reason for this was, that a few days ago I heard a little boy speaking of a quarrel he had had with a little girl, in a rather unforgiving way. Now, Jesus said we must forgive, and He illustrated this by a story, but I need not write it down, as I would like you to read it. It is in Matthew xviii. 21-35.

There are a great many verses about forgiving in the Bible, because God knows it is often very hard to forgive. It becomes easier when we remember how, when Jesus hung on the cross, crowned with thorns, bleeding and dying, crucified by wicked men, He prayed, saying, "Father, forgive them." Next time you say "Our Father," will you think about that part of the prayer which teaches us to pray, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors"; and then, dear children, will you try always to be "kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you?"

An African Tribe.

THE Amaci tribe of South Africa has for some years past been the subject of earnest prayer and work on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Aitchison, whose principal mission station in Alfred County, Natal, is called Ikwezi Lamaci, the Morning Star of the Amaci tribe. Desiring to see the work of the Mission, Mr. G. Gilkes, of Kendal, visited Ikwezi a few months ago, and wrote descriptive letters to friends at home. These letters have now been published in a pamphlet, which, with its many illustrations, affords a good idea of the heathen Kaffirs and religious work among them.

Narrating a journey to Port Shepstone, a place on the coast some sixty-five miles distant, Mr. Gilkes says:—

"Our destination for the first night was Isingolweni, thirty-six miles off, but on the way we were to visit Umlotwa, the rain doctor, and hold a meeting at his kraal. This man is the chief of the Amabotivo tribe, which consists of nearly 2,000 souls. This man is in a very singular position. He is still a heathen: by inheritance he is rain doctor, which means that when rain is wanted he claims to produce it by occult power. In days gone by, the superstition of his tribesmen and others in the district tended to the increase of Umlotwa's possessions, as those who would avail themselves of his good offices in procuring rain sent presents of corn, etc. The difficulty of frequent failure to obtain the expected showers was got over by some excuse as to outward influence—Government interference, and so on. The Government forbids this payment for supposed services now, and anything of the kind that is done is kept very secret, and probably does not amount to much.

Native Evangelists and Others.

"I stated that he is still a heathen man, and in a very peculiar position, as you will admit, for he has not only risen to refuse offerings that come from those who inquire as to the prospects of rain, but has avowed his own inability to procure it, and has shown a strong tendency in favour of religion. He attends services—he even calls the people together, and has prayed with them when the evangelist has been late in arriving. Yet to a very large extent he keeps to his heathen ways, making no outward sign in his life of having adopted the Christian religion. Services have been held from time to time in his kraal for some years, and more regularly recently. He very much desires to have a Christian teacher and a school close by, and offers sites for the school. Mr. Aitchison thinks that when this is done, there will be a further development of his tendency towards religious truth. If he, the chief of his tribe, boldly came out on the side of truth, it would be an event far-reaching in its influence.

"About two and a half hours after starting we found ourselves driving across the mile of open grass land that lies between the road and Umlotwa's kraal, and we presently saw that we were to be received with some special civilities, for a party of four horsemen rode rapidly out to a grassy eminence and awaited our arrival. Then they saluted us, galloped away to the kraal, and drew up with a number of men on foot in a long line, and as we alighted cried out all together, holding their right hands high above the heads, 'Bayeti,' which means, 'Your head upon us; we are subject to you.' This is an exclamation of the highest respect—there is no expression surpassing it—so we felt that our welcome was as cordial as it could be.

"The chief, who was sitting outside the cattle kraal arrayed in a white shirt, an Inverness coat, and nothing else, rose and shook hands. His nails and those of other chiefs are very long; they do not work with their hands. He grouped some warriors to be photographed and then took us into his hut, finding us seats and putting before us a low flat stool—his own table, and had roast beef put upon it. We lunched on this and this alone, without salt or bread, using our pocket-knives, declining the hair pins which were offered for our use. He joined us in this feast by our request. Lunch over, we had a meeting with fifty of his people in the hut, Mr. Aitchison interpreting for me. After the service we took a photograph of the man himself, and after many mutual protestations of esteem and regard proceeded on our way towards the coast."

Among Whitechapel Jews.

The Jews and Jewesses who from time to time hear the Gospel in the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., were entertained to tea on Thursday, Jan. 6. This is an annual affair to which many look forward with much interest. It was a beautiful sight, and a very great encouragement to those who have so long laboured amongst the Hebrews and remember what the first gatherings of this sort were like.

At the meeting which followed the repast, Rev. John Wilkinson presided, assisted by Rev. Graham Thwaites, General Stanhouse, Dr. Dixon, and Mr. Simpson. Mr. Wilkinson spoke simply and pointedly on Psa. xxxii. 1 and xxxiii. 17, showing how our sins are covered through the blood of Jesus when we believe in Him, and the uselessness and danger of trusting in anything else for salvation and safety. Mr. Thwaites took for his text Isa. liii. 5, 6, and showed that as they must own the words, "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way," to represent a real and undeniable fact, so they must admit the truth of the preceding verse, "With his stripes we are healed." General Stanhouse, Dr. Dixon, and Mr. Simpson also spoke. The hearers were evidently interested, for order and quiet prevailed throughout the meeting. The addresses were interspersed by hymns and prayers.

On the following day the children of the night-school had their annual tea, accompanied by other Jewish boys and girls. It was a pleasant sight to see so many happy little Jewish faces. Many ladies joined the regular workers in waiting on the children.

At the meeting afterwards, Miss Cornwall led them in singing some of the beautiful hymns they had learned in the school. Mr. Wilkinson gave a short address, suggested by the hymn, "Jesus loves me." He taught them to say, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me," requesting them to repeat these words every day through their lives. After another hymn, they repeated together Luke xv. Twelve children repeated a short psalm each, distinctly and clearly, and several sang together the Christmas carol, "In the fields with their flocks abiding." Then followed a few more kind words of encouragement to the children, and also to those who have so carefully trained them. The prizes were afterwards distributed.

The workers thank God for the good success and blessing that has been given during the past year to the work among the young.

The Catechism on Free Church doctrines, principles, and history which has been prepared by a sub-committee of the Free Church National Council is now practically complete, and is expected to be in circulation at an early date.

Nyassa Industrial Mission.

MR. AND MRS. DEEATH, SUPERINTENDENTS.

IN these latter days providential openings seem to go hand in hand with Christian zeal, in furthering the incursion of Gospel light into the dense mass of heathen darkness. The principle of combining industrial education with purely spiritual effort is not a new one in missionary enterprise, but it is only in recent years that its feasibility and its desirability have been successfully demonstrated. One of the most satisfactory of these attempts, especially from the standpoint of self-support, is to be found in the operations of the Nyassa Industrial Mission, the portraits of whose superintendents we give on this page. The story of its operations is a short but an intensely encouraging one.

It was in 1892 that an Australian brother, Mr. Joseph Booth, left home and kindred, like Abraham of old, believing that God had called him to go forth that he might proclaim the Gospel in some purely heathen land. His steps were directed to Central Africa, by way of London. To the region of the Shirè highlands the guiding star led him, and there he found a country admirably situated, and well adapted in every way, for an experiment in industrial Christian work, with the view of ultimate self-support. In due time Mr. Booth acquired possession of some stretches of territory, not far from Blantyre. His first purchase consisted of some 800 acres of capital land, specially suited for coffee-growing. This estate he offered to any company of Christians connected with the Baptist body (to which he belonged) who would develop it for the purposes intended. He subsequently gained possession of larger tracts of country, which now comprise the Zambesi Industrial Mission.

MR. DEEATH.

MRS. DEEATH.

(From Photographs by Mr. C. Essenhigh Corke, Sevenoaks.)

The offer of the earlier purchase was accepted by Rev. A. Tilly, of Cardiff, and it has been incorporated under the title of the Nyassa Industrial Mission, with an English Executive Council, of which Mr. Tilly is a member, with Mr. Richard Cory, of Cardiff, as its president. Its present superintendent is Mr. Deeath, who is assisted by his wife, and their headquarters are at Likabula. After a good many years of practical colonial experience Mr. Deeath arrived in Nyassaland in August, 1893, and took charge of the work. When he reached the scene of his future labours some progress had been made in the preparatory stages. There was on the estate a three-roomed thatched cottage, with small kitchen. About twenty acres of land were cleared, and some 30,000 coffee plants had been planted in nursery beds. Since he took over the supervision, a hundred and fifty acres have been cleared, and eighty acres planted with coffee; a large portion of the plants were also utilised for the Zambesi Mission. Moreover, the first crop of coffee has been placed on the London market, and fetched a good price. An eight-roomed brick house has been built, besides school and meeting-house. This represents in mere outline the material progress of the three years of Mr. Deeath's management.

The spiritual aspects of the enterprise are of an equally encouraging kind. While Mr. Deeath of course had to give much time in early days to the direction of the industrial department, his wife gave herself heart and soul to the work of Gospel and other instruction. A goodly number of the natives have professed faith in Jesus Christ, and some of the converts visit the villages around on Sundays to preach the Gospel. During the dry season many additional workers come in from Angoniland. These attend the mission services, and if the truth has reached their hearts they are able to impart the good news to their friends when they return home. The three departments of medical, educational, and evangelistic work have been simultaneously sustained. The neighbouring chief has also erected a schoolroom in his village, and a native Christian teacher is in charge. Mrs. Deeath has enrolled the names of fifty young men in the school register, and these have been taught to read the Gospels in their own tongue.

A year ago the working strength of the Mission was reinforced by the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Halliwell, and Mr. Hambrook has lately gone out to join the staff. At present Mr. and Mrs. Deeath are in this country, mainly on account of the latter's health. The district is a healthy one for Central Africa, though, of course, Europeans are subject to attacks of intermittent fever.

The details we have given, in themselves answer some of the objections that have been raised to this species of missionary endeavour. It may be well to dispose of some other criticisms that have been advanced, by reproducing one or two questions addressed to Mr. Deeath in a recent interview, and his replies:—

Q. Will not this industrial self-supporting idea debar the Christian Churches from exercising the privilege of giving to missions?

A. Seeing the difficulty in raising sufficient funds for missionary work, that seems to me a very poor objection. Whenever the Christian public are prepared to supply all the money needed we are prepared to retire. Moreover, there are a great many mission fields where a self-supporting basis is unattainable, so that there will always be plenty of room for the liberality of the home churches.

Q. Has not the industrial work a tendency to crowd out the spiritual work?

A. There is no more danger to an industrial worker abroad of becoming unspiritual than there is to a business man at home. In our work we consider that the opportunity of showing the people the power of Christianity as part of our daily working life is most beneficial. Under the ordinary missionary conditions, where the natives do not see the missionary engaging in manual work of any kind, they are apt to conclude that to be Christians is to go about with their hands in their pockets and do nothing. Besides, we have regular daily services, with a short Gospel address. There are also the educational classes in the afternoons, and Gospel meetings in the evenings; with services, of course, on the Sabbath. So that we bring the truth to bear on the people just as largely as in missions where there is no industrial work.

We do not think it needful to allude further to objections which seem to us really to have no pith or point in them. The great safeguard, of course, is that the workers shall be kept in the true spirit and attitude toward God and his Gospel, and the industrial element need not have any detrimental influence in that direction. Mr. Deeath's expectation, based on his past experience, is that each station, after three years' time, when its coffee crop is in full bearing, will not only be self-maintaining but able to plant another station on fresh ground. His visit to England at this time is partly to try and raise £20,000 for the founding and opening up of five new stations. It is hoped that these will by-and-bye yield sufficient returns to enable the mission to possess twenty stations, which is the present limit at which they aim. Mr. Deeath will remain in England till April, and may be communicated with care of Rev. C. Rudge, "Lynwood," Sevenoaks, Kent.

Gray's Yard Mission.

UNDER the chairmanship of Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., the annual breakfast was given on Sunday, January 3, at Gray's Yard Mission, 13, Duke-street, Manchester-square. Between 400 and 500 of the poorest men were gathered, and for each of them was provided coffee, cake, and a meat pie. More might have been done on this, as on other occasions for these most needy and dejected wanderers, had the funds been in a prosperous condition.

In addition to the breakfast for the hungry body, there was rich food also provided by the Lord Himself for these poor men's souls. After some sympathetic words of truth from the chairman, in which he preached the Gospel with tender earnestness, Captain Orde Brown gave the principal address. The attention of the audience was riveted throughout, and the full results are only known to God.

The Week of Prayer, 1897.

WEDNESDAY.

ST. Martin's Hall was well attended on Wednesday, when Lord Kinnaird presided, and having read 1 Kings iii. 8-10, and Jonah iii. 5-10, called attention to the theme for the day:—

NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.—Prayer for sovereigns and rulers, and for all that are in authority; that cruelty and oppression may cease; that protection may be extended to the Armenian Christians, the Stundists, and all who are suffering grievously for Christ's sake. That all the momentous events happening among the nations of the earth may only tend to the more rapid growth of the Kingdom of Christ.

Revs. John Tuckwell, Gavin Carlyle, and others led in prayer, very special mention being made of the tortured Armenians, the Nestorians hunted like partridges on the mountains of Kurdistan, and of the banished and oppressed Stundists.

Rev. H. E. Fox, the speaker of the morning, said: In the oldest city in the world there stands a building, once a Christian church, perhaps before that a heathen temple, and now a Mohammedan mosque. Over the front of that building there still remains a memorable inscription, "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth to all generations." Strange it should have been spared by ruthless haters of the very name of Christ; but it has been, and there it stands a witness, declaring the great hope of the Church. Nor is it the hope of the Church only. From the beginning of the Word of God, when He called to Him a people, to the wondrous series of visions that close the Revelation, the coming Kingdom, which is to swallow up the kingdoms of this earth, is ever held in view. Throughout the Scriptures, Old and New, there is one continuous testimony, from beginning to end, to this Kingdom of Christ.

Now this kingdom is more than the Church. It has far larger limits and aspects than the gathering out of an elect people. You find the Psalms full of references to the Kingdom, and that last glorious psalm (cxlv.) only echoes that which has been sung from the beginning, "Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." So through the prophets we hear the constant echo and re-echo of the coming of a King who is to reign in righteousness. So in the Gospels: it is announced by the angels, and proclaimed by the three wise men from the East; when the fore-runner appears his cry is "Repent, for the kingdom is at hand." When our Lord begins his ministry the burden of his message is the kingdom; his parables are similitudes of the kingdom; his followers are sent out to proclaim the kingdom. Challenged by Pilate, "Art Thou the King of the Jews?" He does not deny it. So after his resurrection, He spent the period between that and his ascension in talking of things concerning the kingdom. The disciples ask, "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom? He does not rebuke their hope, but only their premature anticipations. So his immediate followers witnessed to the kingdom. One of the deacons, released from semi-secular cares at Jerusalem, went to Samaria preaching the kingdom. Paul went about proclaiming the coming kingdom. He exhorted everywhere those who believed that "we must through much tribulation enter the kingdom of God." So in his epistles he speaks of translation into the kingdom of his dear Son, of a kingdom which is not in word only, but in power; of being counted worthy of the kingdom of God. In Hebrews we hear of the "kingdom which cannot be moved." James speaks of "heirs of the kingdom which He hath promised." Peter writes of an entrance being ministered into the everlasting kingdom. John speaks of the kingdom and patience of Jesus. Thus, the coming King of righteousness and his kingdom of peace is the theme of this Book from beginning to end.

But what does all this mean in relation to our subject to-day, in praying for nations and rulers? Just this, that our hopes are not to be built on any earthly kingdom. See how the united powers of Europe have failed to relieve the state of things in Turkey. The history of human government is one long story of misgovernment. Man has tried every form of rule with small success. God's people sought a king after the manner of the nations, and what a miserable failure that was. On the smaller platform of Israel there was in miniature what has been going on ever since everywhere. Why is this? God would teach men to look higher, to learn that their help is in Him alone. Now, why this failure in human government? Because earthly rule has no continuity, no cohesion, and no permanent security for peace and righteousness. But the kingdom for which we look is everlasting, is perfect in righteousness and peace. We wait the coming of that King who shall reign in righteousness. The kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. The royal decree has gone forth and shall not be reversed. The heathen rage, the people imagine a vain thing, but God's answer is, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." "We see not yet all things put under Him. But we see Jesus...crowned with glory and honour." He must reign, and his kingdom shall never be moved. He must reign, because the Almighty God hath said it. He must, until He hath "put all his enemies under his feet."

Meanwhile, what are we to do? To recognise and obey the rulers of this world—so far as consistent with godliness—and above all to pray for them. For prayer is more potent than diplomacy. Let us pray in private, in family and public worship, that God will control the powers of this world, and minimize suffering—although we cannot expect that suffering and wrong will wholly cease until the Prince of Peace shall come.

At the Centenary Hall, where Mr. J. H. PUTTERILL presided, the speaker was Rev. W. CUFF, who dwelt on the influences and complications—political, commercial, and religious—that permeate the peoples of the earth, moulding their character in a variety of ways. At the throne of grace we reach the centre of all influence, for God overrules all for his own glory. In the presence of great difficulties and perplexing problems, we are enabled to rest in the assurance, "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth," and that his will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. That God condescends to answer prayer is a fact in which to triumph. Praying men and women move the hand of God, by whom kings reign and princes decree justice. In praying for rulers and peoples, we should not omit to ask for the conversion of the former, in order that their influence may be on the side of truth and righteousness. Nothing that could happen to monarchs and rulers would so benefit them and make them a blessing, as would their conversion to God and their devotion to his service.

At Exeter Hall on Wednesday, the speaker was Rev. T. CHARKE, of Notting Hill. All the things to be prayed for to-day, he said, are included in the clause of our Lord's great prayer: "Thy Kingdom come." When we talk of the Kingdom, we do not discard the Cross. It is only through the cross that we can win the kingdom and the crown. It is in the sacrifice and resurrection of Christ, and by the wondrous power of the Spirit that we have any right to expect an answer to our prayer, "Thy Kingdom come." This is a prayer for ordered government, which is the highest of all government, and which is man's greatest need. All over the world we find despotism, anarchy, restlessness, agitation. If we could only get true government—no matter as to its particular form—we should have achieved a great result. The secret of all this restlessness, anarchy, and lawlessness arises in the citadel of man's own heart. Man desires independence, and he thinks to gain it through brute force, which ever tends to destruction. God desires to set up within man the principle of righteousness of life as a governing power. And we shall never be rightly governed till God governs us

This is, therefore, a prayer for a spiritual kingdom. Let us never forget Christ's word, "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight." In its origin, its methods, its influences, its great satisfactions, it is not an earthly kingdom. Some earthly kingdoms have attempted to show that their origin was Divine; but they have only proved their origin to be fiendish. In promoting this kingdom for which we pray, we are seeking that God's will should regulate our life in all directions. We are not seeking selfish aggrandisement at the expense of others; we are seeking righteousness, peace, joy in the Holy Ghost. There have been many efforts at improvement in earthly government, sometimes carried out divinely and sometimes devilishly, but they have never given satisfaction. They have often turned out to be bubbles that burst when touched. Even when men have really advanced in true government they have not been satisfied. Thank God for reforms, enfranchisements, and all sorts of improvements; but they have ever made men more discontented. If you do not touch men's spirits you will never, by any external regulations, really satisfy them. God alone can satisfy the needs of a man.

Although this is a spiritual kingdom it is to be brought into this world. "Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." We do not pray that we may be taken to heaven—though that might be a legitimate prayer, perhaps—but that heaven may come down here. We desire that God may shine out through human lives. That was what we saw when Jesus Christ came to earth. It is true that He lived here the Divine life in a sense in which we may never attempt it. He was the perfect representation of what the Kingdom of God set up in human life ought to be, as well as in that diviner sense in which He stood alone. He is the type which we should seek to reproduce; and when we pray this prayer we pledge ourselves to try.

We seek that God may govern the Church, and bring all who have anything to do with its regulation under the sway of his true life. We seek also that all the various sections of the Church may be brought together. Thank God, I believe that is coming nearer every day. We seek too that God may rule in "secular" life, as we call it. But what right have we to speak of secular life? All life is sacred if we have a sacred motive. God's kingdom may come into the life of the home, and make it a type of heaven. It may come in the State, through rulers, through better laws, and better law-keeping on the part of the people. I thank God for every movement in favour of better laws, but when we pray we pledge ourselves towards the keeping of good laws when they are made. That is true loyalty, is it not?

We pray for rulers; and thank God for such a ruler as we have had these past sixty years; for the nobility of her Christian character and influence. That has had a great deal to do, in my opinion, with the good things that have come to us in this generation. But let us pray for more of God's kingdom in the world. We know that that kingdom is coming. Some say that the vision seems to tarry, and we are tempted to wonder whether it will ever come. When we look upon the selfishness, the vice in our streets, and the evil enthroned in high places; when we see the despotisms in the world, the groans and moans of Stundists and Armenians—we are inclined to ask if God's Kingdom will ever appear on the earth. But we will not despair; it is coming. It has been coming through every improvement since the world began. It came in a measure when Elijah stood up against the priests of Baal; when Isaiah spoke his words of fire; when the Son of God came into the world and sacrificed Himself for sinful men; when He sent his Spirit to carry out the divine programme. And it has been coming ever since. We see signs of it to-day notwithstanding all that seems against us; notwithstanding the cruel persecutions and oppressions that exist. Therefore, let us continue to pray "Thy Kingdom come," till the kingdoms of this world become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

THURSDAY.

On Thursday the West-end meeting was presided over by Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM, who read Isa. vi. 5-8; Zech. iv. 6-7; Mal. i. 11; and Luke i. 78, 79, and other Scriptures bearing on the subject appointed for the day:—

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Praise to God for the "open doors" in nearly every part of the world; for the success which has attended the proclamation of the Gospel, especially in Africa, China, and South America; for consecrated lives given up to Christ's service in heathen and Mohammedan lands; for the large number of faithful native labourers in various countries, and for the spirit of liberality existing among the native Christians generally.

Prayer that the hearts of Mohammedans and heathen may be opened to receive the Gospel; that the Church of Christ may fully realise her responsibility with regard to those who are still in darkness.

The CHAIRMAN urged the importance of the theme, and expressed his strong desire that these meetings should really be prayer gatherings. We need to wait upon God; we have here an opportunity for united prayer; let us give ourselves more specially than ever to be intercessors on behalf of our brethren and sisters who have gone forth to the heathen as messengers of the Gospel.

Rev. W. T. A. BARBER desired to bear witness as one who had seen the power of God in changing the hearts of men in Africa, China, India, and other parts of the world in which he had spent more than half of his life. He knew that Christ, by the acceptance of his Gospel, does really change and renew the hearts of the vilest and most ignorant of men. As to the opportunities mentioned in the programme, these are now practically limitless, and in the most wonderful way God is using even famines and wars to open the door for his Gospel. As illustrating the conquering power of the truth, the speaker referred to the conversion, or, at all events, the conquest, of the notorious leader of the recent and scandalous libels on missionaries in China. So even the Indian famine and the Chino-Japanese war have been wonderfully used of God in paving the way for his Gospel. New opportunities are constantly appearing, while on the other hand the native Christians give satisfactory evidence of sincerity, steadfastness, and endurance. Of course the victory is not to be won in a day; there are trials, difficulties, and disappointments, but God is doing his own work; his Gospel is winning its way; and in his good time the idols shall be utterly abolished, and Christ alone be King.

After prayer by Rev. P. Colborn, Col. Elphinstone, Dr. Soltau, and Dr. Gosset-Tanner, the meeting was thrown open, and a number of friends in the audience led in prayer and intercession on behalf of the persecuted Armenians and Nestorians, and of missions in all parts of the world.

At the Centenary Hall the chair was occupied by Mr. F. W. LAWRENCE, and the address was delivered by Rev. R. DUFF, minister of Belgrave Presbyterian church. In the course of his remarks he said:—In Psalm lxxii. it is recorded, "All nations shall serve Him," and in Revelation xi. we read of a time when it shall be said, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." The watchword of the Church is "The world for Christ." Not only is this the great object of the Church, but it is also the great object of the eternal covenant between the Father and the Son in the great scheme of redemption, and the great object of the commission which Christ gave to his disciples before He left them, "Make disciples of all nations, and lo, I am with you alway."

There is room for the world in the infinite love and benevolence of God. There is room for the world in the efficacy of Christ's atonement. There is room for the world in the Church of God upon earth. There is room for the world in heaven. So there ought to be room for the world in the hearts of Christians—in our prayers and in our efforts. In the prophecy of Isaiah we read that our Saviour "shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied." But will He be satisfied with a few out of the world? Will He be satisfied with a few from Europe, and America, and China, and India, and Australia, and the islands of the sea? No; we believe that He will never be satisfied until He sees the whole world at the foot of his cross, acknowledging and worshipping Him as God their Saviour. His triumph will never be complete until "the kingdoms of this world are the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." Nothing less will satisfy Christ; nothing less should satisfy the Church of God.

It is a pertinent question, Why is it that all nations do not serve Christ now? Why is it that all the kingdoms of the world have not become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ? In other words, why is the world not converted to Christ after more than eighteen centuries? When the command was given the means were provided; when the promise was given power was pledged to effect it. Millions are to-day worshipping gods which their own hands have made; there are teeming millions who have never heard of the Saviour, or of the way of salvation through faith in Him. That the world is not converted is clear enough; that it will be converted is just as clear, for God has said it, and his word can never fail.

Then the question arises—Why has the world not been brought to Christ? The command was given long ago, and the means provided. Perhaps you will say, It has not been the purpose of God to bring it about as yet. But with the secret purposes of God we have nothing to do, and it is not in that aspect we look at the question, but in the aspect of human instrumentality and duty. From that point of view we have to find an answer to the question within ourselves and around us; and I say that the world would have been converted to Christ long ago if the professing Church had done her duty in this matter, if she had been alive to the command she had received. You remember that our Saviour, when speaking of the sin of Capernaum, said—"Woe unto thee, Capernaum, for if the mighty works which were done in thee had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes." Reasoning in the same way, I conclude that if the professing Church had been faithful to duty in this matter, all down the centuries, the world would have been converted to Christ long before now.

We have not been so anxious for the conversion of the world as Satan has been for its destruction; nor so anxious to carry out the Lord's command as to advance our temporal interests. We do not believe in the power of prayer as we should, having regard to the fact that when the world is converted it will be in answer to prayer. God has said to his Son, "I will give Thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession"; but He says, "Ask of Me." He has promised to build up and "make Jerusalem (that is the Church) a joy and a praise in the earth"; but He says, "Give Me no rest until I do it." Though she has in a measure realised her duty, the Church still needs to hear the call, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength: arise, shake thyself from the dust, loose thyself from the bands of thy neck."

FRIDAY.

At the West-end meeting on Friday, Mr. Donald Matheson presided, and in opening read Isa. ix. The subject for the day was:—

HOME MISSIONS.—Praise for increased activity amongst God's people, and for many tokens of the power of the Holy Spirit accompanying the means used. Prayer for the blessing of God to rest abundantly upon all evangelistic efforts; for work amongst soldiers and sailors; and for the better observance of the Sabbath.

JEWS.—Praise for the wide circulation obtained for the Hebrew New Testament, and for the encouraging work amongst Jews. Prayer that there may be such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the Jews as has never been witnessed since Apostolic times.

Rev. PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE, after a season of prayer, read 1 Pet. iv. 10, and Gen. xxiv. 34 and 37, and spoke on the office of a steward and the power thereof, as illustrated by Eliezer. We, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God, are responsible to minister that grace to our neighbours and to the scattered children of Abraham. Even as the Gentile Eliezer was sent to fetch a bride to his master's son, so we Gentiles are being sent to bring in Jews to our Lord Jesus Christ. We are commissioned thus to seek for a bride to our Master's Son from our own people and from his own people, the Jews. We must begin with the man nearest us—the man who sits next us in the train or in the office—and from these we are called to go out and seek among his ancient people for a bride for Him. As Zacharias says, we are redeemed "that we might serve Him," but while we are servants we are also stewards, and that is more: for the steward has a responsibility which the slave has not. So we are called by Christ to be servants, and then we are given the position of stewards of the manifold grace of God. Now remember that the one object of Eliezer seems to have been to honour his master, and so you and I are called to bring glory to God and joy to his Son by bringing in his bride. As we recall how Eliezer boasted, as it were, in being the servant of Abraham, referring to him nineteen times in one chapter as "my master," we see a picture of what the attitude of the child of God ought to be Do we rise to a true sense of our glorious position as slaves?

I would not work my soul to save,
For that the Lord hath done;
But I would work like any slave
For love of his dear Son.

But, while servants, we are also stewards. A trust is reposed in us; do we acknowledge it? Otherwise I see no purpose in these meetings. We meet as stewards, endowed with the "gifts" or endowments of the Spirit to use them for our Lord. We represent a glorious Master, and bear the unsearchable riches of Christ. Realising this, how can we be content with anything short of absolute and constant consecration to the work of winning souls to Christ? We are entrusted by God with a wondrous trust; let us seek to be faithful to it.

Then Eliezer had one purpose—to seek a bride for his master's son. Should not that be the one aim of our life? There is a Divine compulsion upon us: we must win souls for Him, who is the Heir of all things, and who is now waiting fo the completion of his bride. Thus, Eliezer's principle in life was faithfulness; his aim, to win a bride; and his power, prayer. We may trace in the narrative how he prayed to the Lord at all points. So we meet to pray, but do we really understand the power of prayer in our service? As we read the story we may have wondered what made Rebekah forsake her home, and set out over the desert with a man who might have been after all but a bandit of the mountains. What made her trust his words? It was his evident sincerity. "Wilt thou go with this man?" "I will go." May we, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God, so commend our Master that men may say "I will go."

On Friday the chair was occupied at Centenary Hall by Mr. W. H. Seagram, who asserted the importance of prayer. This was heartily echoed by Rev. Dr. Stephenson, who, in a short address, helped to give direction to the prayers of those assembled. Comparing the moral and social condition of things to-day with that of two centuries, and indeed of one century ago, the speaker found great cause for thankfulness to God. Yet he deplored the inordinate love of pleasure and sport that prevails in all classes of society, the dreadful haste to get rich at all costs; and the gulf which is ever widening between different sections of the community, especially between employers and employed. All this touches religion and spiritual life, and touches our power for good.

Alluding to the increasing neglect of Divine worship, the speaker said:—Large numbers of people spend their Sabbaths on the Thames; and in other circles only a small proportion, of their own choice, are brought under the direct influence of the Gospel. It was bad when, in olden days, the prophets and priests wrought evil; worse than that was the fact that "the people loved to have it so." That the people are at ease in their unconcern is the saddest element. If there were only trouble, or alarm, or some crying out after the living God, one would not feel the pressure that one does; but, as a fact, there is a terrible infidelity amongst us, not formal in character nor blatant, but quiet, unconcerned, matter-of-fact infidelity. Thousands and tens of thousands of men are living with the quiet assumption that after struggling here for a few years they will die and be done with. Others think that they have simply to make the best of the moment; they have no belief that touches their action or brings in the thought of a future life.

In these circumstances, where is our help? In the upper classes there is as much need for evangelistic effort and an outpouring of the grace of God as there is in the slum population. Throughout the country at large, with a very considerable percentage of the people, there is regardlessness of Divine truth and the needs of the soul; men and women give themselves up to the life of the present, to things that can be touched and handled. This situation calls upon us to persevere in mighty prayer and throw ourselves back upon the power of God. The veil upon the hearts of the Jews should not lead us to relax efforts for their conversion, nor should the indifference of the multitudes by whom we are surrounded discourage us; but, being driven back upon the strength of God, we must by earnest prayer take hold of his power, in which alone we can expect success.

SATURDAY.

Saturday was devoted to families and schools, the subject being thus detailed:—

Thanksgiving, for families bound together by the love of Christ; for the earnest work carried on by many students in our Universities and colleges.

Prayer, that parents may more constantly seek to bring up their children in the fear and love of God; that greater prominence may be given in Christian households to the study of God's Word and to united prayer; that a special blessing may be outpoured upon Universities, colleges, and schools, and that the religious teaching given in them may be thoroughly Scriptural; that Sunday-schools may increasingly become nurseries for God's kingdom.

At St. Martin's Hall Mr. John Paton led the meeting, and gave an address to parents, teachers, and workers among children and young people.

THE MISSION FIELD.

Christianity in India.

THE January issue of the Church Missionary Intelligencer contains a valuable article by General Hutchinson, C.B., C.S.I., on the Indian Government and Christian Missions. The General knows whereof he writes, and in outlining a chapter of history which is important on patriotic as well as religious grounds, he quotes authorities which are not within the reach of ordinary students.

After describing the course of events under the East India Company and subsequently, the writer thus summarises the points made:—"From the year 1601 to the year 1758, we may say that the attitude of the Governments of England and India was not only friendly but helpful. But about this time a change became apparent, and the hostility on the part of both Governments culminated in the year 1793—that year of revolution in France, and of the murder of her king.

"That was the time when the churches of England appeared, as regards missionary enterprise, to be only just awakening; when the great Baptist missionary Carey was refused a passage to India in an English ship because he was going out as a missionary; when the Parliament of Great Britain struck out the declaration giving freedom to missionary work which the eminent and enlightened Wilberforce strove to get passed in the new charter of the East India Company; and when the shareholders of the East India Company opposed the sending of missionaries to India on the ground that it would 'endanger the peace and the security of our possessions.'

"From the year 1793 to the year 1813, when the new charter was granted to the Company, certainly it must be said that the Government of India manifested active hostility towards missionary effort, refusing the great Judson permission to carry on missionary work in India, compelling him and others to leave the country, and expelling some missionaries who had landed. Then it was that the lands and funds of heathen temples were taken under more direct control by the Government, and this formidable obstacle to missionary enterprise was strengthened.

"With the new charter of 1813, thanks to Wilberforce and others, restrictions on missionary effort were removed; but the permanent officials of the Government manifested for many years after much hostility to missionary enterprise, and the various Governors-General were helpless in their hands. Specially was the Government hostile to and alarmed at anything like missionary effort amongst the native soldiers. This hostility and alarm was observed and remarked on by well-known natives of high intelligence and character, such as the Rajah Jai Narain, of Benares, and Rammohun Roy, the great reformer; and it was this dread lest the native soldiers should think the Government wanted to make them Christians that was so clearly evinced in that important and interesting case at Meerut (Prabhu-din Pundah), in which the Government dismissed the soldier because he became a Christian. This case was, I believe, a potent cause amongst others, for bringing upon us the punishment of the Mutiny."

After remarking upon the awful proceedings at Meerut on the night of May 10, General Hutchinson inquires regarding the Mutiny: "Can it be doubted that this was the finger of God punishing us for the many years of hostility shown by our Government to the spread of Christ's Gospel in India; and for the very special official and open insult given by the Government to that faith in the case of the Sepoy in Meerut dismissed because he became a Christian? As regards the hostility of the Government towards any attempt to make known to the native soldiers Christ and his Gospel, what was the very evident cause of that hostility? Fear lest the Sepoys should mutiny from thinking that the Government, by permitting such attempts, desired to make them Christians. And what, in the providence of God, did cause the Mutiny? Let the voice of the late Sir Herbert Edwardes reply, for none knew better than he: 'The Sepoys rose because they thought there was a conspiracy by the Government to make them Christians.' May we not trace the finger of God again in the very nature of the punishment sent?"

Cuba and the Gospel.

It was my privilege to visit Cuba in the interests of Protestant evangelism just as the present revolt against Spanish supremacy was taking shape. I went through the length and breadth of this beautiful island, with a view to see what was being done in the name of our Lord Jesus, and of the simple faith by which lost souls are brought into relation to his saving grace.

Alas, the result showed how little was being done—or even could be done. It is true that the revised Spanish Constitution recognises liberty of worship, but it is not less true that officialism and priestcraft find means for harassing and rendering almost practically impossible any attempt to evangelize Cuba. The work of Rev. A. J. Diaz in Havana was almost the only encouraging example of vigorous and prosperous Protestant work to be found. Latterly, things have been growing worse. Pastors and teachers have been treated as suspects and have had to flee for safety's sake.

But Cuba has a future. The present movement against Spain will leave its mark upon the country as it concerns religion. The political issue of the weary strife is uncertain, but one thing is sure—Cuba can never again be held in the ecclesiastical thrall which has been her curse for centuries. The Cuban is not destitute of religious sensibility and the "Word of God is not bound."

There will devolve upon some great Protestant nation the grave but blessed responsibility of giving to Cuba the tidings of salvation. A hard field awaits the evangelical labourer, and both pluck and patience will be required, but the issue is not doubtful. Evidently, Popery has lost its hold upon the men of Cuba. The "altars" of that church are not served by Cubans, but by foreigners. Sabbath-breaking, gambling, and treachery are working deplorable havoc. To-day, however, hundreds of Cubans, driven from their native isle by war and menace, are hearing of God's salvation in some of the cities of Florida, notably in Tampa and Key West.

The American Bible Society is exhibiting a commendable energy in taking advantage of this opportunity to circulate the Holy Scriptures amongst the exiled children of the "Pearl of the Antilles."

The Land of the Incas.

Dear Sir,—After his serious illness, we have been glad to see Rev. A. M. Milne, of Buenos Ayres, once more in Peru. This veteran worker of the American Bible Society, who has sold Bibles in every country in South America, except Ecuador, still speaks of making another journey through Bolivia.

Ecuador, the last of these priest-ridden lands to unlock her doors to the Protestant missionary and the Bible, is now being entered by some workers of the Gospel Union, Kansas, U.S. The Convention, under the leadership of General Alfaro, is meeting at Guayaquil, the scene of the recent great fire.

Colporteurs in the North of Peru have been able to circulate Scriptures without any serious molestation during the year. We find the attractive Gospels by John issued by the Scripture Gift Mission exceedingly acceptable and useful. Last September the Supreme Government ordered the closure of the missionaries' schools in Cuzco. The Municipal Council of Callao, led on by priestly influence and encouraged by the action of the Government towards Cuzco, is trying to take similar steps with the schools of M. E. Mission. These schools are in a flourishing condition, and are influencing a large circle, having over 200 children in the different districts of Callao. Dr. Wood, of Callao, who has returned from an extended tour along the coast of Chili, reports very favourably of the good work going on there, and of the many openings for the Gospel.

Bolivia, a large inland State, whose needs have made known widely in England of late, and which offers as good opportunities as Peru for preaching the Gospel, is still without a resident missionary. When will this neglected part of S. America have the lively sympathy and prayer of God's people? From Quito, in Ecuador, to Cajamarco, in Peru, on through this great Andian range to Cuzco, and from this ancient capital to La Paz and Sucre, in Bolivia, an immense sweep of nearly 2000 miles, inhabited by several millions of Quechua and Hymara Indians, and yet amongst them there is not a single Protestant missionary. All these towns are important centres from which large populations can be evangelised. We think of this great need, and re-echo the plea, believing there is power to meet it.

We rejoice that from amongst the different missions some fruit is being shown, and several of these are stepping out as workers among their fellow countrymen. The year which is closing has been one of varied trials, but we doubt not God is accomplishing his hidden purposes for the evangelising of the land of the Incas.—Yours in Christ,

Lima, Dec. 7, 1896. A. R. STARK.

WE recently reported the resumption of work at Kumasi by Pastor Ramseyer, of the Basel Missionary Society. It is about six months since, with his devoted wife, he re-entered the country. In the course of a long communication to us M. Ramseyer says: "We are free missionaries in the town where some twenty-five years ago we had to suffer so much as prisoners, and where we witnessed so many atrocities. Doubtless the work will meet with hindrances at the beginning, but we are full of hope. In the short time we have been here we have often seen how the Lord knows to remove the difficulties that arise day by day. The great drawback is that the inhabitants are still, to a large extent, scattered in the numberless villages round the town, and are afraid to come and rebuild their houses in the capital. But at the invitation of the Resident, who in this time of transition has to bear with patience with the ways of the Kumasi people, we have had the joy of seeing some come back. But what fills our hearts with delight is to see the confidence the people have in us.

"Kumasi is no longer the place we knew some twenty years ago. Where is now the small bush called 'apete-sene,' that means 'vulture's-abode,' and where, generation after generation, the bodies of thousands of beheaded victims were thrown, near the market-place? In the old days I could scarcely pass the market-place without having a handkerchief before the nose. The bush has vanished away; and a few large trees still standing are the only dumb witnesses of the atrocities which are now passed for ever. A short distance away we see a large building in course of construction; it is the fort, which promises to be the pride of the land, and proclaims, too, that the reign of the knife is at an end.

"The governor, Mr. Maxwell, has kindly granted to our Mission a well-situated piece of land outside of the town and not very far from the place where the mausoleum of the kings was standing. We have here a token that a new era has come for Kumasi and Ashantee, and that from this same blood stained place, 'Bantama,' the glorious light of the Sun of Righteousness, will arise 'with healing in his wings.' Our Mission station consists of three native huts at the same level as the ground around us, and rather open to wind and rain, and every kind of creeping creature, but we are thankful to be here, and hope in about six months to have a better dwelling, for I have begun to build a small house.

"The cost of establishing the Mission station will be at least, £1000, but the Lord, who has called us here, will surely make many of his children willing to help and support us." The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. J. P. Werner, 46, New Broad-street, London, E.C.

A Great Opportunity in Korea.

IN a letter written by Mrs. Bishop, dated Seoul, November 2, which appears in the New York Independent, she says:—

"I confess that I feel very sad about the prospects for Korean work, unless the Church awakes to a sense of what the situation really is. In the three years of travel now drawing to a close, I have visited over one hundred mission stations, and am not conscious of having felt a greater preliminary interest in the work at one than at another. But I am bound to say that the needs of Korea, or rather the openings in Korea, have come to occupy a very outstanding place in my thoughts, and I should not be justified in withholding my view of them.

"The Pyeng Yang work, which I saw last winter, and which is still going on in much the same way, is the most impressive mission work I have seen in any part of the world. It shows that the Spirit of God still moves on the earth and that the old truths of sin, judgment to come, of the Divine justice and love, of the atonement, and of the necessity for holiness, have the same power as in the Apostolic days, to transform the lives of men. What I saw and heard there has greatly strengthened my own faith. But it is not in Pyeng Yang only, but here in the capital and especially through the women's work that the seed sown so long in tears is promising to yield a harvest if the reapers come. And though in lesser degree there are signs elsewhere that the leaven of the Gospel is working.

"Eighteen years ago I spent a year in Japan, chiefly in travelling, and visited missions everywhere. The Gospel was working there. There was a great demand there as at Pyeng Yang for Christian teaching, and there was a great hope that if the teaching were provided Japan might be on its way to be a Christian country. So far at least as England was concerned the appeals for men sent during the following year were not responded to. The door which was open closed again, and we all know what the present state of Japan as regards Christianity is.

"Now a door is opened wide in Korea, how wide only those can know who are on the spot. Very many are prepared to renounce devil worship, and to worship the true God if only they are taught how; and large numbers who have heard and received the Gospel are earnestly craving to be instructed in its rules of holy living. I dread indescribably that, unless many men and women experienced in winning souls are not sent speedily, the door which the Church declines to enter will close again, and that the last state of Korea will be worse than the first. The methods of the missionaries are admirable in the training of Christians to self-help. They are helping themselves to the limit of their means. Also admirable are the methods used for fitting the Koreans to carry the Gospel intelligence to their brethren. This work alone requires four times the number of men already on the field to carry it on; yet on it perhaps more than on any other agency hang our hopes for the advancement of Christ's kingdom in Korea. Truly a 'great door and effectual' is opened. I sadly ask, Is it to close again?"

MY son, Houlton Forlong, went to Tanna two years ago as a professed trader, but the good of the natives was his one self-denying object. The first year, no one, as he said, "cared a pin for him" or his intentions; the natives were cold, heartless. The second year they valued his good intentions; "boys" came round him often, and friendly confidence was very apparent. Many months ago he returned from a tour, and was received with extraordinary rejoicing. His small house had been preserved in a remarkable manner during his absence; some were ready to be taught at once; others at a distance sent deputations with the message, "We cannot come, but we send others to get good, and that will do for us." To such he replied, "If some of your friends sent for tobacco to a store, and smoked it, would that do for you?"

Latterly the natives, of their own accord, have reproved and corrected themselves. They sent and asked some bands of regular enemies to meet them on a hill known to all, and to promise to kill each other no longer—to have "worship" and prayer, and not war weapons, and they promised to bring offerings of peace. About 300 in that small island so met, and Houlton was almost the only white man, and they made speeches alternately, good men and enemies. Some said, "Worship no good, but we will promise peace as you do." Other enemies said, "We would wish worship too, but our enemies on the other side of us would come and kill us, if we gave up our rifles and gave up killing." But both friends and enemies carried up great presents to give to each other, and to forget all the past murders. Their rule is always to follow up any murder, and exact direct returns of vengeance. They dragged up the hill huge pigs as presents, cocoanuts and yams, taro, sugar canes, and bananas. The enemies sang a song, the words of which in one place were, "The worship, it no good," although they knew that their friends who asked for this meeting loved the worship.

The enemies had been the worst murderers; therefore they brought more presents to make peace. They had hardly any clothing on, yet they said that now they wished for peace. The good ones even wished to arrive with their guns in case of danger, but Houlton Forlong persuaded them to leave the guns in an adjoining "town" and pray, only going without any guns. All their faces were painted in wonderful fashion—red, yellow blue, etc. The first chief talked with his face sometimes down to the ground; then he walked about and talked. The leader on the Christian side wore a merino vest which Houlton Forlong had given to him, and a handkerchief round his neck. The enemies had no clothes; this meeting ended well, the people said, for the worshipping ones.

Afterwards, my son found that the natives had, of their own accord, built a little meeting place on a spot where he had been in the habit of holding meetings, and had actually held meetings there in his absence, some coming from miles distant, asking to be taught. The people on this side of Tanna have never yielded to any missionaries, but now they wish to put heathenism away more effectually than the tribes who have for thirty years known the missionaries. This is truly God's work. The people suggest and propose good plans and energetic modes, such as none of the other known tribes have attempted, and they are very anxious about the hill tribes, who are hard to reach. Houlton Forlong asks the earnest prayers of all Christians, that this work may be deep and permanent and extend to the tribes.

The Belleville Mission.

A HAPPY little company of over 200 children assembled in Miss de Broen's Iron Room, 32, Rue Bolivar, on Thursday afternoon for their annual fête. These represented the scholars of the Sunday and Thursday schools, as also the members of the Band of Hope. The hall was bright with flags, French, English, and American, and seasonable decorations.

Mdme. BOGELOT, so well-known for her assiduous work in the Paris prisons, gave a short but most appreciative testimony to the value of the work carried on by Miss de Broen in the Belleville quarter for so many years. Dr. PAXTON, whose reunions among American students in our city have won him many friends, delivered a short but telling address. Miss WHITE, who had lately returned from a sojourn in St. Petersburg and Constantinople, also spoke. The addresses were interspersed with bright songs from the little ones. The children's enthusiasm rose to its highest pitch when thanks were given to their different teachers, and especially for Miss de Broen, who had provided this treat for them. Many of the parents and friends of the children were present, and the fête closed with the distribution of prizes to the regular attendants of the different classes.

Will friends pray that the work amongst the children may be increasingly blessed? There is an earnest call for efforts on their behalf, as they do not get any religious instruction at the municipal schools. It is gratifying to watch the evident interest the parents take in their lessons. Many of the mothers accompany the little ones to the Sunday school, so that we have formed a special "mothers' class." They listen with eager attention to the recitation of Scripture texts by the children, and join heartily in the singing, besides getting their own Bible lesson. More teachers are needed, as also for the large night school classes for young men and young women which have been singularly interesting for some time past. Voluntary workers, with a little knowledge of French, and with consecrated hearts, would find here a great field of usefulness. All communications to be addressed to Miss de Broen, 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris. E. B.

Vale Mission Hall, Guernsey.—The past year has been a blessed time in connection with this mission. We have from time to time experienced showers of blessings. The meetings have been well attended throughout, often people failing to gain admission on Sunday evenings. It gave us great joy on Sunday evening (January 3) to receive into fellowship several young people who had recently given their hearts to God in our hall. The Lord's people have been greatly cheered and encouraged, while many precious souls have been won for the Master. There is a good feeling amongst the workers, and there yet seems a sign of an abundance of rain.

PETER M. VANDIN, Superintendent.

The Railway Mission.

A MEETING of railway workers was held at the office of the Mission, 1, Adam-street, Strand, W.C., on Thursday, January 7, with the object of uniting in prayer for blessing on the work during the present year. The secretary, Mr. R. Nixon, mentioned the great need for workers in all railway centres who will arrange Bible-classes and Gospel meetings for the men, many of whom are hindered by Sunday duty from attending the ordinary places of worship. The need for this is very great if our railway men are to be reached by the Gospel.

Prayer was made that funds might be sent to enable the Mission to send a worker to the railway men of India, also for the missionaries who are labouring in connection with the Mission among the Japanese and South African railway men. The Cape Government railways have granted the use of a coach to the Railway Mission, in which the missionary travels along the lines, holding services at the various stations. Most encouraging reports have recently been received telling of progress and blessing in South Africa and Japan.

The work of the Mission in this country has been richly blessed during the past year. Many conversions have taken place at various branches of the Mission.

On the evening of January 7 a meeting of members and friends of the Mission was held in the Railway Mission Hall, West Brompton. Mr. Alex. Hubbard, J.P., strongly urged the importance of this work. He impressed on Christian railway men the importance of being thorough in their religious life. Mr. Seagram, Mr. Luff, Mr. Nixon, and others also gave addresses. Miss Davidson spoke of the Leeds branch, where twelve meetings are held every week in mess-rooms on large stations during meal hours. Much blessing has attended these gatherings, where some hear the Gospel who probably never go to any place of worship.

The Stockwell Orphanage.

Alderman Moss, Mayor of Croydon, presided on Thursday afternoon at a New Year's gathering in the Spurgeon Memorial Hall. A Gospel address to the children was given by Mr. Chettleborough. Friends at Croydon had provided a present for each of the 500 inmates. Dr. and Mrs. Spurgeon also gave a watch to the best girl, and Mr. Soper gave one to the best boy, the recipients being elected by the children themselves. The response to the Christmas appeal, and the outlook for the year, are satisfactory.

One special feature of the meeting was the return of the head master (Mr. Charlesworth) with the Orphanage choir from a tour through the United States on behalf of the Orphanage. The Americans were always very desirous of having a visit from C. H. Spurgeon, and they showed their love for his work and memory by according a genuine cordial greeting to the party from the Orphanage, for which the great preacher showed so much solicitude. Altogether, 120 meetings were held, and in preaching or speech-making, Mr. Charlesworth reckons that during the tour he addressed not less than 150,000 persons. Many of these gatherings were held in some of the more notable buildings of the Republic. A hearty welcome was everywhere given. Invitations to visit churches and chapels were so numerous, that by accepting them the choir might have remained in the country for a long time. While engaged in carrying on services at New York, Mr. Moody made a collection for the Orphanage associated with his old friend C. H. Spurgeon. Mr. Charlesworth appears to have made a very favourable impression as a preacher, and he and his choir were strongly urged to return to the States under more favourable circumstances. A sum of £460 was paid into the Orphanage exchequer as a result of the journey.

Requests for Prayer.—For special services by John Elliott, at St. Mary Church and Inwardleigh Green (Devon).—For blessing on services conducted by Mr. William Nobbs, at Mission Hall, Pontnewydd.—For Victoria, Mashonaland, where drunkenness and godlessness abound, and for a servant of God, who, though almost alone, is seeking to witness for Him.—For a mission being held in the Iron Hall, Templemore Ave., Belfast, conducted by Mr. Jas. Wharton, of Barrow.

CAUSES OF CHURCH DECLINE.

Dear Sir,—I fear there must be some real decline or lukewarmness when I hear or read of so many lamenting that it is so, and I think that your correspondent, "W. R. L.," in The Christian for January 7, is more successful than some others in divining the chief cause.

One correspondent has well recommended the more general employment of evangelists outside the church, but it is generally observed that those who are converted in barns, tents, and mission halls prefer to attend such places rather than the churches and chapels, and I cannot wonder at this, or greatly blame them, though I have often urged such to join some professing Christian church, and avail themselves of the Divine ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

What is wanted for the revival of God's work in our church and chapel congregations is that the preaching should, as "W. R. L." says, be not only Evangelical but Evangelistic—not only sound in doctrine, but that it should be addressed to the congregation, occasionally at least, as to sinners needing salvation; not assuming that all present are converted Christians because they regularly attend public worship and conduct themselves outwardly as becomes professing Christians. That is how evangelists usually address their hearers, and pastors would do well if they also would thus "do the work of an evangelist" among their own congregations.

Thirty, forty, or fifty years ago there were many conversions in the town in which I reside; and for many years since the town has been rather distinguished for the number and the vigour of the auxiliaries to the great Evangelical societies in London, for the spreading of the Gospel of Christ in foreign lands and in the densely populated parishes at home. These auxiliaries were most of them established, and for many years were worked, principally by the members of one Church of England congregation, whose minister preached in the manner I have endeavoured to describe. He invariably, before concluding a sermon, whether to his morning or evening congregation, specially addressed those among them who had not consciously repented and turned to God, to do so without delay. He looked for conversions, and would not have been satisfied without seeing them. That minister has long gone to his reward, but the fruits of his ministry remain, some of his converts living active Christian lives in England, while not a few are preaching the Gospel of Christ at home and abroad. M. H. S.

Jan. 9.

[Other correspondents call attention to the hurtful influence of novel-reading, pointing out that this is encouraged to a sad degree by leaders in Christian thought. "J. M." complains that in many pulpits there is little or nothing of Christ in the preaching. "An Evangelical" maintains that parents do not take the same interest in the spiritual welfare of their children as they did thirty years ago. Moreover, the change which has in many quarters come over preaching, has resulted in secular topics being brought forward, and Scriptural sermons being placed in the background. With reference to the question of church attendance at Glasgow, "A Native" deplores the fact that many men are every week employed during Sunday in connection with the corporation tramcars. The number so employed is at least two thousand, and this must affect many homes and churches.—Ed.]

"SOLOMON'S PORCH."

Sir,—Will you kindly admit a correction of two mistakes in my recent letter on "Solomon's Porch"?

1. By some strange error (doubtless occasioned by my own manuscript), the length of "Solomon's Portico" is given as 220 feet. It should have been 620 feet—nearly a furlong, as Josephus clearly affirms.

2. Our Lord's Ascension is stated to have taken place "from a mountain in Galilee." Of course, this was a slip of the pen. It occurred at Bethany, on the other side of Olivet.—Yours faithfully,

Edward White.

THE CHELSEA PASTEUR INSTITUTE.

Sir,—The Institute of Preventive Medicine, popularly known as the Pasteur Institute*, at Chelsea, is almost completed. It has been opposed, step by step, by every available means, both on the ground of the nuisance it will cause in the neighbourhood and also because of the torture to animals likely to go on within its walls, if once it is licensed for vivisection.

A memorial to the Home Secretary, asking him to withhold a licence, if applied for, is being signed throughout London, so far as the power of opponents can cope with so enormous an undertaking in so short a time. Though "the Protest Committee" in London is working with unwearied energy and strength, and getting quite overtaxed, they are continually hampered with the need of spending time in asking for funds for the many expenses connected with such a widespread effort.

May I appeal to your readers to send us help? I will gladly forward to the hon. sec. in London anything that is sent to me, or it can be sent to the Treasurer, Mrs. Fowle, 109, Blenheim-crescent, W.—Yours faithfully, (Miss) S. S. Monro.

Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

UNDER date December 10, 1896, Miss Annie R. Taylor writes, after her return from a business visit to Calcutta:—

I arrived home safely and found all well. The way over the pass was covered with deep snow; one part was so slippery that the only way I could get on was by sitting and sliding down the mountain side. I always stay at native houses on the way, and thus have many opportunities of telling "the old old story."

I thought it best for Miss Ferguson to stay with me here until after the New Year, for we expect to have a number of Tibetans and Chinese at Christmas time, and it would not do for her and her teacher and servants to miss it, and they will be needed. After that she hopes to take up the work at Gnatong. She is a bright worker, and I do not think I could spare her now.

It is almost impossible to get any quiet or time for study here, but Miss Ferguson is getting on with the language, and then will settle down to her study when she returns to Gnatong, or stays here if I move the shop further up the valley, when it is opened up, which we expect it soon will be, for the Tibetan chiefs are quite willing. "Our God is able." We must expect Him to do great things for Tibet. Prayer and a little patience and faith in God will open the way right up to Lhassa. Our Father can do this without bloodshed.

I am looking forward to my sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Bethell, and my other sister Susette, paying me a visit early next year.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—The committee held a series of meetings in London on the last night of 1896. The localities selected were Westminster Bridge road, Regent-street, Piccadilly, Notting Hill, and King's Cross. The gathering at Notting Hill was deeply interesting. Some sixty laundry day hands were entertained to tea, and affectionately addressed afterwards. It is very difficult to say whether these young girls are fallen or preventive cases. Their lives are exposed to many and great temptations; their homes are not what they should be, and their parents in many cases unscrupulous as to what becomes of their daughters. Many were much impressed by the kind words to which they listened, and it is trusted that great good was done.

The Scripture Genealogies may have secondary interest with Western peoples; but to some races they have proved full of attraction, and, indeed, have been Divinely blessed. The late Dr. Wyatt Gill wrote on the South Sea Islanders:—"I never cared much for the genealogical portions until my own converts put me to shame by evincing an intimate acquaintance with them. In Polynesia, other things being equal, the chief, with the longest pedigree is most respected." Now Dr. Faries, of the Wei Hien Hospital, West Shantung, gives the following interesting incident from China: "In conversing with my preacher in the hospital, I found that he was convinced of the truth by reading Christ's genealogy in Luke—'who was the Son of God?' contrasting this with the Confucian genealogies."

* Dr. Farquharson, M.P., speaking in the House of Commons, is one of those who admitted the real object of the institute. He said; "The Institute of Preventive Medicine was a private enterprise in which the operations of Pasteur were to be carried out in this country."

THE LAME MAN HEALED.—Acts iii. 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 16.

VERSE I. "Peter and John"—probably the oldest and the youngest of the apostles. Associated before their conversion as partners in the same occupation; then as disciples of John the Baptist; and among the earliest disciples of Jesus. Different in character and temperament, yet close friends. The most opposite dispositions are drawn to Jesus, and are used by Him. "Into the temple," though the temple worship had become formal and corrupt, and was doomed soon to pass away. The two apostles had not ceased to be Jews; and though they had received the Holy Spirit they did not ignore the claims of public worship. "The ninth hour"—about three in the afternoon. Enforce the lesson—the importance of observing the time and place of public worship. Suspect any religious experience that leads to neglect of these.

Tell the story of the miracle and its effects. I. THE MIRACLE (2, 8). Travellers in the East tell of the large number of poor blind, diseased, crippled people they meet. "Palestine now, as then, seems fairly overrun with those afflicted by one form or another of bodily ailment." All we know of this man is that he was born lame; that he was so helpless that he needed to be carried; that he was poor, and that he must have become utterly helpless, for he was now "forty years of age" (iv. 22). In all these particulars, he becomes a picture of the spiritual condition of men.

He was by the Beautiful Gate of the temple. There is some uncertainty as to which of the ten gates is referred to. The generally-accepted opinion is that it was the bronze gate, which led from the court of the Gentiles into the court of the women. "The folds of this gate were seventy-five feet high and sixty broad, and were covered with plates of gold and silver."—Hackett. Here the lame man was laid; for it is from those who worship God that sympathy and help for the suffering can be expected. Hence, hospitals and similar institutions are found only in Christian countries. Christ needs the distressed and the distressed need Christ. In the measure in which we represent Him we shall seek to discover and relieve the needy.

The manner in which the miracle was performed makes evident the working of faith. There was first the intent look of Peter upon the lame man (4), then of the lame man upon Peter (5). Then, when expectation was awakened, the thought is turned from mere almsgiving, and the healing, strengthening word is spoken; but healing and strengthening are offered "in the name of Jesus of Nazareth," so bitterly hated by the rulers still (6). Will the lame man accept it from Him, and become his follower and disciple? See vv. 7, 8. Jesus gave through his apostles; but the man received, and proved that the soul as well as the body was saved by immediately giving praise to God.

Apply this to our method of receiving spiritual healing. What is necessary? The life-giving word from Him; and on our part the faith that receives. If we are still unhealed, is it because he has not sent his message, or because we have not accepted it?

II. THE EFFECT (9-16). First there was the great astonishment of the people. They looked at the once lame man, and saw in him the evidence of such a complete cure (9, 10). Then they looked at the two apostles, as though they had wrought the miracle by their own power (12). "Solomon's porch" (11) is described as a cloister which extended some six hundred feet along the eastern side of the temple court. It consisted of a double row of marble columns about 38 feet high, supporting a roof of cedar. Plumptre suggests that it received its name because it had been partly constructed with fragments of Solomon's temple. There the people assembled "greatly wondering."

Then Peter preached to them (12-16).—The theme of his sermon is Jesus: its aim is to bring home to the people their guilt in putting Him to death (13-15); and to convince them that death has not diminished his power (16). The healed man witnesses not only to the power of Jesus, but to the guilt of the people in crucifying Him. Therefore "repent" (19). The way is open for their return. The God, whose Son they have killed, is ready to receive them. The effect of the miracle just performed, notwithstanding the astonishment it has created, will leave them, not only unblessed, but more guilty and hopeless, if it does not lead them to repentance.

Pastors' College.—The free evening classes will be resumed on Tuesday, Jan. 19. All wishing to join are requested to write (enclosing stamped envelope) to the Secretary, Mr. G. Hall, Pastors' College, Temple-street, Newington, S.E.

Y.M.C.A.

BETWEEN 600 and 700 members and friends attended a New Year social gathering of the Bristol Association.

Under the will of the late Mr. John Jackson, of Dalton, the Wigton Association has become entitled to a legacy of £200.

Plans for extensive additions to the Pietermaritzburg Association building are under consideration. The alterations will cost £3000.

At the Northampton Association a welcome was recently given to eighty-eight new members, the result of a membership campaign.

An Association has recently been formed at Tunis, and is doing remarkably well under the guidance of Mr. A. Thebault, who is making a stay there for the benefit of his health. The address is 3, Rue de l'Alfa.

At a largely-attended social meeting of the Hawick Association on New Year's evening, Mr. Bell, Scottish travelling secretary, spoke impressively of the temptations of town life and the value of the Association as a place of refuge.

The public opening of the new premises of the Finsbury Park Association took place last Thursday evening. The new house is in an excellent situation and is admirably adapted to the work. The premises include a boarding-house.

The annual breakfast meeting on New Year's Day at the Liverpool Central Association, by invitation of the president, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., was a full and interesting gathering. The president and Canon Harrison gave the principal addresses.

The new year was inaugurated at Stafford Rooms Association with two special meetings for young men on Sunday and Monday, January 3 and 4. These were well attended and earnest addresses were given by Mr. W. R. Lane on Sunday, and Mr. Seagram on the following day. A goodly number of those present professed decision. During the present winter encouraging progress has been made in the work and much blessing has followed, particularly the personal efforts of the members.

Last Thursday night in the Central Hall, Nelson-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, a company of men and women living in the lodging-houses of the city were entertained to tea through the generosity of Alderman J. Baxter Ellis, the treat being arranged and carried out by the officials of the Lodging-House Mission Band in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The guests numbered close upon 400. Mr. Henry Armstrong presided, and short, appropriate addresses were given by the chairman, Alderman Ellis, and Mr. Clark.

Mr. T. A. Bailey, late of the Cork Association, has visited the principal centres of Y.M.C.A. work in Australia, and sends home an interesting account of his impressions. Mr. Bailey thus summarises his views of the work in Australia:—(1) There is a magnificent scope for Association enterprise in the several colonies. (2) The fields are white unto harvest, and doors are open on every hand. (3) The pressing and immediate need is at least one travelling representative and a closer organisation of the various Associations. He urges that the members of English Y.M.C.A.'s should join hands in sending out a travelling secretary to Australia and New Zealand.

The Christian Lifeboat Crew.—Ever since the formation of above crew the monthly musters have been held at Miss Child's Welcome Home, and have continued to be generally appreciated and much owned of God. The one held on Tuesday the 5th proved no exception in either way. The Fo'c's'le was indeed taxed to its utmost capacity, whilst the addresses given by Colonel McGregor, Count Bentinck, Capt. E. Smith, Rev. E. W. Matthews, Mr. W. Cuff, Miss Child, and others on the words of the text for the month, "I will," were very instructive and inspiriting. Much praise was offered for the success attending the work at the new Home in Barking-road, and friends were asked to continue in prayer for this greatly needed work.

The National Sunday School Convention, postponed from autumn last, will be held in Manchester during the last week of this month. Except the reception which the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress will tender to the delegates in the Town-hall, all the meetings will be held in the Central-hall, Oldham-street. Among the subjects to be discussed at the conferences will be "Sunday School Reform," opened by Professor Adeney; "Definite Religious Instruction," by Rev. J. E. Roberts; "The International Lesson," by Dr. S. G. Green; and "The Sunday-school Teacher's Attitude in Relation to Sacerdotalism." The latter will be the subject of speeches at the evening meeting, the speakers being Revs. Dr. Goodrich (who presides), J. T. Briscoe, and John Watson. There is also to be a conference on "Our Girls as Future Citizens," under the presidency of the Lady Mayoress.

Irish Notes.

THE fund for honouring the memory of the late Mrs. C. F. Alexander in Londonderry is making satisfactory progress, and now amounts to about £1000.

Rev. A. E. Johnston, of Allahabad, has been addressing meetings on behalf of the Dublin Fuh-Kien Mission in Edgworthstown, Kilglass, Keenagh, and Ardagh.

A Ministers' Union, including Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and Moravians, has been formed in Dublin under hopeful auspices.

The Very Rev. Mervyn Archdall, Dean of Cork, was, at a special Synod held at Limerick, elected Protestant Bishop of Killaloe, in succession to the late Rev. Dr. Wynne. The next highest number of votes was received by Rev. William Burroughs, Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, London.

Scottish Notes.

PROFESSOR W. G. Blaikie has resigned the chair of Apologetics in the F.C. New College, Edinburgh.

The Evangelistic Theology Lectures at New College, Edinburgh, are to be delivered this year by Mr. Alexander, of Dundee.

In view of a general mission in Edinburgh in February, Rev. R. Simpson, of the Free High Church, is giving a series of addresses at the weekly prayer-meeting on the Work of the Holy Spirit.

The first of a series of lectures in connection with the Protestant Truth Society was delivered last week in the Garthshore Hall, George-street, Edinburgh, by Rev. Dr. Hutchison, Bonnington, whose subject was "John Huss." The subsequent lectures will have reference to the spread of Protestant faith in this country.

At a recent meeting of the directors of the Protestant Institute of Scotland Rev. C. A. Salmond, of South Morningside Free Church, Edinburgh, was appointed lecturer for the next two years, in succession to Prof. Orr, D.D., who has held the lectureship for four sessions, and whose term of office expires in March.

Training College, Dunoon, N.B.

THIS College has recently become so crowded that steps are now becoming necessary to secure larger premises. The applications at present are numerous and a number of the students are lodged outside. A suitable building is being offered to the College.

The College is unsectarian, and a very large amount of preaching is being done by the students, who are being sent to places which have been neglected. The proposed new building will have ample accommodation for fifty students. Rev. Duncan Macgregor, Principal, will give information to any person who would like to help in the matter.

A Word to Ministers.—In a second article in the New York Independent on the Keswick Movement, a correspondent speaks of the value of it to ministers, and adds:—"Do not our ministers require something to be done for them? How many of us find our pleasures in the world and in worldly things! How many of us are slaves to an irritable temper, or an unguarded tongue, or a covetous heart, or a jealous spirit! A kindly disposed Christian gentleman, not given to detraction and evil-speaking, said of a certain pastor, prominent in his locality, that he was the most selfish man he had ever met. To think that it should be possible to lay such a charge at the door of an ambassador of Him who 'came not to be ministered unto, but to minister!' Is it any wonder that such as these have no spiritual power, and that the churches over which they preside are in a like state?"

The New Year's Meeting of the London City Missionaries was held at Exeter Hall, some 450 of the missionaries being present. Rev. H. E. Fox gave an address upon faithfulness in Christian life and work, taking Heb. iii. 5, 6, as the basis of his remarks. His earnest words were much appreciated by all present, and the season was one of spiritual refreshment. The missionaries' sphere of operation is the metropolis and its suburbs, and each missionary visits some 3000 persons annually. The total number of visits and calls paid during the past year was 3,584,023, of which 250,772 were to the sick and dying. Upwards of 5,000,000 tracts and 35,000 Testaments were distributed, and many thousands of meetings and Bible-classes held by the missionaries. During the day a copy of the Rev. Dr. Moule's "Commentary on the Romans" was presented to each of the missionaries—the gift of Sir George Williams.

Temperance Notes.

THE commander of a first-class cruiser has been tried before a court-martial, and dismissed his ship, for rendering himself unfit for duty by excessive drinking.

A committee, formed at Croydon to enforce the licensing laws, has sent a circular to the local publicans calling their attention to certain offences under these laws.

Mr. Wm. Livesey writes to us urging all the temperance reformers in Parliament to unite in the passing of a measure prohibiting the Sunday sale of intoxicants.

Another Jane Cakebread once more appeared at Marlborough-street. The magistrate, in sending her to gaol for a month, said it was of no use, but it would keep her away from drink.

The Manx House of Keys has rejected the Boarding-houses Bill, and the whole question of the reform of the licensing laws is to be thrashed out at the general election within a few weeks. Manx politics are largely bound up with the management of the hotels and boarding-houses in Douglas.

A Manchester police superintendent has been fined £10 for conspiring to prevent the prosecution of the keepers of disorderly public-houses, in which the superintendent was alleged to have been interested. He has also been compelled to leave the force, forfeiting also a pension of nearly £200 a year.

At an inquest held in St. Pancras it transpired that a child of three fell into the fire and was burned to death while the mother was out drinking. The mother, only twenty-four years old, had already lost four out of five children, was separated from her husband, and had squandered two homes for drink.

Automatic temperance has been established in Holywell-street. In an open-fronted shop the passer-by can, by dropping a penny into a machine, draw himself a cooling or hot temperance beverage, having the choice of a dozen kinds of drinks. The glass, after being used by the customer, is automatically washed.

Captain Nicholls, chief constable of Newcastle, has been making special inquiries as to the use of the "bottle and jug department" in public-houses, which is stated to afford facilities for secret female drinking. He has warned certain landlords in whose houses women were found drinking in the compartment supposed to be devoted to outdoor service.

The annual prayer and praise meeting of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission was held on Wednesday, and was addressed by Revs. Canon Keeling and Dinsdale T. Young. The former spoke on work, character, and the temper in which all Christian work should be done. The latter urged all present to take a definite stand on the drink question during 1897.

The medical officer informed the Eton Guardians that during the last twenty-two years he had refrained from ordering, except with the greatest moderation, alcoholic drinks. Beer, gin, rum, and whisky, had not been used at all for the sick, while brandy and wine had been supplied at a cost of only 8s. a year. The inmates were better in health, and much more contented than they were when strong drink was allowed.

Beer-drinkers may solve the Old Age Pension problem for themselves, according to Mr. E. Vaughan Jenkins, of Everglyn, Oxford, by the man who consumes a quart of ale daily abstaining for twelve years, and putting the money in the Post Office Savings Bank. He will then have, with compound interest, the sum of £111 8s. 10d., or if he saves for sixteen years £156 11s. 3d., to purchase a single or joint deferred annuity.

The Omaha Board of Education recently directed that boys in the public schools should be asked to sign of their own free will a pledge to abstain from the use of tobacco during their school days, with a proviso that they can be released from their pledge at any time on a personal request. The teachers report that the plan has worked well, very many of the boys have signed the pledge, and keeping it has come to be regarded as a matter of honour. Better scholarship, better morals, and more cleanly habits are said to be among the direct results of the movement.

On Wednesday evening, the 6th inst., at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the John Ploughman Gospel Temperance Society held its usual monthly meeting, when the place was full. Mr. Wm. Noble gave a lecture on J. B. Gough with much force and effect, his daughter, Miss Noble, giving some well-rendered solos at intervals, Mr. Noble himself also singing the "Roll Call" at the close. At the close of the meeting fifty-five pledges were taken, and a number of friends enrolled as members of the Society. The Society holds its meetings on the first Wednesday in each month, at eight o'clock, and has a good programme arranged for months ahead. Information may be had of Mr. A. W. Lovell, one of the hon. secretaries, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Merton Smith has had a successful mission with the Methodist Protestant Church at Paris, Ill. Many professed conversion during the meetings. Nearly all the converts were men.

Mr. Moody has now entered on an evangelistic campaign in Boston, U.S., which will extend over two months. Mr. Sankey will remain in New York for a time to assist in the work there.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins had excellent meetings at Leith last week, and commenced the closing week last Sabbath at Rev. Thos. Miller's Established Church, with a full house, and with blessing on the word.

Eaton, Northampton.—Miss Haddon, of Clipstone, has conducted a five days' mission in connection with the Baptist Church. It was a searching time, and has left its impress on the minds of believers, while several who were convicted went into the inquiry-room. Prayer is asked for the work of God here. John Field, Pastor.

Dr. L. W. Munhall lately closed two series of meetings in Philadelphia in different districts. In one district eleven churches united in the movement, and in the other eight. Thousands rose for prayers, and many professed decision. On the last day of the year Dr. Munhall began a series of meetings in Ottawa, Canada, going to Oakland, Cal. It is probable that he will remain on the Pacific coast until the warm weather.

Messrs. Stevenson and Bell recently concluded revival services at Danvers, Ill. The members of the churches were wonderfully led out to the abundant life of consecration and power in full surrender to the Lord. Men who were held fast by drink for years came and testified of their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour. A thorough work has been accomplished, leaving the churches, town, and community in a spiritual condition.

Partick.—A ten days' mission has been conducted by Rev. T. Armstrong, of Chapel-en-le-Frith, Derbyshire, in Rev. Sholto Douglas's Mission Church at Partick. The attendance has been all that could be desired, an especially gratifying feature being the large number of men. Christians have been edified and strengthened, and many of the unconverted have been led to decide for Christ. The power of the Holy Spirit has been manifested in a marked degree. Mr. Armstrong is an earnest, faithful preacher, eminently fitted for evangelistic work.

Personalia.

Dr. Theo. L. Cuyler celebrated his seventy-fifth anniversary on January 10.

Mrs. Reaney desires us to state that she is not now editor of the monthly periodical Mothers and Daughters.

Rev. Edward Clarke, of Spezia, has had a remarkable escape. He was run over in Glasgow, dragged under the horses' feet and under an omnibus. Happily, no bones were broken, but he is sadly shaken.

Rev. Krikor Behesnilian is still making progress in exciting sympathy on behalf of Armenia. It is his intention to visit Scotland in February. Any friends desiring to arrange meetings, should communicate with Rev. K. Behesnilian, care of Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C.

Mr. G. H. Lord, of Buckhurst Hill, Essex, is journeying to Egypt and the Holy Land, on January 20. He has given over 300 lectures, with costumes and Biblical allusions, since his last visit. He hopes to return on March 7. Arrangements for illustrated lectures should be made at once, as on his return new material will be added to these interesting lectures.

Miss M. A. Mayor, the long time friend and helper of Count Campello's work of Church Reform in Italy, is not dead, as was recently reported, but is in her usual health. She has been called upon to mourn the loss of her sister, Miss Elizabeth Mayor, whose death we mentioned in our issue of December 24 as that of Miss Mayor herself, a mistake into which, by obvious confusion, other religious papers also fell.

Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Caulfield, Melbourne, says in the December issue of The Missionary:—"I was cycling home about ten nights ago, when a gentleman's private carriage suddenly crossed to my side of the road as I was going down hill, and not wishing to be trampled under the horse's feet, I had to run on the foot-path and was hurled violently against a telegraph post, with the result that my right hand was badly hurt, my collar-bone splintered, and a general shock given to the system, involving compulsory rest and not a little pain! I cannot be too thankful, however, for escaping with my life."

Mrs. Rendel Harris, wife of Professor J. Rendel Harris, has returned to England after her visit to Armenia, and gives a graphic account of what she has witnessed in that distressed country. Mrs. Harris has been able to pursue valuable investigations on the spot, and to aid some of those who lost relatives in the awful massacre. As she and her husband are experienced travellers, they have been through various parts of Armenia where ordinary tourists would not have been permitted. They are convinced of the honesty and sincerity of the Armenians, who seemed unanimous in expecting aid from Great Britain sooner or later.

Obituary.

MR. JAMES GORDON OSWALD.

Many will hear with regret of the death of Mr. James Gordon Oswald, of San Remo, which took place on Sunday, Jan. 3. Residing alternately in Scotland, Ireland, and on the Riviera, Mr. Gordon Oswald had a large circle of friends, by whom he was highly esteemed as a Christian gentleman of high principle and great liberality. He took a deep interest in mission work at home and abroad; he maintained several workers in various fields, and helped many organisations. Of late he did much to promote the objects of the Scripture Gift Mission, in the circulation of Illustrated Gospels and other New Testament portions in several continental countries.

MR. J. B. MEAD, BROCKLEY.

Christian workers at home and abroad will hear with sorrow of the passing away of Mr. J. B. Mead of Brockley, aged sixty-three. As a member for many years of the firm of Peek, Frean, and Co., he was highly esteemed; but as a Christian worker of unremitting energy and princely generosity, he was greatly beloved. He held responsible offices in connection with the Baptist Church at Brockley and laboured in various ways in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, Building Fund, and other organisations and interests. Mr. Mead died at the beginning of last week after much suffering borne with signal resignation. We hope in an early issue to give a sketch of his life and work.

REV. J. O'NEILL, LUTON.

The death is announced, at the age of seventy-five, of Rev. James O'Neill, B.D., Rural Dean, for thirty-four years vicar of Luton, Beds. Remarkable as a preacher, he was widely known for his efforts in church and school building. A writer in The Record says: "Altogether he raised a sum of not far short of £100,000 for church and school building. Future generations will thankfully recall his memory, not only for providing buildings in which they may worship, but also for securing, as far as human foresight can provide, a continuity of that teaching of which he himself was so eloquent, faithful, and consistent an exponent. The patronage of the Parish Church he transferred to the Peache Trustees; that of St. Matthew's (High Town) was placed in the hands of the Church Patronage Society; and the last, St. Paul's, which was consecrated in 1893, is also entrusted to the Peache Trustees. But while his hands were so full with material work, the spiritual work was by no means neglected—a marked and most successful feature of which was the Bible-classes both for men and for women; while a numerous band of Sunday-school teachers and district visitors loyally and efficiently helped in their respective spheres to make the power of Evangelical truth felt in every part of the parish."

Southwark and Lambeth Mission.—A very interesting meeting was held in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on New Year's Day, on the occasion of Mr Benson, the evangelist, completing twenty-one years at Christ Church and Surrey Chapel. Rev. F B. Meyer presided. The workers in the Mission presented him with a beautiful writing desk.

THE BOOK WORLD.

A HISTORY OF THE BAPTISTS.

EVERY chapter of ecclesiastical history has its own peculiar interest; and in more than one instance the denominational chapters are recitals of conscientious conflict, carried on in the true spirit of martyrdom, and not without its distinguishing glory. Our Baptist friends have a worthy record, by no means confined to asserting a right to view in a particular light the ordinance of Baptism; and such outlines of their history as are at present available are not without the elements of remarkable devotion and heroism. The latest statement of Baptist history is in French—a book of 630 large pages, entitled HISTOIRE DES BAPTISTES, depuis les temps apostoliques jusqu' à nos jours. It is by the late C. A. Ramseyer, a pastor of much erudition and a considerable measure of theological enthusiasm. The ground covered by the book is indicated by the headings of the three periods into which the history is divided: (1) The Primitive Churches and the Catholicism of the First Centuries, from 30 A.D. to the Accession of the Papacy in 606; (2) The Middle Ages, from the Accession of the Papacy in 606 to the Reformation in 1517; (3) From 1517 to Our Own Times. This last section is by far the fullest, many countries being included in the survey, and much curious information being brought together. The work is largely founded upon Dr. Cramp's English book on the same subject; but in dealing with Early Church life, and the sixteenth century (with its Anabaptist fanaticism), the author prosecutes investigations on his own account, and makes independent contributions of solid worth to the history of his denomination. The pages tell the story of victories and defeats in the protest against sacerdotalism and contention for a spiritual Christian society. They will be good reading for the general student, as well as claim the special attention of such as trace the paths of Church history with reference to the views and teachings for which great men have lived and died. A cordial preface is supplied by M. R. Saillens, the well-known evangelist and pastor. (6 francs. Paris: Grassart, 2 Rue de la Paix; Neuchatel: Ed. Revel, Pasteur.)

DARWINISM CRITICISED.

God, or Natural Selection? by William Miller, is an unpretentious book, described on the title page as "A Summary of the Opinions Opposed to Darwin's Theory of Evolution by Natural Selection, held by Professors Agassiz, Dawson, Dana, Carpenter, Nicholson, Mivart, etc., Lord Kelvin, and the Duke of Argyll." A large part of the volume appeared in our monthly contemporary, The King's Own. We welcome the criticism in its present handy form, and wish for it a useful ministry in settling the minds of those who have been distressed by Evolutionist theories. The weak points of Darwinism have been recognised by followers of the great naturalist; and it has on all hands been allowed that Evolutionist teaching starts with assumptions that are at least debateable, and rests upon deductions that are by no means universally accepted. The book before us opens by showing that the theory is pillared on conjecture, and in the eighteen chapters that follow Darwin is put to confusion by his own admissions, and answered on many points by philosophers and men of acknowledged authority in the world of science. The disciple who is more positive than his master may boast that all the learned follow Darwin; this book will comfort the unlearned by refuting the erroneous statement. Assuredly it shows that the facts with which Evolution doctrine deals are capable of another treatment, and that Evolution logic is remarkably tricky. With Rev. John Urquhart, who writes the preface, we believe that Darwinism has passed its apogee; "the day of fervent belief is over, and the age of criticism has begun." An appendix of extracts from many works of authority renders this a handbook calculated to cause searchings of heart to those who have hastily adopted Evolutionist views through the influence of great names. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

Another anti-Darwinist work of distinct value is The Clue to the Ages, Part I., by Ernest Judson Page. (7s. 6d. Baptist Tract and Book Society.) Since the Evolution hypothesis has been so boldly applied to the problems of the higher reaches of life, the author has been led to reject it absolutely; and in these pages he propounds an alternative theory, which furnishes the sub-title to his book—"Creation by Principle." While not by any means disposed to follow Mr. Page in his treatment of Creation by Special Act, and in some of his constructive arguments, we have found several of the chapters at once refreshing in criticism and useful in the elucidation of great truths. Our author goes from the physical to the mental, and thence to the moral, and justly rebukes men of renown for confusing issues that are different and distinct. With great cogency he shows that the Evolution hypothesis has shifted the centre of things from the Creator to matter. He says: "With the damping down of vital, inward religion, all the moral bonds of life are loosened. When morality itself is explained in terms of mental states, and mental in terms of material conditions, all force is taken out of moral appeals. Armenia cries in vain. The whole life of man is lived in the shallows. The consciousness of depth, and the reverence it brings into life, depart. The superficial, the light, the gay, obtain the mastery, and deep, vital questions are judged, not by abiding moral considerations, but by lighter matters of momentary expediency and craft. It would be idle to deny that the trend of much in life has been in this direction in recent years. And thus, as wrought out in actual life, with its pressing problems and needs, Evolution has brought us at length to such a time of strife and confusion and doubt as has not been witnessed for generations past. Judged by its fruit, it is everywhere proving itself a rotten tree." Instead of Evolution Mr. Page gives us Creation by Principle; he accepts development, but holds that in all its lines it begins with principles, or laws, Divinely implanted and energised. On many grounds he discredits Natural Selection, and is never stronger than when he applies, first the theory he combats, and then the view he advocates, to the explanation of social, moral, and spiritual phenomena. For us Creation by Special Act, which so terrifies some, is neither unreasonable nor improbable. Those who, giving up the Scriptural view, have sought mental relief in Evolution, will have to reckon with the author of this very readable book.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Jewish Missionary Intelligence. (3s.) The new volume, containing last year's parts, is a budget of deeply interesting matter, In addition to records of work by agents of the London Jews Society, there are valuable articles on the Covenant People and the Land of Promise. Friends of Israel should not overlook this illustrated magazine. The Jewish Missionary Advocate (1s. 6d.) is a companion periodical, designed to instruct and encourage young supporters of the work. (Nisbet & Co.)

The Morning Star. Vol. for 1896. This "Herald of the Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ," edited by Dr. R. McKilliam, is a mine from which students of Holy Writ will draw many gems of teaching. The expositions of prophecy, whether regarding the Church of God, the Jewish people, or the Gentile world, cover a wide range of interest and instruction. The items respecting the Holy Land are numerous, and account is rendered of many prophetical conferences, the influence of which is certainly a remarkable sign of our times. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. J. Haddon & Co.)

The Gardening Year Book and Oracle (1s. 4, Ave Maria-lane, E.C.) is a perfect storehouse of information and helpful hints for amateurs.

The Story of our Railways. By W. J. Gordon. (Religious Tract Society.) A popular and succinct account of the marvellous strides in railway locomotion since the days of George Stephenson.

The Voice of the People. By Rev. Francis Bourdillon. (Religious Tract Society.) Twenty brief, but admirable, homilies on popular proverbs. Really capital for reading at a P.S.A. or a mothers' meeting.

Abraham Lincoln. By W. G. Rutherford. (Sunday School Union.) The great American President is here sympathetically sketched as ploughboy, statesman, and patriot. Lincoln's story is one of undying interest to youth.

The Cross in the Land of the Trident. By Harlan P. Beach. (Religious Tract Society.) A manual of missionary progress in India, designed chiefly for the use of student volunteers. It gives much valuable information.

The Subject Testament. By William Foster. (1s. 4d. Partridge & Co.) This is a new and enlarged edition of a little work very useful to the Bible student. Under the heads of historical, doctrinal, practical, and prophetical, all the topics embraced in the New Testament are classified and arranged for easy reference.

The World Beautiful. By Lilian Whiting. (3s. 6d. Gay & Bird.) These ably written and inspiring chapters deal with the philosophy of the ideal daily life viewed from the Christian standpoint. The thoughts expressed are full of freshness and suggestion. It is a very high standard that is set before the reader, but all sustained endeavour to reach it must bring with it a rich reward.

My Long Life. By Mary Cowden Clarke. (7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) These recollections of contemporary musicians, littérateurs, and dramatists, by a gifted writer, now almost a nonagenarian, make very entertaining reading. There is a quaintness in the literary style that one does not find in the younger writers of the day.

In the House of the Pilgrimage. By H. C. G. Moule, D.D. (2s. 6d. Seeley & Co.). The thought in these hymns and sacred songs is at once devout and lofty, the product of a mind as gifted as it is reverent. The verbal dress is choice and expressive, while the rhythm is musical. Christian pilgrims may here feed their faith, and quicken their expectation.

Thomas Chalmers. By Professor W. G. Blaikie. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) A most welcome addition to the "Famous Scots" series. Professor Blaikie writes from full knowledge of his subject and adequate appreciation of the prominent place he filled in the history of the Disruption. Those who have not mastered the larger biography by the late Dr. Hanna may be commended to a perusal of this excellent sketch.

The Jewish Story; A Course of Sermons Preached in St. John's Church, Paddington, W. (6d. London Jews' Society, 16, Lincoln Inn-Fields, W.C.) Here are discourses by Archdeacon Sinclair, Canon Girdlestone, and Revs. S. L. Dixon, J. Seaver, C. H. Banning, and W. Ayerst. They embody a large amount of information concerning Israel, from the days of Abraham to the present time, and take due account of the prophecies regarding blessings still in store for God's ancient people.

Nonconformity in Worcester. By Rev. Wm. Urwick, (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) All who are interested in the evolution of English religious history, and the growth of Free Church principles, will regard this well-written and well-illustrated work as of more than local interest. Prominence is given to the labours and testimony of the two martyr bishops of Worcester, Latimer and Hooper. There is an introductory sketch of the life of the late Mr. Thomas Rowley Hill, at whose suggestion this chapter of modern church history was written.

Fors Clavigera. By John Ruskin. Vol. 4. (6s. George Allen, 156, Charing Cross-road.) This is the fourth and concluding volume of letters to British workmen and labourers by the artist-philosopher of Coniston. The discriminating reader will find in them much beautiful, elevating, and stimulating thought on life and conduct. We must confess our preference for the second series of twelve letters (Nos. lxxxv. to xcvi.). As Mr. Ruskin admits, they are less desultory than those of the preceding seven years; they are certainly more digestible to the average reader. The illustrations, by Miss Greenaway, are peculiarly delicate and graceful. The complete series of letters will long take high rank among the best English classics.

Thimm's Self-taught Library is a series of linguistic handbooks on a system well adapted for school use or self-tuition. In addition to vocabularies and dialogues, there is throughout each book an indication of pronunciation by a method at once simple and clear. After receiving help in pronunciation (which in Oriental languages also means transliteration) throughout an entire book, one is able to proceed with confidence in the use of grammars and more advanced works. The Thimm system includes manuals in French, German, Italian, Spanish (1s. each), and Norwegian, Arabic, and Turkish (2s. each). Being convenient in form, and conceived on a reasonable and practical plan, these books should find ready acceptance among young people and students generally. (E. Marlborough & Co.)

Men Who Win; Women Who Win. By W. M. Thayer. (3s. 6d. each. Nelson & Sons.) These two exquisitely bound and printed volumes are in all respects worthy of praise. The subjects of Mr. Thayer's biographical skill are drawn impartially from the roll call of British and American nobility—not of the technical and heraldic sort, but of the real God-elected and God-endowed human aristocracy. Among the men are Spurgeon, Bright, Whittier, Livingstone, Budgett, etc., not to speak of Americans less familiar to us. In the women's gallery are Harriet Beecher Stowe, Florence Nightingale, Mary Lyon, Jenny Lind, Queen Victoria, Frances Willard, Elizabeth Fry, and others equally true to their appointed life-service. The sketches are brightly written and there are excellent portraits of all. No better prize books could be imagined for thoughtful boys and girls.

ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION. By the late Rev. W. Cooke, D.D. This pamphlet reproduces in a convenient form a section of Dr. Cooke's well-known work, entitled "Christian Theology." In doctrinal statement the author is loyal to Scripture; in style he is gracious and vigorous. (3d. George Burroughs, 30, Furnival-street, E.C.)

FINE COPPER OR CANKERED GOLD. By Emily P. Leakey. (Townsend, 2, Stonecutter-street, E.C. 1d.) A booklet intended to quicken interest and arouse enthusiasm in the three years' enterprise of the C.M.S.—a forward movement in the last three years of the century. This little book ought to touch many hearts in the matter of giving.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The vicar of St. Luke's, Deptford, holds a monthly service for men only.

Mr. Hooley, the millionaire, has presented another gold communion service, this time to Risley Church, Notts.

Canon Eliot, vicar of Holy Trinity, Bournemouth, still continues seriously ill, though there has been a slight improvement.

Dr. Carr Glyn, bishop-designate of Peterborough, has been presented with a service of plate by his old parishioners in Kensington.

Prebendary Deane, of Ferring, Sussex, has been appointed to the residentiary canonry of Chichester, rendered vacant by the death of Bishop Tufnell.

A new labour home for men has been opened by the Church Army in Kennington-road, and others will be opened as soon as the funds in hand justify it.

The long contention respecting the rector's rate at Falmouth has at length been settled by the payment of the sum of £6000 by Mr. F. J. Horniman, M.P., of Forest Hill.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe's son, Rev. R. M. Webb-Peploe, is labouring at Sheep Creek, Alberta, Canada, far removed from other labourers, and ministering to the people of his district irrespective of denomination.

Amongst the pitiful illustrations of the inequalities of clerical emoluments, the vicar of Kinson, Dorset, publishes figures to show that after meeting expenditure his income amounted during the past five years to £4 5s. 4d. a year. He lets the vicarage, and lives rent free in another house.

Congregational.

Rev. Ira Boseley has entered on the pastorate at Russell-street, Dover.

At Luton twenty-five new members were admitted on Sunday week.

Rev. F. H. Blanchford, of Park Church, Halifax, has recovered from a severe illness.

A two days' mission has been conducted at Brookfield Church, Glossop, by Dr. Newman Hall.

Rev. Thomas Arnold, who has reached his eighty-first year, is seriously ill at his residence in Northampton.

Twenty new members were welcomed at Markham-square, S.W., at the first communion service of the New Year.

Rev. Robert T. Verrall has completed twenty-one years' service as secretary of the Pastors' Retiring Fund, which since his appointment has doubled its income.

At Centenary Chapel, Lancaster, twenty-seven new members were admitted into fellowship on the first Sunday of the year, making the total of the membership 408.

Rev. W. Emlyn Jones, who has accepted the pastorate of High Barnet Church, and commences his ministry there on the 24th inst., has preached his farewell sermons at Swan Hill, Shrewsbury.

Square Church, Halifax, reports 512 members, twenty having been added during the year. Stannary Church, in the same town, reports the admission of thirty members during the year, the total membership being 491.

The morning service on Sunday at the Hampstead Congregational Church took the form of a farewell to Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, a member of the church, who, with Mr. W. Crosfield, of Liverpool, shortly leaves on a visitation of the London missionary stations in the South Seas.

The "forward movement" which the Colonial Missionary Society initiated last year in the Transvaal has been more than vindicated by the reports which were presented last week at a meeting of the directors, over which Mr. W. M. Hitchcock presided. No less than six sites have been secured in various parts of the Rand, in addition to Braamfontein, which has a population of 10,000, without a single place of worship. Rev. Henry Newell has been appointed to the charge. In another district Rev. W. H. Aspden has offered to erect a new church at his own cost. The work among the natives under Rev. Charles Phillips, formerly of St. Helens, is making remarkable progress, and a large new church, which will be the centre of the work, will be opened in a few weeks. At Ophirton a new church has been opened by Rev. W. M. Richardson.

Calls.—Mr. J. Rhys Price, to Saron, Rhydyfro, Swansea; Mr. John Brownhill, to Chedworth; Rev. B. W. Jackson, of Bristol, to Providence Chapel, Rochdale (accepted); Rev. J. C. Nesbitt, formerly of Leicester, to Ripon; Mr. A. T. Hocking, to Whitefield Memorial; Mr. A. H. Boyden, of Lancashire College, assistant to West End, Southport (accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. W. H. Whitbread, of Buntingford; Rev. W. P. Hogben, of Glastonbury.

Baptist.

Bromley Church reports a net increase during the year of thirty members.

Rev. W. Llewellyn Williams has closed his ministry at Zion Chapel, Bolton.

Golcar Chapel reports 338 members; forty-two have been admitted during the year.

Rev. D. E. Hughes has been recognised as pastor at Horeb Chapel, Blaenavon.

Cemetery-road Church, Sheffield, reports fifty-one new members added during the past year.

The Baptists of South Australia lament the death of Mr. G. S. Fowler, for over thirty years a prominent leader and liberal contributor.

Rev. Carey Nuttall, who resigned the pastorate at Morecambe a few months ago, on account of ill-health, has arrived safely at the Cape, where he is staying with his father, Rev. Levi Nuttall.

The formal presentation of the portrait of Rev. Dr. McLaren to the Manchester Corporation will be made on Friday next at the City Art Gallery. The Bishop of Manchester is expected to take part in the proceedings.

The Welsh Baptist "Year-Book" for 1897 gives the total number of members as 105,423, showing an increase of 2457 over the previous year, owing, it is said, to the fact that the statistics are more complete. The number of Sunday scholars is 114,296.

A devotional meeting was held on Tuesday week at the Mission House in connection with the London Baptist Association. Rev. Charles Brown, speaking on the needs of London, urged that these needs would best be met by an improved ministry and more spiritual Church life rather than special machinery.

The library of the Mission House was thronged at the New Year's Day prayer-meeting. Representatives from various societies were present. Rev. Samuel Vincent speaking on the expression in the account of the Transfiguration: "And as He prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered," dwelt upon the changed aspect of mission work as to its difficulties and discouragements when brought by prayer into the Divine presence. During his observations upon the need of a larger number of missionaries, he remarked that the society had never been known to decline an offer of service from any qualified candidate.

Calls.—Rev. D. M. Davies, of Colwyn Bay, to Shrewsbury; Rev. J. Wilkinson, to Andover; Principal A. U. G. Bury, to Brannockstown.

Resignations.—Rev. R. Heyworth, of Edgeside, Waterfoot; Rev. K. Burbridge, of Avenue Chapel, Camden Town; Rev. John Haslam, of Gildersome.

Methodist.

A new chapel is about to be built in Albany-road, Cardiff.

A new chapel and school are to be erected at Mount Sorrell, Loughborough.

The Great Queen-street, London, Centenary Scheme bids fair to be successful. Towards the £3500 which it is proposed to raise this year, £2000 is already in sight.

On Sunday, January 31, a simultaneous mission will begin in the thirteen Wesleyan chapels belonging to the eight Bradford circuits, and continue for about a fortnight.

Rev. Isaac Shimmin, the well-known pioneer missionary in Mashonaland, has had leave of absence to return to England in order to marry a daughter of Mr. T. Morgan Harvey.

Mr. J. Ward Ambler, who was invited to assist Rev. D. Murley, President Bible Christian Church, has decided to remain in his present sphere of labour, viz., Bessbrook Mission to Sandwichmen.

The Wesleyan Missionary Society has accepted the offer of the Wesley deaconesses to send out one of their number to work at Jaffna, Ceylon, the necessary expenses being met of passage and outfit by the society.

Mr. Horace B. Marshall, the publisher of the Methodist Times, has again given his publishing profits to the Worn-out Ministers' Fund. The amount for 1896 is £310, making a total of £3170 so given since the paper was first issued in 1885.

The reports from the Wesleyan circuits do not indicate any considerable increase in membership. In about five or six weeks the annual census will commence, and in the opinion of experts the increase, if any, will be small.

Presbyterian.

The South London Presbytery is about to hold a conference on pastoral visitation.

An anonymous donor has sent £500 to the Church Building Fund. Nearly £27,000 has already been contributed.

Dr. Pentecost has, according to an intimation he makes in "Personal Notes" of his church magazine, decided to accept the call to Yonkers, New York.

Three months' leave of absence was granted to Rev. W. D. Wright, of Kingston, to enable him to take a voyage for the benefit of his health.

The Tooting congregation, which some time since removed to a new temporary church, has closed a successful year, 105 members having been added.

Rev. J. G. Train reports that £150 has been received from congregations as thankofferings contributed during the week of prayer for foreign missions.

The foundation-stones of new mission premises in connection with Blackett-street, Newcastle, were laid last week by the Mayor and Mr. John Cross.

At the great Presbyterian Jubilee Missionary Meeting, to be held on May 14, in the Queen's Hall, the chair will be taken by Lord Reay, ex-Governor of Bombay. Dr. Joseph Parker will be among the speakers.

Calls.—Rev. Robert Stewart, of Gateshead, to Benwell, Newcastle (accepted); Rev. G. Buchanan, of Falkirk, to Midmar; Rev. G. R. Atkinson, of Edinburgh, to Largs; Rev. H. A. Mathers, LL.D., of Edinburgh, to Roxburgh; Rev. W. J. M'Cauglan, of Mount Pottinger, to St. Andrew's, Toronto.

Society of Friends.

Isaac Sharp, the veteran missionary, now over ninety years old, gave the friends who met him at Devonshire House, on the 28th ult., a thrilling narrative of his travels and doings. He is a consistent total abstainer.

The official report of the Darlington Conference is out, and can be had at various prices from Headley Brothers, Bishopsgate-street Without. It is well got up, and will be a permanent record of an epoch-making convention.

Bristol and Somerset Quarterly Meeting has lost one of its best and noblest members by the decease of Francis James Thompson, of Bridgwater, at the age of eighty-three years. His consistent advocacy of the temperance cause for sixty years, his earnest Christian character, and his sterling honesty and boldness for truth made him a power for good. He had passed the mayoral chair of his native town, and was a minister of the Gospel for many years past.

At London and Middlesex quarterly meeting, held last week, Henry E. Clark, late of Madagascar, gave an able and clear exposition of the position of our missionaries and property in that island. His tone was hopeful, and he aimed at inspiring hope among Friends. Yet at an interview H. S. Newman and Theodore Burtt had on New Year's Day, in Paris, with M. Krüger, the Protestant missionary, his tone was very depressing, and he feared for Protestantism amid Jesuit influences there. Our hope is that "the Lord reigneth."

Fallen Asleep.

At Warley, Miss Coates, who for fifty-five years had been a faithful worker in the Sunday-school.—At Derby, Mr. Charles Hanson, for forty years an earnest Christian and worker among the Free Methodists.—At Manchester, Mr. E. Howard Dawson, a successful architect and a philanthropic worker and giver.—At St. Ives, Mr. Cornelius Robinson, formerly an active and useful worker, but in recent years laid aside by illness and blindness.—At Neath, Mr. J. L. Matthews, for many years a leading Christian helper in the town.—At Latchford, Warrington, Rev. Charles Andrew, at the age of thirty. He was trained at Hulme Cliffe College, and upon leaving there proceeded to Iowa, America, where he took up the pastorate at Spirit Lake. His health failed, and, returning to England, he accepted the pastorate at Latchford, where he had been for eighteen months.—At Coventry, Mr. John Knight, aged fifty-eight, a devoted preacher for thirty-four years.—At Cardiff, Mr. J. T. Hutchins, an active worker.—At Lerwick, Mr. A. J. Hay, a noble helper in good work.—At Sheffield, Mr. Joseph Moxon, for fifty-seven years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Liversedge, Mr. W. B. Birkby, for many years Sunday-school superintendent.—At Brecon, Prebendary H. Williams, of St. David's Cathedral. At Otterton, on 3rd inst., Rev. J. B. Sweet, aged seventy-eight, vicar of the parish.—At Dublin, Mrs. Wright, in her eighty-seventh year, an earnest and happy Christian.—At Limerick, Rev. Thos. Vereker, Precentor of Killaloe Cathedral, aged sixty-nine years.—At Blackrock, Dublin, Rev. Jas. Smith, curate of Booterstown.—At Wexford, Thos. H. Rowe, a humble believer in Jesus Christ, aged eighty-eight years.—At Mount Dillon, Dublin, Mrs. Jones, widow of the Rev. J. Jones, Methodist minister.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, January 11, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MANY readers will welcome the first instalment of the Editor's correspondence from North Africa, which appears in this issue.

At the New Year's meeting of the London Baptist Association one of the ministers spoke warmly of the need for a true and widespread revival of vital spiritual life at the present time. Not so much are increase of special machinery or methods of working required as an improved ministry and more thoroughly spiritual church life. The editor of the Mission Record of the Church of Scotland writes in similar strain. Referring to the various schemes to be prosecuted during the year with a view to the reform of the internal life and work of the Church, he says :—

A revival of spiritual life is the surest means of bringing all such efforts to successful completion; without this church reform is nothing but the galvanising of a lifeless corpse. In a revival of spiritual life, too, lies the hope of the church taking her rightful part in the evangelisation of the world. So long as congregations are little better than social clubs, selfishly ministering to their own comfort, and regarding only the outward decencies of religion, how can they take part in ministering to the redemption of mankind, which is the main reason of the church's existence? Let there be much prayer at the commencement of another year for such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit as shall flood all the channels of our church life at home, and overflow with mighty and expanding energy into our Jewish and foreign mission fields abroad.

Other churches may well ponder words like these carefully and prayerfully, and respond heartily to the exhortation to prayer and effort for the refreshing and strengthening of the secret springs of life.

We counsel our readers to get and read without delay the volume published last week by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton : ARMENIA AND EUROPE, by Dr. Lepsius, of Berlin. In this terrible book they will find some part at any rate of "The Truth about Armenia." For all of us who are citizens of the British Empire, and therefore ultimately responsible for our national action, the fearful facts here set forth carry with them an accusation which we shall find it very difficult to answer. The author of this book asserts that the European Powers by the very nature of their action and interposition are directly responsible for all the massacres of the last two years.

Dr. Lepsius contends that the Powers have done either too much or too little. He says :—

What were the Armenian massacres? An administrative measure of the Sublime Porte, whose one motive and object was to make the reforms enforced by the Great Powers finally impracticable by the annihilation of the Armenian people. . . . Had the Powers left Armenia alone, the Armenians would be to-day, not indeed a happy people, but not the most unhappy people on the face of the earth. The fault is not that the European diplomatists took up the cause of a poor down-trodden people, but rather that they did so in such a way that this people are obliged to pay for this policy by their blood.

What our rulers may have to say for themselves when Parliament meets we know not; but if the House of Commons, irrespective of party, does not demand such effective action as is now possible, then we can only express our opinion that it will have incurred the scorn and indignation of every humane heart.

The extent and severity of the Indian famine are greater than had hitherto been made public. Lord George Hamilton, in his speech at the Mansion House on Saturday, said that the area affected by "famine," implying insufficient food to sustain life, comprised 164,000 square miles, and a population of 36,000,000; and the area affected by "scarcity," implying insufficient food to maintain health, contained a population of 44,000,000, and an area of 121,000 square miles. The appeal made is to further the aid already being given by the Government, the number of people so far helped being nearly a million and a-half.

These facts reveal a calamity of an appalling character, which appeals to all the sympathy and pitiful instincts of a Christian people. The famine fund at the Mansion House will probably amount to £100,000 by the time these lines are being read. This is an excellent result in the short time that has elapsed since it was started; but it is a mere trifle compared with the amount required to save millions from a dreadful death. The churches are being asked to take part in this work of philanthropy. If the appeal is worthily responded to, it will be a most effective means of winning the hearts of the innumerable sufferers, and of opening a door in their sympathies through which the Gospel may have free course when presented to them by the messengers of the Gospel. In this method we shall be but following the example of the Lord Jesus, who made physical benefits a preliminary to spiritual blessings.

The almost universal satisfaction and gratitude with which the Treaty of Arbitration between this country and the United States has been received is, in one sense, better than the Treaty itself. It shows that the action of the two Governments is broad-based on the good feeling of the two nations, and hence the guarantee for its permanence and efficiency. True, the Treaty is not yet ratified by the United States Senate, and it is said that some members of that House are opposed to it because President Cleveland approves of it; but party passion and personal feeling must have their limits. To the God of all grace be the praise for what He has wrought.

Continental sentiment has also been deeply impressed by the event, and many leading statesmen have expressed their hope that before this century is out other such treaties will be signed. Signor Crispi states it as his conviction that even now such an understanding might be arrived at between Italy and England, Switzerland and Austria. Lord Salisbury deserves the gratitude of the nation for the signal ability and good temper with which he has piloted the measure into form and acceptance; still more do these pioneers of the peace movement, who have raised it from the condition of being denounced as a "fad" into a grand movement, which has at last found a place in international law.

Her Majesty the Queen has evidently inspired the Prince of Wales to say that any commemoration of her long reign might rightly take the form of increasing the efficiency of existing charitable institutions or calling new ones into existence where they are needed. Should this suggestion be acted upon, as it probably will be, local zeal and activity will be evoked in every parish, and an amount of good done which will bless generations unborn. Woman's work is essentially that of kindness, and it would be most fitting that this remarkable year should be known for ever in our history as "The Year of Kindness."

Whatever differences may exist in the temperance party, there is unity on the subject of a sober Sunday; and it is therefore to be hoped that in the Session of Parliament now opened the whole weight of temperance influence will be concentrated on securing a Sunday Closing Act. More, we believe, will be done by carrying point after point, than by attempting to enact some heroic measure; and the present House of Commons is certainly more likely to give a small instalment, if it gives anything, than to do anything sweeping. "The line of least resistance" is the Sunday closing, according to the Prime Minister, who has said, "Undoubtedly public opinion on this question is so powerful that there is not sufficient force in either House to resist it long." These words almost invite pressure and promise success.

Someone assuming the title of "Solomon II." has written a short paper on "Health of the Nation," which is remarkable for two things—its assurance and its ignorance. One sentence will be enough :—

The people who got the C.D. Acts suspended are worse than murderers, as they have not only killed many but have diseased thousands for generations to come.

We recommend "Solomon II." to read the evidence on the subject. The testimony of the Army Sanitary Commission in 1883 (Parliamentary paper No. 200) was this :

The C. D. Acts have failed in India to protect the health of the people from venereal diseases. There are no facts on which the continuance of the present measures can be maintained.

And again, in 1895, after the Acts had been repealed, the same Commission (Par. paper No. 318), after referring to the clamour of the "Solomons" for a re-enactment of the Acts, said—

The reinstitution of the compulsory lock hospital in India cannot be advocated on sanitary grounds.

They further support their decision by remarking that the health of the Army at home has been better since the Acts were repealed. "Solomon II." and all others who really wish to be informed should read "The History of a Sanitary Failure," by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P. (British, Continental and General Federation, 1, King-street, Westminster. 1d.).

It is a pity that the interruption of what ought to be a solemn religious service should be the only way in which the present undesirable method of electing a bishop is to be protested against publicly. The minds of Churchmen are being deeply stirred by the insincerity which professes to seek Divine guidance for an act that has already been settled by the Queen and her Prime Minister. Two of the bishops have expressed their anxiety for a way out of what is becoming a public scandal that must greatly injure the Church of England, and still more the cause of religion in the country. Before the election of the new Bishop of St. David's, is there no way of doing something to remedy the evil?

The results of the French annexation of Madagascar, according to Rev. F. A. Gregory, who has lived in the country during the recent troubles, and gives an account of them in The Nineteenth Century, have so far been very disappointing. Many of the converts trusted by the missionaries have shown the idolater beneath the professing Christian, the others have stood the test nobly. Slavery has been abolished, but the summary manner of its suppression has entailed much needless suffering both on owners and slaves. The country has been infested by bands of robbers, who have burnt hundreds of churches, killed multitudes of Christians and several missionaries, and a few white settlers. The work of thirty years has been undone in a few months, and has to be restarted from the foundation. With all these depressing facts, Mr. Gregory still thinks the coming of the French will be for the ultimate benefit of the people, both politically and religiously.

Rev. S. L. Gulick, of the American Board of Missions, who is on a visit to this country, is of opinion that Christian work in Japan, where he has been labouring, is much more hopeful than some seem to think. The majority of the Japanese Christians are Evangelical, late doctrinal troubles and the innovation of "new ideas" from America and Europe having failed to shake their faith. He thinks that it was, on the whole, better that these new influences came early than late in the history of the young church. Besides, when new theories are introduced, it is always supposed that they have found larger acceptance than is really the case, because everyone is talking about them. Christians in the West who have done so much to spread the Gospel may be reassured in the presence of opposition of any kind, because there always has been opposition, and yet the Gospel is still the power of God. (See p. 11.)

An attempt to convert Protestant Dissenters to Roman Catholicism is being made by means of a crusade of pamphlets to the ministers. The Independent of last week gives at length the text of such a letter, addressed to a Nonconformist minister by a "Convert to Romanism." There is something naïve in the endeavour to bring over the descendants of Puritans by a mere recounting of the trite and often-refuted claims of Rome to be the true Church on the ground of its unity, holiness, catholicity, and apostolicity. Complaint is made in the pamphlet that Romish doctrines are not understood. The real ground of Protestantism is that they are understood too well, and found wanting according to "reason and the plain Word of God." "Converts to Rome" must find some more cogent arguments than any adduced in this letter if they are to carry Christian intelligence and faith with them. They are simply the old "beggarly elements," and can only appeal to those who have never experienced the power of a living faith.

Dr. T. C. Edwards, Principal of Bala Theological College, has written a article on "The Pulpit and the Position of Religion in Wales," in the Welsh periodical called Y Ginenen. His thorough knowledge of Welsh life and thought gives his opinions great weight, and it is disquieting to find that his view of the future of religion in the Principality is distinctly pessimistic. The old intense interest in theology is giving way to a passion for politics and money-making among the educated, and to a love of sport and labour problems among the working classes. Dr. Edwards has a stern word, too, for a certain type of minister, whom he stigmatises as worldly, fond of money, and full of narrow and selfish ambition. If these things are so, they ought to be exposed and denounced, and Dr. Edwards deserves well of every Welsh patriot for having the courage to speak the truth.

Thankful as most people are for the modern nurse, there is reason for the criticisms and suggestions with regard to her and her work made by Lady Priestley in The Nineteenth Century. She thinks that for some nurses the training might be shorter and cheaper than it is, as their work might be of a simpler and easier kind than that of the highly-trained nurse. This would bring them within reach of a class of patients who can ill afford, especially in times of sickness, any extra expense. The arrangement would be a happy one for both nurse and patient, because we believe the nursing of the poor is more agreeable than that of the rich, owing to the poor being less difficult to please. Lady Priestley would also like to see more male nurses. No doubt the nursing system, which is so young, is capable of considerable improvement, and will get it.

The reprisals which will be taken on the cruel king and the degraded people of Benin for the slaughter of a party of English officers will not, it is to be hoped, end the incident, which shows in a terrible manner the need for the Gospel. Of all such deeds of darkness we may say, "They know not what they do." If wrath and revenge burn in some hearts when such things happen, love and pity should burn in the hearts of Christians, as we are sure they do. The missionary must go that way before the route will be safe. The massacre of the officers reminds us, by contrast, of a young lady friend who went many miles up one of these West African rivers in an open boat along with savages to minister to their people who were suffering; she went and returned in safety!

If the Government returns and the testimony of competent business men may be relied upon, the country is now enjoying a season of great commercial prosperity, which will, no doubt, conduce in too many cases to faster living and more neglect of God; in other cases it will afford a valued opportunity for more generous giving to all good works. With an enlarged income the first thing to be considered by a Christian should be the claims of the Kingdom of God at home and abroad. Opportunities abound for wiping out the deficits of some excellent institutions, and easing the minds of some overburdened workers.

"From an unexpected bonus," was the name attached to a gift which we lately saw. "He was his own executor," was said of a man who, instead of amassing and leaving behind him a fortune, had always been a thoughtful and liberal giver. The cause of God had all his lifetime been enjoying his benefactions. It is a pleasanter surprise to find that a man died "so poor," because he had all along used his means faithfully, than that he died "so rich," because he had withheld in life more than was meet.

The Methodist Times, in a leading article on "Prosperity in Patches," deals with a strange fact that whereas some churches are enjoying a remarkable success, others are steadily going back. There have been times of general progress and other times of general declension; this is a time apparently of simultaneous progress and declension. There is "a babble of contradictory voices." Is there any special feature which distinguishes these churches from each other? The writer dismisses the question with the remark:—

> The men who witness constant conversions are optimists. Those who do not are pessimists.

There is probably some truth here; but it will not do to brand all who labour and wait under discouraging conditions with such a title. Many of them are keeping up "a cheerful courage" under the most disheartening circumstances.

If we are really seeking the truth, and not merely to establish our own opinion, we shall be not only willing, but eager to find truth even in those who differ from us. Our first endeavour will be to see how far we agree, and to reduce the area of divergence to its minimum. The bitterest controversies are between those who are agreed upon foundation truths, but differ on details. If this is so with us, we may be sure we are more concerned to assert ourselves than to honour God. It is a part of the mystery of iniquity that men who love God, who count not their lives dear unto them for Jesus' sake; who love each other and would die for each other will nevertheless lose all patience with each other in disputing about their own opinions upon the truth; and often the more bitterly the less definite Scripture there is to decide between them.

Bible Readings are sometimes rendered unhappy seasons by those who speak trying to force their own views, and not keeping their minds open to receive help from others. Each should be content to state his opinion, and then to leave it for the consideration of the rest. As the apostle said to the Corinthians, Speak one by one, and let the others judge, discern, discriminate. Something has been wrong unless we leave a meeting with our love to each other quickened, and our reverence and godly fear increased; strengthened to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling because it is God who worketh in us to will and to work according to his good pleasure.

Mr. Moody's Birthday.

Dear Sir,—We must close the "D. L. Moody 60th Birthday Presentation Fund" on Monday, Jan. 25. We need £500 more to complete the proposed £2500 as a birthday gift from the Christians in the United Kingdom. There must be thousands in all parts of the land who esteem and love Mr. Moody but who have not yet contributed. We shall be glad to receive their donations of whatever amount, and to include their names in the list of donors. But time is pressing, and those who give should give quickly.

Contributions will be gladly welcomed and acknowledged by any of the following:—

Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.
Preb. Webb-Peploe, 25, Onslow-gardens, S.W., or, yours faithfully, F. B. Meyer.

God's Word and Witnesses.*

I. "SON OF MAN."

THE title by which the prophet Ezekiel was addressed occurs with a frequency which shows the emphasis which the inspiring Spirit lays upon it.

Ezekiel was a Jewish priest, and his ministry was to the captivity in Babylon; yet he is addressed more than ninety times by the remarkable title "Son of Man," which had never been used before to anyone, and we naturally inquire the significance of the term itself, and the reason why it is applied to Ezekiel. If we compare this title with "Son of Abraham," or "Son of David," or "Children of Israel," we at once perceive that "Son of Man" is a title which asserts the relation of him who bears it, not to any person or family or nation, but to the whole human race. And if the person so addressed be a prophet or an apostle, it indicates that his ministry is not confined to one nation; or that, if so confined, it is intended to draw the attention of that nation itself to the fact that God's care and sympathy are not limited to an elect people, but extend to all mankind.

In harmony with this, the symbolic cherubim in Ezekiel's first vision are not limited to the Jewish nation; for they were first seen at Eden's gate, before Abraham was born, and are seen at last in Heaven, where there is neither Jew nor Gentile, male nor female, but all the redeemed are one in Christ Jesus. And in Ezekiel x. the glory departs from the threshold of the house and stands over the cherubim, leaving for awhile the Jewish nation, that it may return when Israel shall be the third with Egypt and Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the earth; when the living waters shall flow out from beneath the throne, a river that cannot be passed over; and when men of all nations shall come up to Jerusalem to worship.

On the one hand, the gracious and world-wide promise, through Abraham, to all the families of the earth, must be taken into account; and on the other, the fanatical antipathy of the Jews against the Gentiles; if we would adequately appreciate the far-reaching and widely-extending grace contained in the constantly reiterated address of Ezekiel as "Son of Man."

Ezekiel's ministry to Israel was when they had filled up the measure of their iniquity and had been sent into captivity to Gentile Babylon, the good of which they were commanded to seek: "Seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace."

To all preachers of the Gospel it is important to bear constantly and prominently in mind the universality and impartiality of the love of God, which is indicated by the title Son of Man; a love to man as man, which was proved to Jonah, that Hebrew of the Hebrews, in the experiences through which he passed; and especially in the touching words of God, which close that prophecy.

There is a remarkable parallel between Ezekiel and Matthew in this respect—that both specially address the chosen people, and both distinctly point beyond them. For the evangelist, like the prophet, uses the term 'Son of Man." It occurs more than thirty times in the first of the Gospels, fourteen in Mark, twenty-six in Luke, twelve in John.

Reading superficially, it might seem that the Good Tidings were to be confined to Israel: for the Seventy were bidden, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not." But this prohibition was supplemented by the assurance, "Verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come" (Matt. x.). This I understand to mean, that although He came to his own possessions, his own people would not receive Him as their Messiah, but cast Him out; and that in God's deep love and hidden wisdom He would thus become the Saviour of all men, for, "as many as received Him (Gentiles no less than Jews), to them gave He right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John i. 11, 12). He was for the present come as King of Israel; but when Israel rejected Him He would have come as Son of Man. Pilate, indeed, might write the superscription for his cross, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews"; but by the hand of God in Heaven, and by the testimony of the Son of God on earth, the true title was "The Son of Man." "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up...for God so loved the WORLD, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

In harmony with the above explanation of the words of Jesus to the Seventy, is the close of the interview between Jesus and Nathanael, and the remarkable reference to the ladder of Jacob's dream.

Nathanael had been sitting under his own fig-tree, perhaps contemplating the days of Solomon, when Judah and Israel dwelt every man under his vine and under his fig-tree, and the days of the greater than Solomon, when they shall call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig-tree. When Jesus said, "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee," it opened up to Nathanael's heart the rest that Israel enjoyed under David's son, and shall yet enjoy under David's greater Son, who is also David's Lord (1 Kings iv. 25, Zech. iii. 10).

Illuminated by this flash of light upon the written Word from the lips of the living Word, this diligent searcher of the Scriptures exclaims with joy, "Thou art the Son of God, Thou art the King of Israel." Jesus answers, "Because I said, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? Thou shalt see greater things than these. Ye shall see the heavens opened and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." As though He had said, "Thou hast recalled the peaceful times of Solomon, and had prevision of Israel's future rest beneath its King, the Son of God; ye shall see the fulfilment of Jehovah's promise to Abraham: 'In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed,' Yea, ye shall see the heaven opened; and the ladder of Jacob's dream, on which he beheld the angels of God ascending and descending at Bethel, when he had supplanted his Gentile brother Esau, shall prove a way to Heaven for Ishmael as well as Isaac; for rejected Esau no less than chosen Jacob; for all the Gentiles on whom My name is called—equally with you whom only I have known of all the nations of the earth"; for Jacob's ladder was the type of the Living Way from earth to Heaven, and He is not only King of Israel, the nation, but Son of Man, the race.

Christian Work in Japan.

THERE is a general lull in all branches of Christian work here. The causes for this state of affairs are various. One is the failure on the part of the Japanese pastors and evangelists to meet the responsibilities that devolve upon them in caring for their flocks. As the work has passed out of the hands of the missionaries into that of the natives, there has been a decrease in growth and interest. This is not especially to be wondered at. Many of the preachers are men who have not had a long training, and they lack the requisite knowledge and experience.

It is also evident that among the preachers there is a failure to understand the essentials of Christianity. Instead of important doctrines being brought to the front, matters of little consequence are given undue prominence. This is not universal; for there are some who give due weight to the essentials of the faith. Where this is lacking there is a diminished interest in the churches and a lowering of the standard of Christian life.

Another cause of the present condition of things is the wave of materialism that is sweeping over the land. Prominent leaders of thought have come out boldly in the denial of the supernatural. They maintain that when men are thoroughly acquainted with the nature of things, and the principles which control the world, religion is superfluous. It is admitted that a large class of people have been benefited by religious teachings, and that the doctrines of Christianity are superior to all others. It is also granted that among the missionaries there are men of great earnestness. If their zeal is imparted to the Japanese converts, we may yet see a great awakening in the land.

Another cause of diminished growth in Christian work is the rapid increase of the commercial spirit among the young Japanese. For years past leading statesmen and others have been turning their attention to the development of the resources of the country and multiplying its industries. This has resulted in enterprises that have brought influence and wealth to the few who have achieved success, and the old sentiment that to engage in commercial pursuits was disgraceful has largely passed away. There has followed upon this a craving for wealth that engrosses the attention of a large class of the youth. Even Christians are caught in the tide. Several preachers and evangelists have given up Christian work and gone into business. Fewer young men are turning their attention to the ministry.

There have been reports of defections from the faith among Japanese Christians. Extensive inquiry has revealed the fact that the acceptance of heterodox views is confined to a very limited circle. The great body of Christians are loyal to the truth. It is a pleasure also to state that the relations between the missionaries and the Japanese are in general intimate and cordial.

The one thing needed at this time is the work of the Holy Spirit. There are men and means enough now employed to work a great change in the country, if only accompanied by power from on high. In many ways there is a ripeness for such a coming of Divine power, and in many minds there are the hope and expectation of such a blessing. Meetings have been held in Tokyo to pray for this. A deep interest has been awakened, and services are being held in the churches to arouse and stimulate the believers, as well as gather in the unconverted.

The coming of Mr. Mott, of the Y.M.C.A., at this time, is most providential, and is possibly the agency that will be used of God for a general awakening. The beginning of his labours in the southern part of the country is quite promising. A work like that accomplished in China and elsewhere will be a great blessing to Japan.

Papers on Missions.—7.

TRUST THE CHURCHES.

LET the facts already stated be carefully considered; and let them be kept in mind while present methods of doing missionary work are being examined. Have we departed from God's plan? And have we, intentionally or unintentionally, substituted a plan of our own? If we have, can we get back to God's plan, and so secure a larger amount of blessing both at home and abroad?

There is no departure from God's plan in the formation of Missionary Societies. Such societies are a necessity. But on what principles are they founded? In Carey's day the churches were asleep upon this matter; and it would have been hopeless to expect from them the enthusiasm of faith needed to inaugurate the work. But a century has passed since his day, a century in which the missionary spirit has been steadily growing, and the churches to-day are not what they were then. Then, it was needful that the societies should do the work with such help as they could get from the churches; now, it is time to recognise that the churches should do the work by means of the societies. The modern missionary society must be formed upon the recognition of the Church's call to missionary work, and the Church's readiness to respond to the call.

Of the older societies it may be said that to some extent this is the basis on which they are formed. The officers of the societies have said to the churches: "We (the committee) are your representatives." "The missionaries are not the agents of the committee, but the messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ." The members of committee are elected annually at the members' meeting. The bond is not as perfect as it might be; but there is an attempt to recognise that the churches are called to do missionary work.

In the younger societies the churches are not recognised at all. In some of them one man is practically the society. In others a Council or body of Directors exists, with whose election the churches have nothing to do. It may be argued that these societies work well. Possibly so; but that is not the point at present. Are they contrary to God's plan? Do they set aside almost entirely the one organisation which God has constituted to do missionary work? We submit the question to those devoted and spiritual servants of God who are now managing these societies with such energy and faith and zeal. Is it not possible to get back to God's lines?

But can the churches be trusted to do the work? This is the question which will be raised. The indifference of the churches will be pleaded as the justification for practically ignoring them. A very prominent Christian teacher, who is an enthusiast on the missionary subject, was once heard to say, "I have given up hoping for anything from the churches." Is it needful to regard them as hopeless? We venture to think not; and we plead for confidence in the churches as one of the first conditions required. And since by the churches God means to do his missionary work, confidence in the churches may be regarded as confidence in God.

The following report will show what is possible where a church is trusted and expected to do missionary work. The church numbers over 200 members. Its pastor receives £250 and a manse. Besides the amount raised by a Prayer Union it raises about another £100 by subscriptions and collections. And this, notwithstanding that it is burdened with a considerable debt. Since 1892 it has paid off £600 from its mortgage of £2400, and has repaid £300 to the denominational Building Fund. We mention these facts in order that the full value of this report may be understood.

Our Prayer Union was started on January 1, 1892, and at the end of that year had a membership of sixty-four, who contributed for the year £61 10s. 5½d.

In 1893 seventeen new members were added, and from these eighty-one the receipts for the year amounted to £93 0s. 3d.

The following year, 1894, the membership increased by ten, the ninety-one bringing in for the year £118 5s. 9d.

During 1895 eighteen members left us, but still from the seventy-three remaining the sum of £103 6s. 2d. was realised, and £2 7s. were collected for our missionary's medicine chest.

Up to date, 1896, we have again a membership of eighty, and for the past three quarters of this year have sent up £70 19s. 5d.

Such a report gives emphasis to the appeal we are making for increased confidence in the churches. Let the societies expect it; and let pastors insist continually upon the Church's obligation to carry out the Great Commission.

The Truth About Armenia.

WE shall be much surprised and disappointed if the heart of this nation is not moved to its depths by the book just published, Armenia and Europe: An Indictment.* If anything could revive the popular agitation of last winter, and bring it to some practical issue, surely this statement of naked facts must do so. We have read it with a sick heart, and it almost makes us ready to despair of modern civilization, not to say Christianity.

The introductory letter to the author by Mr. Rendel Harris is a very powerful impeachment of European diplomacy, and especially of European Christianity. On this latter point we make some extracts. Says Mr. Harris:—

The Christian Church of to-day, with rare and honourable exceptions, is as divided over the Armenian question as if Christ had never died to make us one. One would almost think that it was a heresy to care for those who suffer for the elect Name, or a schism to betray the passion of love towards their fidelity. Here in England it is only slowly that our leading ecclesiastics have ventured to speak, and when they have spoken it has too often been with bated breath and whispering humbleness. They appear to be more afraid of embarrassing the governments of the day than of embarrassing the Lord of all the ages.

I am almost tempted to despair of modern Christianity when I find our bishops so long tongue-tied, and our Synods and Presbyteries so largely silent. How far we have fallen in these matters behind the scientific conscience, with its grandly denationalised sense of human brotherhood in things good and evil. Perhaps the reason lies in the fact that religion has so largely become an organised selfishness, covered with the shadow of great names, and trading with the capital of sacrifices made by earlier and more loyal days.

If the Church is selfish, torpid, and almost criminally indifferent, what shall we say of our political lives? Here, at least, we see little redemption from self-seeking, little hope for the future of humanity. Whole civilisations may be blotted out, and churches which have stood for centuries disappear, while we are engaged in counting one another's ironclads or mustering armies for conflicts that ought long ago to have been by common consent classified under the head of unholy imaginations.

We wish it were possible to reproduce in our columns the whole of the section of the book entitled "The Truth about Armenia." It recites the unvarnished facts as to the recent massacres in all their naked horror. The repeated outrages are thus summarised:—

The result of our statistical review, drawn from thoroughly reliable sources (though it cannot be called final, as from many country districts we ha at present no accurate reports), is as follows:—

Killed in the massacres, about 85,000.

Towns and villages laid waste, about 2500.

Churches and convents destroyed, 568.

Forced to adopt the Mohammedan faith, 5 villages, with all their surviving inhabitants a hundreds of families in the towns.

Churches turned into mosques, 282.

Number of those without means of subsisten about 500,000.

A full statement of the facts would be much mo terrible when we think of the thousands in the registered villages who were murdered or died their wounds, or who perished trying to escape, succumbed to hunger or disease, and were buried the mountains under the winter snow; we shall understating the number of victims of the Armeni massacres if we reckon it to be 100,000.

One more extract we must make, leavi our readers to acquaint themselves, as sincerely trust they will do, with the co tents of the whole black, infamous record, it is printed in this book. Let them gi special heed to the chapters entitled, "W is to blame?" and "The Responsibility the Powers."

Has not enough blood been shed? When will t cry of this tortured people reach the ear of Christ dom? What answer will those Christian (!) pow make which eighteen years ago, stretched a prote ing hand over Armenia, and presented her w paper reforms, signed and sealed with the name the Almighty? But enough of this, for there yet another page of horrors to be disclosed. "K the men, and their wives, their daughters, and their p perty are ours." That was the watchword with whi the soldiers in Cæsarea urged on the armed m to murder, plunder, and outrage. And this wat word was heard and obeyed in all the hundreds towns and villages where the work of murder carried out. We already reckon the number of t slain at 85,000, and the death list is not nea closed. But who can count all the deeds of sha and infamy; who can number the tens of thousa who were driven into the mountains, sold into harems, exposed in the slave markets, or who, af having been outraged, were secretly murdered.

Mr. Rendel Harris quotes the saying of German friend that "this recent persecuti in Armenia exceeds in its intensity the su totals of the horrors of Diocletian, Deci and Nero." Let us no longer accuse the inhuman monsters of old time; we of t nineteenth century have outstripped the Will not the future historian of the last t years be well entitled to call them "Years shame"?

A New Year's Prayer.

Yet another year has flown,
Passed with all its joy and pain;
Thou hast reaped what thou hast sown,
Wheat or tares, or loss, or gain.

What this present year may see,
Make it, Lord, our full desire,
That, what to thy glory be,
That alone, our hearts aspire.

Though unknown the future be,
To us like a sealèd scroll,
All lies open, Lord, to Thee,
Until years shall cease to roll.

Though earth quake, and mounts be river
Lightnings flash, or wild gales blow,
Grant to us that peace be given;
As a river make it flow.

In our doubt be Thou our Guide,
In distress be Thou our Stay;
When life's stormy seas we ride
Safely bring us on our way.

And when time for us shall end,
When life's evening shadows fall,
And the silver cord is loosed,
To thyself do Thou us call.

Modern Vanity Fair.

As one of his "Merchant Lectures" for the current month, Dr. Guinness Rogers discoursed on this interesting topic at the Memorial Hall on Tuesday last week. He began by commenting on the graphic descriptive power of Bunyan, which enables us to see so vividly the scenes he pourtrays that we can imagine ourselves in the midst of them. There is a very marked difference between the Vanity Fair of Bunyan's day and that of our own. A certain class of newspapers may sneer and scoff at religious things and religious people, but nobody need be an atom the worse; being arraigned and persecuted unto death for our religious faith does not fall to our lot now, in England at any rate. The period of the Restoration, when Bunyan wrote, was a time of special licence and unbelief, partly as a reaction from the restrictions of the Commonwealth. The Puritans, though, perhaps, over strict and rigid, can scarcely be blamed for seeking to serve God according to their conceptions of his will and word. Where they erred was in imposing their ideas on others by the force of law.

Coming to our own time we have to inquire how far Vanity Fair has become altered. In his admirable lectures on the Pilgrim's Progress, Dr. Cheever, of America, tells how in modern days the pilgrims, instead of merely passing through the Fair, have in many cases settled themselves down to live in it and to prosecute their business in it. In our own time we seem to have got further even than that. The idea with many to-day is that Vanity Fair really belongs to the Church, and is regarded simply as part of the pilgrimage path to the Celestial City. Invidious distinctions between saints and sinners are to be avoided, it would seem; and our business now is to Christianise the Fair, rather than hold aloof from it. Those who give that advice appear to forget that if there is the possibility of the pilgrims Christianising the Fair, there is a much greater probability of the Fair demoralising the pilgrims.

What do we find in the Vanity Fair of to-day? Scripture plainly teaches that the love of the world and the love of the Father cannot co-exist in the same human heart. Is this teaching out of date? Look at our great business centres, where men congregate in order to buy and sell and get gain. We find there "booths" as there were of old—South African booths, West Australian booths, company-promoting booths, and the like. Let not a word of reproach be cast on honest industry and trade; it would be an evil day for our country if it were to lose its trade, and if we lost our national reputation for integrity and principle. But when we view the feverish eagerness with which many in our day make haste to be rich, and when we recognise the truth of the Scriptural saying that the man who is hasting to be rich must fall into divers temptations and snares, we realise that this chasing after worldly wealth is not only a danger to spirituality, but detrimental to delicacy of honour and purity of moral character.

When we turn from the trading booth to the drawing-room what do we find? Is the fashionable society of this day materially changed from that of other days? Judging from the descriptions we find in the public journals we are driven to believe that the main characteristics of present-day West End Society are vulgar ostentation and extravagance—each one vying with his neighbour as to who can make the greatest show and arouse the strongest sensation. And all this in a city where there are multitudes perishing for lack of the very crumbs that are contemptuously thrown from the rich men's tables. Then, if we enquire as to the sort of conversation that obtains in modern drawing-rooms, is it not true that where it does not degenerate into that which is corrupt and vicious, it consists of the merest silliness, shallowness, superficiality, and frivolity of utterance?

The marvellous thing, in view of all this, is that there are many Christian professors whose one aim seems to be "to get into Society." I have never known one who set himself to gratify this ambition who did not taint the beauty of Christian character, and weaken the force of Christian testimony. Yes; we must still be "pilgrims and strangers." The subject cannot be further pursued to-day. One closing question: What have we, as Christian men, to do in such social conditions? Certainly not to be contiuually talking of "making concessions to the spirit of the times." Concessions seem to have got to such an extent now that we shall speedily have nothing left to concede. Any assumption of pharisaic sanctity, or claim to a goodness different from that of other people, will ever be offensive. But the experience of years convinces me that the world itself can understand and respect high Christian principle. It may despise and hate us, may jeer and scoff at us, but it expects us to have a different standard and to walk by a different rule. For myself, I would rather be hated as a fanatic, than be despised as a Christian professor who has no power of self-sacrifice or self-denial.

Letters from North Africa.—I.

Algiers, by continuous journey, is within fifty-four hours of London. On Monday, January 4, my friend Mr. S. Trevor Francis and I left London, and having tarried a day and night in Marseilles for rest, arrived at Algiers by the Transatlantique steamer on Thursday afternoon. The Hôtel Anglo-Suisse, where we stayed, is a house of comfortable size, pleasantly and conveniently situated, well managed, and with good sanitary arrangements.

The world is small, and as in South Africa last year I fell in with friends whom I did not in the least expect to meet, so here I found my vis-à-vis to be a reader of The Christian, a lady whom I had known twenty years ago, and who, with her two nieces, had been visiting missionaries in Tunis, where we were going.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH.

We have taken, perhaps, too seriously the famous (or infamous) interpellation of Mr. St. Germain in the French Chamber, charging the English missionaries in Algeria, who are mostly of the weaker sex with selling guns and gunpowder to the Kabyles, with intent to encourage and enable them to revolt against the French. Pasteur Jocelyn Bureau, of Sfax, Tunisia, strikes a much shriller key than our usually defensive and sometimes apologetic tone. He draws his pen like a sword, and handles it, now with a cut of sweeping indignation, and anon with a pointed thrust of sarcasm or ridicule. The following passages are from M. Bureau's Letters in L'Eglise Libre, the well-known French journal of Evangelical Reform, founded by Léon Pilatte:—

"I understand that the Ultramontane Press publishes with joy and delight all the falsehoods which come from Algeria. It is its business. It loves to plunge itself often into a bath of mud, where it finds itself at ease. But that weighty journals, generally regardful of the truth, such as the Temps, Evênement, Estafette, should fall into the trap—this is incredible.

"Mr. St. Germain's first accusation is the sale of powder to the natives. Behold some old maids (vieilles filles) making themselves the instruments of the jealousies of their nation, becoming the apostles of the god Mars, and selling powder to the Arabs! It is enough to make you smile!

"In the first place, where could this powder come from? From England? And the Custom House? Would it become an accomplice and sell itself to the English 'Methodists'? Or was it made on the spot? But that would require to have at hand the necessary ingredients. That would necessitate the purchase, the going and coming, the noise, etc., etc. And all this movement going on for fifteen years without anyone perceiving it! No; this accusation does not stand on end for a minute; it is absurd, wicked, and tends to excite hatred against the missionary strangers; and they women, which is the more dangerous and the less chivalrous.

"Mr. St. Germain talks of thousands of English guns sold to the Kabyles, and he accuses the missionaries of having been the vendors of this prohibited article, which nevertheless may be seen in every armourer's shop in Algeria and Tunisia.

"I ask, and Mr. St. Germain ought to put to himself the same question, How could these missionary women introduce such a quantity of guns? In their boxes? And where are the Custom House officers? Do they not examine the luggage which is disembarked in Algeria? But they may be landed on some profoundly dark and tempestuous night? Purely and simply impossible, for there are guardians of the coast who would quickly prevent them. Then the transport from the coast to Djemaa Sahridj, the seat of the English Mission—are there not the gendarmes upon the roads, to stop a convoy of cases, all of the same kind and full of guns?

"Alas, unhappy Dr. Leach, who belonged to the same mission, but had not a single arm to defend himself, or to save his own life and the lives of his family from the assassins, who, on May 5 last, entered his house and committed the crime which has so appalled our district. What, not one miserable little revolver? That was very singular for a seller of powder and guns!

"Mr. St. Germain accuses the English missionaries of having opened schools....Let him reassure himself; the law has not been violated, for English schools do not exist in Algeria, and never will, save in the mind of Mr. St. Germain.

"The missionaries have distributed cakes and toys to the native children. What a crime! It is dreadful! My hair stands on end when I think that without Mr. St. Germain the English would be able to continue to distribute comfits and confections to the little Kabyles! What care this brave Mr. St. Germain takes of the stomachs of the little natives! I had not believed him such an Arabophile as to occupy himself with the digestion of the Kabyles!

"Mr. St. Germain, do you call that patriotism? If so, I pity you."

I have another letter before me from the same pen, of which I will give the gist in my next.

I am just now at Djemaa Sahridj, and can only feel thankful to God for the grace and wisdom, the tact and courage, which He has given to these feeble folk, in circumstances of exceeding difficulty and peril.

It would be of little use to describe the persecution of our sisters and their few brave native helpers here. The untruthful part of the Press would twist it out of shape; and as our friends across the Atlantic say, "a lie is half round the world before the truth has got its boots on to hunt it down."

I think the noble real French people would feel very much ashamed at the Jesuitical falsehood, the unmanly espionage, the unchivalrous ruffianism which have been exhibited toward certain devoted representatives of the North Africa Mission, some of "the messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ."

I wonder that the French people, having expelled the Jesuits from France, should put themselves body and soul under their baleful control in Madagascar and Algeria. But the Lord reigneth.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, January 24.

"Have respect unto the covenant."—Psa. lxxiv. 20.

WHAT a marvellous ejaculation! Here is a broken heart, pouring out its wail into the ear of God about his sanctuary and city. His adversaries have broken into the sacred precincts, and have hewn down its exquisitely carved work with hammer and hatchet. They were as men who lift up the hatchet against a forest of trees. There is nothing more utterly sad than the lament, "We see not our signs: there is no more any prophet; neither is there any among us that knoweth how long."

But from it all the suppliant rises to a climax of insistent appeal, and bids God have respect unto the covenant, made centuries before with Abraham and his seed. This was an appeal which struck right home to the heart of God. He could not deny Himself.

Here is an attitude in prayer, which can only be taken when the soul has become intimate with God, and come to close grips with Him. When every other reason has been marshalled, and every argument alleged; when still the answer tarries, and the case is desperate, then turn to God, and say, "Thou canst not run back from the terms of the covenant to which Thou hast pledged thyself. This is included in the bond of agreement. I claim that Thou shouldst do as Thou hast said."

The covenant is set out at length in Heb. viii. It will cover all the exigencies of our lives. And by Gal. iii. 14 we may also place ourselves under the provision of the three-fold covenant which God ratified with Abraham. In every trial, when desiring any blessing, when the crashing blows of the adversaries' hatchet are heard, turn to God, and say, "Have respect unto the covenant, of which Jesus is the mediator and his blood the seal."

"He lifteth up."—Psa. lxxv. 7.

This is the Psalm of up-lifts. Against the up-lifts of the wicked, described in the fourth verse, the Psalmist contrasts the up-lifts of God. They come neither from E nor W, but from above. God is the supreme arbiter of human destiny. The horns of the wicked are cut off, and those of the righteous are lifted up, by the interpositions of his Providence: for God is judge.

Are you depressed to-day? Look up to Him, and ask that you may be uplifted into fellowship with the risen glorified Lord. Are you lying among the pots? Seek for the wings of the dove, that with flitting pinion you may make your way to the ark, where the hand awaits to take you in. Have you been in the valley of the shadow of death? Claim that the mighty power which wrought in Christ when God raised Him from the dead, and made Him sit in the heavenlies far above all power and principality, may do as much for you.

This is also true in a temporal sense. Promotions in any direction, to positions of credit, influence, or consideration, are the gift and work of God. To be lifted up to a chief place in his Church, to the stewardship of large wealth, to the exercise of commanding influence, is due to the divine interposition. You do not hold it at the caprice of man, but as the direct bestowment of your Father. Do not fear to lose it because you are true to Him. He expects you to be true to Him. He has put you where you are for no other purpose than that you should realise his purposes among men.

TUESDAY, January 26.

"Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the residue shalt thou restrain."—Psa. lxxvi. 10.

From his review of the fate of the foes of Israel, the Psalmist comes to this conclusion. He has seen the serried hosts of Sennacherib come up against the city of God, but the warriors have slept their sleep: it was as though the Almighty had snapped the instruments of war across his knee. The wrath of man had been allowed up to a certain point, to bring into clear evidence the greater power of God, and then He had quietly put a term to its further manifestation.

Pharaoh's wrath against Israel only served to make God's mighty arm conspicuous. So with Herod, who took Peter to behead him; and with the high priests who fumed against the early church. So shall it be with the arch-enemy of all. Christ is mightier than he is. All he has done has acted as a foil to our Lord's glorious majesty. What he has wrought against man has only brought out more of the grace and love of God. And there shall be an eternal limit put to his hellish deeds when he is bound by a great chain and cast into the bottomless pit.

Ah, tried soul, what is permitted to happen in your life will tend ultimately and eternally to the praise and glory of God, if only you will abide in Him, and suffer bravely, nobly, in the grace of Christ. And there always will be a restraint. There will always be a "thus far and no farther." When the lesson is learnt, and the opportunity for the revelation of God is complete, and the tried soul is proved to have won as its reward the crown of life, then God will stay the enemy and avenger, and give spoils more glorious than mountains of prey.

WEDNESDAY, January 27.

"Thy way is in the sea, and thy paths in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known. Thou leadest thy people like a flock by the land of Moses and Aaron."—Psa. lxxvii. 19. 20.

This is almost the climax of sublimity, because of the contrast of the majesty and gentleness of God. In the first of these verses you have the former. God is described as wading through mighty oceans as a man might ford some tiny stream. The Atlantic with fathomless depths is no more to him than a brook to us—not so much. But as the brook hides the footmarks which are imprinted on its soft ooze, so are God's footprints hidden. We cannot detect his great and wonderful secrets. We are unable to gauge his reasons. He marches through the ages with steps we cannot track. For his orbit there is no standard of computation.

But dread Him not. This mighty God has the tender heart of a shepherd. He leads his people like a flock—not overdriving, carrying the lambs in his bosom, and gently leading those that are with young. Mightier than the mightiest, but meeker than the meekest! The Lion of Judah, but the Lamb of Bethlehem! Prince and Saviour! Fellow of Jehovah, and yet the smitten shepherd of the scattered flock!

Nor is this all. It is a human hand that leads the flock. God does his work through the hands of human and fallible agents. You have not recognised Him, but had your eyes been opened, you would have seen his leading in the gentle hand of that mother, in the strong grasp of that friend, in the trembling fingers of that young girl, in the tiny hand of your little babe. Ah, how many good and tender hands have moulded and fashioned our lives, but beneath them all there have been the leadings of the great God, convoying us through deep and dark waters to our fold.

THURSDAY, January 28.

"Can God?"—Psa. lxxviii. 19.

O fatal question! It shut Israel out of the Land of Promise, and it will do as much for you. Israel had seen the wonderful works of God, cleaving the sea, lighting the night, and giving water from rocks. Yet they questioned God's ability to give bread, and to spread a table in the wilderness. Surely it was a slur on his gracious Providence to suppose that He had begun what He could not complete, and had done so much but could not do all.

But we are in danger of making the same mistake. Though behind us lie the gift of the Cross, the miracles of Resurrection and Ascension, the care exercised by God over our early years, the goodness and mercy of our after lives, we are disposed to say, "Can God?" Can God keep me from yielding to that besetting sin? Can God find me a situation, or provide food for my children? Can God extricate me from this terrible snare in which I am entangled? We look at the difficulties, the many who have succumbed, the surges that are rolling high, the poor devil-possessed child, and we say, If Thou canst do anything, help us.

Nay, nay, there is no If with God; there is no limit to his almightiness but thy unbelief. The words are wrongly placed. Never say again, "Can God?" but God can. Never, if Thou canst, but if I can believe. Never if Thou canst Thou wilt, but if Thou wilt Thou canst; and Thou wilt, since Thou hast made and redeemed me, and Thou canst not forsake the work of thine own hands. Argue from all the past to the present and future. Fetch arguments for faith from the days that have gone.

His love in time past forbids me to think,
He'll leave me at last in trouble to sink.

FRIDAY, January 29.

"How long, O Lord?"—Psa. lxxix. 5.

To us, also, as to this long-suffering Jew, God's dealings seem sometimes interminable. We do not understand why the cloud hangs over us so long, why the pressure of trouble lasts year after year. We cry, "How long, O Lord?" in gusts of impatience, but take care not to hurry God unduly, lest thou force Him to forego doing his best work in thy life.

This parable helped me; may it help you to be silent, still, and long-suffering. A bar of iron, worth £1, when wrought into horseshoes is worth £2; if made into needles, it is worth £70; if into pen-knife blades, it is worth £650; if into springs for watches, it is worth £50,000. What a drilling the poor bar must undergo to be worth this; but the more it is manipulated, the more it is hammered and passed through the fire, and beaten, and pounded, and polished, the greater its value.

So with the Jews. No other nation has passed through such awful trial and discipline as they have, but no other nation was capable of yielding such wealth of service to mankind, and no other nation has afforded such untold service in the highest regions.

So with ourselves. Those that suffer most are capable of yielding most, and it is through pain that God is getting the most out of us for his glory and the blessing of others. It will be all right some day. We shall see it all and be satisfied. Let us live in those bright days that are coming. Yes, great Father, we would like to be watch-springs. Go on; stay not the discipline. Take no heed of our cry if sometimes we forget ourselves and say, How long?

SATURDAY, January 30.

"Turn us again, O God."—Psa. lxxx. 3.

Four times we have this cry repeated in this Psalm. Again and again, and each time with some additional thought, the soul pleads for Restoration (R.V. marg.).

The Master said to Peter: When thou art converted (i.e., turned again) strengthen thy brethren. But Peter did not realise that the Master Himself would need to turn him. He turned his back on his Lord and denied Him; but Jesus turned him back, by that look, that message from his grave-mouth, that interview in the garden and on the lake-shore. He turned him facewards to Himself, and caused his face to shine, and Peter was blessedly saved.

We can be regenerated only once, but we can be converted many times. The new life is implanted once for all, and it is everlasting, unextinguishable and permanent; but those who have been born from above, and are undoubtedly children of God, may, beneath the power of some strong fascination, turn aside, may wander in forbidden paths, may get into such a maze as to be walking in the contrary direction to that on which they started. There may be even times when our desire for God is slackened, our appetite for the Bible is lost, our soul is bound and tied with the cords of sin; at such times, let us bemoan ourselves, our folly and impotence, and cry, "Turn us again, O God, and we shall be turned; for Thou art the Lord our God." He who at first called us to Himself must call us back: He who regenerated, must renew: He who reconciled us to God by his death, must save us by his life.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

Blind Tom.

DEAR CHILDREN,—If Uncle Tom will let me, I should like to tell you of a namesake of his, who lives in a small town on the shores of our noble Forth. No one calls him "Uncle Tom," for his earthly friends are few, but his neighbours call him "Blind Tom," because God has taken away his sight. He used to be a soldier; and once, when on the march in the Desert, the awful sandstorm, or simoom, came sweeping down upon them; the sand filled poor Tom's eyes, and made him quite blind to all earthly things. He lives quite alone in his little bare room, with only a kind neighbour to look in now and then to see how he is getting on.

But, "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in his heart, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Blind Tom is never alone, for God is ever with him, and he is "as happy as a king." Yes! and far happier than most kings, for he can say, "Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased."

Now, dear children, God is waiting to give you this joy which Blind Tom has. Are you going to take it, and thank Him for it, and "live henceforth, not unto yourselves, but unto Him who loved you and gave Himself for you"?

I shall finish with a few verses which Blind Tom made in the dark, alone with God. They may be sung to tune No. 296 in Mr. Sankey's hymn-book.

I.

Only waiting till the summer of my life comes to a close;
Only waiting till the autumn merges into winter snows;
Only waiting till my Father calls me from this earthly scene,
Up to glory there for ever to be with my Saviour King.

II.

Only waiting full possession of a mansion in the skies;
Oh! what wondrous condescension, God will wipe my tearful eyes.
There I'll see my dear Redeemer, who has brought me through the flood;
Praise in rapturous adoration Christ who washed me in his blood.

III.

Blessed Jesus, keep me praying, keep me watching against sin,
Lest I weary in well doing, and my lamp be growing dim.
Oh, my Saviour, by thy spirit, guide and guard me, keep me true;
Make thy grace sufficient for me, strengthen me thy will to do.

IV.

Then whatever here befals me, simply trusting in the Lord,
Though clouds may gather round me, Jesus! He will keep his word.
Jesus! He will come and take me to that mansion in the skies
That He's gone to prepare for me in that Land where no one dies.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 54).

1. On the second day, God created "the firmament and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament. And God called the firmament, heaven."

On the fourth day, God created the sun, the moon, and the stars.

On the sixth day, God created man and every living thing.

2. The tree of knowledge of good and evil.

3. (a) Hiding amongst the trees in the garden from the presence of God. (b) "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree and I did eat."

4. Eight. Noah and his wife and their three sons—Shem, Ham, and Japheth with their wives.

5. 600.

6. Cain.

7. Jubal was the son of Lamech and Adah and brother of Jabal. "He was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ."

Jubal, another son of Lamech and Adah; "he was the father of such as dwell in tents and of such as have cattle."

Tubalcain was the son of Lamech and Zillah. He had a sister named Naamah. "He was an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron."

8. Adam lived about 930 years; Enoch, 365 years, and Methuselah, 969 years.

9. "Ye shall not surely die" was said by the serpent to Eve when he tempted her to eat the forbidden fruit.

"My punishment is greater than I can bear" was said by Cain after he had been cursed by God for killing his brother Abel.

"While the earth remaineth...day and night shall not cease"—God's promise to man after the flood.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 55).

Here are some questions about the snow that I have been keeping for some time until the snow came. Now that we have had some, let us see what the Bible says about it.

1. What prayer about the snow do you remember (Ps. xlv. to lv.)?
2. What promise is like an answer to it (Isaiah i. to v.)?
3. (a) What happened on a snowy day (1 Chron. x. to xii)?
   (b) What lesson would you learn from it?
4. (a) Find references to snow in Job (xxxv. to xxxvii.), Psalms (cxlv. to cxlvii.), Proverbs (xxv. to xxxi.).
   (b) Can you suggest any lessons from them?
5. What promise about snow is an encouragement to preachers and Christian workers (Isaiah l. to lx.)?

[Chapter and verse must be given in each case. Children under ten do 1 and 2; those under thirteen do 1, 2, and 3.]

Fourth Prize Competition.

THIS week I lay before my young friends the results of the Prize Competition. As I said before, I am glad to think that the majority have done so well that they will read the lists with satisfaction; but I always feel very sorry for those whose names have to be left out.

The number of the competitors in the Second Division was so large that I have again made a fifth class of those who received nearly but not quite enough marks for a certificate. Many more would have been correct had they observed Rule 6, which required chapter and verse to be given in each case.

The prizes and certificates will be received as soon as possible. Now, let all stick to the weekly questions this quarter, so as to appear the "nine times" necessary to be eligible for the next prize competition in March.

FIRST PRIZES.

DIVISION 1.—Louis Berthe, Jessie Palmer.
DIVISION 2. — William Aston, Gertrude Emily Scott, Gladys Phipps, Willie Palmer, Nellie Dowsett.
DIVISION 3.—Ernest Edward Nash, Richard Holdsworth Williams, Edith Mary Cole, Elsie Mary Brinkworth.
DIVISION 4.—Ada Katharine Blackie, Charles Hunter, Jessie Barclay Bone, Alice Maud Thompson.

SECOND PRIZES.

DIVISION 1.—Jack Harris, Elizabeth B. Black.
DIVISION 2.—Marion Richards, Mary Ellen Plumb, Margaret Davison, Maud Morris, Nannie Tibbits.
DIVISION 3.—Isabel Winifred Phipps, Hannah Duncan Parker, Willie A. Findlay, Eleanor Mary Hatchett.
DIVISION 4.—Thomas Ashley Kirkpatrick, Mena Hunter, Helen M. Willoughby, Rosalind Phillimore.

FIRST CERTIFICATES.

DIVISION 1.—Constance Gabbett, Ruby Stone, Margery Smart, William Ernest Clarke, Charles Noel Wright.
DIVISION 2.— Evelyn Lowndes Moir, Kenneth H. V. Soltau, Mary Charles, Abraham Mack, Elizabeth Dorothy Morrisson, Lilian Mary Ellacott, Ida Wright, William F. Williams, Mary Theodora Colville, Henry Keable, Charlotte Orr, Gracie Chatterton, Elizabeth Hull, Charles Henry Bewley.
DIVISION 3.—Maggie Buchanan, Jessie Gertrude Pook, Norah Lowe, Margaret Jane Macphee, Francie Hoyte, Ethel Beauchamp, Susie Alexia Keen, Rosetta Mary Sherwin, Lilian Gertrude Willoughby, Agnes W. Mary Head.
DIVISION 4.—Ella Harvey, Olave Mary Stone, Edna Christobel Dickinson, Muriel Grace Joscelyne, Ethel Marian Light, Kathleen Millie Light, Muriel Reeves-Palmer, Elsie Johnson, Mary Louisa Tibbits, Mary D. Maitland-Kirwan, John Walter Thomson, May V. Hunter, Constance Mary Scott, Tom Hunter, Alexandra Christina Jack, Enid L. V. Mather, Kate Ruby Allen.

SECOND CERTIFICATES.

DIVISION 1.—Frank Medcalf, Frederick Edward Compton, Dorothy Morris, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer.
DIVISION 2.—Edwards Harms, Frances Taggart, Annie Kathleen Dodington, Teresa Blackie, May Pell, Maud Cleal, Beryl Morris, Frank Reid Wilson, Lucy Kelk.
DIVISION 3.—Lena Hunter, May Bligh, Mildred Scott, Christine Arnold, Lillian Margaret Pook, Norman Braby, Edith Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Violet Gordon Donaldson-Selby, Margaret Lillian Pook, Byres Hill, Guinefred Lucy Leigh, Margaret Drummond Hogg, Thomas de Courcy Rayner, Juliet Faith Haines, Maggie Palmer, Arthur S. Barker, Ethel Maud Pasley, Daisy Allen, Pearlie Moutray Read, Gertrude Edwards, Mabel Fletcher.
DIVISION 4.—Raymond H. Theobald, George Pasley, Gwendoline R. Shaw, Kate Gertrude Johns, Winifred M. Page, Cecil Bradford, Frederica Hunton, Helen S. Dunbar, Martha Rogers, Cecil J. M. Lowe, Maggie S. Smith, Elizabeth V. Marchbank, Winifred Hoyte.

HONOURABLE MENTION.

DIVISION 2.—Philip A. Willoughby, John A. Chamberlain, Gladys T. Isaac, Florrie Smith, Christine Parker, Edward Howell, Ada May Vickers, Edwin Peters, Alice Mary Palmer, Harcourt Hunter, Ellen L. Skinner, Margaret Hassé, Emily Bridgewater, Bertha Fowler, Stanley Hoyte, Constance Schaeffer, Barbara Maconchy, Edith S. Nash, Mabel Cole, Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Maude F. Personal.

☞ Will the following kindly give their addresses when sending this week's Searcher?—Sarah Braithwaite, Aline Bazett, Nellie Bellerby, Hilda Craig, Jessie Carter, Gordon Duncan, Jessie Dunlop, Reginald Findlay, J. and Frank Grigg, Winifred Harvey, Cecil Harvey, Dorothy Harris, Arthur B. Jones, W. Harry Kortright, Gertrude Kingerlee, Percy Leigh, William Mackenzie, Hilda Medill, Trevor Matthews, Dora Marples, Ivy Maunsell, Oswald Mavor, Maggie Menzies, Walter Perryman, Percy Robinson, Francis Stalker, Frank Tomkins, Jessie West, Ross Wyllie, Philip Willoughby.

I must thank several of my "nieces" for their gifts of cuffs, blotters, etc., which have been sent to the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. I am very pleased to welcome my new nephews and nieces. ETHEL BARCLAY.—I am glad to hear you are better.

A. JONES.—Please put your full name at the head of your paper. FRANCES BENNETT.—Am glad you are making a fresh start. MAUDE MORRIS.—You did your paper nicely, but omitted to write a text for "q." VIOLET ANNESLEY.—Thank you for your kind letter. The blotters and needlebooks will be very acceptable. THEA GUINNESS.—I do hope your thumb will soon be better. Unfortunately your paper was not done quite correctly. KATE COE.—Your letter gave me great pleasure. EDITH MARY COLE.—I had to pay 3d. for your unstamped paper. EDITH SAUNDERSON.—You did your answers quite correctly, but you must send them earlier, as they must reach me by Thursday morning. MARION RICHARDS.—You can send your answers as you suggest, but you must not ask any questions. KATIE PENNY.—I am very pleased that you wish to join the "Searcher," but you are wrong this week. CHARLOTTE MILLAR.—You must do your answers very well to gain a star.

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER THIRD.

NAMES.

FORGETTING a name often leads the person who owns it to conclude that we do not think much of him, or care much for him. It is true that "Forgetting a name may shut the heart against us and the Gospel, and remembering a name do something towards opening the heart to us and it."

Remembering the name of a child has more than once opened the heart of the parent to the Gospel.

If these things are so, how important it is that Christian workers should remember the names of those they try to help and influence.

If the principles on which this system is founded are true, then the first thing necessary in reference to every name we wish to remember is, to get it clearly impressed on the mind.

How is this to be done?

The generality of people would try to do it by repetition. There are many objections to this way, and many evils connected with it.

1. It is uninteresting. All will admit this.

2. That which is uninteresting wearies the mind, and makes but little impression on the memory.

3. Just in proportion as a thing is learnt by repetition alone, does it stand alone in the mind.

4. Just in proportion as a thing stands alone in the mind is the difficulty of recalling or reproducing it.

Pause a little while here and consider how far the above statements are correct.

You ought to do two things respecting every name that you wish to remember.

1. Take care that the mind clearly grasps it, or, as we sometimes say, catches it.

2. Unite it with a similar name, or word, or phrase, with which you are familiar, and which you are not likely to forget.

In reference to the first of these it may be remarked that just in proportion to the clearness with which the mind grasps a thing will be the tenacity with which the memory will retain it.

One reason why so many people have such difficulty in recalling names is because their minds never clearly grasped them.

In reference to the second suggestion let me call your attention to the following facts.

1. Recollection depends on association.

2. Without association, recollection is almost impossible.

3. Things which have been distinctly united in the consciousness remain united in the mind.

4. When two things are united in the mind, by whatever means they have been united, if we recall one of them, it will recall the other.

5. This applies not to some things only, but to everything. Like the law of gravitation in the material world, its application is general and universal.

If these are facts, then for the cultivation of the memory and character, there are no facts of greater importance in the whole range of philosophy. If they are facts, it is next to impossible to lay too great stress upon them. There is no life in the world which they are not influencing, there is no life in the world which would not be changed by a change in the method of using them.

They are facts. Dr. Carpenter says:—"The reproducing power altogether depends on the nature of the association by which the new idea has been linked on to other ideas." Aristotle says:—"When two things have been connected, and we can recall one of them, the other is almost sure to follow." Again, writing still of things which have been thus united, he says: "The beginning is the better part of the whole, and, this once found, what follows is a small matter." Equally strong statements as to the power of association are made by Reid, James Mill, Vines, J. S. Mill, Sir William Hamilton, and others.

It is almost impossible to speak too strongly of the results of the law of association on the memory and mind and life.

But here arises a very practical question. How are we thus to unite one thing with another?

You will unite two things together if you think of them together. When two things are thought of together they come into the mind together. Things which come into the mind together remain united in the mind, and when one is recalled it recalls the other. Sir K. Digby says very correctly: "Things of quite different natures, if they come into the mind together, are remembered together."

But now to confine myself to

REMEMBERING NAMES.

Names may be divided in several ways. The division which I shall adopt in the present course is a three-fold one, and has already been touched upon.

1. Names which may be compared with other names. 2. Names which cannot well be compared with other names, but may be compared with things or words. 3. Names which cannot well be compared with names, or things or words, but may be compared with phrases.

A moment's consideration of this division will show that it is in some respects a relative one. The same name would be classed under the first division by one person, and under the second by another. Each one ought to consider for himself in reference to any new names he may meet, to what division that name belongs to him.

Let me now give a few illustrations of how I have myself acted, so as to make my meaning still more clear.

Some time ago I was introduced to a gentleman named Millar. I thought of him as a miller. When I saw him again I had no difficulty in recalling his name. He reminded me of the comparison, and the comparison reminded me of the name.

Again, I was introduced to a gentleman named Chennel. I compared it with the word channel. I had never heard the name before, but I have never forgotten it since.

Again, I met a gentleman named Politian. I compared his name with the word polite. The name and the word became associated in my consciousness, and have ever since remained united in my mind.

More than fifteen years ago I met a gentleman named Kanar. My natural memory for names is such that if I had not employed the law of association in reference to it, I should have been utterly unable to recall it in an hour. I, however, at once compared it with "can air," and from the day I first heard the name to the present have been in no danger of forgetting it.

A lady asked me some time ago how I could remember her name. It was Hankyns. There was no difficulty in remembering it. I have an intimate acquaintance named Hankinson, and all I had to do was to notice in what respects the one name resembled, and in what respects it differed from, the other. By doing this they became associated in my consciousness, and the old name recalled the new.

I have compressed into one lesson what was intended for two; but I trust that I have said sufficient to show the importance, and some of the results, of the law of association, and to indicate how it can be used in helping to recall names. Let me advise each reader to try and bring this law into operation in reference to every new name which he wishes to remember.

Before closing this paper there is another and entirely different application of this law to which I would like to refer, especially as I am writing for Christians and Christian workers.

Let me ask you again to refer to the five statements about associations given in an earlier part of this letter, and to the quotations given in confirmation of those statements.

If these things are so, then our happiness and our unhappiness, our brightness and our sadness, depend to a great extent on our right or wrong employment of this law.

If you unite anything that it is injurious to remember with any person or place or thing, each time you see or even think of this person or place or thing, you will be reminded of the mental association that you have with them and you will be injured by it.

If anyone treats you unkindly, and you think of the unkindness and the person who did it together, they will be inseparably united in your consciousness, and the sight or thought of the person will recall the unkindness and also the feelings connected with it; for as Sir W. Hamilton says, "The law of association extends to all connections of thought and feeling."

If you think of something wrong or sinful in connection with any person, place, or thing, the sight, mention, or thought of that person, place, or thing wil recall the wrong or sinful thought which you associated with them. Each time it is recalled you will be injured by it.

On the other hand, if someone does a kindness to you, and you realise it and think of it and the one who did it together, the thought of the one will ever after tend to recall the other, and all the feelings at first connected with it.

How wonderful would be the results in our lives if we never thought of God apart from his love and his gifts; of our blessings and mercies apart from the Giver; of Christ apart from his redemption, and power, and presence.

How different places would be to us, if we took care to do some act of kindness to someone, or some act of service for Christ, in each place we visited. Each remembrance of the place would recall the happiness associated with the deeds done in it.

How different would be the result of many people's holidays if they thought more of giving happiness than of getting it! Each place where they had spent a day would yield them a bright remembrance for ever.

You cannot alter a law, but you can decide to what use you will put it.

What is true of us, in this respect, is true of others; and what is true of others is true of us.

There are some who are disposed to reduce almost everything to the influence of the law of association. Better do that than act as if no such law had been impressed on our mental constitution.

THE LATE

Rev. Bryan Roe,

MISSIONARY IN WEST AFRICA.

IT is a pleasure this week to present a brief outline of a noble life laid on the altar of God for the enlightenment of Africa. It is the story of a Christian enthusiast, full of grace and devotion to duty. If it is true that "we live in deeds, not years," then Bryan Roe's decade of ministry on the West Coast of Africa may be regarded as a full life of service, by reason of its abundance of effort and wealth of result.

BRYAN ROE was born in 1859, at Cheddleton, a quiet village close by Leek, in North Staffordshire. His father was a good-living farmer; his mother a woman of deep piety, whose prayers took hold on God. There were four boys in the family, and the eldest, David, while still young, was greatly impressed by the preaching of Richard Weaver. Later on, when the family was living near Eccleshall, the other boys, Harvey, Eli, and Bryan, were converted in a Primitive Methodist chapel. The father became an earnest Christian, and three of the sons became ministers of the Gospel. David has long been an esteemed labourer in the Wesleyan body, and is now stationed at Old Ford, in East London; Harvey remained with the Primitive Methodists, and is now at Watford; Bryan found a sphere in the "Old Connexion," and put in ten years of grand mission work amongst the dark and degraded heathen of West Africa, and at length was laid to rest in "the White Man's Grave."

Simultaneously with his conversion, at the age of fourteen, Bryan Roe began to speak for Christ, and many were converted through his preaching. He felt that work in the Gospel ministry was God's will for him, and, leaving business, he went through a course of training at Harley College, Bow, E. After a season of active work, he entered Richmond College as a missionary student, and in that institution enjoyed the esteem of the tutors as well as the affection of class-mates. At length, in 1885, he was designated for work in the Nupe country, on the banks of the Niger, and he left home full of confidence that God would sustain and bless him in that trying field of labour. It was a great transition, from buoyant religious life in England to the company of a few believers, in the midst of multitudes of fetish worshippers and bloodthirsty savages. If in civilised lands Satan has his own way to a deplorable extent, in the interior of Africa he bears rule with much greater show of power, and with terrible severity in the exactions which, by devil-priests and agents of cruel superstition, he levies upon his deluded subjects and servants.

What with preaching and travelling, Mr. Roe found his time fully occupied. If the former had its difficulties, the latter had its dangers. In fact, after a short time, with journeyings by sea and land, the energetic young man was fully qualified to adopt the language of the great Apostle to the Gentiles, when he spoke of "perils of waters, perils of robbers, perils by the heathen, perils in the wilderness, and perils in the sea." Not only was he troubled by what he was called upon to suffer, but some of the things he saw were very painful to him, as well as a reproach to the civilisation of which he was regarded as a representative. In this account of his life we are following the deeply interesting biography* just published, written by one who knows the Niger country, and there we read:—

> It is impossible to exaggerate the evil results of the drink traffic on the West Coast, especially in the region of the Niger, the wretched tribes there having reached a depth of degradation that is truly appalling. Towns like Bonny and Brass are almost given over to drinking, gin and rum being sold at every few yards in the open streets. We speak with horror of the slave trade, in which our fathers played so prominent a part, but in this notorious gin trade we have something well worthy of being classed with it. It is idle to talk of civilising the negro, and introducing the blessings of European commerce, while we continue to pour into West Africa incredible quantities of gin, rum, gunpowder, and guns. It is well nigh impossible to propagate Gospel truths among a people who are generally found in a state of semi-intoxication; and so long as the detested drink traffic exists, the Church of Christ cannot hope for the success she aims at. Commerce, too, suffers from it to a marvellous extent, for it has been found that the natives who care for gin care little for anything else, and have little to give for that which is profitable to us and themselves. Strong drink is simply swallowing up legitimate commerce.

At Lagos and Little Popo, among native Christians and unrestrained savages, Mr. Roe fought the drink as well as other demons. In Togoland, a German colony, he co-operated with a trader in correcting glaring abuses. It had become the custom of many business houses to pay part of their labourers' wages in drink and tobacco—two bottles of gin and a screw of "negro head" being equivalent to a day's pay. The consequence was that many a man would work hard one day, and spend the next in helpless intoxication. Appeal to the Government resulted in a stop being put to this iniquitous practice. After a season of hard work at Little Popo, the young missionary was laid low with blackwater fever, and the German doctor "gave him up" and ordered his coffin. His missionary colleague, Rev. J. T. F. Halligey, by heroic exertions, got him on board a passing steamer, and signs of recovery came with the breathing of the purer air of the ocean. Arrived at Grand Canary, health and strength came back, and a busy and pleasant furlough followed among friends and kindred in the homeland.

For the best part of two years Mr. Roe administered British churches and did deputation work in the United Kingdom. As in the earlier days, so now God greatly owned his word. Like a true Soldier of the Cross, he again turned his eyes to West Africa, and in January, 1891, commenced his second term of service in Little Popo, with all the old love and ardour. The governor of the colony was hostile to the Mission, and had him arrested on a charge of political intrigue, absurd on the face of it. Just at the moment when it seemed that the work would suffer irreparable damage, the unreasonable governor was superseded by a man of more generous disposition and friendly to Protestant missions, with the result that the work of God went on to flourish. In the years that followed, Mr. Roe travelled in Dahomey, coming to close quarters with its murderous natives; and then in the Jebu country, where the Gospel has made a great impression, Prince Ademuyiwa Haastrup, who visited England last year, being a pillar of the Church of Christ there.

Having, during a visit to England, married a lady of heroic disposition, equally resolved to face the dangers of African life and travel, Mr. Roe was greatly encouraged in his later years of work. He proceeded to penetrate the Yoruba country and push the Gospel cause under many difficulties. With the aid of several worthy colleagues, he made a decided impression in the interior, planting little bodies of believers; and in the midst of the terrible ruins of the drink curse, he set up the Band of Hope. The journeyings in Yorubaland were not without adventurous incidents and anxious moments, but tact and grace wrought wonders, and brought the pilgrim through. As Chairman of the District, an office which in Methodism is associated with large responsibility, Mr. Roe had his hands full, and in regard for others he was wont to forget himself. To the grief of all who knew him, dysentery laid hold upon him at Christmastide, 1895, and after a few weeks of pain and prostration, he yielded his spirit to the Lord whom he had served so earnestly and joyously. His life was full of stimulus to others; and the little book which tells the story breathes the same excellent spirit. It should be put into the hands of all friends of missions, young and old. May God use it in bringing others to Bryan Roe's point of devoted service in the foreign field!

Sunday Defence Work. — A New Year's address has been issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association. The vote of the House of Commons in favour of opening museums on Sundays is attributed to the failure of the Government to oppose the motion as they had done in past years. The Association will use every means in its power to win back lost ground and to protect the workers against the tyranny of Sunday openers. At no less than twenty-two districts altogether Sunday closing has failed, and been followed by Sunday opening. The Select Committee of the House of Lords appointed in 1895 to consider the Lord's Day Act has issued its final report, which states that "The good which might result from giving increased facilities for lectures and music on Sundays would be more than counterbalanced by the increase of paid and practically involuntary Sunday labour, and by the encouragement given to endeavours to make pecuniary profit under the guise of entertainments for the public good."

Mr. McNeill in Manchester.

[By Our Correspondent.]

WHATEVER the present mission may lead to, the special preacher has evidently, during the past week, been burdened by the state of the churches. The coldness, formality, easy-going unconcern of many professing Christians have been laid heavily upon his heart, and his words have been largely addressed to these Laodicean believers and nominal professors. His graphic and terrible powers of portrayal and denunciation have been aimed at startling the careless in Zion, from their slippered ease and comfortable indifference, to the claims of Christ Himself as Lord, and to the awful doom to which men around them are hastening. Salvation a personal matter, a personal surrender, a personal affection between the Saviour and his people, and not a mere matter of church connection, paying pew-rent, and attending the ordinances, these have been the dominant notes, echoing and re-echoing in every talk to business men as well as each evening address.

The meetings of the week have been held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Peter-street, and it has been interesting to notice the steady growth and gathering volume of the congregations. On Monday night, after the big audiences of the previous Sunday, one noticed some degree of slackness. Next evening, however, the place was filled—300 more being present than the night before. On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday the increase was very marked, and hundreds were unable to find seats at all. The same features of steady growth and deepening interest have signalized the midday meetings.

These talks to business men have been attended by many concerned about money-making, the buying of stocks and shares, a large number of them indifferent to or thoughtless of God and his righteous demands—men who have not time, as they say, for religion. To these Mr. McNeill frankly addressed himself, and as in his first midday talk he expounded the story of the stilling of the tempest, and the startled whisper of the disciples, "What manner of man is this?" it was easy to see in many a kindling face the dawn of new ideas about religion, or rather the Christ who is the centre and power thereof.

Before the mind's eye, under the spell of the preacher's telling, the whole scene passed as a present event—the long exhausting day's work, the weary Son of Man, the neglect of the fashionable villa-dwellers, who might have asked Him home for "bite and bed," and who missed the finest chance of their life in despising this humble teacher; the open boat, the rising storm, the sleeping Jesus on the steersman's cushion in the stern, the terrified disciples, the sinking vessel, the startled cry of reproach and terror, "Carest Thou not?" the calm rebuke of the awakening Lord, the stillness which fell at his word on sea and sky—all these led up to a vivid exposition of the meaning of that wondering cry, "What manner of man is this?"

The second business-men's talk, on Wednesday, had for its theme, David in the Cave of Adullam—God's anointed, but as yet rejected, king, persecuted, hunted like a partridge on the mountains; yet gathering all the time his father's folk, and those in distress, in debt, and discontent, to be disciplined and hardened into good soldiers and faithful followers. The use the preacher made of the expression, "his father's house," in pleading with the children of godly parents, was very telling. Grace certainly does not run in the blood, but a godly heredity counts for something, not in the way of merit, but in a sense of kin that should incline the heart to hear.

Daniel, the model of constancy, of a business man whose faith is rooted in God, was the subject on Thursday. The jealousy and malignity of the presidents and princes against the upstart Jew, the cunning plot to snare him, their premature triumph when they caught him at last, were thrown into contrast with the stalwart resolution, the child-like trust in God, of one who was no "bland, simple, innocent," but a shrewd, keen, sagacious statesman, perfectly aware of all their plots and meanness. When it came to a matter concerning his faith and his God, he hatched no schemes to foil their craft, but trusted in God that He would deliver him. More than once in a passing way the preacher lashed out against the critics and the rationalists in diluting or explaining away the positive statements of the old Book. These vigorous protests were received with a murmur of assent and approval which sounded wonderfully like applause.

As a matter of fact, however, vigorous applause, involuntary and unrestrainable, did ring through the hall on Friday, when speaking on "David in the Dumps" (1 Sam. xxvii.), Mr. McNeill declaimed against some of the current worldly maxims and questionable practices in business as dulling the edge of spiritual life and leading on to fainting faith. Then it is, when the day is long, the foot weary, and the clouds heavy, and the road rough, that the devil (with his characteristic meanness) whispers, "It's no use; give it up. God has forgotten you." "I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul." One who was no poet, but an adept at doggerel, might express David's feelings in words like these:—

> God said that He would raise me,
> And set me up on high;
> But mighty Saul he slays me
> In howling Engedi.

David's psalms are among the choicest heritage of saints; but no psalm was born that day when he was in the blues at Engedi.

Thus sharply put, the folly of unbelief became obvious; for Saul could not be mightier that God; and if God had anointed David king, his purpose must stand. Christian men are not bound to make a fortune, not bound to get on; but they are bound to hold on to God and a good conscience by a living grasp of God.

The evening meetings, as the week went on, wonderfully deepened in intensity and evident grip. The audience increased night by night. From the wide residential districts around Manchester, whole companies have come—often by special conveyance—from churches, chapels, Sunday-schools, halls, Christian Endeavour societies, P.S.A., and P.M.E. (an arrangement of initials which greatly puzzled Mr. McNeill when he had to mention it) contingents have arrived to swell the gathering. Broadly speaking, the hall has been filled, not so much by bill-posting as by personal effort and real pains-taking in inducing people to come, and in making it easy for them to come.

Mr. McNeill has dealt with simple Gospel themes, chiefly in narrative form, such as "The three recruits" (Luke ix. 57-62), "Zaccheus (Luke xix.), "The four carriers and the palsied man" (Mark ii.), but for many Wednesday evening was signalised by the vigour and vividity of his outspokenness to indifferent Christians. His subject was the message to Laodicea (Rev. iii. 15-20), and he declared the letter must be delivered to the address on the envelope, and that is, in this case, the churches. Terrible was his description of the well-ordered, well-regulated church, everything spick and span, with its popular minister, its fine choir, its pews crowded by the best people in the town, "the weel-daen, the weel-spoken, and the weel-put-on," in the expressive Scotch phrase; yet all the time the Christ (whose name is over the front) is outside knocking at the door, and his demand for admission is resented as an intrusion. The preacher's intensity of purpose, his evident deep feeling and conviction that it was God's message, made it impossible for any to take offence, but to a quiet looker-on it was perfectly obvious that many were being cut to the heart, seeing themselves and their religious lukewarmness in a new and startling light. Nor did it end without an effective presentation of the way of return, and of the Gospel message.

SUNDAY IN SALFORD.

It seemed to many a daring thing to risk taking Regent's Theatre for the second Sunday's service. It is, for one thing, of great size—holding from three to four thousand. It is in a new district, practically untouched by the interest aroused during the past week. But again faith and united effort have met full reward. In Cross-lane, Salford, we found ourselves in the heart of a vast mass of the labouring and industrial classes. Would they respond to the invitation? Would they come in numbers sufficient to make a fair show? They did. In the afternoon the great house was full. In the evening it was packed — standing and sitting — and hundreds (the doorkeepers said "thousands") were turned away. There can be no doubt that these great gatherings were largely due to the splendid way in which clergymen, ministers, and leaders of all kinds in Christian work have co-operated. To walk up the Regent's-road is to find oneself in a region of P.S.A.'s. Chapels are numerous along the road, and each one has bold announcements of its P.S.A.—a movement which has taken hold here. Now most of these, as well as Bible classes, mothers' meetings, and all kinds of working-class services, were closed for the day, and the members sent off to the McNeill meetings. I pause to mention this, for it is of importance to workers elsewhere. Hearty, unanimous, genuine co-operation on all hands has brought the people. And, of course, having heard this racy preacher, they want to come again—that we all know, but I have been indicating the means whereby the general interest is awakened, rather than dilating on the attractiveness of the evangelist, who would not thank me for personal praise.

It may be noted here that the large choir has lent effective service, and has done credit to the friends who have taken pains in the training of those willing to aid in the singing. Some of the newer pieces in the "New Hymns and Solos" have certainly been popularised, and the choruses have caught hold grandly. One must not attempt to name any particular secretary, leader, or helper in any way; for to specify the most prominent would be to ignore hosts of others who in their assigned posts have rendered equally assiduous service. They are co-operating for the glory of God and not for the praise of man.

A few words as to the services themselves. In the afternoon Mr. McNeill spoke on the healing, in response to her touch of faith, of the poor woman (Mark v.) who had spent her all on doctors without beneficial result. His leading ideas, at which he hammered with all his verve and vigour, were the helplessness of man to save, the simplicity of faith itself, and the personal profit of open confession—such as the Lord, in his wisdom and love, brought the healed woman to make.

In the evening Mr. McNeill took another Gospel narrative for his theme; the young rich ruler (Mark x.), dwelling mainly on the complacency of one who supposed himself to have kept the law, and the way in which the Saviour made it clear that "by the works of the law no flesh is justified," and that He only is "the fulfilling of the law unto righteousness, having met in full the demands thereof." It may be well to illustrate how this evangelist sometimes clenches home his Gospel message by giving here his final appeal.

You have heard my message, nay, God's message to you. Oh men and women, what are you going to do with it? If you reject it you will be harder in heart and nearer the devil than before; but you will be nearer Christ if you accept Him, and "whosoever will let him take"; will you? Come as you are — but as a matter of fact you must come as you are; you can't come as anything else.

In this closing moment, with the Lord beside you to save, and I wonder that his day of mercy still lasts for some of you, cling to Jesus, trust Him, fall at his feet. As honest men and women, enlightened by his Gospel, say now: "Lord, I do, I must take Thee at Thy word, and trust Thee, as my Saviour this night." On his word, I say, "Thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace." "He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life." H-a-t-h, HATH. It is yours, it is yours now. Don't go away without it. Don't look so foolish, so solemn, so rigid. Is it a great fact that you have taken Christ at his word? Then cling to Him, and go away with Him. Now, if you have decided in your heart, will you accompany it with an outward act? Just lift up your hand in token of your inward decision. If you refuse to accept Him you will remember this evening in the judgment day. I charge you, before you go to bed, give yourself to the Saviour. Don't lie down another night, on a Christless bed, laying your head on a Christless pillow, to pass on to a Christless eternity: who can tell how soon? Be sure you decide to-night, and decide aright—your future of weal or woe hangs on it. Take Jesus now and you will never regret it, never. I am going to ask Gipsy Smith to pray: who will hold up their hand to signify decision? Thank God there are hands all over the house (there were hundreds to all appearance). God grant that every one may mean a true honest decision for surrender to the present Saviour.

Thus closed with every evidence of large and blessed result the second Sunday of this three weeks' mission. Already there have been, as those in close touch with the movement know, many and gracious evidences of deep and cheering issues. Many have avowed a spiritual change, and apparently these are but tokens of widespread results yet to be found to the glory of God.

Dr. Comandi's Work. — In response to my letter in THE CHRISTIAN last summer, relative to Dr. Commandi, of Florence, several were led to show practical sympathy for him. The deficit is not yet made up, and this presses all the more heavily on one who is so peculiarly averse to debt. I have lately heard from him that owing to this, steps must be taken to curtail his work. I believe many would come forward and help in this emergency, if they knew how valuable the work is.

Anglo-American Visit to Palestine.—At the end of February Dr. George C. Lorimer, of Boston, expects to conduct a party to Egypt and Palestine, and he may again visit England on his return. Dr. Lorimer desires that a British party might join the American contingent. Arrangements have been made to this end, and on March 6 a party from the old country will leave London to join the American pilgrims at Genoa, whence they will sail for the East. A Christian Convention will be held in Jerusalem. Ladies and gentlemen wishing to join the party can obtain particulars by sending addressed and stamped envelope to Dr. Lorimer, Oriental Tour, 73, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

From South Africa.

A LADY missionary in South Africa who had received from Mrs. Neethling, of Stellenbosch, copies of "Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe," and of two of Mrs. Shipton's books, writes to her:—

"Words fail to express the great joy and deep appreciation with which I received the three books. Those words, "Tell Jesus," have been such a comfort to me. So often I feel the want of more patience and love towards my pupils. And yet I never so truly realised that I could lay all my weaknesses at Jesus' feet, as when those words caught my eye, 'Tell Jesus.'"

Mrs. Neethling also writes:—"I have received a large number of letters from missionaries, saying that the reading of Mrs. Radcliffe's 'Recollections' had been blessed to them; also from young lady teachers, most of them living far away on lonely farms, to whom I sent a couple each of Mrs. Shipton's books.

"We have reason to believe that the work of Mr. Wishard and Mr. Donald Fraser, and the Conference held here in July, have been a great blessing to our young people. We are now looking forward to the visit of Dr. Clark, of the Christian Endeavour; so the Lord does not forget to send spiritual refreshment to our poor distressed land."

Work in Bible Lands.

SIR,—There seems to be an impression in some minds that evangelisation work in Asiatic Turkey is checked, or at least suspended, by recent troubles, and that consequently funds for this, the supreme object of our Society, are not needed as heretofore. This is a mistake. None of the American missionaries have been withdrawn; not one of the chief stations is abandoned; nearly 200 of the native pastors and preachers are still left to labour in the Gospel; hundreds upon hundreds of school teachers and Bible-women are at their post. The colleges are started afresh with numerous students; schools are resumed and children crowd in; congregations gather for worship and hearing the Word; the poor people hunger for the Gospel.

One of the bravest workers in the field writes these remarkable words, "We are grateful for your sympathy to this wretched land, and trust that you will feel that relief work is not finished. More than anything else, perhaps, we need money for opening evangelical work in new places, as well as supporting that long begun. On every hand, even Gregorians, beg us for preachers and teachers."

Asia Minor, however, is only one portion of our Bible Lands field, the other portions—Greece, Macedonia, Persia, Arabia, Syria, ask our aid earnestly, and they need it for medical work, orphanages, mission schools, and for furthering the evangelistic endeavours of the native churches by their own pastors and members. I am sorry to learn how the fund for our regular work has been passed over and forgotten. We need £1000 for that work. Rev. W. A. Essery, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C., is hon. secretary.—Yours most earnestly, KINNAIRD.

The Famine Stricken in India and Persia are exciting the compassion of many. Recently, at the School for the Deaf and Dumb, Llandaff, Mrs. Melville explained the condition of things, to the great interest of her juvenile protégés. A collection was promptly made, and though the little folk are all poor, they willingly gave of their small savings, the sum of £1 10s. being raised, to be divided between this object and the relief of the suffering Nestorians. Thus, it would appear that those who, by a physical privation, come under the influence of loving sympathy, are not slow to respond to an appeal to show a like kindness to others in deep distress. The example set at Llandaff may suggest to other teachers a way to add a new luxury to the lives of their pupils.

Facts about Armenia.—Under the care of the International Association of the Friends of Armenia, the International (Armenia) Bureau has been re-opened and re-organised. It is of the first importance to continue the work of spreading the most recent information and circulating up-to-date literature on the subject. The Bureau is established at 3, Bridge-street, Westminster, where Blue books, histories, travels, pamphlets, and leaflets on Armenia are for sale, and a small reference library of more expensive works and maps is maintained. It is desired to raise a sum of money for the maintenance of the Information Bureau and the cost of the preparation and circulation of literature.

A Village Mission.

AT the Gate House near the village of Buxted between Uckfield and Groombridge there has been carried on for upwards of three years a most successful work for God. It stands at four cross-roads, about two-and-a-half miles from Buxted Station and a mile from the hamlet of Hadlow Down, in one of the most lovely parts of Sussex.

Some six years ago, Mr. Henry Donkin bought a small farm with a gentleman's residence. It was laid upon his heart to do something for the evangelisation of the people. He erected an iron building on his own estate to seat 200 people. From the first numbers came, some out of curiosity, others because they hungered for the word of God. An earnest Christian lady was engaged to visit the people, distribute tracts, and aid Mrs. Donkin with the various meetings and other work. Besides the public services there is a large Sunday-school, a mothers' meeting, band of hope, Christian band, prayer meetings, cottage services, a large circulating library, and other agencies of a benevolent and evangelical character.

The change that has come over the people is simply marvellous. Conversions have been frequent, and some of them of a most remarkable character. The place is often crowded with eager listeners to the Word of Life. They come, in all weathers, immense distances to join in the hearty services. When the building was first opened it was no uncommon thing to see bands of young men loafing about the place to laugh and jeer, and if they came inside it was to disturb the congregation by an early and noisy departure. These have all been converted, or silenced by the rebukes of awakened consciences. The conversion of some has been most striking, and they have become manifest monuments of the transforming power of God.

The work is being prosecuted with vigour, and the Gospel is preached with signs following. At first the expenses were defrayed almost entirely by Mr. Donkin, but now the people themselves feel it a privilege to contribute according to their ability. There is every token of permanent success. Are there not others of the Lord's servants who can undertake similar work in our needy villages?

Revival in Ipswich.

THIS town has recently witnessed the beginning of a work which promises to have far-reaching influences. Last summer a gentleman gave up his business, and devoted himself wholly to the Lord's work. In conference with friends associated with the various churches, it was decided to hold in a large hall a monthly meeting for the deepening of spiritual life. A Prayer Union was formed, which a large number joined.

From the first the meetings were well attended, and many gained the new joy of a fully surrendered life. Especially was this the case when Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich, visited the town. On Jan. 14, the fifth meeting was held in the largest hall in the town. A good audience gathered both afternoon and evening, when Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of Notting Hill, gave addresses.

Scarcely a day passes without some testimony of blessing received at these meetings. Churches in the surrounding country districts are also feeling the effects.

Sandwich Men.—The Bessbrook Institution has opened its third house, at 28, Orde Hall-street, Great Ormond-street. It will supply all that a man wants in private apartments, and will furnish that comradeship and elevating spirit of home association which count for so much in the rebuilding of character.

Stratford Conference Hall.—The annual meeting of the Men's and Women's Mizpah Band was held on Thursday last week. After partaking of tea, Mr. Boardman took the chair, and in a short, earnest address urged that "the trivial round—the common task" should have the King's stamp upon them. The report for the year showed a gross membership 476; 255 open-air meetings had been held, also eighty-seven meetings in mission halls, etc., 100,000 tracts distributed, and 114 pledges taken. Mrs. Fox Butlin congratulated the members upon the result of the petition to the Town Council, re refusing a liquor licence to the Stratford Theatre. 2000 signatures came through the Conference Hall. Mr. William Noble then gave a lively Gospel temperance address.

THE EVANGELIST.

The Gospel Life-Belt.*

By the late C. H. SPURGEON.

I READ, in an American tract, a little sketch written by a gentleman who, having often to cross the great lakes, was in the habit of providing himself with a life-preserving belt in case of need. One night, while he was asleep, an alarm was raised, and he rushed on deck with his life-belt round him, but found that there was no cause for fear. He went downstairs again, and as he lay in bed he had something like a dream, though it was really a waking reverie, and it took this shape: He thought he was on board the great vessel in which all of us are floating on the broad sea of time and that a great and terrible storm came on. There were some men on deck with life-preserving belts round them; they had been laughed at while the weather was calm and the sea was smooth; but as they stood there, with the vessel rocking and the timbers straining, there was none to mock at them, but many who greatly envied the quiet peacefulness which rested on their countenances. You know who these men are and what is their protection. Faith in Jesus is the great life-preserving belt; let the tempest come when it may, faith in Christ will enable us to swim through every flood till we reach the happy shores of heaven.

As this gentleman stood on the deck, and looked about him, he heard one man say, "I was going to buy one of those belts; I lived just opposite the shop where they were sold; and I was often told by friends that I had better get one at once, and I meant to; but I put it off, and started just a little too late to get it, so I was obliged to come without it, though I meant to have one." The gentleman saw this man washed overboard, as the others were who had not the life-belt, and his good intention could not save him. No doubt there are many here who have meant to get the spiritual life-belt, and they mean to do so now, so they say. Ah! heaven is being filled with people who have believed in Jesus, and hell is being filled with people who meant to believe in Jesus, but did not. That is the difference between the two classes, but what a difference it will make between them when they come to die! These are the people who crowd the corridors of perdition, men and women who meant to trust the Saviour, but who never did it. They lived just opposite the places where these life-belts were to be had, and they meant to have had them, but they had them not when the last great storm came on, and so they were lost, and lost for ever!

There was another man who said, "I have been across this sea so often without a belt that I thought I would run the risk once more." He, too, was washed away; and there are some of you, my hearers, who say, "I have lived twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, sixty, or seventy years, and I am not dead yet; I will run the risk for another year." Really, nowadays, nobody seems to grow old. You meet a man of seventy-five or eighty, and he thinks that he will be old some day, but he has known somebody who lived till he was ninety-nine, and he thinks he shall reach the same age. I have heard of an aged farmer who wanted to buy his neighbour's field. He was eighty, and his neighbour was five years younger; so, when his neighbour would not sell him the land, he said to him, "Ah, well! never mind; you are an old man, and I can buy it when you are dead!" That is just the way people talk. "All men think all men mortal but themselves." Here was a man who was five years older than the other, yet he was going to buy the field after the younger man was dead! It is such people who say, "I have been sailing over this sea so long without a life-belt, I will risk it still longer." Thus they also are lost!

There was another one on board who had a life-belt, and he seemed very pleased when he put it on, but when the waves washed him off the vessel he floated for a few moments, and then down he sank. The fact was, his belt was a counterfeit; somebody had told him that the other sort was so very expensive, and here was one that looked even better. True, there was a whisper that it would not stand the needful tests; but the man did not care much about that, for his belt looked as good as the genuine one, and he had the credit of standing with those sensible people who had the true thing, so it answered very well until he came into the surging sea. So there may be some of you here who have counterfeit life-belts. You are members of the church, you come to the communion table, and everybody respects you. Ah! but, with a sham religion, how will you do in the swelling of Jordan? What will you do when heart and flesh fail? Oh, ere it be too late, may God take away from you the sham, and give you genuine godliness—a new heart and a right spirit!

I rejoice that there are so many here who have on the genuine Gospel life belt. Standing in Jesus Christ, they are not afraid. They can without a tremour face floods or flames, and the devouring deep; they can even be—

Fearless of hell and ghastly death,

Knowing that they shall be safely landed on heaven's peaceful shore, to go no more out for ever.

NOTES.

At the Great Assembly Hall in Mile End-road, Brothers Weaver have been busy through January preaching and singing the Gospel. During the first week nearly a thousand Christians gathered nightly for prayer. Subsequently the Gospel message has been sounded out each evening, by the elder brother in earnest speech, and by the younger, in sweet song. There have been many interesting cases of decision. On the Saturday evenings of the month special efforts are being made by processions with music through the neighbourhood to draw in the careless outsiders to the meetings.

The special mission service in Belfast, began some months ago by Rev. Henry Montgomery and his staff at the Shankhill-road Mission, has been crowned with large success. Courts, alleys, and common lodging-houses were visited during the New Year holidays, and batches of the very poor have been fed, clothed, and spiritually admonished. The faith and zeal of the workers have been rewarded in the reclamation of drunkards, the restoration of prodigals, and the conversion of others. Mr. Montgomery's congregation are not only working, but giving towards the prosecution of this effort. On a recent Sunday they subscribed £1200.

A twelve days' mission by Mr. E. P. Telford in Sunderland has resulted in a gracious revival. The evangelist is now at work in Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Mr. J. Harris, of the Evangelization Society, has seen not a little blessing in a fortnight's mission at Piddington, Oxon.—Pastor Owen Tidman has been preaching the Gospel in different parts of Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire with much blessing.—Mr. Henry Thorne has had an encouraging eight days' mission at Rev. Samuel Hester's church, St. Thomas-square, Hackney.

Mr. Moody has entered on his Boston work with much energy, and the meetings in Tremont Temple are very largely attended. He is addressing himself chiefly to the Christians with a view of stirring up the Churches to greater effort for the evangelization of the unchurched masses. Mr. J. H. Burke is leader of the song service. Rev. Sam Jones took part in one of the early meetings.

In New York the work at Cooper Union continues under the guidance of Rev. A. C. Dixon. The Christians of the city have been stirred up by Mr. Moody's visit; efforts will now be made to reach the unconverted with the Gospel message, with various friends to help with the preaching. Mr. Sankey has charge of the praise, and holds the audiences with his solos, throwing in now and then an incident or Gospel appeal.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's mission in Ottawa has been marked by Pentecostal times of blessing. The vigorous Bible expositions are much appreciated.—Rev. G. C. Needham has been at work in Brooklyn for some months past.—Mr. John Currie is assisting in the Philadelphia campaign.

At the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting on Monday two Irish missionaries told of the work they are engaged in for the Irish Evangelical Society and Congregational Home Mission. Rev. A. Mackinlay spoke for the South and West; and Mr. Hugh Brown, of Newry, told of the wonderful blessing upon the country stations where Rev. Thomas Whiteside and he are seeking the perishing. Hearts were gladdened by the testimony, and prayers for Ireland were offered by several friends.

An interesting eight days' Gospel mission was brought to a close on Sunday last at the Congregational Church, Orange-street, Leicester-square. Mr. H. Smith (formerly of the Jubilee Singers) was the missioner. The mission work connected with the church is of growing interest.

Speed the Gospel.

Far beyond the ocean's foam,
In the prairies of the West,
Where the painted Indians roam;
Warlike passions in their breast;
Let mankind the Gospel bear
In this opening glad New Year.

Where Aurora flashes bright
Over tracts of endless snow,
And beneath its lurid light
Walks the fur-clad Esquimaux;
Let mankind the Gospel hear
In this opening glad New Year.

Where on India's burning soil,
Many a weary dark Hindoo
Wears his strength in ceaseless toil,
With no hope of heaven in view;
Let mankind the Gospel hear
In this opening glad New Year.

Where the sons of Ishmael ride,
Fearless o'er the desert sands;
Where rich Jews their treasure hide,
Exiled in a thousand lands;
Let mankind the Gospel hear
In this opening glad New Year.

Where the opium smoker lies,
Wrapt in clouds of deepening gloom,
Never from his couch to rise,
Save when carried to the tomb;
Let mankind the Gospel hear
In this opening glad New Year.

Where the islands of the East
Stretch towards the rising sun;
Where Papuans vilely feast
On the spoil their spears have won;
Let mankind the Gospel hear
In this opening glad New Year.

Where the negro drags his chains,
'Neath the scourge that drives him on;
Through the bush and o'er the plains,
Every hope of freedom gone;
Let mankind the Gospel hear
In this opening glad New Year.

Where the demon drink incites
Britain's sons to deeds of shame,
And each pleasing prospect blights,
Branding with the drunkard's name;
Spread the Gospel far and near Through this bright and glad New Year.

Young Abstainers' Union.

A cheery and hopeful tone pervaded the annual meeting of this organisation, held in the Lower Exeter Hall on Saturday afternoon, the president, Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton, in the chair.

Some months since the Union came to a crisis in its history, and the question was considered of merging it with one of the other existing temperance societies. After prayer and conference, however, it was determined to carry it on on the old lines. Miss Annie B. Salmon, who has been devotedly working as honorary secretary for several months, was able to report that during the past half year the Union has been passing from the condition of passive existence into one of aggressive action. Enough has already been accomplished to cause the liveliest hopefulness for the future. The members support two cots in the children's ward in the London Temperance Hospital.

Hearty words of counsel were spoken by Mr. Buxton, Mrs. W. S. Caine, and Messrs. Gwynne, J. E. Budgett Meakin, J. T. Rae, and Chas. Wakely, the addresses being interspersed with sacred music.

YOUNG HELPERS AT THE ALBERT HALL.

THE work carried on in connection with these Homes has long since assumed a national, not to say an international, character. From its wide scope it furnishes wonderful contrasts. Anyone attending first the recent Waifs' Supper at the Edinbro' Castle, and then the exhibition of Saturday afternoon at the Albert Hall, and looking "on this picture and that," could not fail to be struck with the changes that are produced by the operations of the Mission.

In these latter days science is laying hold of what used to be deemed utterly waste material, and turning it into valuable social products. In like manner Dr. Barnardo, as a true and up-to-date Christian scientist, is laying hold of raw humanity, which in the olden time was thought only fit to be "cast as rubbish to the void," and he is manufacturing out of it some of the fairest specimens of young manhood and womanhood.

These Albert Hall displays for the benefit of the Young Helpers' League, show Dr. Barnardo's work in its brightest aspects, and they are therefore singularly enjoyable. The vast auditorium at Kensington Gore was well filled on Saturday, and the audience were more than repaid for their presence. There were most of the old attractions, and a few decided novelties, but every item in the lengthy programme was a testimonial to the thoroughgoing nature of the training these boys and girls receive, and to the care shown to fit them for future lives of happy usefulness. We cannot describe in detail the song, the instrumental music, the drill, or the gymnastics of the children, but we imagine that if the "Young Helpers" themselves had been the performers instead of spectators, they could scarcely have done it better, if so well.

Canon FLEMING presided, and, though he did not make a speech, his fine recitation of Bishop Bickersteth's poem, "Wanted, Men," was in itself a telling argument for such work as the Homes are doing and illustrating. The Duchess of Somerset was present to receive purses for the work, and to distribute badges or crowns to the most distinguished of the Helpers and the gymnasts. A "tour by limelight" through the varied branches of the work of the Institution, and some diverting "animated photographs" on the screen, brought to a close a very pleasing and enjoyable afternoon. We hope the meeting will result in many recruits to the ranks of the "Helpers."

The Coming Revival.

IN the current issue of The Homiletic Review, Dr. C. H. Payne, of New York City, begins a series of articles on "The Coming Revival." He is under the impression that the American Church is on the eve of a revival epoch unprecedented in her history.

Setting forth its characteristics, he holds that the revival that is needed will be a revival of original Christianity—a realisation of Christ's own type of Christianity; also a revival of righteousness of life, individual, corporate, social, and civic. Dr. Payne believes that, more than ever before in the history of the Church, the subjects and the agents of the revival will be young people, banded together in leagues, societies, and unions, and that the revival will introduce an awakening of missionary zeal and activity such as the world has not seen since Apostolic days.

The characteristics desiderated for America hold good for the Church in all lands. Many are longing for revival; with prayer and work, a setting of the heart on God, and a proclamation of his truth, it will assuredly be realised.

Work among Lepers.—The "Occasional Paper" of the Mission to Lepers has given place to a monthly entitled Without the Camp. The first number gives particulars of work in different Eastern lands among these sorely afflicted members of the human family.

Medical Missions in India.

THE North India School of Medicine for Christian Women was started in Ludhiana a little over two years ago. Dr. Edith Brown, the principal, is supported by a small but well-qualified English staff.

A very earnest appeal on behalf of its operations comes to us from Miss Harriet Crawfurd, of Meerut. The skill of women doctors in India, she says, is now so fully recognised that the demand is far beyond the supply. Crowds daily visit the hospitals and dispensaries, where the energies of the staff are fully taxed to cope with the work. Then there are multitudes of women in secluded homes who would welcome a lady doctor and gladly pay for help and advice.

In this school at Ludhiana the great desire is to train up native women for the work. No religious instruction is given in the Government hospitals, and native Christian girls can better be trained in such places as the North India School, which is quite unsectarian. Additional fully qualified lady doctors from this country are urgently needed; one has lately sailed. Qualified assistants and nurses are also required.

Miss Crawfurd appeals to her English sisters to devote their young lives to the blessed Christlike service. She also suggests that, in cases where Christian women cannot, for sufficient reasons, go to India, they might pay for the cost of sending a substitute. One friend of the work is paying for the education of a substitute, and giving her a university medical training. The overwhelming needs of India's women, spiritual and physical, are pleas that ought not to be resisted.

Miss M. W. Brown, 23, Cameron-road, West Croydon, is hon. sec. for the London committee.

Anti-Infidel Crusade.

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH writes:—"Since the closing of the notorious Hall of Science, the headquarters of the infidel party for thirty years, unbelievers have responded very liberally to an appeal for funds to send atheistic lecturers to all parts of the United Kingdom. We have made this movement to a very large extent abortive, through having the hoardings of the towns visited posted with big bills, 'Beware of Infidelity,' and thousands of our leaflets have been given away at the meetings.

"This method of warfare, while it effectually holds infidelity in check, is very expensive, and unless help is at once forthcoming, the work in which I have been engaged for more than twenty years must cease, as in addition to this burden I am still indebted £50 (balance of the legal expenses incurred in defending the action brought by the atheistic party), the sequel of which has been the closing of the Hall of Science. As infidels readily supply their leaders with funds for the purpose of attacking Christianity, I feel it is only necessary to make this pressing need known to have it supplied."

Mr. Bradlaugh would be pleased to visit any place where infidelity is at all prevalent, either to lecture or conduct evangelistic services. A friend has offered to give £5 towards this fund if nine others would give a like sum, or £50 is subscribed without delay. Mr. Bradlaugh's address is 70, King's Cross-road, W.C.

A Cheering Work in France.

A LADY who is known to us, but who desires to remain anonymous, writes from an ancient market town in France:—"In the sixteenth century this was a stronghold of Protestants, but in the civil wars of that time the town was burnt and the Protestant pastor with it. Since that martyrdom no pastor or missionary has ever visited it. My husband and I feel it our solemn duty to do all we can for the advancement of God's Word in this town, as He has certainly directed our steps hither. At V—— M—— we had some benches which we used to put in our large kitchen for meetings. We put them in an empty room here, and sent out invitations. The first time eighty-four came, the number increasing each time till last Sunday 450 came to a whitewashed brick-floored room we hired. But we had only seats for seventy.

"I asked a lad here lately if he had ever read the Bible. He replied, 'What is that? Is it a newspaper?' This is the kind of ignorance that reigns in this now dark region, where three centuries ago the grand church of this town used to be filled with Protestant worshippers. The same persons have come again and again, and seem very attentive indeed; and have asked us to lend them Testaments to read at home, which we have gladly done. My husband had given notice to the sous prefet that he would have these meetings, and this magistrate sent for him and after asking him many questions, said, 'You have my hearty sanction. I see it is for the good of the people, though I myself am an atheist.' He ordered the Commissioner of Police to aid us if necessary. We are just able to keep ourselves and pay our own rent, but we are quite unable to buy more seats. Those we have were given us by a lady, since dead. We want to get at least two hundred more seats, for we cannot expect people to attend a meeting and have to stand for two hours. Besides, there are the aged to consider. We open our hearts to your readers, and should be greatly cheered if they would send through you £18 or £20 for this purpose, each bench costing about eight shillings."

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins.

THE meetings of Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins in Edinburgh and district have closed. The final meetings have been full of interest and encouragement.

The meeting in the Free Assembly Hall on Sabbath evening was a memorable one. Dr. J. H. Wilson, of the Barclay Free Church, delivered an address reviewing the blessings that had come to Scotland during the past quarter of a century—from the first memorable visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to the present time. His testimony to the far-reaching influence of Mr. Moody's work was deeply interesting. Dr. Wilson also spoke with great heartiness of Major Whittle's recent meetings in Edinburgh and of his work on behalf of the prisoners in the Scottish gaols.

Major Whittle's closing address was from the text, "Christ died for our sins." At no time has he spoken with greater spiritual power and evangelistic point. The address was followed by a large after-meeting. Already, as the result of this meeting, there have been conversions and noble confessions of Christ.

Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins have greatly endeared themselves to the workers in Edinburgh by their whole-hearted consecration to the work.

The visits which Major Whittle has made to the Calton prison in Edinburgh with the hearty co-operation of Captain Christie, the governor, and Rev. Mr. Campbell, the prison chaplain, have been productive of much blessing. The evangelists now proceed to Kilmarnock, Greenock, Dumfries, Airdrie, Aberdeen, and Thurso; after which, Woolwich claims them between April 18 and 30. They are to be in London during May.

The late Mr. Gordon Oswald.

THE continental papers publish tributes to the memory of Mr. James Gordon Oswald, who died recently at San Remo, as reported in our last issue, at the advanced age of 79. In L'Eglise Libre (Montpellier, Hérault), we read:—"Many Christian missions in England and on the Continent, more especially the Evangelical churches of Italy, have sustained a great loss in his departure. A Scotchman by birth, this distinguished Christian year by year passed the winter at San Remo, and one of his chief activities was the diffusion of the Gospel in Italy. In this he laboured personally in various ways, but he also interested himself in the promotion of God's kingdom in France, and gave largely in aid of our evangelisation societies. And the manner in which he gave enhanced the amount of his offerings.

"Mr. Oswald was one of those men with whom it is impossible to associate without edification. The Christian sweetness, calm, and benevolence of his bearing told what was within, and revealed a deep piety, an habitual communion with God. In the Italia Evangelica, Sig. Petrai, pastor at San Remo, writes that Mr. Oswald died in the Lord's own peace, surrounded by loving friends, his cousin and his son having been with him for several weeks. His remains have been laid to rest in the beautiful land which he loved so much, and for which he prayed so fervently. May the memory of his life and faith stimulate those who mourn his loss, to serve the Saviour as he did."

The Great Chicago Mission.

THE nineteenth year of the Pacific Garden Mission has now closed. The meetings held every night during the year were attended by more than 200,000 persons in the aggregate, and were larger than in any previous year. As far as can be judged not a meeting has been held without conversions. The audiences range from four to five hundred, and embrace persons of every race and strangers from every part of the country.

The mission, through correspondence with those who have been blessed by it, is in close touch with almost every part of the English-speaking world. Through these converts, who do not forget the influences which reached them, and who are striving to serve the Master in the place where their lot is cast, the mission is making its power felt more widely year by year. The mission has certainly solved the problem how to reach and hold the masses. It is by the simple, hearty, friendly, and honest preaching of the Gospel.

Situated in darkest Chicago, with no attempt to conceal the hatefulness of sin and the wretchedness it invariably causes, it finds night after night, and witnesses constant proofs of the power of the grace of God to change the human heart, as its managers say, to exhibit the same transforming power as is described in the Gospel of John and in the Acts of the Apostles. Two Gospel wagons are now carrying the message of life every evening to different sections of the city, and are reaching six or eight hundred persons every day.

Visits to the Bridewell and the prisons and to the sick in hospitals have also become a prominent feature in the work of the converts. The Sunday afternoon meeting for the study of the Bible has drawn together a class of nearly one hundred, men chiefly, in which many are trained in the skilful use of the Scriptures. A bureau of information through which inquiries are made for long-lost friends or relatives seems to meet a pressing want.

While no one can estimate the amount of good the mission has accomplished in for Christ, it is recognised by city officials as a crime-preventing agency and as such worthy the support of all order-loving people. The cost of the mission the past year was a trifle over 6200 dols. Of this sum about a quarter came from Mrs. Colonel Clarke, the superintendent, who in addition to giving her time to the mission is by far the largest contributor to it.

On a recent Monday morning the ministers listened to an account of the work of this mission as furnished in the words and appearance of three of the men who have recently been converted in it. Each one of them had fallen low, but by the grace of God was brought to a consciousness of his real condition as a sinner, and led to break away from the power of sin and enter upon the service of God. All of them are now in positions of trust, and are earnest in their efforts to help those who are still

IN BONDAGE TO SATAN.

One of the three who addressed the meeting was an ex-convict, another a reformed drunkard, who, with his wife, is keeping a home for the rescue of erring women, and the third an Irishman, who from great wealth and high social standing in his own country had been brought, by the loss of property and his own habits, to a condition in which he felt himself an outcast and a disgrace, not only to his family, but to human nature.

The story of the conversion of these three men and the account of the work they are now doing ought to be repeated in as many of our churches as possible. It would convince those who may have begun to think that one's faith is a matter of indifference that there is nothing so true as the Gospel, and no means so certain to help men to their feet as the bold and constant proclamation that the wages of sin is death while the gift of God in Jesus Christ is eternal life.—Congregationalist (U.S.A.).

Theatrical Tea Meeting.—Mr. William Forbes held one of his meetings for theatrical women on Friday last at Waterloo-road Chapel. After tea, hymns and solos were sung, and several addresses were given.

The Death-Bed of Elisha.

A BIBLE STUDY.

(2 Kings xiii. 18.)

THIS is a truly pathetic scene. The prophet who for more than sixty years had been identified with the fortunes of his people lay dying; yet his interest in the progress and prosperity of the Church of God was increased, not diminished. We last heard of him anointing Jehu (ch. ix. 12). Since then he must have been a quiet but interested watcher of events, most probably a constant "witness" for God, but of this we know nothing certainly.

By the side of the dying man of God stood Joash, the King, an unattractive personality, yet not without symptoms of good, in that he was affected by the calamities, real or apprehended, that beset the people of God (v. 14). When godless men are not indifferent to the state of God's people, there is much hope for them.

We can learn several lessons from this incident.

1. The death of leaders is not to mean inaction, but energy. We are not to be paralysed by fear or apprehension because "the chariot of Israel," etc., as we think, is taken away. But the future action is to depend on the command of God, not our own idea of what is right and suitable.

2. Let us view this story as a parable—The Bow and the Arrows, v. 15.

(b) The Arrows.—These are the powers and opportunities of life. The quiver is very full, but let us take a few arrows and see if they will fit on our bow. There are faith (1 Th. v. 4), love, hope, self-denial, self-forgetfulness, courage, patience, endurance, sympathy, self-reliance, etc. How do these fit on to our bow of life? Let us pass our hand over it and see. Then there is another arrow every Christian should shoot—the word of God—its warnings, promises, invitations, comforts. Do these often fly off our bow?

But note again, there were three steps to the victorious action.

(1) Taking the Bow, v. 16. An honest determination to act, an obedient avowal that the bow should be examined and stretched.

(2) Opening the Window, v. 17. Looking out for the sphere of action. Where can we best use these arrows from the consecrated bow?

(3) Shoot, v. 17. Vigorous action, not simply idle contemplation. It is no good examining our bow if we do not intend to use it.

But let us not overlook one all-important truth, namely, the power came through the Prophet's hands being on the King's hands. So it must be God's power over us, controlling us, guiding us, in our actions and intentions, if they are to be victoriously successful. (Ps. xviii. 34: cxliv. 1.) The king sought the prophet, who at the same time was yearning to bless, so we must seek God's guidance when we want to know the reasons of failure, the secrets of success.

And the seeking was followed by a definite personal act of examination, determination, dedication. When the means of victory were pointed out, they were employed (v. 17, 18). But the king failed to grasp how great was the blessing intended. It was complete victory, "even to consuming" (v. 17). Yet there was failure, the paralysing grip of unbelief stayed the king's hand. The unbelief of man limits the power of God, individually, congregationally (Mark vi. 5, 6).

In many ways we can miss a great blessing; through thinking little of the sign we may lose the things signified. Let us carry that thought into our Bible study.

If we use with faith in God the means He has provided us with, how great may be the results. Never let us forget—the want of greater success in the Church or the individual is with ourselves, not God.

Santals and the Famine.

I SEE you occasionally have references in your valuable periodical to "The Indian Home Mission to the Santals," under the charge of Revs. H. P. Boerresen and L. O. Skrefsrud; a Mission that is now in its thirtieth year, and has been wonderfully owned and blessed of God.

In your issue of August 12 an interesting account was given of their "Industrial Santal Mission Colony in Assam," the population of which is composed of various tribes besides the Santals, amounting to 1986, of whom 1021 are Christians. Mr. Bahr, to whom reference was there made, and the leader and manager of the Colony, as you subsequently reported, died on August 26; he was a most devoted, earnest Christian, and his loss is deeply felt. Mr. Buncknoldt has taken charge in the meantime.

Our late beloved father, who passed to glory in May, 1894, in his ninety-fifth year, took a warm interest for long years in this Mission, and was the means of establishing committees in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dundee, London, and Liverpool on its behalf; his action stirred up a deeper interest in Denmark, and there, as also in Norway and Sweden, are helpful committees. In his own house he had every month a missionary meeting, to which missionaries of various societies were cordially welcomed. Sir William and Lady Muir take a deep interest in the Mission, Lady Muir and her daughters having at one time visited Ebenezer. The number of Christians is now 9,721, if not more. In a letter of September last, Mr. Boerresen speaks of a blessed baptismal service held on the bank of a large tank, where all gathered, the Santal native pastor baptizing forty-eight converts from heathenism. The service lasted three hours, and was very solemn.

At a monthly gathering at Ebenezer, the head station, on Sabbath, Nov. 29 last, 2000 gathered at the midday service in church, and more than 300 partook of the Lord's Supper. The day was Mr. Boerresen's birthday, and in the early morning he was awakened by a chorus of about 400 voices joining in singing in Santali the old hymn, "Guide me, O Thou Great Jehovah!" It was a day of joy to the dear old missionary, who has now passed his seventy-first year.

As I am secretary and treasurer of the Edinburgh branch, I am seeking help in this time of need and famine. Mr. Boerresen wrote in November:—"The scarcity and consequent distress are daily increasing. The paucity of rain this year has caused a large proportion of the Santal paddy (rice) crop to wither and die, so that they will only be able to harvest four to six annas in the rupee. The need cannot but be very great here by and by, and will begin to assert itself with intensity about March, till when the small stocks of food may be expected to last. How I wish I could make my cry to all the friends in Europe heard, to arise and help! It is a very, very sad time before us. We can weep and cry to Jesus for his help and comfort, but if our friends do not come to our aid, what then? The Santal heathen's salvation is my greatest sorrow and anxiety. The need of the Christians, however, will be great indeed. Your blessed father used to say, 'Do not fear; the Lord will provide,' and the Lord Jesus Himself says, 'Fear not, only believe,' so we shall go on in in his strength, hope, and faith."

I may add, the Mission is under trustees.

Maritzburg, Natal.—The Y.M.C.A. has decided to increase the present accommodation by the continuation of the existing buildings to the street line, and by the erection of an additional storey. The committee having considered about thirty applications for the post of general secretary, Mr. A. W. Frodsham, of Lovedale, formerly of Bournemouth, was unanimously appointed. Regret was expressed at the resignation of the present secretary (Mr. W. Lucas).

The Birds' Nest.—We sometimes wonder whether in the multiplicity of appeals for help, and the ever-increasing number of charitable institutions, our old friend "The Birds' Nest" is being forgotten. We write this hoping it may meet the eye of someone who used to help and has lately forgotten all about it. We need just now £1000. Once before when we were in similar straits we called our friends together for prayer, and while we were praying—that very day—a friend in China was writing a cheque for £1000. (Miss) Ellen S. Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

ARE FREQUENT "CELEBRATIONS" SCRIPTURAL?

SIR,—When truth is presented out of proportion it ceases to be truth.

In photography a hand unduly advanced in front of the figure becomes a monstrosity. Owing to the frequent recurrence of holy days in the Church of England during the first week of the New Year, the administrations of the Lord's Supper have been of very frequent recurrence. The times appointed being at or about 8 a.m. and noon, my attention has thus been specially drawn to the subject of frequent "celebrations."

(1) Is this custom Scriptural?

(2) Does it tend to edification?

I am aware that the infant Church was in the habit of "continuing daily with one accord in the Temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people, and the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Were these "signs following," viz.:—

(a) Christian union and fellowship.

(b) The voice of praise and thanksgiving.

(c) Favour with all the people.

(d) A daily ingathering, by the Lord, of sinners saved through the Gospel, visibly manifested as the result of daily service and "celebration," there would be no doubt regarding the Scripturality of the procedure, but I confess my inability to recognise any one of these "signs following," but rather in proportion to the frequency of these services is there not a marked absence of spiritual life and Christian love?

I have been struck in turning to the Epistles to observe that the Supper of the Lord is treated of only once, then indeed most fully and solemnly, and I am led to the conclusion that had frequent "celebration" been the means of grace appointed by God, which so many in the present day suppose it to be, we should have found frequent reference to it in all the Epistles, instead of its being mentioned only once in one Epistle—and the apostle Paul would hardly have written "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel," but rather "Christ sent me first to baptize and then to administer holy communion."

Limiting myself to only some of the many allusions in the Epistles to the work of the ministry, I find that the preaching of the Gospel in all its fulness, and not the administration of the Sacraments, is the chief duty of the Christian minister.

"The word of faith which we preach."

"We preach Christ crucified."

"Woe to me if I preach not the Gospel."

"We preach not ourselves but Christ Jesus."

"The dispensation given me fully to preach the word of God."

"Preach the word."

The foregoing quotations suffice, I think, to establish my proposition.—Your obedient servant,

LIPWOOD.

[We believe that the word "observe," as applied to the Lord's Supper, is more in accordance with the general purport of Scripture than either "celebrate" or "administer." Both these latter seem to us to convey a meaning which we do not find in the Word of God, in connection with this ordinance.—ED.]

"BACK TO CHRIST."

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Spurr's able and timely article in your issue of the 7th inst. on the above subject raises yet another question. Apart from the authority which we attach to the writings of Paul, who never saw Christ in the flesh, and whose writings those who hold that the several penmen of the sacred Word were all under the personal inspiration of the Holy Ghost accept as of equal authority with any other of the books of the Bible, is it a fact that our Lord Himself really made no allusion to the sacrificial and substitutionary aspect of his death? I should infer that He did

(1) Because Peter, who all will admit was a personal friend and constant companion of Christ, evidently so understood the nature of the death on the cross. In his first Epistle, chap. i., 18 and 19, he speaks of redemption with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, and Peter was at any rate an intelligent Jew, and knew the full force and significance of his words.

Then in the second chapter, v. 24, he states that Christ his own self bare our sins on his own body on the tree, and that by his stripes we are healed, and in the following chapter, v. 18, he says that Christ died, "the just for the unjust," both tolerably plain references to the substitutionary character of Christ's death.

(2) Supposing there had been no mention of the atonement in the four Gospels, it would surely not follow that our Lord had made none to those who were afterwards to preach the glad tidings. And when we remember that He promised them the Spirit who was to teach them all things, and to bring all things to their remembrance, whatsoever He had said unto them, and that we are told on more than one occasion that they understood not at first what after Jesus was glorified they remembered concerning Him, we are, I think, justified in inferring that Christ taught the doctrine of the atonement.

(3) But as a matter of fact our Lord did clearly point to the view of his death referred to above.

Did He not compare Himself in John iii. 14 to the brazen serpent, and in v. 15, inform Nicodemus that faith should, by reason of his own coming death, give eternal life to those who would otherwise perish? Again, in John xii. v. 32, our Lord's "I if I be lifted up" confirms the allusion in the third chapter, and again accepts it.

In John x. 15, Christ says: "I lay down my life for the sheep, referring to his death as a substitute. How otherwise can we understand his references to "laying down his life for his friends," and others of similar import?

No, Sir, depend upon it when the great Baptist, who like Peter was an intelligent Jew, bore witness to Christ at the outset of his career as the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," he too, knew what he was saying. We do not get beyond the atonement by getting "back to Christ."—Faithfully yours, W. W. P.

A Rich Man's Will.

THE following is an extract from the Last Will and Testament of SIR THOMAS MACLURE, Bart., of Redford House, Colinton, Midlothian, who died in 1893.

"WHEREAS, I have always been of opinion that this world's goods should not be devoted solely to personal enjoyment, but that there are other and nobler ends to which the same should be applied, in my life I have endeavoured, as far as in me lies, humbly to carry this my view into practice, and for many years I have devoted almost half of my income to the support of religious and charitable objects; it is in this spirit, therefore, that I leave, in default of my issue, the ONE HALF of my estate and properties to trustees for religious and charitable purposes as is hereafter done in more technical and legal language. And I leave the other moiety to those relatious hereafter specified, and I exhort them to bear in mind that wealth and competence should always be enjoyed within moderate bounds and limits, and that unto whomsoever much is given, of them shall much be required at the Last Great Day, when we shall all stand before the Judgment Seat, and render unto the Almighty an account of our stewardship." Then follows the distribution of his property.

The same sense of responsibility is expressed in the diary of the late GEORGE PEABODY, whose statue is at the back of the Royal Exchange, London, and who left millions in his lifetime to be expended for the poor of London:—

"I have prayed my heavenly Father day by day, that I might be enabled, before I die, to show my gratitude for the blessings which He has bestowed on me, by doing some great good to my fellow-men."

"Of thine own have we given thee, O Lord our God; all this store that we have prepared cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own." (1 Chron. xxix. 16.) J. G. G.

Cheshunt College.—A reunion of old students took place at the College last week which lasted three days. The object was a renewing of college brotherhood and consideration of various questions affecting spiritual life and ministerial usefulness. The meetings commenced with a communion service, presided over by Rev. R. Balgarnie. At subsequent meetings, much time was spent in devotional exercises. Various papers were read, followed by discussion, in which Principal Whitehouse, Professors Andrews and Johnson, and most of the brethren took part.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Adrift in Naples. by Helena von Poseck, is a little story which will charm young and old alike. Founded on fact, it shows the King of Italy to be a sovereign of noble character and exemplary life. (6d. and 9d. Partridge & Co.)

Gleanings in the Gospels. By Rev. Henry Burton, M.A. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) A series of studies rich in thought and suggestion. Several of the chapters are reprinted from The Expositor. The author's treatment of the human element in Scripture is not altogether to our mind; and in some other chapters there are statements which are either unguarded or indicate a questionable tendency. Taken as a whole, the book is a valuable contribution to literature on the Gospel story.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges is a series which includes many volumes of great value. The latest addition to the list is ISAIAH: CHAPTERS i.-xxxix., edited, with introduction and notes, by Rev. J. Skinner, D.D., Professor of Old Testament Exegesis in the Presbyterian College, London. (1s. Cambridge University Press.) The pages do something to explain the setting of the prophecies, but very little to bring out their heights and depths. The book is full of limitations, and hardly likely to help in "realizing" the prophet and his work. Needless to say that the section which has secured to Isaiah the title of Evangelical Prophet (reserved for another volume) is regarded as belonging to a later age. Dr. Skinner mentions most of the latest doubts and newest difficulties regarding chapters in the earlier portion of the book, and these he sets forth with a brevity which, while it meets the exigencies of a handbook, by no means suits an exegetical and expository work.

ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSION TOUR. By Rev. Walter Bradbury, B.A., formerly vicar of Skerton. This is a plain unvarnished tale, likely to interest such as know the author and his work. (1d. "Christian Herald" Office, 20, Tudor-street, E.C.)

Mr. W. Wileman, of 27, Bouverie-street, E.C., has issued in booklet form an abridgment of the dialogue of THIS IS MY BODY, written three centuries ago by Archbishop Grindal. The quaint style is as attractive as the Protestantism of the argument is convincing.

The Y.W.C.A.

At the annual tea and meeting of the Stoke Works branch, an interesting report was read by the hon. sec., and Rev. R. Male gave an address.

At the Falmouth branch, an address was recently given by Mr. J. Baillie, of the South African General Mission, on his work in Mashonaland. Miss Bickerton, who is leaving for South Africa, gave a farewell address.

The annual meeting of the Tulse Hill and West Norwood branch was held on January 11. The report was read by the hon. sec., Miss Waltham. Addresses were given by Miss Ardill, Miss Ellis, and Rev. E. L. Roxby, rector of Cheltenham.

The annual report of the Holy Trinity (Beckenham) branch has been issued. It started in November, 1895, with a membership of ninety-five, and the work has steadily progressed, and there are now 150 members on the books. One has gone to Palestine as a medical missionary, and one is being trained for the Zenana Mission. Miss M. Crowden, the hon. secretary, will be pleased to welcome any to the Bible classes every Sunday, and on the second and fourth Tuesdays of the month.

The annual conversazione and conference of the teachers' department was held at the headquarters, George-street, Hanover-square, on Friday, January 15. There was a good attendance. Lord Kinnaird presided. The report read by the hon, secretary, Mrs. Amand Routh, stated that the membership numbered 707, an increase of fifty-seven over the year 1895. Delegates attended from several provincial centres, and cheering reports were given of work at Guildford, Leeds, Carlisle, Norwich, Paignton, etc.

Y.M.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Hertford Association was held on Monday week. The secretary, Mr. J. D. Hardie, reports an encouraging year's work.

At the public meeting of the Morpeth Association on Thursday evening Mr. W. S. Wilkinson gave a cheering report. An eloquent address was delivered by Rev. Mr. Wylie, of Newcastle.

The annual social gathering of the Kingston-on-Thames Association was attended with much success. An interesting address, entitled, "A Chat on Y.M.C.A.'s the World Round," was given by Mr. J. E. Budgett Meakin.

A breakfast for members was held at the Cape Town Association on Christmas Day. Over two hundred young men were present. Sir Gordon Sprigg, Prime Minister, occupied the chair, and the proceedings were of a helpful character.

The members of the Dublin Association have promised £700 towards the £6000 required for the new premises in Sackville-street, and it is hoped that the house will be opened free of debt. It is expected to take possession of the premises in March.

The secretary of the Auckland (N.Z.) Association writes that the last year's work has been characterised by many encouraging features. Young men accustomed to the drapery and grocery businesses could now secure good appointment in and around Auckland, as trade has considerably revived.

Col. W. W. Pilkington, the president, entertained the members of the St. Helen's Association at a New Year's social reception. Upwards of three hundred were present. Since the secretaryship of this association was undertaken by Mr. Geo. Holmes considerable developments have taken place.

Mons. Em. Sautter, secretary of the National Committee of French Y.M.C.A.s, writes:—"A new group has been constituted in North-east France, with three Associations to begin with. Two small Associations have started, at Valenciennes in the north, and at La Roche-sur-Yon in the west."

Association work is making headway in China under the guidance of Mr. D. Willard Lyon, general secretary of the Tientsin Association. There are reported now to be twenty-three Associations. The additions are chiefly of Associations in schools and colleges at Shanghai, Kinkiang, Hankow, Nanking, etc.

Mr. W. H. Seagram gave a reception at the Oxford Association, and conducted services in the Association building. Following this, Mr. W. R. Lane conducted a mission to men, January 11 to 14. Increasing audiences testified to the interest aroused by the meetings. Cases of professed conversion were reported, and great blessing attended the mission.

The first "At Home" held at the new rooms of the Coventry Association took place last Thursday evening by invitation of the president, Mr. J. K. Starley. Upwards of 230 guests were present. In the course of the evening the general secretary (Mr. J. H. Haise), stated that the membership had gone up to 150, and the sum of £200 had been collected towards the debt of £250.

The National Committee of the Swedish Associations has appointed Mr. Ivar Sandgren, of Berlin, as travelling secretary. He will enter on his duties in April. The Stockholm Association has entered on its spacious new building. There is a flourishing Association at Gothenburg. On the whole, Y.M.C.A. prospects in Sweden are bright.

Christian Endeavour.

The Endeavourers of Louisville sent 1200 letters to the inmates of the State penitentiary at Christmas time.

Three members of a St. Louis Christian Endeavour Society are on the way to Africa as missionaries.

The first society of Christian Endeavour among the Japanese in the United States was organised a few weeks ago at Santa Cruz, Cal.

A Christian Endeavour Society, holding weekly prayer meetings at the noon hour, has been organised among the young people in a Pittsburg office.

Twenty-seven Albany Christian Endeavour societies were represented in a recent successful service in the penitentiary. After the meeting each prisoner was visited in his cell.

Two hundred Italians are employed on a city contract two miles from York, Penn. These men were destitute of religious privileges, and one of the Christian Endeavour societies of the town has begun holding Gospel services with them.

During recent revival services in a Harrisburg, Penn., church, one of the Endeavourers held afternoon meetings for the children. As a result of this, thirty-five boys and girls have joined the church. A junior society will be another outcome.

There has been reported from Chicago a band of fifteen Endeavourers, who, as a result of the Washington Convention, meet weekly for Bible-study and preparation for evangelistic work, and after the meeting take entire charge for the evening of the services in a rescue mission.

General Secretary Baer, of the Christian Endeavour Society, recently made a trip to the Pacific coast in the interests of the San Francisco Convention. He found interest in the approaching convention high among the young people and the churches, and preparations well advanced. The convention meetings will be held in two great auditoriums, one seating ten thousand persons and the other six thousand.

Temperance Notes.

The annual meeting of the Dublin Women's Temperance Association was held on Jan. 14, in the Friends' Meeting House, Eustace-street. There was a large attendance. The annual report, read by Miss Edmundson, gave an encouraging account of the year's work, and interesting addresses were given by various friends.

The second anniversary festival of the London United Temperance Council will be held in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., on Friday evening, January 29. An exceptionally strong platform and programme is announced; the chief speakers include Lady Henry Somerset, Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart, M.P., and Canon Wilberforce. Full information as to the work and methods of the council may be had from the secretary, Mr. C. Pinhorn, 19, Memorial Hall, E.C.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on a ten-day mission at Cassland-road Wesleyan Chapel, South Hackney.—For blessing on a fortnightly mission at Finsbury Park Congregational Church, commencing Sunday week,—For a mission in Paisley, conducted by Mr. William Thomson.—For a mission, by Sister Rose, at Primitive Methodist Chapel, Chiswick, from Jan. 17 to 25.

Soldiers' at Shoeburyness.—There is great need of a Home for soldiers at Shoeburyness. In the barracks there is no suitable room available for meetings. I have heard the chaplain lamenting the want of a room in which to meet with the men in an informal way. Even the branch of the Army Temperance Association struggles on with only the regimental school with its bare and uninviting walls. Until recently there was no place of Christian resort in the town for the men to go to, although temptation is ever present in the shape of a large public-house outside the gates. General Desborough, Miss Shubrick, and other friends are taking up this matter; unknown to them, it was put into the hearts of some ladies visiting Southend to open a small comfortable room here as a temporary measure. This has been much appreciated. Some progress has been made towards collecting the sum needed to provide and furnish a suitable building. W. M.

Shoeburyness.

Scottish Notes.

Rev. John Robertson, of the Glasgow City Temple, has been presented with a purse of 100 sovereigns by his congregation, at a meeting of some 3000 people to welcome him on his return from America.

An excellent and many-sided Gospel work is carried on at Bethany Hall, Glasgow, among a very poor population. New Year's services were held when many were attracted to the hall, and received much spiritual stimulus.

Mr. Henry Grierson, of Craigend Park, Liberton, has given a noble example of generosity towards the Home Mission of the Church of Scotland, by sending £100 for the employment of a parish missionary in a poor district in Glasgow.

The Christian Prayer Union, conducted in Aberdeen by Mr. W. P. Gordon, of 40, Skene-terrace, has been a channel of much spiritual stimulus to its members. At a recent social meeting of the union an encouraging account was given of its operations.

Mr. H. A. Long, who has for fifty years carried on aggressive Protestant work in Glasgow, is about to visit Australia, though in his seventy-first year. He was last week presented with very tangible tokens of public esteem at a gathering in the City Hall, some £1200 having been collected to be spent on his behalf in different ways.

The Women's Association for Foreign Missions in connection with the Established Church—in view of their need of missionaries, and the very small number of women who are offering themselves for mission service—have appointed a special sub-committee to consider the whole question, and the best means of arousing interest in this matter throughout the Church. Two missionaries are urgently required by the Association for Madras and Poona—the latter must be a medical missionary. Within the last few months four ladies from New Zealand have sailed for India and China, and become missionaries of the Church of Scotland.

Irish Notes.

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the Irish Temperance League was held in Belfast on three days of last week, and passed off successfully. It was resolved to raise during the next five years a sum of £10,000, to aid in carrying on work amongst the young.

During the past week Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, delivered a series of sermons and addresses throughout the counties of Cork and Kerry. His earnest Gospel discourses were much appreciated by the members of the various Protestant churches, and produced impressions for good.

Rev. Henry Montgomery and his band of workers in the Shankill-road Mission, Belfast, are to be congratulated on the success of the appeal recently made to the congregation of Albert-street Presbyterian Church to subscribe towards the erection of the new mission buildings. At morning service £1000 was promised or paid, and at evening service £170 additional was subscribed. This is a noble contribution, and it will greatly encourage the pastor in the efforts he is making to evangelise the non-churchgoing masses.

Parents' Mission.—On Thursday last Christian Evidence Classes in connection with the Deptford branch of this mission were inaugurated in St. John's Hall, King-street. Mr. Tarry delivered an address on "The Failure of Secularism," which he pointed out "was antagonistic to the purity of the home. Mr. C. Seaich spoke on "The Triumphs of Christianity."

"The Song of the Shirt."—A local magazine at Birmingham called Edgbastonia, demonstrates how some of our worst social evils still exist, fifty years after Hood's pathetic poem first roused the pity of the world. The vicar of St. Jude's thus describes the life of the frequenters of a club which he has founded:—"In the cases of thirteen girls, taken at random, in the room one evening, it was found that they worked at very heavy work, for the most part for from ten to eleven hours a day (allowing the dinner-hour), and that their wages varied from 8s. down to 4s. per week. How can they keep body and soul together under such circumstances? One need not wonder that they are what we find them. Yet one hears of even worse cases. Conceive a young girl, and a skilful and excellent needlewoman, making baby's clothing all day in a basement room by artificial light, for the magnificent sum of 4s. a week, and having to bring her own food into the bargain! 'Impossible!' someone says. Well, but to the certain knowledge of the writer, this is true to-day, and is being done in one of the most fashionable and extensively patronised shops in Birmingham." Are not luxuries and comforts bought at such a price a social curse?

International S.S. Lessons.

THE BOLDNESS OF PETER AND JOHN.—Acts iv. 1-14. GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 12.

THIS lesson continues the story of the miracle performed on the cripple at the gate of the temple. Two things:—

I. THE APOSTLES IMPRISONED (1-4).—The word which points the lesson of these verses is the significant word "Howbeit" (4). Before that the record is one of powerful and apparently successful opposition. Very formidable were the persons who led the opposition (1). "Priests," engaged in the temple service, through whose influence Jesus had been condemned. "Captain of the temple," who had under him a body of Levites to keep order in the temple. "The Sadducees," one of the chief sects of the Jews, who did not believe in angels or spirits, the resurrection or a future life. They were priestly aristocrats, and were favourable to the Romans. What could two humble men like Peter and John do against such formidable opponents?

Picture Peter preaching in Solomon's porch. His theme is "Jesus and the resurrection" (2); which all the leaders of the opposition had reason to dislike. Then the arrest, sudden and with some violence (3); and then imprisonment. Does not that look like successful opposition? For the time the apostles are silenced: Have not their enemies scored a victory?

"Howbeit many believed" (4). We should have expected quite a different result. "Therefore the people were afraid to confess; and the apostles afraid to preach." Would not that have seemed a likely continuation of the story? But what seems like failure is turned by God into a means of success. His onward, conquering march is not arrested by human opposition. Men light their martyr fires, let loose the lions in the arena, incarcerate the witnesses of Christ in gloomy dungeons, sit together in council and frame decrees "against the Lord and his anointed"; with what result? "Howbeit many believe." Canute's attempt to turn back the incoming tide was not more futile than the efforts of the most powerful opposition to prevent the work of God.

II. THE APOSTLES BEFORE THE SANHEDRIM (5-14).—The Sanhedrim was the great ecclesiastical court of the Jews. It consisted of seventy-one members, who are described (5) as "rulers," the chief priests, heads of the twenty-four courses"; "elders," heads of families who had a seat on the Council; and "scribes," writers and interpreters of the law. Of the four names specified (6) nothing is known of John and Alexander. Annas had been high priest from A.D. 7 to 14. But so powerful was his influence that though his son-in-law Caiaphas now filled the office he was still regarded by the Jews as high priest. These were the men who had condemned Jesus to death. The two apostles needed courage to appear before them. What specific promise of Jesus was calculated to support them at such a time? (Read Luke xii. 11, 12.)

The title of this lesson directs our thought to "the boldness" of the apostles. Note three things:—(1) Wherein it appears. It is easy to speak for Jesus among those who love Him; but who does not find difficulty in confessing Him among his enemies? The apostles did this, even in the presence of very powerful adversaries. More than this, they charged the Sanhedrim with the guilt of murdering their Messiah (10). It required greater courage to say this in the Sanhedrim than to the multitude in Solomon's porch. The lives of the apostles were in peril. The very form in which they were questioned (7) showed that the Sanhedrim desired to secure a conviction against them for the use of magical arts, or for working a miracle, not in the name of God, but of a crucified malefactor. Knowing this, yet note the calm, dignified courage of the apostles.

(2) What was its source? "Filled with the Holy Ghost" (8). From Peter's previous history we know that it was not natural to him. He could be impetuous; and on impulse could do bold things. But he could be cowardly too. There is no explanation of the change except that the Holy Ghost now filled him. To make the timid brave is still the work of the Spirit. He has made children fearless in witnessing for Christ even though death threatened them. He can make you strong and courageous.

(3) The effect it produced (13, 14). Their enemies were impressed by it. In men who had not been trained in the schools (unlearned) and belonging to the common people (ignorant), they were surprised at such ready and fearless speech. They had seen something like it before. The Master appeared in the disciples, his Spirit dwelt in them.

Obituary.

REV. J. F. GARDNER.

Rev. James F. Gardner, B.D., of the Free Church Mission, Bombay, died recently from typhoid fever at his home in Gwalior Tank Road. Mr. Gardner was the son of a missionary, and was born in Poona in 1861. He took his degree at the Edinburgh University, and arrived in India in 1888, where he has laboured as Professor of History in the Wilson College, Bombay. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner had only returned about a month ago, after spending about a year and a-half in Scotland and on the continent of Europe. Mr. Gardner's health did not appear to have benefited greatly, but he took up his work with vigour till the Christmas vacation. His illness was of only five days' duration.

MR. W. N. WEST.

The Record announces the death of Mr. William Nowell West, at his residence, 30, Montague-street, Russell-square, W., in his eighty-third year. Mr. West was well known, and as widely esteemed, amongst Evangelical Churchmen. He took deep interest in religious work, and was closely identified with the London Jews Society (of the committee of which he was chairman), the Church Pastoral Aid Society, and kindred organisations. He watched with the greatest care the progress of Evangelical influence in the Metropolis, and was for some years a member of the London Diocesan Conference. His activity in philanthropic work was also marked, and the Bloomsbury Savings Bank, of which he was for many years the actuary, owes much to his wise judgment and ability

THE BISHOP OF ST. DAVID'S.

The Bishop of St. David's (Dr. W. Basil Jones) died on Thursday last at his residence, Abergwili Palace, Carmarthen, from an affection of the heart following on a severe illness of some week's duration. Born in 1822, he was the eldest son of Mr. William Tilsley Jones, of Gwnfryn, Cardiganshire. Educated in the first instance at Shrewsbury, under Butler and Kennedy, he proceeded thence to Oxford, where he won distinction in various directions. He was Classical Moderator in two years, served his year as Senior Proctor, was three times Select Preacher at Oxford, as well as once at the sister University, and was public examiner in theology in 1870. From 1859 to 1865 he was Prebendary of St. David's from 1867 to 1874 Archdeacon of York, and in 1873-74 Canon Residentiary of York, in which county he held charge. He was also for some time Examining Chaplain to the Northern Primate. In 1874 he succeeded Bishop Thirlwall in the See of St. David's. During his twenty-three years episcopate he has ruled his diocese faithfully and well. Of late years his health has been far from good, and in 1890 Dr. John Lloyd, the Vicar of St. Peter's, Carmarthen, was appointed Suffragan Bishop, taking his title from Swansea. The late Bishop was the author of a considerable number of works, including several volumes of sermons. He published in 1856 The History and Antiquities of St. David's, in the writing of which he was assisted by Mr. E. A. Freeman.

Sympathy with Armenian Sufferers.

AN address was recently given by Rev. Krikor Behesnilian on "Armenia and its People," at Eaton Church Room, W. He expressed himself strongly against his people's emigration, and being compelled to surrender their native land to the Turk. He pleaded for the spread of the Gospel in Turkey as the real need of the country; and maintained that English influence in Turkey is strong beyond what people in Great Britain imagine.

In some hearty words, Rev. Charles A. Fox expressed deep sympathy with Mr. Behesnilian and his labours. The congregation was deeply impressed by Mr. Behesnilian's story, and contributed over £13 towards the religious and relief work of Tarsus Evangelisation Society. The Orphan Home at Marash for fatherless girls, now under Mrs. Behesnilian's management, is making progress.

The McAll Mission.—In a letter by Pastor Theodore Monod, published in McAll Mission Quarterly, he says: "Time will show, and has already begun to show, how far-reaching a movement Mr. McAll originated. I venture to think that the progress of evangelical truth in France—that progress which is now arousing such bitter opposition and calumny—is due, in a large measure, to the diffusion of the Gospel through the length and breadth of our land, by means of the McAll Mission. May I point out that it will be well, as far as practicable, not to depart from the original type of the réunion McAll, which had much to do with its popularity and success, namely, several short speeches and plenty of lively hymns."

Personalia.

Mr. W. J. Gladwin, of the India Watchman Mission, Bombay, has been suffering from illness, but is now slightly better, but in a very enfeebled condition.

Rev. Dr. Matheson, the blind preacher, of St. Bernard's Parish Church, Edinburgh, intends to resign his pastorate at an early date, and devote the whole of his time to literary work.

Lady Henry Somerset, last week, sustained a nasty contusion of the forehead by a runaway van colliding with her carriage near Westminster Bridge. She was conveyed to Canon Wilberforce's house in Dean's Yard. Later news reports her gradual recovery.

Mr. W. S. Caine was welcomed to Allahabad by the various native temperance societies, the members presenting him with eulogistic addresses. In reply, Mr. Caine spoke at length on temperance, especially on that aspect of the temperance movement with which India was concerned.

Rev. C. S. Morgan, who has for some years laboured with quiet devotion among the lepers on Robben Island, near Cape Town, has reluctantly resolved to leave the island through ill health, and has tendered his resignation to the consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa.

Mr. W. G. Anderson, of the Lower Zambesi Mission, has passed through the press the Gospel of St. Mark, in the Sena language, for publication by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Mr. Anderson has also constructed a grammar of the language, which will be issued shortly. The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. R. W. Hutchinson, 6, Croxteth-road, West Dulwich.

Rev. M. E. Barakat, of Damascus, Syria, whose portrait and sketch appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN, has been addressing meetings in different parts. He expects to visit Scotland and Ireland shortly, and is open to lecture on his experiences in the East, also to give Arabic lessons and translations. He may be addressed, care of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Rev. J. Mountain, president-elect of the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, has resigned his pastorate of Emmanuel Church, Tunbridge Wells, which he has held for the last eight years. He has left the Connexion. The Court of Chancery recently decided against altering the articles of Faith of the Connexion, one of which affirms that "infants ought to be baptized," and Mr. Mountain, having several years since accepted "believer's baptism," has felt compelled to withdraw from the Connexion. An effort is being made to induce Mr. Mountain to remain in Tunbridge Wells, and continue his ministry in another building.

The New Hebrides.

THERE are reports that the New Hebrides are likely to drift into the hands of the French, who are gradually acquiring land and absorbing trade by means of subsidized steamers. Sir George Turner, Premier of Victoria, replying to a deputation from the Presbyterian churches, missionaries, and others, promised to introduce the subject in the Federal Council at Hobart; also to confer with Mr. Reid, Premier of New South Wales, with reference to the renewal of the joint subsidy formerly given by New South Wales and Victoria to Australian steamers trading with the New Hebrides. The French Government refused to join the British in prohibiting the sale of arms and liquor to the natives, but he would ask the British Government again to urge France to alter her resolution. He believed that France did not desire to annex the islands, but he held a promise from the British Government that the consent of the colonies would be asked before any change was made.—Times.

Calcutta.—Rev. John Lamb, Calcutta, in a recent letter to the convener of the Church of Scotland Mission Committee, tells of vigorous work. They have not only a very large number of students, but they have more inquirers and more thoughtful young men coming to the missionaries to learn the way of salvation this year than during any recent year. Every Sunday Mr. Lamb spends four or five hours in religious conversation and Bible-readings with individual students in search of the truth.

Tea to Drovers.—On Friday evening last there was given in St. Luke's Parochial Hall, North-road, Cattle Market, the annual tea to the drovers and their wives of the Islington Market, among whom Mr. Stenart works as missionary. Over 200 attended. A meeting was held which was excellently addressed by Rev. R. Glover, Rev. R. Dawson, and others. A parcel of tea, containing 50lb., sent by one friend, and 25lb. provided by another, were sufficient to give each man a half-a-pound on his leaving the hall.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has taken up his residence in London, and will for the present occupy a furnished house in Lennox-gardens.

Canon J. Taylor Smith, of St. George's Cathedral, Sierra Leone, is mentioned as likely to succeed Dr. Ingham as Bishop of Sierra Leone when his resignation takes effect.

The Bishop-elect of London and Mrs. Creighton celebrated the silver jubilee of their marriage a few days ago, the family assembling at Peterborough Palace, where a large house party is being entertained.

Under the auspices of the Church Pastoral Aid Volunteers, a series of addresses on "Christianity in Practice" are being arranged for the Tuesdays and Thursdays in Lent, in St. Bride's Church, Fleet-street.

The special committee appointed to report on the applications for the Principalship of King's College recommend the appointment of Rev. Dr. Robertson, Principal of Bishop Hatfield Hall, Durham, as successor to Prebendary Wace.

Archdeacon and Mrs. Canham, who have been labouring in the North-west Territory, Canada, are at present in this country. They are seeking to raise funds for the building of a church at their station, Selkirk, to which they hope in due time to return.

The Archbishop of York has proposed that a South Yorkshire bishopric should be established, with Sheffield as the centre of the see. Controversy has arisen as to the most desirable centre, and a strong plea has been put forward on behalf of the historic town of Doncaster.

The Bishop of Liverpool, speaking at his annual "Quiet Day" for the clergymen ordained since the foundation of the see, held up Moody, Spurgeon, and Canon Liddon as model preachers in their separate spheres, and commended his clergy to adopt expository preaching as an important item in their studies for the welfare of others.

The Islington Clerical Meeting, held last week in the Wilson Memorial Hall, discussed "The Mind of the Church of England on certain Important Points as set forth in in the Articles of Religion." The various speakers asserted the Protestant character of the Articles, and maintained their recognition as the true and authoritative standard of the faith of the Church.

Congregational.

Rev. George Snashall, B.A., Victoria Park Tabernacle, has entered on the tenth year of his pastorate.

Mr. C. Silvester Horne sails this week for the Mediterranean, and hopes to return in time to resume his ministry at Kensington Chapel on the first Sunday in April.

At the annual meeting of the members of Finsbury Park Church, Rev. Llewellyn H. Parsons presiding, the secretary reported that there were now 682 members on the roll.

A scheme is being considered for working under one pastorate the Gidlow Mission, Wigan, for which a new chapel has just been opened, and the mission recently started at Abram, for which a new chapel will be opened next month.

Rev. W. Latham Parker, Littlemoor Chapel, Glossop, is delivering a series of sermons on Protestantism. He was induced to undertake these by reason of the recommendation that was recently given to Roman Catholics to turn their attention to Nonconformists.

The P.S.A. Society at Mawdsley-street Church, Bolton, has now a membership of 932. The income for the year has amounted to £586, and 1445 volumes have been distributed in prizes. The membership of the society at the Great George-street Church, Liverpool, has reached 1470—the highest number yet recorded in its history.

Rev. Henry Sturt, retired minister, recently read a paper before the Leeds Nonconformist Ministers' Association on "Winds of Doctrine." He reviewed the most conspicuous movements of the day as the higher criticism, the evolutionary theories of religion, and the Socialist propaganda. Touching the first mentioned, he referred to the immorality of the methods employed, the audacious tampering with ancient records to suit preconceived theories, and the psychological construction of history.

Calls.—Rev. J. Fielden, to New Windsor, Salford; Rev. Robert Berry, of Islington, to Hallfold, Whitworth; Rev. Winning Russell, of Hawick, to Selkirk E.U. Church; Rev. O. L. Roberts, Pwllheli, North Wales, to Netherfield-road Tabernacle, Liverpool; Mr. Alexander Barber, secretary to the Leicester Temperance Association, to pastorate at Wymondham; Rev. A. A. Savage, to Ingatestone (all accepted).

Baptist.

The chapel at Kegworth, Leicestershire, has been thoroughly renovated.

Broadmead Church Sunday-school, Bristol, reports 650 scholars, of whom 292 are members of the church.

Rugby Baptists have celebrated their centenary, it being one hundred years since Sir Egerton Leigh, Bart., the first pastor, erected the first chapel at Long Lawford; the building was removed to Rugby in 1803.

At the ninth anniversary of Rev. A. B. Middleditch as pastor of the North Finchley Church, the secretary reported that the membership was 181, and that there had been a net increase of fourteen during the year.

Portmahon Chapel and Schools, Sheffield, are to be pulled down; on the site is to be erected a chapel with school beneath, in accordance with modern requirements. The estimated cost is £4000, of which nearly £1000 is in hand.

At Abingdon Church the senior deacon, Mr. Coxeter, has entered upon his seventieth year of membership. Although in his ninety-first year, he conducts a Bible-class for young men, and fulfils his appointments on the plan of the village mission.

The three oldest ministers in the denomination are Rev. John Aldis, who began his ministry in 1830; Rev. R. Wallace, of Tottenham, who began in 1834; and Rev. W Underwood, now of Burton-on-Trent, who began in 1836. Dr. Angus has now completed his eighty-first year.

A new mission-hall has been erected at Hawley, near Dartford, where for the past seventeen years a good work has been carried on by Mr. James Allen, colporteur. The building seats one hundred persons, and with the site has cost £180. At the opening services £16 was realised, leaving £80 to be raised.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon announced at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday that his sermons will in future be published weekly, in pamphlet form, after the example of his father. The first number appeared on Thursday last, entitled, "God Speed the Plough!" Special terms are offered by the publishers (Messrs. Arthur H. Stockwell and Co., 17, Paternoster-row, E.C.) to those who can take a large number of copies for distribution as tracts.

Calls.—Rev. John Neighbour, of Cirencester, to Retford; Mr. Denison Webster, of Brighton-grove College, Manchester, to Mount Olivet Chapel, Burnley; Mr. A. T. Brainsby, Brighton-grove College, to Bethesda Church, Barnoldswick; Rev. J. S. Flook to Carrickfergus; and Mr. F. C. M. Buck, of the Midland College, Nottingham, to Hillsborough, Sheffield.

Methodist.

A special committee of the Bible Christian Connexion has prepared a scheme in order to secure a more efficient training for candidates and probationers for the ministry. The students are to be made familiar with evangelistic work, and to have frequent opportunities of preaching.

Four young men, trained at the Aliwal North Mission (Primitive Methodist), have been accepted for missionary labour on the Zambesi. No care is being spared in bringing Mrs. Buckenham home from the Zambesi in comfort. Arrangements have been made for her entertainment at Kimberley and Aliwal North till strong enough to embark for England.

The report of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Mission states that the need for suitable premises in which to hold church meetings and classes arising out of the work at the Free Trade Hall is becoming more and more urgent. Full particulars are given of the returns of membership at each of the branches of the mission, showing how the spiritual work has steadily prospered quarter by quarter during the year.

At the meeting last week of the Wesleyan General Chapel Committee, it was reported that the chapel loans are being repaid in a most satisfactory manner. With regard to the securing of sites for extension, a circular is being sent to superintendent ministers. The following practical sentence will find an echo from many quarters: "Even if not needed for subsequent enlargements, vacant land around chapels and schools, securing air and light, is of vast importance for congregations and scholars.

At the meeting, last week, of the London Council, Rev. T. G. Selby read a paper on "The Quality of the Typical Methodist Congregation looked at from the Preachers' Standpoint." In the course of the paper it was held that the typical congregation has little or no doctrinal knowledge. Mr. Selby complained that the carefully reasoned sermon was deemed wearisome, while anecdotal preaching was sure to attain to fame. This accounted for the degeneracy of Methodist congregations as compared with those of fifty years ago.

Presbyterian.

It is thought probable that Rev. Dr. Mathews, general secretary of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, will visit the mission-fields of Japan and other countries shortly.

The Westbourne Grove, London, congregation purpose giving a call to Rev. G. A. Johnstone Ross, United Presbyterian, Bridge of Allan, to fill the pulpit so long occupied by Dr. Morison.

The Chalmers Church, Melbourne, of which Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes was at one time the pastor, has been closed, the bulk of the congregation having moved out to the various suburbs.

The Presbytery of London South has adopted a resolution "recognising with very great satisfaction the growth of the movement for the formation of Free Church Councils in the country, and particularly in the Metropolis."

Rev. J. D. Landels, Malo, New Hebrides, addressing the congregation of Silvertown last week, gave an account of his work on that island, where he has laboured for ten years. During a brief furlough, he has put through the press the Gospels of Mark and Luke, and also the Book of the Acts, in the language of the islanders.

Dr. Pentecost's resignation of his charge at Marylebone, in order to accept a call from a congregation in Yonkers, New York, was not sustained at the meeting of the London Presbytery North last week. This action on the part of the Presbytery was taken, in the interest of the Marylebone congregation, and of the Church at large.

At the thirty-fourth annual missionary meeting of Park Church, Highbury, very encouraging reports were submitted concerning the work that had been done during the year at Hoxton Mission. There are now nearly 200 communicants there, a thriving Sunday-school of 682 scholars, and a vast variety of agencies at work for the spiritual and social welfare of the district.

Society of Friends.

The representative body of Friends has just issued a stirring appeal to "the other churches in the United Kingdom" in connection with slavery in Zanzibar and Pemba, urging united action in behalf of "over 200,000" slaves in those islands under the British flag. Unless immediate action occurs, there may be an apprenticeship system fastened on the helpless people, and slavery be thus legalised for years to come.

Theophilus Waldmeier and wife, late of Mount Lebanon, are at present actively engaged in procuring sympathy and monetary help in behalf of "The Insane in Syria," a most helpless and degraded, yet very numerous class; £10,000 is required, and, among others, Sir Richard Tangye is rendering help nobly. The institution will be above Beyrout, on the way to Brumana. Scotland is contributing handsomely, but much remains to be done.

The annual conference of Friends' Guild of Teachers met at Manchester, from the 6th to the 8th inst., and had a very cordial and hospitable reception. Besides able papers and discussions, how to make provision for disability and old age by some system of insurance or pensions, occupied much earnest thought, which will doubtless result in some wise arrangement for teachers.

Fallen Asleep.

At Saffron Walden, Mr. Arthur T. Johnson, who had been prominently associated with the Abbey-lane Congregational Church and the Y.M.C.A.—At Wakefield, Mr. John Watson, who expired very suddenly during service at the West Parade Wesleyan Chapel.—At Leeds, in his eighty-seventh year, Rev. S. Taylor, a supernumerary Wesleyan minister, attached to the Leeds Brunswick circuit.—At Haverthwaite, near Ulverston, Carlisle, Canon R. H. Kirby, for fifty years vicar of the parish, in his eightieth year.—At Croydon, Mr. W. H. Whiteman, one of the oldest deacons of the Baptist Church at West Croydon.—At Rochdale, Mr. Ely Fielding, who had been associated with Millgate Baptist Chapel choir for thirty years.—At Caistor, Mr. G. A. Levick, deacon of the Congregational Church.—At Shepshed, Mr. M. Smith, sen., whose connection with Charnwood-road Baptist Church extended over half a century.—At Rhyl, Mrs. Aubrey, widow of Thomas Aubrey, the celebrated Methodist Welsh preacher and orator, at the advanced age of eighty-seven, having survived her husband nine-and-twenty years.—At Heyshott, near Midhurst, Rev. Thomas Hooper, who was in his ninety-third year, and had been rector of Heyshott for the last fourteen years.—At Attercliffe, Sheffield, Mr. Stephen Lister, one of the oldest members of Zion Congregational Church, at the age of seventy-eight.—At Faversham Church, Mr. Wm. Robertson, deacon and treasurer of the Congregational Church, also treasurer of the local branch of the London Missionary Society.—At Cloverhill, co. Donegal, Mr. Jas. Henderson, an earnest Christian, aged seventy-three years.—At Westport, Mr. Thos. Keidy, aged eighty-eight years.—At Clooneen, Ballymote, Mr. Wm. Shaw, aged ninety-eight years.—Rev. Dr. Stubbs, Senior Lecturer of Trinity College, Dublin.—At Hove, Rev. David McAnally, formerly for upwards of thirty years Vicar of Penge, aged seventy years.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, January 18, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OUR young readers are asked to take notice that in future their page will, as a rule, be 19 instead of 15.

As we intimated some weeks ago, a full biography of the late veteran evangelist, Mr. Richard Weaver, is being prepared by Rev. J. Paterson, White Memorial Church, Paisley-road, Glasgow. Any friends having information to give of the work done by Mr. Weaver in different parts of the country in former and recent years, are requested to communicate with Mr. Paterson.

The famine in India is making some persons uneasy, not merely on account of the poor sufferers, but on account of our past and present administration of the country. Every farthing that can be raised for the distress ought to be sent, but there appears to be need for overhauling our policy; the continuance and usefulness of our rule require it, if we are to accept the testimony of such a writer as Colonel H. B. Hanna, late commanding officer at Delhi. This experienced and highly-placed official thinks that the millions which have been spent upon "military lines running through uninhabited wastes, and on fortifications which defend nothing but the troops they inclose," would have been better spent upon the multiplication of irrigation canals and commercial railways, and the improvement of country roads. At the time of the terrible famine of 1877 similar things were affirmed by other officers; it is disheartening to find the same complaint twenty years later.

All the missionary societies are asking for contributions towards a special Indian Famine Fund of their own, on the ground that in several of the provinces there is a vast amount of keen suffering of a character that the Government cannot be expected to deal with. One of the most pressing needs is clothing, many of the half-famished natives being clad in rags such as an Italian beggar would throw aside. This causes in certain cases as much suffering as hunger. At this time of the year the mornings, evenings, and nights in India are bitterly cold. The Famine Code does not authorise the Government to provide garments, so that this must be done by private charity. The death of so many parents also leaves a vast number of orphans unprovided for, who should be taken care of in some way till old enough to work. And there is a special call on English Christians from such of their Indian fellow-subjects as have made a profession of faith in Christ, to the great detriment of their worldly position, at this time of want and special poverty. This appeal to the churches will, we are sure, not be made in vain.

That a poor Armenian should have been done to death in the streets of London by a band of young ruffians, is a thing to make Englishmen bitterly ashamed. He was not assaulted because he was an Armenian—possibly only because he had a foreign look; for our roughs have a fierce antipathy to anyone not of the national breed. Yet, as we know, the neighbourhood where the crime was committed is well worked by Christian men and women. Clearly, there is much need for increased Gospel effort, which is the only antidote. Hard by is a church where, a few days later, six young fellows, who had been won from the music hall, were received into church fellowship.

Whatever may be the issue of the diplomatic struggle of the Powers with Turkey, it is very satisfactory to learn from the papers laid before Parliament that the Government of this country has been so energetic, and to some extent successful in bringing the Powers into agreement to insist upon the discontinuance of persecution and the reform of abuses. This shows that the agitation of last year was not in vain; and there is a sense of relief in knowing that the feelings of the people have been reflected in the action of the Executive. The country has never desired war, but it has always been persuaded that the Powers, if agreed, could easily bring the Sultan to his senses.

A Frenchman who was deputed last year by the Society for the Study of Social and Economic Questions to investigate the subject of English Trade Unions, has given a report which ascribes some high qualities to their members. The question of daily bread does not absorb the thoughts and direct the efforts of these men. It seems to him that high moral and deep religious convictions go hand in hand, especially among the miners, "nearly all of whom are Methodists and local preachers." A good word from a Frenchman for religion and for Methodists is remarkable. He would find further cause for admiration if he were to search out the many happy cases in which masters and men settle their differences in a reasonable way, and are helpers one of another in things highest and best.

A curious project has been mooted in the Jewish Quarterly Review for starting an English "Church of Israel," with a view of converting the English to a modified Judaism. This is an attempt to turn the flank of the societies for the conversion of the Jews to Christianity. Mr. Oswald Simon, the propounder of the scheme, is convinced that "a large number of educated Englishmen are in quest of a religion at once monotheistic and historical," and he proposes a modified Judaism as the remedy. The opinions of leading Jews have been sought for and published. The majority are unfavourable to the suggestion, feeling that it would injure Judaism more than Christianity, and divert the attention of the Jews from the faithful practice of their own rites and ceremonies. These objections are in themselves weighty enough from the Jewish point of view.

The crowning objection to the scheme, however, arises from the total misconception which it betrays of the religion it would supplant. Christianity is as truly monotheistic as Judaism. "There is one God, and one Mediator, Jesus Christ." And it is more truly historical than modern Judaism, because it has preserved and carried into their natural, historical, and spiritual fulfilment the permanent elements in Judaism, whereas the latter is but the husk of the Old Testament revelation, out of which the spirit has fled. Last year's leaves will sooner supplant the buds of spring than the Synagogue will be built on the ruins of the Christian Church.

When a statesman and a man of such large knowledge of life as Mr. Gladstone is, speaks of one of the deadliest enemies with which religion has to contend, it is worth while asking, "What enemy does he mean?" He means "the affluence, the tastes, the habits, and the examples of the age." The same enemy as our Lord spoke of again and again, and the same as Paul and John warned their converts against. Every converted man brings something of its influence with him into the Church, and unless the Gospel purifies him of it he becomes a source of contagion. How far the tastes and the habits of the age affect the Church may be seen in the constant tendency to do things in a worldly way and for a worldly end, and in the comparatively small sums that are given to Christian objects, while personal expenses are high.

Attention is called to a most interesting subject in the Homiletic Review, viz., "The importance of presenting the Bible in complete books from the pulpit." Exposition is one form of teaching which gives more scope and variety than the ordinary method of dealing with a text; but even that, unless it be a methodical, continuous exposition of the same book until it is finished, fails to do a very necessary piece of work in Bible teaching; it leaves the hearers without a definite idea of the scope and object of the book. There can be no doubt that the haziest notions exist as to the purpose and burden of each book, though the main contents may be generally known by the most of a regular congregation. A helpful series of sermons might, e.g., be preached on the great truths of Genesis—God, Man, Sin, Redemption, Providence.

Broad views of the Bible will be found to be the truest answers to the carping, critical spirit of the age. While microscopical minds are poring over every letter and syllable, and coming to contradictory conclusions, the great features of the book are lost sight of, and its authority and message not realised. "The unity and symmetry of the Bible," realised only as each part or section of it is understood, is the grand distinction it bears as a book composed by many writers in the course of a thousand years. As Dr. Monro Gibson points out in his excellent little book on this subject, "The unity is that of a single organic whole, in which all the members together constitute one single body, pervaded, from head and heart to finger tips, with the same life, and expressing the thought of a single mind?"

"Back to the pulpit" is the cry which is being raised with regard to ministers. Many, it is true, have never forsaken it, but have always given it of their best. Nevertheless there is force in the complaint that the modern demand for ministers to know everything in the world of thought and to do everything in the world of action has robbed too many of them of their fitness to render the highest kind of service to the souls of men. Worried with "problems," and worn out with work among secularities, they are without the clearness, restfulness, and freshness which every man must have if he is to be and to do his best. The reign of "practical religion" which we have had for some time will leave permanent good, but it is time that pastors had more time to keep some of the wise injunctions given by Paul to Timothy, such as "Take heed to thyself, and to thy teaching." "Give heed to reading, to exhortation, to teaching." "Give thyself wholly to them; that thy progress may be manifest unto all."

"A retired minister" need not necessarily mean one retired from all work. One such, who had laboured with great usefulness for thirty-five years, offered his services for evangelistic work in small towns and villages near his home. They were gratefully accepted, and in some of the churches for which he has preached the happiest results have followed in many conversions. Inability to preach regularly to the same large congregation may not imply inability also to preach occasionally to different small congregations. And we can conceive of no happier conclusion to a laborious pastorate than this welcome and fruitful preaching under less exacting conditions. "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age."

Dr. Daniel S. Gregory, in his new book, "Christ's Trumpet Call to the Ministry," earnestly dwells on the better utilisation of the wealthy lay element in our churches. There is a growing number of men of exceptional abilities who have tested their abilities and accumulated fortunes, and who are in the full maturity of their powers. Many of these lie quite idle spiritually, their great gifts rust for lack of use, and not a few are tempted by their inactivity to a worldly and self-indulgent life. Meanwhile the work of evangelisation is often left to those who are inexperienced, and whose zeal sometimes outruns their discretion. There are few greater needs than the consecration of cultured leisure to the service of God among men.

The extraordinary popularity of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons continues unabated. According to the publishers, one million more copies have been ordered by the Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society for distribution as loan tracts. It is stated that the total issue now amounts to over one hundred millions. America and the Colonies furnish a large market for these sermons, and many of them have been translated into various languages. Enough unpublished MSS. remain on hand to continue the series for several years, though they have been appearing continuously for forty-one years. It is a fact unique in the history of preaching that one man's work should find such universal recognition. It is a great tribute to the preacher's gifts; it is a greater tribute to the Gospel he so faithfully preached.

The Church Times, commenting in a leader on the succession to the bishopric of St. David's, has the following remarkable sentence:—

If we had to name the religious institution that had done the most harm to Wales, perhaps Sunday schools would carry off the palm, but popular preachers would not be far behind.

Considering the place Sunday-schools have had for the last century in the moulding of Welsh life and character, such a statement as this quite takes one's breath away. If the moral, educational, and religious condition of the Principality at the end of the last and of this century be compared, and the causes of the improvement traced, it will be unquestionably found that the two influences which have done most good are precisely those thus stigmatised by the Church Times. The one thing against which both the Sunday-school in Wales, and the preachers branded as "popular" have been uncompromising in their hostility, is Sacerdotalism. Perhaps this will account for the attitude taken up by the official organ of the High Church party towards Sunday-schools.

A noteworthy agitation is in progress in the United States, excited by the fact that while the newspapers are publishing terrible accounts of destitution among the people as a result of "hard times," arrangements are in progress for a society ball to be held at New York, to involve an expenditure of many thousands (some reports say a quarter of a million) of dollars. The extravagance of the entertainment may be estimated from the fact that the flowers will cost thousands of pounds sterling. It has been pointed out that in view of the sufferings of the poor, this ostentation is unwise in policy as well as improper. As usual, the wanton display is apologised for on the ground that it will put money into circulation; but those who work among the dense populations of the American cities could circulate the money to much better advantage than in the way proposed, and in a manner that would benefit many struggling traders, as well as provide the necessaries of life for the poorest of the poor.

The spiritual cravings of cultured and intelligible people in this age of transition and unrest were well expressed by Mr. Frederic Harrison in his New Year's address. He said:—

An increasing body of men and women are making up their minds to wait till they find something more human and social than the cosmogony of Evolution, something to reverence more tangible and intelligible than the Unknowable, something more positive than Agnosticism, and something more spiritual, more soul-satisfying, more like religious teaching than arithmetical dilemmas in the Pentateuch, and mountains of controversy about a herd of swine.

Mr. Harrison accurately gauges the world's sense of need, the hunger widely felt for the true bread of life; but he is strangely deluded if he thinks that the husks of Positivism can satisfy that need any more than the cloudy nothings of Agnosticism. What men yearn for is the living God, not a thin abstraction called Humanity.

Persecution of Russian Quakers.—A Moscow correspondent hears on good authority that a Russian sect, corresponding with the Quakers, are suffering great privations in the Caucasus, in consequence of the persecutions they are subjected to at the hands of the Government officials. Several friends of the persecuted Christians have petitioned the Emperor, but as their condition does not improve, it is generally believed that the Tsar has not received the petitions addressed to him.

Francis-street Mission, Stratford.—The annual report of the work carried on by Mr. Gage states that in addition to the regular services held in the mission-hall there have been conducted two special missions. The sick and dying have been comforted in their affliction and the poor helped so far as means would permit. The committee appeal for increased support towards the work of the Mission. —John Easson, hon. secretary, 122, Windsor-road, Forest Gate, E.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Liverpool.

In June of last year I heard Mrs. Baeyertz or the first time. She was a complete stranger to me then, but after listening to her wonderful Bible-readings and thrilling Gospel addresses, I was not ashamed to confess to having received great spiritual blessing from the words of truth spoken by this daughter of Judah. Day after day fo fifteen days her meetings increased until, on the last night of the mission, there was a large overflow meeting in the Y.M.C.A., while the church itself was densely packed with nearly one thousand people.

As the result of what I then heard and saw, I invited Mrs. Baeyertz to conduct a mission in my own church, but not until she was assured that it was the wish of the people, and that much prayer would be offered for her, would she consent to come. Mrs. Baeyertz makes it a sine quâ non that churches seeking her services must continue in prayer for God's blessing. She herself says that we prayed her back to Liverpool.

Here, then, she is once more, and from the first the mission has been excellently attended; indeed, the church has been packed again and again, well-dressed ladies sitting on the pulpit stairs, and the seekers after God have been very numerous. Over two hundred and fifty have professed faith in Jesus Christ, and the mission has several days yet to run. In these degenerate days, when so many people deny that there are conversions now, it is refreshing to see such results.

But will it last? A woman who heard Mrs. Baeyertz on her first visit told me a few days ago that for ten years previously she had kept open shop on Sunday, but has closed ever since. Another woman has closed her shop on Sunday as the result of this mission. An ungodly man who was converted during the former mission has stood firm for Christ, and is a praying man to-day, although he has been taunted severely by sceptical friends in the office where he is employed. These are the "signs following" the preaching of the true evangelist.

Mrs. Baeyertz keeps strictly to the Bible, and its lucid and forceful exposition. Her Bible-reading on "Temptation" was quite a revelation to many. High-toned spiritual teaching is flavoured with common sense. Holiness to her means clean living, pure thoughts, good conduct. In style she is simple and accurate, pathetic and eloquent, but never sentimental. May the Lord bless her work more abundantly. Arthur May.

The Moody Fund.

Dear Sir,—We are now within about £200 of the required £2500 for Mr. Moody's sixtieth birthday gift. As I am leaving for New York on Wednesday, I should be glad if any further amounts be sent, not to me, but to Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, London, who has arranged to telegraph the total to me in time for Feb. 6, and will send the lists afterwards.

I do hope that your readers will pray that my mission may be richly owned of God. I hope to be home in the third week of February.—Yours sincerely, F. B. Meyer.

Christ Church, Jan. 25, 1897.

An Inquiry.—Will any of your numerous readers kindly inform me where I can obtain enamelled wall-texts, of different sizes, in gold or silver lettering, in the Italian, German, or French languages, for sale and gift in a tract depôt in Tunis, N.A.?—H. W. Case, 11, Cotham-road, Bristol.

Hampshire Villages.—The Hants Village Colportage and Evangelistic Mission has issued its new report, showing that during the past year the Gospel has been preached more widely than ever in neglected villages, and that fresh doors are opening in every direction. Many places, alas! seem dark as midnight, while in others the deadening effects of priestism are sadly evident. About 200 villages were visited and worked, last year, with the Gospel van, Gospel literature, and Gospel testimony, which God has greatly blessed. There is need for help to clear off the deficiency and extend largely the efforts of the mission. The superintendent is Mr. J. Hazell Charlton, 69, Cromwell-road, Wimbledon.

God's Word and Witnesses.*

II.—"MY WORD."

THE word put into Ezekiel's mouth was full of grace and truth: "As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, but rather that he should turn from his way and live." But the testimony of Jesus had not yet been manifested as the spirit of prophecy. The word by the mouth of Ezekiel was according to Law, "Do this and live." And the Law could only make the offence abound. If a man would do that which was lawful and right, he should save his soul alive. But no man ever saved his soul by that prescription, nor ever will. We therefore turn to the Word which God puts into the preacher's mouth, in these days of the New Covenant.

In perfect accord with the prophet Ezekiel, the Apostle Paul exhorts Timothy, "Preach the Word." But when we ask, What is the word we are to preach? the reply of the Living Word, in his first and fundamental parable, is, the seed is "The Word of the Kingdom" (Matt. xiii. 19). This is primary truth and underlies the whole Gospel. For the first occurrence of a term or phrase gives the key to its significance. Wherever we read of the Word of the Gospel we know it is the Word of the Kingdom. There could be no other good news to a world under the heel of the Usurper, but that the rightful King had come to take his power and reign. But was not the kingdom which first John and then Jesus announced, merely the kingdom of David—an earthly kingdom for which the Jews were looking? No, it was the Word of the Reign of God; the Word sown in the heart, where the seed of every reign is sown; and the Sower was the Son of Man, the Sovereign and Saviour of the race—"the Saviour of all men, specially of them that believe."

The Word of the Kingdom—the Gospel of the Kingdom—the Good Tidings of the Reign of God—what does it mean? Is it a term wider than dispensations, and includes them all. For four thousand years the fallen angel, who had attempted to usurp the throne of God, and whom God had permitted to prove his character and capabilities and quality, on this small planet, through successive periods, had filled the world with vice and crime and sorrow. Innumerable Abels had been slain by innumerable Cains. Although the Flood had well nigh destroyed the human race, the ungodliness of the old world had been carried into the new. God had been defied by the building of the Tower, which proved that the giant intellect, the vast knowledge, and the cultured skill of those days were all on the side of the Usurper. A chosen family and nation, a slip of the vine of the earth transplanted to a very fruitful hill, and subjected to Divine cultivation and training, had produced the same poisonous fruit, as the plant in the wood from which it had been taken, and in a more virulent degree (Isaiah v.; Psalm lxxx. 8-19).

Rebellion upon rebellion, disaster upon disaster, had filled the world with woe. To the elect nation—the Jews—was born God's Son and King. The meek and gentle, the wise and patient, God Almighty, had become Immanuel, God with us, that in Him might be fulfilled the promise to their father Abraham, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." But the poisonous plant proved its quality under the highest cultivation, in the very fruitful hill, more than when growing wild in the wood; and Jehovah's pleasant plant, Israel, called upon the wild uncultivated parent stock, the Gentile, to reject and contemptuously kill the King of Men. "Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed; how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto Me?" (Jer. ii. 21). The cultivated slip proved itself a branch of the original wild vine, for rather than receive its Child and Son, and acknowledge the government to be upon his shoulder, it preferred to cry, "We have no King but Cæsar."

Thus the human race as such, the wild vine, man as descended from Adam, the Gentiles, disowned and rejected the Seed of the Woman who had been promised to bruise the head of the Old Serpent, the Devil, and Satan. And the elect and cultured nation, the sons of Abraham the friend of God, disowned Him and his King whom He hath set upon his holy hill of Zion, and declared they had no king but the Cæsar—the Kaiser, the Czar—the monarch of the Gentiles. Thus Israel proved that the entail of sin had not been, and could not be, cut off from human nature even by the elective act of God. Man, Gentile and Jew alike, obeying the fallen spirit, had like him alienated himself from the life of God, and the restoration of the race could only be effected by the fulfilment of the first warning, which was indeed also the earliest promise, "In the day thou eatest thou shalt surely die" (margin, "dying thou shalt die"); for "the wages of sin is death." But the resources of God are not exhausted; He is the God of resurrection. "The gift of God is eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord." Oh, "radiant idea of death!" that the poisoned sons of Adam can die to sin by faith-union with the crucified Son of God! Oh, glorious truth of resurrection, that they can rise to newness of life by faith-union with the raised and glorified Son of Man!

Cast thy Burden on the Lord.

OH, cast thy burden on the Lord,
And rest thy weary soul in Him;
His presence makes the darkness light.
What matter though in shades of night
Earth's fleeting joys grow dim?

Oh, cast thy burden on the Lord,
He knows the weakness of thy frame.
Take heart! He sits upon the throne,
All secret things to Him are known,
Though man misjudge thine aim.

Oh, cast thy burdens on the Lord,
Tell Him thy grief, yea tell Him all.
"Tempted in all points like as we,"
Say who can sympathise as He?
Fear not on Him to call.

Oh, cast thy burden on the Lord,
He will not fail or faithless be.
Though all around thy soul give way
His love will be thy strength and stay
To all eternity.

Oh, cast thy burden on the Lord!
Though to thy sight so poor and dim
A tangled web thy life may seem,
Far, far above thy highest dream
The place is clear to Him.

JEAN H. WATSON.

Liverpool Sabbath Morning Free Breakfast Mission.—The design and aim of the Mission, which was founded twenty-one years ago, is to bring the most abandoned classes of the city within the hearing and influence of the Gospel. The work has branched out in various directions, and has taken on midnight effort among the degraded and destitute. During last year 127 breakfast meetings were held, with an aggregate attendance of 31,970 persons, about one-fourth of them children. Ministers and others have addressed the gatherings, thus reaching many who would not otherwise hear the Gospel. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mr. J. G. Hannay, 30, Comely Bank-road, Egremont, Cheshire.

Law versus Love.*

THE new relationship to the law of the believer's life, arising from the indwelling vital power of the Spirit of Christ, is expressed in the words, he walks "not after the flesh but after the Spirit," and the words, "The law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death" (Rom. viii. 2, 4); suggesting, and more than suggesting, a sharp contrast between his present and his former attitude toward the law. He no longer follows the impulses of his own mind or other men's minds that exert an influence, and prescribe for him, here called "the flesh," even when the direction is a religious one: planning, resolving, mapping out his own life in departments, and marking off his observances by the clock, noting "days and months and seasons and years," turning "back again to the weak and beggarly elements whereunto ye desire to be in bondage over again" (Gal. iv. 9, 10); measuring out the tale of duty, tied down to rite and ceremony and ritual, afraid lest he should omit anything, or miss inadvertently the most scrupulous observance. He is not regulated by drawn-up articles, or by code or directory; all which is here labelled by Paul "after the flesh," and denominated by him in the Epistle to the Galatians "this present evil age," and a "different Gospel" (i. 4, 6); and in Colossians, ordinances "from which ye died with Christ," "all which things are to perish with the using" (ii. 20, 22); in using them "you use them up," they do not last, they fail to satisfy you; you want more.

Yet have we lived to see in our day a return of a large portion of the Church to this elementary stage; and if Paul were to speak to us as he did to the Galatian churches, he would seek to rally us by exclaiming, "What! back again!" or, still more boldly, he would tell us that we were "in bondage over again," suffering a second term of imprisonment; or, in other incisive words of his, "Ye are severed from Christ," though "with freedom did Christ set us free," "ye are fallen away from grace." Now the believer in Christ who realises the simplicity and maintains the integrity of his standing in Christ, "stands fast," that is, is steadfast, and does not become enamoured with or—again to use Paul's word—"bewitched" by the priestly assumptions and sacramentarianism of the Church in a sensuous age.

His life is ruled as a well regulated home is governed, by the spirit of love. Only fancy drawing up a list of regulations, fixing it up in some conspicuous place, and expecting to make your children good and obedient that way! You rather secure the child's love first, and then give him a large liberty, feeling sure that he would not do anything you did not approve of. This is the much more effective way of winning obedience. So is it with the love of Christ in the believer's life; he can say, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Yet that freedom is the truest restraint; and ensures a fineness and finish of obedience in directions away out of sight and along paths where "rules and regulations" are too clumsy to follow. It was with true insight to the gist of the whole question of the believer's position in regard to the law that Augustine expressively said "Love, and do what you will."

The Gateshead School Board has recommended to the licensing justices that no child under thirteen be supplied with intoxicating drinks.

Hopefulness.

"Let us not be weary in well-doing."—Gal. vi. 9.

TO be weary in well-doing is precisely the thing to which we are liable. This warning word is one which, at some time or other, nearly every Christian worker needs; and therefore we should diligently seek to encourage each other in the remembrance of such a divinely-inspired caution.

Discouragements are thick about us, but God never discourages his children. "Fear not" is his reiterated command—not merely his recommendation, but his positive command. All discouragement, therefore, comes from our own hearts, or from the enemy of our souls; and should be resisted as the form of temptation to which we are peculiarly prone to yield.

It is easier in the moment of impulse, and under the pressure of strong feeling, to commence some labour of love in Christ's name than it is to go steadily on with it, in the face of indifference and opposition. Sowing the good seed is, comparatively, light-hearted work; it is in the "long patience" required by the spiritual husbandman, that failure so often is found.

It is then a blessing and a Christlike work to speak a word in season to those that are weary; and many a time the word in season may appropriately be this, "Let us not be weary in well-doing." Let us sing it softly to each other as we labour in the "white fields" of the Master, and He will bless both the singers and their song.

There is a substantial reason why we should not grow weary: "In due season we shall reap if we faint not." The reaping is assured to the faithful toiler. Never was any crop as certain to come to the garner. "My Word shall never pass away." The weeping sower shall "doubtless" come again with rejoicing, "bringing his sheaves with him," and though it may not be when and as we expect, yet it shall be "in due season." Quite as certainly in the spiritual domain as in the earthly creation it is ordained that seedtime and harvest shall never cease to be.

The seed springeth up, "he knoweth not how," but it will "spring and grow" (Mark iv. 27). The harvest may be other than we suppose, but there will be a harvest "if we faint not." A godly pastor had agonised in prayer for a youthful member of his flock whose talents he longed to see consecrated to Christ's service, but who was not yet gathered into the fold of the Good Shepherd. One by one others had yielded their hearts to Jesus, but this girl remained apparently untouched. It occurred to him to prepare a sermon specially suited, as he supposed, to her case. With many a prayer this carefully prepared sermon was preached, the text being, "One thing thou lackest."

Early on Monday morning the pastor sought his study, again to plead with God that the message might bear fruit. A light tap on the door disturbed his thoughts, and he opened it to see his own beloved young daughter standing there, her face lighted up with a newly-found joy.

"Father," she asked, "did you, in the love of your heart, preach that sermon yesterday for me?" The father had to answer, "No."

"But, father, it was just God's message to my soul. I have found the Lord Jesus."

Could that man of God regard his prayer as unanswered, even though the immediate results were other than he had asked? Is it not just in this way that our God delights to do for us, and is purposed to do for us, "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think"? "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. xv. 58).

Hear these beautiful and hopeful words of Adelaide Procter:—

Pray, though the gift you ask for
May never comfort your fears,
May never repay your pleading,
Yet pray; with hopeful tears.

An answer, not what you long for,
But diviner, will come one day;
Your eyes are too dim to see it;
Yet strive, and wait, and pray.

Lucy A. Bennett.

What the Churches Need.

In an article in last week's Methodist Times, entitled "Are we Ready?" the writer says: "Splendid spiritual prosperity seems to be well within our reach. We are always potentially on the very threshold of it. We have the men, we have the means, we have the assured blessing of God. Judged by every conceivable test, our resources and opportunities are greater than ever. What is lacking? What shall we do? Many would say that what we want is money. And yet, as even The Times pointed out recently, all religious movements have flourished most in days of comparative poverty.

"What, then, do we need? An aggressive evangelistic movement on a national scale? Assuredly we need that, and the country is ready for it. But nothing is more ghastly than an untimely or premature evangelistic effort. Great revivals cannot be forced. We need a deepening of our own spiritual life, a revival of enthusiastic devotion to Christ, a restoration of that 'passion for souls' without which there can be no 'mighty works.' Our first need is neither money nor new converts, but more Christlike Christianity in our own lives. When Christian was in the dungeon of Giant Despair he found the key of the dungeon in his own bosom. There, we, too, shall find the key to every difficulty. The Divine chronological order is first to give ourselves, then to give our money, then to reap a rich harvest of immortal souls."

Jonah.

The sands of life run low,
The pulse of life beats slow;
My soul lies weak and wan upon the shore.
Shimmers the glaring main,
Scorches the yellow plain,
And torrid beams from steely heavens pour.

Now stream like buzzing flies,
The thoughts, the queries,
That search and find my every secret wound.
Deep, deep my thirsting want;
Afar from God, I pant;
As in a fowler's net my strength is bound.

I, Jonah of to-day,
Lie as the prophet lay,
Unmanned, inert before my God's behest;
He fell; I, too, have failed;
He shrank; I, too, have quailed
Before the irksome task, the hourly quest.

There looms my Nineveh!
The common mystery
Of myriad godless cravings in me pent;
To daunt them needs must be
A prophet stern and free,
God-filled with all his Spirit's vast intent!

Laggard! lift up thine eyes!
Now is the hour to rise,
Now that the flesh is wholly spent and waste.
Jonah! God's angel stands
Patient, with outstretched hands;
See how his heavenly cup awaits thy taste!

G. M. Seymour.

The Home of Industry.

THE New Year has come, giving great enjoyment to the guests, young and old, at our festal board. The aged widows (many of them over eighty years) joined the mothers who form the Sunday afternoon adult Bible classes, making a couple of hundred. That happy occasion passed all too quickly. We workers became happy almoners of warm gifts of a shawl, a blanket, warm skirt, or crossover, packets of tea and rolls of texts. For these and other smaller gifts much gratitude was expressed by one and all to those who prepared these suitable gifts.

The infant school next came after their repast. There were the ever-acceptable dissolving views, illustrating a well-told story by a young worker. For these also there were timely gifts of under-garments, toys, etc. Several of the children were robbed ere they reached home by the wicked boys of the street. We replaced the stolen articles rather than proclaim a war with boys, who, perhaps, have never been rightly influenced.

Our boys' school, comprised of once-rowdy lads of the district, came for their New Year night. Through the kindness of the Religious Tract Society they each had a book, a comforter, and a pair of warm cuffs. Many of them are the bread-winners of their households.

Our young men's classes chose to have one of Mr. Willey's lectures after their New Year's tea. They were each delighted with a volume of the "Traveller's Guide," suitable to interest and be a blessing to every member of their families. From this class come many of our active young helpers.

WORKERS' MEETING.

The first Workers' Meeting of the year was felt by all to be a happy and profitable one. During the tea hour the boys and girls from the Training Home charmed the friends by their sweet rendering of Gospel hymns, and by their animated musical drill. Judging from their happy healthy faces, it was scarcely possible to realise the sorrows from which many of them had come.

Mr. James E. Mathieson gave a beautiful practical address on the subjects, "Passover, Pentecost, and Palm branches." Mr. William Merry delighted his audience by giving interesting details of the girls and boys in Canada, showing photographs of several homes where the children were growing up, and of young men and women now filling honourable positions in their adopted country. The meeting closed with a season of prayer for the pressing needs of the home and foreign fields.

The Victoria Institute.

A FULLY-ATTENDED meeting of the members of the Institute took place in Adelphi-terrace this month. Professor E. Hull, the leader of the Exploration Expeditions to Arabia Petræa and Egypt, gave a full description of the various schemes for embanking the waters of the Nile with a view to increasing the fertility of Egypt.

The paper derived a special value from the fact that so many historical records of the past lie buried in Egypt, and that explorers still look forward to the discovery of records even more valuable to the Biblical student than any yet brought to light. Professor Hull described the various schemes that have been brought forward, and especially the last—a proposal to embank the waters at Assouan, in Upper Egypt. As regards the advantages of the scheme in increasing the productions of Egypt, it has been estimated that the gain to the State would amount to £850,000 per annum, and the increased value of the crops from Upper, Middle, and Lower Egypt to £16,000,000 per annum.

Several present took part in the discussion, including Mr. Baldwin Latham, who, referring to his intimate acquaintance with the locality chosen, pointed out that the scheme would not only prevent the recurrence of those disastrous Nile floods of which we sometimes hear, but would prevent the occurrence of a low Nile and all the attendant unhappy results.

A Home for Motherless Children was lately opened at Chiswick by Mr. R. T. Smith, and in aid thereof Rev. F. B. Meyer preached last week at the Mission Hall, Fraser-street, Chiswick. The hall was well filled, and the sermon on 1 Cor. ix. 26, 27, was highly appreciated. A strong plea was made for a larger Home, the present house in Hogarth-road being much too small.

Letters from North Africa—2.

THE INTERPELLATOR INTERPELLATED.

MR. BUREAU thus continues his interpellation of Mr. St. Germain, with reference to his famous Interpellation in the French Chamber on the subject of English missionaries in North Africa Mr. St. Germain poses as a patriot, and his interpellator thus addresses him:—

Patriotism consists in defending the interests of one's country, in dying for it if need be; but not in the ridiculing of women whose religious convictions constrain them to preach the Gospel to non-Christians.

I do not believe you have any faith in the stories which in your interpellation you present to the Chamber. Still, who knows? Perhaps, by continually repeating the same thing, you have come to believe it. But I declare I have not believed one word of those accusations.

But you say, You are a Protestant and a pasteur, and that renders you blind. Blind! no I am not. Although I do not believe in the perfidy of the English missionaries in Algeria and Tunisia, I am the first, whenever I think necessary, to protest energetically against what appears to me a want of loyalty in the acts of the British Government. [Here he refers to Egypt, Cyprus, etc.]

It has been a fashion in France for some years to accuse at random the English missionaries, and to charge them with serious misdemeanours.

In Madagascar it is pretended that the English excite our enemies, but they take care not to say in the Press that the Fahavalos—the freethinkers over there—have destroyed three times as many Protestant Christian churches as Catholic churches.

It is continually written in certain journals that the English missionaries obstruct our action in Tonkin, on the French Congo, in Senegal, etc. But unhappily for these papers, there is not a single English missionary in these possessions, and I appeal, for proof of this, to the reports of the Residents and Governors of these different colonies.

In Algeria, if all these "Methodist" perils have been invented, it is to turn away the people's minds from the Israelite question. Mr. St. Germain is the elect of the Jews, and desirous at any cost to avoid that which annoys them, he has created the question of the "Methodists" being dealers in guns and powder. It is very smart, but it appears that it does not take; for Drumont does not forbear to say to Mr. St. Germain: "You are the elect of the children of Israel, then you are an enemy, notwithstanding our campaign against the English."

I am not an anti-Semite; I do not admit that at the end of the nineteenth century we can excite, on account of their religion, citizens against each other; I leave that to the Drumonts and to the Thiébaults; but I am sure that only the fear of a check at the coming elections has led Mr. St. Germain to interpellate the Government upon the operations, the movements (les agissements) of the English missionaries in Algeria.

Possibly they have sometimes failed of prudence and tact in their manner of evangelising the Mussulmans, but I am sure that none of them has ever committed the grave fault of speaking against France. Their journal, North Africa, does not cease, on the contrary, to speak in eulogistic terms of the work accomplished by France in Algeria. Certainly that journal speaks more correctly and courteously of our labours in Algeria than do some journals of the Opposition, who speak of the Governor and the Préfets as thieves, and the Arabs as a people who all merit the cord [deserve to be hanged].

And these same Algerines who cry out so against the English missionaries leave to be worked by foreigners their phosphate mines in Tebessa.

What would the French Press say if the English journals began a campaign against the French Catholic missionaries in Egypt, India, or South Africa, accusing them of the same crimes with which they charge the English missionaries in our colonies? What a hue and cry that would raise amongst us. How they would speak against "perfidious Albion" capable of suspecting the Catholic missionaries and of charging them with such absurdities. They would go so far as with clamour to demand war, to efface England for ever from the map of Europe.

Our anti-Protestants should cease their attacks, for they expose themselves to reprisals which would not be at all agreeable to the Catholic Church, which counts hundreds of missionaries in English colonies against a score of Protestant missionaries in Algeria, and about forty in Madagascar.

In India the Jesuits have great scholastic establishments, which not only give no umbrage to the English, but, what is more, receive vast subsidies (indemnités) from the State. And these Jesuits are for the most part French! If that is not eclecticism I do not know what is.

Let us, then, leave the missionaries in Algeria in peace. France is strong enough to hold her own against a score of Judies, even though they were born on the banks of the Thames.

There is matter here for reflection from another point of view. Are not English and American Christians more than half asleep, while Rome is wide awake, very much alive, intensely active, and utterly unscrupulous in her plan of campaign?

"OUR MISSIONARY."

I am interested in the church connected with a Gospel Hall near London. They call me their pastor. They have just localised The Herald of Mercy, and have, since I left, begun a plan for supporting a missionary. My missionary friends here in North Africa ask me to reprint the proposal in THE CHRISTIAN, hoping it may lead to others doing likewise. For if so small a church, almost entirely of people living from hand to mouth, can have their own missionary, how many could a moderately rich church maintain?

Some friends are thinking we ought to have our own missionary in the foreign field. The call was given to the church to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. This call has never been withdrawn; but how little heed the Church of God pays to it. We cannot all go out into far-off lands; but the least that we as a church can do is to see that we have our own representative in the field. If each Christian church realised this, the time would not be long before the Word had been preached to every creature. As we said, some friends have been thinking about the matter and praying, too. Mr Brading's address, the forthcoming lecture by Mr. Liley, both on North Africa, seem to point to that being the field the Lord would have us to send to. We know our pastor has been exercised upon the matter for a long time, and he would be very much cheered to know that the church was taking this step.

One lady who is leaving us for a short time, has such faith that the suggestion will take a practical form, that she has brought her contribution to start the fund.

A missionary can be supported on a North African station for £50 a year, or a native helper for £25, or the latter amount; the North African Mission would be very glad to devote towards the support of a missionary, who would be considered our representative. We should know the missionary by name, receive correspondence from him or her, enter into the difficulties of the work, share in the joys and mingle our prayers one with the other, and thus feel we had entered into a direct partnership, which has for its end the conversion of the heathen.

How is this to be done? you ask. Let us examine the matter.

The Sunday-school and the Christian Endeavour Society should join with the church in this partnership. Supposing they between them contributed £10 a year; that would leave £40 for the church to find, as the entire sum required for the support of our missionary. This means about 15s. per week. This could be raised as follows:—

Say fifty members promised 1d. per week. Twenty-five, 2d., thirteen, 3d., and twelve, 4d., this would give

25 at 2d.	4	2
13 at 3d.	3	3

Our membership is over 100. Now shall we as a church at once wait upon the Lord, and ask Him what He would have us to give Him for his work this year, and whatever sum He bids us give whether 1d., 2d., 3d., or 4d. a week, let us cheerfully obey, and then our project can take shape and become a living power.

I heartily hope, and indeed I expect, that this ambitious project will be fulfilled.

A PLEA FOR SINGING BIRDS.

I am ashamed to say that one night at dinner I ate a thrush. It was the first, it shall be the last, of God's feathered musicians put to so bad a use. I awoke in the early hours of the morning with the beautiful dead and devoured songster on my conscience, and these were my reflections: Five-and-twenty people, each of them capable of pleasure from its song, transmuting that enjoyment into the vulgar gratification of making a mouthful of the singer.

When we see a cat stalking a blackbird we instinctively interpose and rescue the bird; when we read of a tiger eating a man we are thrilled with horror. Think of a lion eating Livingstone! as seemed likely to be his fate; but God delivered him. Could such a man be put to a more ignoble use? But neither the cat, the tiger, nor the lion knows any better; they eat, unconscious of iniquity. But for a man to eat a nightingale, or a lark, or a linnet! how contemptible.

Think of the beautiful words which God has given men to write concerning these minstrels of the heavens. Imagine our great poet listening to the song at heaven's gate—"Hark, the Lark at heaven's gate sings," and then sitting down to a dish of larks!

Think of Hogg's breezy address to the same sweet singer—

Bird of the wilderness,
Blithesome and cumberless,
Sweet be thy matin o'er moorland and lea;
Emblem of happiness
Blest be thy dwelling place,
O to abide in the desert with thee!

Whose heart has not responded to the melancholy moan of ethereal but misguided Shelley, in his classic Ode to the same dear little minstrel?—

We look before and after,
And pine for what is not,
Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught:
Our sweetest songs are those
That tell of saddest thought!

Was it not when poor John Keats was dying in Italy that he heard the nightingale in the neighbouring wood, and wished that he might "leave the world unseen and fade away into the forest dim"?

Fade far away, dissolve, and quite forget,
What thou among the leaves hast never known,
The weariness, the fever, and the fret,
Here where men sit and hear each other groan;
Where palsy shakes a few sad last grey hairs,
Where youth grows pale, and spectre-thin, and die
Where but to think is to be full of sorrow,
And leaden-eyed despair;
Where Beauty cannot keep her lustrous eyes,
Nor new Love pine at them beyond to-morrow.
. . . . . .
Thou wast not born for death, immortal Bird!
No hungry generations tread thee down;
The voice I hear this passing night was heard
In ancient days by emperor and clown:
Perhaps the self-same songs that found a path
Through the sad heart of Ruth, when, sick for home,
She stood in tears amid the alien corn.

To think of eating the creatures that God created to make music in the trees and in the air, to keep us mindful of our lost paradise, and to woo us to our home above! The prophets and sweet singers of Israel owed something to the voice of the turtle, the mourning of the dove; how much do we owe to the music in the atmosphere which poets have translated into words.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Fruit in China.

REV. J. A. SLIMMON, of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission in China, describing a tour in North Honan, speaks of a friendly reception by the people, and great attention to the Gospel message. His heart being enlarged, he trusted God to do great things. Of his stay in one city he writes:—"Within three days several publicly confessed faith in Jesus. I have never before, so far as I can recollect, seen a city so moved. From different parts people came to me in the inn, asking me to explain more fully the Gospel. And many of those inquirers were men of position and influence.

"I had only one case of opposition, and that broke down completely. The opposers were three students, evidently belonging to wealthy families. They had bought books from me, and read them intelligently, and admitted that they were 'good books.' But their objection was the old one, that while the doctrine of Jesus was good for foreigners, there was no need for it in a country that had Confucius as their sage. I asked, 'Have you, or any man in China, found in Confucius the power to enable you to keep his precepts? Have you found salvation from sin?' I wish you could have seen the change in them, and the eager way in which they asked, 'Is it possible to be saved from sinning?' They let me do all the talking after that, and sat till dark listening eagerly while I preached to them Christ and the power of God unto salvation. I believe the Spirit of God was at work in their hearts.

"Amongst those who were interested in a general way, were a few who definitely decided to become followers of Christ Jesus, and two out of that number have the gift of leadership. When, God willing, I visit that place again in the autumn, I expect to find the foundations for a church ready."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, January 31.

"Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee; I answered thee in the secret place of thunder."—Psa. lxxxi. 7.

SUCH trouble as Israel passed through in the exodus comes but once in the history of a nation. From the brick-kilns and treasure-cities which they built, God's people called to Him with strong cryings and tears, extorted by insupportable sorrows. Still more did they need to cry for help when they stood between the Egyptians and the waters of the Red Sea. From the beach a nation's call rose to God. Then was their trouble and heart-travail—a nation in throes of pain! Are you in trouble? Call upon God in the day of trouble; He will answer.

God's answers are often in the secret place of thunder. From his pavilion of cloud God spoke in tones of thunder that pealed over the heavily-breaking surf of the Red Sea. Several of the Psalms allude to the thunderstorm that rolled through the night of the passage through the deep. The march of Israel was to the roll of thunder. The peals of heaven's artillery struck dismay into the hearts of the alien, but it was as though the Father was speaking to his children, the people with whom He was in covenant.

God's answer to our prayer is often in thunder-tones that hurtle through the air. By terrible things in righteousness He answers us. When Jesus asked the Father to glorify his name, the quiet reply, "I have...and will," which He understood, sounded like thunder to the bystanders. Happy the child who in thunder-claps detects the Father's voice, and in mystic characters of flame reads the Father's handwriting!

"Arise, O God, judge the earth, for Thou shalt inherit all the nations."—Psa. lxxxii. 8.

The judges and magistrates are compared in this Psalm to God, because they exercise something of his power in the right ordering of human society. The Bible always inculcates respect and reverence to properly constituted authority, though it never hesitates to demand of all in authority that they should exercise their high functions impartially. Too often has the high trust been abused, and the Psalmist turns with relief to the upright Judge, and comforts himself with the reflection that one day God Himself shall judge the earth, because He shall inherit all the nations.

Christ is the Firstborn and Only Begotten. As such He shall inherit all things. They were made for Him. He is the Heir. He came in his incarnation to claim his inheritance, but his claim was denied. He was cast out of the vineyard and slain, but his claims were not annulled; they remained intact. And during the present age they are being vindicated, and in answer to his appeal He is receiving the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. One nation after another is becoming his province. The kings of the isles are bringing presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba are offering gifts.

It is great encouragement in missionary work to know that every nation is by right of gift and inheritance our Lord's. It is ours to make it his in fact. It is always easy to work on the line of the Divine purpose. God never purposes outside what is practicable and possible for man to realise. Learn the purpose of God, and without hesitation claim its realisation.

TUESDAY, February 2.

"O God, keep not Thou silence, hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God."—Psa. lxxxiii. 1.

Oh that God would break the silence! If He would but say one word! If we might but hear that voice—deep as the sound of many waters, and tender as the call of love—just to say that He was there; that all which we believed was true; that He was satisfied and pleased; that our perplexities would work out right at last! It is so difficult sometimes to go on living day by day without one authoritative word; and we are prone to rebuke Him for silence, that He is still, that He holds his peace. "Be not Thou silent unto me, lest I be like those that go down into the pit."

But God has not kept silence. The Word was manifested. In Him the silence of eternity was broken. And if thou and I are still, if our ear is purged, and anointed with the blood and oil, if we make a great silence in our heart, we shall hear Him speak.

Where is thy haunt, Eternal Voice?
The region of thy choice;
Where, undisturbed by earth, the soul
Owns thy entire control.

'Tis not where torrents are born, not amid snow-capped peaks, not in the break of the surf, but in the heart, weaned from itself, isolated in chambers of sickness, cast amongst strangers, yearning for tender voices that cannot make themselves heard—there God is no longer still. He breaks the silence. "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith our God." "It is I; be not afraid."

WEDNESDAY, February 3.

"The Lord God is a sun and shield. The Lord will give grace and glory."—Psa. lxxxiv. 11.

How God suits Himself to our need! In darkness, He is a Sun; in the sultry noon, a Shield; in our earthly pilgrimage He gives Grace; when the morning of heaven breaks, He will give Glory. He suits Himself to every varying circumstance in life. He becomes what the exigency of the moment requires. And as the Psalmist well says, He withholds no good thing from them that walk uprightly. Learn the art of extracting from God the special form of help of which you stand in need.

The Sun is the source of light and life. With impartial beneficence he scatters his beams on palace and cottage, mountain summit and lowland vale. He is ever pouring out his beams. It is only necessary to stand in them, or to open casement or door. God is shining, dear heart. Get out of thyself, and sun thy shivering frame in his untiring love.

A Shield may be the shadow of a great rock in the scorching desert, or the canopy of a gourd's growth. Put God between yourself and the sirocco of temptation. The noon with its burning heat is too much for thee; hide in the Lord God. The heat shall not smite thee by day, nor the frost by night.

Dost thou need Grace? He is full of it. His grace is sufficient. With both hands He will give and give again; only practise the habit of taking. Grace is the bud of which Glory is the flower. If He has given this, He will not withhold that. If thou knewest the gift of God, thou wouldst be sure that Glory in germ is within thee, waiting only for the summer of Eternity to develop in perfect beauty.

THURSDAY, February 4.

"Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other."—Psa. lxxxv. 10.

This has been fitly called "the bridal of the earth and sky." Mercy is the love that finds its reason in itself, its measure in helplessness and ill-desert. But in God it is always blended with Truth. God must be faithful to his covenant relations, to his Son, to Himself, and to the law which He has instituted. Any display of mercy must be consistent with truth. These are heavenly twins. Where you meet one you will be sure of the other. Jesus was full of grace and truth. The love He brings is consistent with the highest considerations, and by his death it is so arranged that God acts consistently with his holy law in loving and saving the meanest and weakest believer.

Righteousness has for her twin sister Peace. "The effect of Righteousness shall be Peace." The King of Righteousness is after that the King of Peace. If you want Peace you must be right with God: and if you would be right with God you must come to Jesus and trust in Him, who is made unto us the Righteousness of God. At the cross these two kissed. The righteousness of God was satisfied, and the peace of man secured.

What a wondrous cross is that on which the Prince of Glory died! The question was—How could God be just, and yet justify the ungodly? How could He uphold the majesty of the moral law, and yet take sinners to his heart? But the answer came clear and satisfying, when the Maker of Man took on Himself our sin and gave justice its due. Now see that perfect blending of the Divine attributes, and that God is "just, and the justifier of Him that believeth in Jesus."

FRIDAY, February 5.

"Thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive."—Ps. lxxxvi. 5.

We are blinded by sin, and cannot believe that God is ready to forgive. We think that we must induce Him to forgive, by tears, promises of amendment, religious observances. There is in every heart such difficulty in understanding the unwearying patience and ever-yearning love of our Heavenly Father. Oh, clasp this word to your heart. Say it over and over again—"ready to forgive, ready to forgive!" At any moment of the sad history of the prodigal, had he returned, he would have found his old father as ready to forgive as on the day, too long delayed, when he did return. The only pity was that he had not come long before.

You have fallen a hundred times, and are ashamed to come to God again, it seems too much to expect that He will receive you again. But He will, for He is ready to forgive. You feel that your sin is aggravated, because you knew so much better; but it makes no difference to Him, He is as ready to forgive you now, as when first you came. You are disposed to wait a little, till your sin has become more remote, till passion has subsided, till the inscription has faded from the wall; but you might as well go at once, God is as ready to forgive at this moment as at any future time. You are wounding Him greatly by doubting Him. He is ready, waiting, eager to forgive. You have only to call on Him, and you would discover the plenteousness of his mercy. In Jesus, who came to reveal the Father, and whose ready forgiveness answered every appeal, you have a revelation of the Father's heart. His blood cleanseth from all sin.

O Love, Thou deep eternal tide,
How dear are men to Thee!
The Father's heart is opened wide
By Jesus' blood to me.

SATURDAY, February 6.

"All my fountains are in Thee."—Psalm lxxxvii. 7.

"All my fresh springs," the Prayer-book version has it. Perennial freshness! This is our portion. We have only to abide in Christ in daily, hourly faith, through the grace of the Holy Spirit, for where that is secured there need be no further effort; naturally, perennially, plentifully, there will arise in us the fountains whose source is God, and the ultimate destination of whose waters are the wildernesses and deserts around.

Do you want freshness in your love? The vintages of other years cannot provide you with the ruddy clusters and the wine of sacrifice required for present day needs. You want new enthusiasm, tenderness, and interest in those around you. There is but one resource. Deepen your union with God, by faith and prayer. Your fresh springs are in Him, He will Himself be in you a spring of living water, rising up to everlasting life and love.

Do you want freshness in your views of truth? There are such constant demands made on your teaching powers, that you are sometimes fearful of exhaustion. But if you keep your heart open to God, and your soul perpetually nourished by Scripture, you will find that God's thoughts will come freshly and brightly to you—new as each morning, fresh as spring.

Do you want freshness in your religious life? This, too, is his gift, because the life we live in the flesh is, after all, not our own life, but his. Jesus is in us, the Hope and Fount of the true life. All He wants is to have orifices, channels, openings in the rocky soil, and He will arise in us heavenwards and Godwards, as fountains in the sunny air. Rise up in us, Thou Blessed One, who art evermore the resurrection and the life!

THE EVANGELIST.

The Two Harrys.

DURING my stay for some weeks in a town in the North, I came in contact with the first Harry. He was a fine young fellow, full of spirit, and fond of fun and frolic. He was a member of the choir, and came every night to assist in the singing during the mission. I soon got interested in him, and was not long before I managed to know a little about him. He had been brought up in the Sunday school, and, unlike a great many others, had retained his connection with it during his early manhood. He was not a Christian. Some years before he had professed to find the Saviour, but there had been no development of the fruits of the Spirit.

As the mission progressed I watched him, and was soon convinced that he was in trouble. He lost all his gaiety and mirth, and went about like one bearing a great sorrow. When the first part of the service was over he would refuse to stay to the after-meeting, but one might find him hovering round the door; and sometimes he would go home, and, unable to rest, would find his way back again, and wait near the chapel till all the rest had gone away. At first he did not give me many opportunities for conversation, but at my approach would walk away—as if he had committed some crime, and I were a detective waiting to pounce upon him and haul him off to prison.

At length I got into conversation with him, and we soon became friends. I induced him to promise that he would stay to the after-meeting on the following night, on the understanding that no one was to speak to him, or bother him while there. I promised him that I would do my best to see that he was let alone. He came as he had promised, and although the friends left him to himself, we could plainly see that he was not left alone by the Spirit.

On the third Sunday he stayed as usual to the prayer-meeting, and his face was the picture of misery. Among the number of those who had come to Christ that day was the young woman to whom he was engaged to be married. She sat with him, and I could see that she was very anxious that he also should be saved. I went to him, and said, "Now, Harry, let me have a word with you. Don't object, because I know that you are in trouble, and perhaps I can help you." "It's all right, you may talk to me if you wish, but it's no use." "Why, Harry?" "Because I'm such a sinner that God won't even look upon me in mercy."

"Now," said I, "if I were you, I wouldn't talk like that, but if I wanted to be saved I would go to God and put Him to the test. Just go and kneel there among the praying friends, and see if He will save you." The girl by his side said, "Go, Harry, and I will pray for you here." He went, and shortly afterwards I said to him, "Do you want to be saved?" "Yes." "To whom are you coming?" "To Jesus." "Can He save you?" "Yes." "Will He save you?" After some hesitation he said, "Yes, I believe He will." "When?" "When I come to Him." "And when are you coming?" "I'm coming to Him now."

"Then if He can and will save you when you come to Him, and you are coming now, does He save you?" The answer was given clear and strong, "Yes, He does just this moment." Then said I, "He that believeth on the Son HATH everlasting life." As we rose to sing the verse,

"My God is reconciled,"

Harry's face was like a sunbeam, and during the singing he shouted out, "It's gloriously true!" He soon rejoined his sweetheart (long since his wife), and from that time forth they were happier in the love of each other through the love of Him who died for us all.

Three years later, and more than a hundred and fifty miles away, I came across the second Harry. On the first night of the services, the first to come out for Christ was a youth called Ted. He was the son of Christian parents and one of a family fairly well off. In the experience meeting on the following Saturday, he boldly confessed Christ as his Saviour. His mother, who was present, followed him, giving thanks unto God and asking the prayers of the Church that all the members of her family, who were old enough to think and act for themselves, might be brought to Jesus. One son was already a local preacher, and during the next few days the only daughter and another son named Will were brought into the fold, and gave promise of becoming earnest and useful Christians.

On the last Sunday the mother came to me and said, "My eldest son, Harry, will be at the chapel to-night, and has promised to stay till the close. He does not wish to be spoken to, so I shall be glad if you will promise this." I consented, and was quite content to let the Spirit deal with him. He came, and, as in the other case, was accompanied by his intended wife. They were both very much impressed, and on the following night were again present. As the meeting progressed the young lady could hold back no longer, and sobbing bitterly went with Harry's mother into the inquiry room. Although utterly broken down, Harry refused to follow, and went home very miserable.

The next night, at the commencement of the service, Will came to me and said, "Harry's saved, and wishes to speak to you for a moment." On my going to him, he said, "I am safely trusting in Jesus, and I want you to tell the people for me that at home last night I sought and found Him, and am now his." There was great rejoicing that night when he took his place among his brothers and the others at the front.

The particulars of his conversion I give in Ted's own words:—"After we got home last night, and supper was over, we had a family prayer-meeting, and then went to bed, leaving mother and Harry alone. How long they tarried I don't know, for when they came upstairs we were all asleep. About twelve o'clock I awoke and found Harry kneeling at the bedside, sobbing and praying, 'God be merciful to me a sinner.' I quickly dressed, and got down beside him. Very soon Will was awake, and down on the other side. We made a noise that brought Arthur with us, and then what a prayer-meeting we had. Harry was soon rejoicing in the Saviour, and the noise we made brought Annie to the door, just as Will, unable to control himself any longer, threw open the windows, and thrusting out his head shouted, 'Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Harry's saved, and we are a family bound for the Kingdom.' Their parents, judging what was the matter, had been praying in their own room; and then a great family thanksgiving meeting was held, and the father, like one of old, was able to say, 'As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.'"

G. COATES.

Evangelistic Notes.

An interesting report comes to hand from Mr. W. McLean, of the C.M.S., Agra, telling of revival among Hindustani Christians there. Special services were arranged for extending over two weeks, the preachers being Rev. J. W. Charlton and Rev. Ishan Ullah. Addresses were given morning and evening, besides subsidiary gatherings. The results have been such as to give encouragement to the workers. Some nominal believers have received distinct blessing, and others have received fresh impulses in life and service. The work extended to the boys of the Christian Hostel, many of whom have been greatly helped in spiritual things. Mr. McLean states that this effort was followed up by a village preaching tour, with the distribution of Gospels, etc. The work is exceptionally difficult just now on account of the famine.

A most successful seventeen days' mission has been held in St. Andrew's Free Church, Livesey, Blackburn, by Mr. John Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society. The spacious church has been crowded each night, while on Sunday nights overflow meetings had to be provided for, and even then many went away from the crowd. It is a grand testimony to the simple Gospel when in such a town 400 people will listen with breathless attention night after night. Many professed to have been born again. J. HAWORTH.

Mr. John Stanger, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's mission in Ranelagh Hall, Paddington. The Lord's power has been manifestly present.

A very successful mission has been held (January 3-15) in the Wesleyan Chapel, Berden, by Mr. T. Ward. Believers were quickened, and sinners resolved to commence a Christian life as the result of the mission.

Successful mission services have been held by Mr. Newton Jones in connection with the Snow-hill Congregational Church, Wolverhampton (Rev. C. Frederick Bone). The Gospel message has been delivered with great power and earnestness. Many indifferent and undecided ones have been led to the knowledge of a personal Saviour, and the church as a whole has been quickened and inspired. Mr. Jones addressed a united gathering of Snow-hill, Queen-street, and Park-street Sunday-schools on Sunday afternoon, and in the evening preached to a large and attentive congregation in Snow-hill Church.

A mission has been held at Brynmawr by Mr. Gerald Coultas. The Town Hall was secured for the services. The largest congregation known in connection with the mission was on Sunday evening, but, what was more cheering, souls were definitely blessed. One young man was deeply convicted on the Sunday evening, but would not yield. He came again, but stood outside for some time. Some workers went to him; finally he broke down and surrenderd to Christ.

Mr. Hugh C. Wallace recently conducted a most successful mission in connection with the Baptist Church at Sheen, Bucks. It was a searching time, and we believe a good and lasting work has been accomplished. Many professed to accept Christ. The evangelist is now at work in Liverpool.

A three days' mission has been held among the garrison children at the Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues, Newcastle-on-Tyne, by Mr. and Mrs. Procter, with Mr. and Mrs. Jameson. The children were very attentive, and much good has been done. The temperance work in the barracks is most popular, and we have a good staff of willing workers.

A. DRAPER.

Mr. W. R. Lane conducted a mission to men from January 11 to 14, at the Oxford Y.M.C.A. Increasing audiences of men testified to the interest aroused by the meetings. Cases of conversion were reported, and great blessing was experienced by those who attended.

An eight days' mission to the young has been held in Immanuel Church, Brixton, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, by Mr. Henry Hutchinson, from January 10 to 17 inclusive. United and earnest prayer had been offered for the mission for several months, and the answer to prayer was most marked. All the services were well attended, notwithstanding the inclement weather. The presence and power of the Holy Ghost was felt by all present. A large number of young people openly professed themselves on the Lord's side, and many of the workers received great blessing themselves.

A series of evangelistic meetings was recently conducted in Elgin, N.B., by Rev. James C. Smith (late of Dufftown, N.B.). The attendance was good. From the very first meeting, when one young man decided to receive Jesus as his Saviour, until the last the power of the Holy Spirit was clearly felt. One striking feature of the work was that, with three exceptions, all who professed to receive Jesus for the first time did so while the Word was being proclaimed, or alone in their homes afterwards. Afternoon Bible-readings were much blessed to God's children. Most of the ministers in town were present during the mission. The closing meeting, held in the Congregational Church, was one to be long remembered. Testimonies as to God's blessing during the mission were given. A praise and thanksgiving meeting was held in the hall of the Free High Church, the minister of which, Rev. Mr. Cowan, presided. The testimonies given by ministers and others as to spiritual quickening and the spirit of praise and prayer vouchsafed made this meeting a source of real spiritual blessing to all present. Every congregation in the town was represented. Previous to Mr. Smith's visit, and quite apart from any knowledge thereof, twenty-two nights of united prayer for a blessing on the city were held, followed by two nights of prayer each week until Mr. Smith's visit. Besides this a weekly meeting for prayer for a blessing on the town had been conducted in the house of a godly elder before ever the public meetings had been arranged. A committee representing the various churches in town has been formed to obtain the services of Mr. Smith for a more extended visit on an early date, and the various ministers in town have most heartily promised their co-operation should he see his way to come back. Edward Papanekis,

THE CONSECRATED INDIAN MISSIONARY.

By Rev. EGERTON R. YOUNG.

"MISSIONARY, I've come to smash your head." Thus was a missionary addressed by a stalwart Indian who had very unceremoniously rushed into his house one day as he sat reading in his study.

Of course he suddenly sprang up and faced the furious man, made drunk by the miserable firewater of the fur-traders. It seems he had obtained from them for his valuable furs a bottle of rum. This vile stuff had transformed his naturally kindly disposition, and knowing that the missionary was the enemy of rum he seemed to feel when under its influence tha he was the man to attack.

Facing him as he rushed forward, the missionary said: "Why would you strike me? I am not your enemy, or the enemy of your family, or the enemy of your tribe. To do you good, my young wife and I have left our friends, who are far away, and have come to live among you. If you have any good reason for striking me, why, strike away!" This seemed to stagger him. He let the hand that grasped the bottle fall to his side, and muttered some incoherent words. He moved uneasily about; then' half ashamed of himself, left the house.

After he had gone, the missionary felt his heart strangely drawn out to this poor man. His very energy was commendable, and he said: "If I can only get that man soundly converted, I am sure his characteristics consecrated to God will make him a blessing and a benediction." So he resolved to win him, if possible, for Christ.

It took long years to accomplish this resolve. Edward was suspicious of the missionary and generally shunned anything like close personal talk about religion. However, the missionary sometimes secured his services on the long canoe trips in summer. There he heard of a Saviour's love, while at the camp-fire every night and morning he heard passages read out of the blessed Book, and listened to the earnest prayers that were offered up.

So anxious had the missionary become for Edward's conversion, that he often had him on the long cold wintry journeys to visit the remote parts of his mission in order to preach to those in lonely forest homes, who could be visited in no other way. Some of these trips were several hundred miles in length, and they had to be made in regions where there was not a vestige of a road. The whole country was covered by a snowy mantle of from three to five feet deep. The temperature ranged anywhere from thirty to sixty degrees below zero. For weeks together the missionary and his Indian companions, when on one of these long journeys, saw no house and but very few wandering hunters. Each morning and evening the Bible was read and talked about, and some of its truths explained. Moreover, earnest prayer was offered, and the way of life made clear.

For some years Edward listened, and heard the way of salvation explained to him and others. He attended the Sabbath services at the Mission Church, and was always attentive and respectful in the house of God. But for a long time he listened to the Word as to an idle tale. Being a man of unusual activity and cleverness, he was much employed by the great fur-trading company of that land. To him was entrusted a good deal of responsibility and he always did his work faithfully and well, except when he was tempted with strong drink. Then the kindly disposition became fierce and passionate; the faithful servant neglected his duties, and forgot his obligations to those whom he served. How terrible have been the evils of the accursed firewater. Not only in so-called civilised lands, but among the primitive tribes the whole world over it has been nothing but an unmitigated curse.

For the safety of his people the missionary made his church a total abstinence society. Very much injury was done to the mission by the visit of a church dignitary, who, instead of encouraging by his example the missionary and his Christian Indians in their efforts to advance the cause of temperance, retarded it by his conduct. Edward, who, although not a converted man, had in a measure given up his drinking habits at the time of this visit, being then in the employ of the Company as a confidential servant about the Fort. He, unfortunately, witnessed the habits of this ecclesiastic. At first he was amazed; then he yielded again to temptation and began to drink to excess. While under the influence of drink, he one day staggered up to the mission house and rudely asked the missionary by what right he told his people that it was wrong to drink rum or whisky when the big minister was drinking wine.

With his relapse into intemperance, Edward went back in every way, and many months passed ere the missionary regained any direct influence over him for good. Eventually, by kindly words and earnest prayers, the man importunately pleaded with God for the consciousness of Divine favour and the assurance of forgiveness. He did not yield without a struggle. On more than one occasion, the tempter took possession of him, as he afterwards confessed when the missionary came to his wigwam, and was pleading with God for his salvation. Edward was, in fact, so mad and angry that he sprang up and searched for an axe with which to split open his head. He used to say with a strange look: "Although I generally had several axes lying around, I never was able to find one when I wanted to kill the man who was praying for me."

At length Edward yielded to the Spirit's voice, and made a full surrender. There was no half-heartedness about it. The same zeal that had characterized him before his conversion was now manifested in his new life. He was soon at work striving to help on the cause of Christ, by inducing others to accept salvation. He was a diligent student of the Word, and soon became familiar with many passages, which he could quote with appropriateness and power. His faith in God was strong, and he saw in the way of salvation the remedy for his countrymen, for whose salvation he yearned.

For some years he retained his connection with the fur-trading Company as a faithful and confidential servant. The testimony of the officers of that Company has ever been of the most kindly and complimentary character. For years for them he "was diligent in business" while "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." On his long journeys for the Hudson Bay Company, whether in boats or canoes in summer, or with dog-trains in winter, he never neglected the morning and evening prayer with his travelling companions, be they Christian or otherwise.

His church, much in need of toilers, was not slow in seeing his gifts and graces, so in due time Edward's way was opened up for missionary life. He was in due time ordained to the work and office of the Christian ministry. Years have passed away since that important event in his history. He has been increasingly useful and beloved in his self-sacrificing toil. Honoured and respected by all worthy white people who know him, and beloved by his own people, this once wicked Indian bids fair to live for many years yet to tell the story of redeeming love.

Dr. Black's Semi-Jubilee.

THE leading Free Church congregation in Inverness—the Free High—has been doing honour to its pastor, Dr. J. J. BLACK, on the attainment of his semi-jubilee as their minister. A quarter of a century is a considerable slice in any man's life. In the case of a modern pastor to an eminently cultured congregation, and in an age when every hearer deems himself well qualified to sit in judgment on the occupant of the pulpit, twenty-five years' continuous and acceptable service means much. Probably no man would hanker less than Dr. Black after the mere gratification of popular esteem; but all who know him and his work would say that few living ministers within these isles better deserve the grateful appreciation of his flock, and of the general community in which he has lived and laboured.

At a special and largely-attended meeting of the Free High congregation on Monday week, an address, couched in affectionate terms, was presented to Dr. Black and he was also made the recipient of a purse of 200 guineas. At the same time, a tangible token of Christian esteem was handed to Mrs. Black, who has these many years, in her special sphere and with signal success, seconded the labours of her husband for the advancement of the public weal. Instead of ourselves throwing the facts into the customary sketch form, we prefer to quote from two speeches delivered at the congregational meeting—that of Mr. James Barron, of the Inverness Courier, who presented the address, and that of Dr. Black himself. Mr. Barron said:—

"Dr. Black came to us from Ireland in January, 1872. He succeeded the late Dr. Donald Fraser, who left for London after doing admirable work here, and whose memory still survives. Dr. Black came from Dublin to a Scottish congregation; that is, he came from his own people, and from circumstances with which he was familiar, to labour among a new people and under different conditions. A change of that kind is always trying, but Dr. Black adapted himself to the situation, and our presence here to-night is a proof of the qualities he has displayed, and of the success which he has achieved amongst us. During all these years, he has been in the pulpit as earnest and as eloquent as the first day he entered it. He has never wearied of preaching. As time goes on, he only seems more anxious than ever to proclaim the message of the Gospel. His preaching is charged in full measure with the old evangelical spirit, for which Scotland is famous, and which has been her best inspiration and the secret of her influence in the world.

"Many preachers, however, stand aloof from their people, and have only a professional knowledge of their actual cares and burdens. Dr. Black is not a man of that sort. He has not stood aloof from his people. We all know him well, and we know that wherever we meet him, he will be genial and friendly and cordial, interested in ourselves and our work and our families. I am sure you will endorse my statement when I say that Dr. Black has endeared himself to us, and has confirmed his hold upon us, by the lovable qualities of his personal character. It is a great matter for a minister to be consistent in his walk and conversation, and we all know that Dr. Black is consistent. But consistency by itself may be a cold and negative virtue. As the Apostle told us long ago, it is not the righteous man but the good man who touches the deepest springs of our nature. We believe that we have in our pastor an example of the good man, whose life and conduct lead us to better things. His sympathy is never cold at the bed of suffering; his heart and voice are tender in the house of affliction; his hand is open in the chamber of poverty; and the weary and heavy-laden find in him a minister of grace and consolation. The little children love him. Their eyes brighten at his approach, and they look for the smile and nod of recognition, and never look in vain."

Among those who bore hearty testimony to the services rendered by Dr. Black to the common cause, were some of his brother ministers of other denominations, so that the occasion was more than a merely sectional one. After thanking the friends on his wife's behalf, Dr. Black, speaking as to himself, said:—

"Beginning at the very beginning, I can see all through how wonderfully the Lord has helped me. To begin with, I was a very sickly boy. I do not think that for six months at a time for many years I was without an ailment, but the Lord kept his child through it all. I worked hard in school, but I fear I did not work hard at college. But the Lord never forsook me. Then came the minister. First of all I was called away to the Connemara Mountains, where I was on duty in the north section of the mountains to look after the Scottish shepherds employed there. Many a rough river I had to cross and many a mountain I had to go over alone. In those early days I was called 'the boy preacher,' but the boy preacher was kept in the most wonderful way.

"I then went to Dublin, where the good girl of seventeen came to me. The girl, and the boy of twenty-six, had to face a big congregation in Dublin, and it was very hard work for both. There was a revival in full power at the time, and crowds waited to hear the Gospel, and we had no rest day or night. We had some great revelations of God's power in Dublin, and afterwards in the North of Ireland. In Bromara, county Down, where my great grandfather, my grandfather and my uncle were all ministers in succession, there was curiosity to hear their descendant. When in that town, there was a great procession of Orangemen. The master of the lodge was in the house, and I said I would like to preach to the Orangemen. The master ordered them to wheel into a field, and I preached to them. A blessing came to them, and that day twelve months I was there, and there was no beating of drums or demonstrativeness. The whole countryside was blessed. That was an illustration of the power of the Gospel. The work in Dublin went on for eleven years, and we had blessing right through.

"Then in the wonderful providence of God I was brought to Inverness. I have not the least doubt about that. Now, we have had five-and-twenty years in Inverness, and, looking back, I have nothing but praise to God for having led me to Inverness. I came to a congregation I knew nothing about, except by hearsay, and the hearsay sent rather a flutter over my heart. They were such grand people, so intellectual, so aristocratic, and all that—and I wondered how I was to face such a congregation. But the Lord said 'Go.'"

After nearly forty years in the ministry, Dr. Black continued, he thought more of his work than ever. It was a solemn office; it was a beautiful thing, with great responsibility and also with its great joys—the greatest of which is the luxury of winning souls. Dr. Black dwelt impressively on the sacredness of his calling, and on the pleasure which he had derived from witnessing the work of the young Christians in the congregation. They had had much to keep them humble, and he only wished to lie at the feet of the Lord—a cleansed and empty vessel for the Master's use.

During these twenty-five years of his Inverness work, Dr. Black has given strength and time, not to pulpit and congregational work only, but in all directions that were likely to give lasting benefit to the masses of the people. He has shown strong sympathy with, and given hearty co-operation in, special evangelistic effort, as our columns have from time to time testified. He has been ardent in temperance work, and recently he has sought to extend the influence of the Keswick movement for thorough consecration in individual Christian life. His Irish training and experience have doubtless prepared him in helping on these developments of teaching and practice which the more conservative Highland mind has been slow to receive. We join the many friends of Dr. and Mrs. Black in wishing for them length of days and continued blessing on their devoted labours.

Mount Lebanon Mission Schools.

MISS PROCTER, of the Schwifat Schools, writes in the latest report: "A most anxious and trying year has come to a close, and again we have to record the loving kindness and tender mercy of our God. When our school year commenced, typhoid fever was raging like a plague in Beyrout and its neighbourhood. Not one case occurred in the school. Living under Moslem rule, we knew not how soon we might be called on to seal our testimony with our blood, and our constant prayer was that we might be kept faithful, and never from fear of man to deny our precious Lord."

In a letter to us Miss Procter says:—"You know how much the need of a boys' school was laid on my heart to keep them from the Moslem and Jesuit schools. So I visited England in 1895, to plead their cause, and raised £253 7s. 5d. towards the erection of a suitable building. We began to build in March, though we had only half the sum, trusting the Lord to send what was needed. The building was finished in October, but not all paid for; there is still a small balance due, which, I hope, Christians will soon enable me to wipe off. On October 6 the house was dedicated, and we began work in it October 15. We have now twenty-three boys boarding in it, and twelve day scholars. The Lord has sent us an earnest Christian master, whose great object is to win them for Christ. Our second master is a former pupil of mine, who left the college to come and help us. The question now is, where are the means for carrying on the work to come from? Surely the Lord who has sent the money to build the house will incline the hearts of his people to supply what is needed!"

The Richmond Home, Worthing, was founded in 1891, to supply nursing and medical attendance as well as change of air, good food, and rest for the patients. In this it differs from the ordinary convalescent homes, in which nursing and medical attendance are not usually given. It is supported partly by voluntary contributions and partly by small weekly payments, made by or for the patients. Since the opening of the Home in 1891 between eleven and twelve hundred patients have been admitted, the majority of whom have been enabled to return—at any rate for a time—to the active duties of life.

INDIAN JUNGLE TRIBES.

RUNNING along the northern side of the Coimbatore district is a range of hills, inhabited by aboriginal tribes. Primitive customs still obtain among them, while their simple pastoral character awakens the hope that the Gospel may find a ready welcome. No systematic work has yet been carried on among those tribes. Itinerating preaching, medical and school work will be undertaken by the Ceylon and Indian General Mission if friends will supply the means. Mr. D. Gardiner, 47, Carysfort-road, Stoke Newington, London, N., will furnish any further details needed.

SETTLERS IN CALCUTTA.

An appeal on behalf of these residents in Calcutta comes from various missionaries in that city and the province of Bengal. They say Calcutta is a city of "settlers." The permanent native residents do not exceed in number the colonists from all nations located here. These immigrants have settled down in separate districts, isolated by language, dress, manners, and customs. They include Afghans, Pathans, Punjabis, Marwaris, Beharis, Santals, Kols, and many other races, all of whom speak some form or other of the Hindi language. Almost all missionary work in Calcutta is carried on either in Bengali or English, neither of which languages are understood by these settlers. Rev. T. W. Charlton, when working as a missionary here, desired to preach the Gospel amongst these people. After several changes of location, the work is now maintained in a room where tenure is very uncertain. In the heart of this quarter is a vacant piece of land. It is in the hands of the Municipality of Calcutta, and is for sale. We appeal to the Christian public to help us to purchase this site immediately, and build on it a hall for evangelistic work. The cost, including that of a simple building, will be between £5000 and £6500. Mrs. Saffery, 71, Crouch-hill, London, N., is hon. sec. to the fund.

WORK IN PING-AN, COREA.

The city of Ping-an is by far the most important city in Northern Korea. Previous to the late war it had a population estimated at 100,000. Up to 1890 only two short visits had been made to it by Protestant missionaries. Since the war the work in Ping-an and vicinity has gone rapidly forward. The native Christians have caught the spirit of their teachers, and tried to make Christ known to all around them. Many have become voluntary evangelists, and of their own accord gone out to tell others in the city and country of the Saviour. So great are the changes being wrought on all sides that the missionaries are filled with gratitude and wonder at the constant and marvellous transformations going on before them. H. Loomis.

TROUBLES IN MADASGASCAR.

In a recent letter a Madagascar missionary says:—"The teaching of French is made compulsory in all schools throughout the country. In some places schools have been closed by military authority because the native teacher was not proficient in that language. Everywhere the missionaries are labouring to establish classes for instructing these poor school teachers, in the hope that some of them may be able to teach their scholars French during at least one-half of the time spent in school, according to the regulation. If French is not taught in our schools to the satisfaction of the authorities, our scholars will be given over to the Jesuits, who will take the Scriptures away from them and compel them to go to mass and confession. This they have already done in many instances. Scores, not to say hundreds, of the more ignorant members of village churches in various districts have yielded to the threats and compulsion of the Jesuits, and allowed themselves to be swept into their fold, where the first thing done is to rebaptize them.

"Protestant congregations in the capital are as large as ever, and so they are in a few other places. Notwithstanding the many changes in the personnel of the military occupying the garrison, we have always received kind and courteous treatment at their hands, and we have been able to render them considerable service. Quite recently we thought we detected a disposition to lessen the cordiality which has hitherto subsisted.

"The French priest in our town uses threats and falsehoods to get hold of the natives just as freely as do his confrères in other districts, and his false statements have imposed upon a number of the people. He enticed some of our school children away by giving them pennies and marbles, etc. To the older people he promises safety, telling them that those who don't go to his church will be regarded as rebels by the Government, and shot (seventeen of the townspeople were shot for alleged complicity with the rebels after their attack on the night of November 18-19), but that if any of those who become his children should be accused, he will certainly beg them off. The poor creatures who believe all this hasten to take refuge under the Jesuit's wings. He hurried to administer baptism to the condemned persons just before they were shot; we heard of one, a Christian man, who refused the rite."

ITALIANS IN TUNIS.

We have been back in Tunis since November 1, and have an apartment right on one of the busy streets. Beneath us are Italians, Sicilians, French, Arabs, etc. The chief drawback is that we have no room for meetings on the ground floor. Meantime we are making the most of one central room or court upstairs. Our little space is often full with men, women, big girls, and boys, and children. The children came in large numbers, and it is blessed to see the thoughtful attention of the elder people, and to realise that some had clearly understood the Gospel message. The work is far from being without difficulty; even now there is a little scare amongst some who have been much with us; but we are not discouraged. M. Nemour has begun a temperance society; we saw so much of the evil and hindrance of the drink here at Christmas time, and trust that in many a case total abstinence may become a preparation for the Gospel; also we are very anxious the children should be saved from becoming drink-victims. FLEMISH WORK IN BRUSSELS.

In a report of the work carried on by the Flemish Church in and around Brussels, Pastor De Jonge, of Utrecht, tells of earnest sustained effort, and of manifest progress. In the city there are two stations, one in the suburb of Laeken, and another in the district of Veeweyde. The operations are manifold, including the regular church services, evangelistic work, Sunday-schools, various classes and meetings, the distribution of literature by colporteurs, etc. There has been growth in all departments of the work, and much interest shown by the people who attend. A third mission-station is in the little town of Schaerbeek, and is a comparatively new effort. It is one of the fruits of the colportage work. For all these branches of work Pastor De Jonge makes himself responsible. His burden is a heavy one, and the difficulties many. We commend the work to the generous consideration of all friends of Continental evangelisation. Mr. D. Matheson, 50, Queen's Gate-gardens, S.W., will receive and forward the gifts of contributors.

LUXEMBOURG.

A quiet but exceptionally successful Gospel effort is being made in the province of Luxenbourg, Belgium. M. Delilez is going from village to village, endeavouring to gather in converts to form the nucleus of a permanent congregation. My husband has supplied the means to enable him to have a helper. Together they live on sevenpence or eightpence a day. They sleep on mattresses filled at each stopping-place with dried leaves gathered in the neighbouring woods. Several drunkards have within the last few months been reclaimed. There have been during the same time an encouraging number of conversions.

There has been opposition, and even persecution, but these annoyances have not damped the ardour of the devoted workers, and in some places they have gained adherents. My husband, Pasteur M. Cadot, Channy, Aisne, France, will be pleased to give any further particulars and to receive help.

(Madame) H. Cadot.

GUINDALERA MISSION, MADRID.

Miss Leake writes from Madrid that the work there goes steadily if slowly on. Interesting gatherings were held at Christmas time. There are several of whom good hopes are cherished as having received some light. A youth from the country, going to the war in Cuba, twice attended the meetings. The second time was the Sunday before he left. He was given a Testament and tanght a simple chorus of a hymn, and fortified with many words of counsel from God's Word. With their heads full of stories of the Virgin and saints these poor boys go to all sorts of perils and often death.

The hon. treasurer of this work is Mr. F. C. Brading, 6, Crescent-road, Wood Green, N.

A Dinner to Working Boys.

ST. MARTIN'S Town Hall, Charing Cross, was well filled on the evening of Wednesday week, when more than 300 boys were entertained at dinner in commemoration of the twenty-seventh anniversary of the Homes for Working Boys. After dinner, the chair was taken by the Duke of Fife, who congratulated the boys on their great advantages, and the way in which they had gained the good opinion of their employers. He had always found that the harder one worked the more one enjoyed one's pleasures. The same principles of conduct applied to all. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Let them regard only their duty and their God—be truthful, manly, careful, considerate, and thoughtful. The Duke concluded with an eulogy on the American ambassador, and the boys sang, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr. Bayard was greeted with great applause. In the course of his address he said: When you look at your lives, you see that each is confined within a narrow circle, but the longer you live the wider will grow that circle. The great Creator of the world never desired a dull uniformity. If He makes men stronger, or wiser, or richer than others, for what purpose is it? It is that they may relieve and aid those to whom such advantages have apparently been denied. Men are endowed with power, intellect, and wealth only in trust. Those who have been blessed themselves must bless and aid others.

Another interesting and profitable speech of the evening was made by Mr. Quintin Hogg, who gave several facts from his experience amongst London working boys. He mentioned the incident of a young man whom he saw cutting his initials with a diamond on the window of a District railway carriage. "Don't do that," said a bookseller's boy. "Why not?" said the young man. "Because you can't rub it out," was the reply. Mr. Hogg said much about the difficulty of rubbing out one's past, and concluded an earnest address by the story of a shoeblack boy whom he had taken into his service, but who soon became totally blind. Through the help of Mr. Hogg and the Young Men's Christian Institute (now the Polytechnic) he became an instructor of the blind, and out of his weekly earnings of eighteen shillings he has ever since contributed five shillings a week, or £13 per annum, to the funds of the Polytechnic.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and Mr. Bayard having been moved by Lord Chelmsford and Lord Kinnaird, the meeting closed by the boys singing, "Glory to Thee, my God, this night."

Contributions amounting to £1746 have been received towards the £2500 asked for, and further donations will be received by the hon. secretary and treasurer, the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, Deene House, Putney Hill, S.W.

Irish Church Missions.—January 16, as usual, was observed by the committee of these Missions as a day of special praise and prayer, in commemoration of the first definite attempt made by the founder of the society, fifty years ago, to reach the Roman Catholics of Ireland by means of a loving message sent through the post to 20,000 Roman Catholics resident in different parts of the land. A large number of topics for praise and prayer were read to the meeting, and severally laid before God in prayer.

A Talk about Rocks.

CAN you tell me the difference between a rock and a stone? Yes, a rock is fixed, unmovable, and a stone can be shifted. Give me some more qualities belonging to a rock. Strong, firm, safe, etc.

The Lord Jesus told us a story about two men who built houses, the one on the sand and the other on a rock; when the storms came the house on the sand was soon blown down, while the other was firm and strong (Matt. vii. 24-27). So you see that a rock is a very safe, strong, secure, unchangeable place. For this reason God is often called a Rock in the Bible. You can read a great deal about this in Deut. xxxii., and in the Psalms also.

In Isaiah God is compared to "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." That means that He is the One to whom we can go for rest and comfort. I remember, when coming down a mountain in Switzerland in the burning sunshine, how thankful we were to see some great rocks casting a shadow across our path. How we ran and threw ourselves down for rest in their grateful shade!

You will all remember the Rock in the wilderness out of which God made the water to flow when the poor Israelites were almost dying from thirst (Num. xx. 6), and how the water followed them ever after as long as they travelled in the wilderness. Well, in 1 Cor. x. 5, we are told that that Rock was a picture of Christ. He gives the living water to save all thirsty souls. He once said to a poor woman who was talking to Him, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is who talketh to thee, thou wouldst ask of Him and He would have given thee living water." If you want your souls to live, you must ask Jesus to give you this living water (John iv. 10; ch. vii. 37-40).

Jesus is like a rock, because He is a safe refuge from sin and sorrow and temptation. Some children were playing on the sea-shore, and without noticing it they became surrounded by the rising tide and were in danger of being drowned. Their mother, coming to seek them, saw their peril, and called, "Climb up to the top of that rock, and sit there quite still and you will be safe." She knew that the highest tide never covered that rock. The children obeyed her, and though the water rose quite up to their feet it did not touch them. Jesus is our rock in the midst of the sea of trouble.

In some parts there are what are called quicksands. If anyone tries to walk over them he will sink deeper and deeper, till the head goes in and the person is smothered. The only hope is that there may be a rock underneath near enough for their feet to rest upon. Just so is it in the quicksands of life; our only safety is to have our feet firmly placed on the Lord Jesus, the Rock of our Salvation. A gentleman and his little girl were riding on horseback up a mountain. All at once the animal began to sink into a bog. The mother, who was walking on the pathway, was terribly frightened until she saw a rock peeping out of the green bog, and she called to the father to jump on to that. Amid the pitfalls of temptation our only security is to rest on Christ the "Rock of Ages" (Ps. xl. 2). There is a little prayer in the 61st Psalm I should like you to learn, and use it as your own: "Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I."

When Moses had been talking to God in the cloud, he had a great wish to see his face, and asked God to show him his glory. God said it would kill him to see his glory, but he placed Moses safely in a cleft of the rock, and when the brightness had passed he let him look. And God called this "a place by Me." When the Lord Jesus is our Rock, then we can get very near to God, and see some of his glory (Eph. ii. 13).

I want you to try and understand something else about a rock. Sometimes rocks are dangerous under the sea. When not seen, ships often strike on them, and are wrecked and lost. In 1 Peter ii. 8, Jesus Christ is called "a rock of offence" to the disobedient; that is, to those who will not take Him for their own Saviour. Dear children, if Jesus is not your Saviour He must be your Judge; if He has not pardoned your sins, the very fact that you knew all about his love and his sacrifice and his invitations, and did not attend, will be your condemnation and destruction. Which shall it be? Is Jesus to be your Rock of Salvation or "a rock of offence"? He wants to be the first, but you may make Him the other. "Choose ye to-day."

"Guesses," or "The Sweetest Name."

"Now listen, Frank and Bertha,
And little Dora too!
I want to hear some guesses.
Dora, with golden tresses,
Begin, then, all of you.
Come, Dora, whisper soft and low,
What is the sweetest name you know?"

"The sweetest name," says Dora,
"The sweetest that can be,
Is just the name of 'Mother;'
There could not be another
One half so sweet to me.
When Frank and Bertha both have guess'd,
I know that 'mother' will be best."

"But don't you think," cried Bertha,
"If mother had a voice,
She'd tell us in a minute
Some word with 'father' in it
Would be a better choice?
'Home' is the word that I have guess'd,
For 'home' holds all we love the best."

Frank for awhile was silent,
With earnest thoughtful eyes,
"Come, Frank, you have not tried it,
But you must now decide it,
Because you look so wise.
I've guessed, and so has Dora, too.
Which is the sweetest name to you?"

Said Frank, "I love our mother,
I love our home right well,
No earthly names are nearer;
No earthly names are dearer;
And if I had to tell
Which is the sweeter of the two,
It would be more than I could do.

"But just one Name is sweeter
Than either you have guess'd,
More sweet than 'father,' 'mother,'
Or 'home,' or any other—
The very, very best!
Of all the tender names there be
'Jesus' is most of all to me."

Then Bertha looked at Dora,
And Dora's face grew bright.
She shook her golden tresses,
And said, "Of all the guesses
I know the last is right.
We both forgot, but now I see
That Frank is right—we all agree."

Scripture Enigma.

THE name of one of the tribes?
A high priest who lived in the time of Samuel?
One whose faith was greatly tried?
A woman who was saved when Jericho was destroyed?
The mountain where Moses died?
The father of Jesse?
Destruction that came upon the world soon after the creation?
The name of Saul's daughter given to David to wife?
The Scribe who lived in the time of Nehemiah?
The initial letters form a clause from Matt. xi.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 55).

1. Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.—Psa. li. 7.

2. Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow.—Is. i. 18.

3. (a) Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, slew a lion in a pit on a snowy day.—1 Chron. xi. 22. (b) To be brave in spite of danger (the lion), difficulty (the pit), and discomfort (the cold and snow).

4. (a) He saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth (Job xxxvii. 6); He giveth snow like wool (Psa. cxlvii. 16); As the cold of snow in the time of harvest, so is a faithful messenger to them that send him (Prov. xxv. 13); As snow in summer, so honour is not seemly for a fool (xxvi. 1); A virtuous woman (xxxi. 10) is not afraid of the snow for her household, for all her household are clothed with double garments (21 margin). (b) The first two passages both show the power of God; the third how faithful service is valued; the fourth how much out of place it is to give honour where it is not deserved; and the last shows how a wise person who makes due provision will not be affected when trouble comes.

5. As the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven...so shall my word be...—Is. lv. 10, 11.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 56).

1. Where in the Bible do we first find the name of Jesus?

2. To what two persons was it first spoken, and by whom?

3. Who said to Philip, Sir, we would see Jesus? (John).

4. Mention three instances, giving chapter and verse, in which even evil spirits called our Saviour by the name of Jesus?

5. By what name did our Lord call Himself when He appeared to Saul of Tarsus at his conversion?

6. Quote a passage in St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians which refers specially to this blessed name.

7. In the last chapter of Revelation the Lord calls Himself by this name; which is the verse?

[Children under ten may answer any three questions; under thirteen any five questions.]

☞ Next week the questions will be taken from Genesis viii. to xiv.

A Letter of Thanks.

Dear Uncle Tom,—We are most grateful for the nice, useful parcel of blotters, cuffs, etc.; just what we need for the soldiers. Please let your "nephews and nieces" know how glad we are to get such help from them. The Victoria leaves on Wednesday this week. We shall be on board before she leaves, and shall take the welcome gifts with us, so the young people will know that they will be used at once.

Please pray for our soldiers leaving for India also for the suffering ones.—Yours very truly, T. Perks.

The Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

Personal.

Many thanks for toys, etc. The toys were sent to the Cripples' Home at Southend.

I am glad to welcome several new nephews and nieces, and if some of them happen to have been unsuccessful this week, I hope they will not be discouraged, but keep on trying.

Lena Hunter (Lynedoch-street, Glasgow).—Am sorry your first answer was wrong this week. If you have another Christian name, please give your name in full, as there is another Lena Hunter. Annie E. Hazeldine.—Thank you for your letter; you will find your name in the list, but answer 1 (e) was not quite full enough. Geo. G. Gibson.—After all, you had a mistake in Answer I. Gladys Webb.—I could only examine No. 54, as the other was a week behind time. Charlie and Geo. McDonald.—You will find the rules in the paper for January 7. Jan D. Macgregor.—It was a pity you did not finish Answer I., but try again next week. Jessie Alice Simpson.—Look up the paper for January 7. Edith Grieve.—Thank you for your letter. I think it would be better to give all the time to the questions set for those of your age. "J. C."—Will you please give your full name and your age? Hilda Rawson.—Am very glad to welcome you as belonging to the Bible Searcher. Chrys Reed.—Please give your age at the top of your paper. Nora Heed.—You need not write in ink. You gave no references this week. Connie and Alice Rouse.—You must write out the answers, not give only the references. Arthur Sanders.—Do not be discouraged; I am always sorry for those who do not get a prize. Agnes Jones.—You must remember a great many send in answers, but I hope you will be successful next time. John Menzies.—Your paper reached me, and much time was spent in examining the papers sent in. H. M. E. Morris.—Look up the rules in January 7. I will make a note about your name. You did not answer Ques. IV. (b).

Uncle Tom.

Hebrew Children in Whitechapel.—The most hopeful and successful branch of the work carried on at the Mission-hall in Old Montague-street, E., is the regular gathering of Jewish children, for instruction in Bible truth and the principles of abstinence from intoxicating drinks. The devoted missionary has just repeated his annual Christmas festival, to the great delight of the little ones and their parents. In the course of the evening the children sang hymns and gave recitations; and after the toys had been taken from the Christmas tree there was a distribution of warm garments and other good things. Young and old were pleased, and benedictions were pronounced upon Mr. and Mrs. Ehrlich, who, though sufficiency of funds had not come in, yet would not disappoint the expectations of the poor.

Kingsdown Orphanage. — The half-yearly meeting of the Forget-me-not League was held last Thursday in Upper Holloway Chapel schoolroom. The Secretary reported that this League had been formed eighteen months ago, to help forward the work carried on in connection with the Kingsdown Orphanage in Upper Holloway and Broadstairs, founded by the late Mrs. Ginever, which now contain nearly 200 boys and girls from three months to fourteen years of age. The League had added during the past half year eighty-seven new members. Rev. A. F. Riley congratulated the Forget-me-nots on what they had been enabled to do. Rev. L. Parsons spoke cheering and helpful words from the Chinese motto, "Tread in God's dust-marks." The Secretary, Miss Gertrude Lillette, 8, Oakfield-road, Stroud Green, would be glad to give any information about the League.

A Book for Young Christians.

I HAVE read a good many books on the study of the Bible, but I do not hesitate to say Mr. Moody's recent work, "Pleasure and Profit in Bible Study," is far and away the best. How I do wish it could be put into the hands of all young Christians and all Christian workers! They would be bound to read it, because it is so intensely interesting. It fairly bristles with racy stories, and anecdotes and illustrations which make the teaching of the Book luminous and terse.

Mr. Moody starts with the Bible as the very Word of the living God, and it is patent on every page that he profoundly believes this. There is not a lurking, subtle doubt in the book. No, it talks thus about doubt, "Do not be a doubter because you think it is intellectual; do not ventilate your doubts. 'Give us your convictions,' said a German writer, 'we have enough doubts of our own.' If you are filled with the Word of God there will be no room for doubts. A lady said to me once, 'Do you not have any doubts?' No, I have not time—there is too much work to be done. Some people live on doubt. It is their stock-in-trade. I believe the reason there are so many Christians who are without the full evidences of the relationship, with whom you only see the Christian graces cropping out every now and then, is that the Bible is not taken for doctrine, reproof, and instruction."

The book goes on in a perfect flow of wise and good talk. It has done my soul good to read it. I only wish such a book had been put into my hands when I was twenty. I very urgently beg all young Christians to read it, with their Bible at their elbow, and all Christian workers too. The book is bound to be a great blessing, and I have written this with the simple desire to make it better known.

Shoreditch Tabernacle. W. Cuff.

Regent's Park College.

The annual meeting of this institution was held last week. Mr. W. R. Rickett, who presided, briefly recapitulated the facts concerning the resignation of the principalship by Mr. Roberts, and its acceptance by Mr. Gould, and made special allusion to the joy which it was to them all to see Dr. Angus with them that evening.

Principal Gould stated that for many years past the College had been honoured by having one out of every five of its senior students accepted for foreign missionary service. This session, Mr. Gould continued, had begun with a "full house." A few words followed from Rev. E. Medley.

Principal T. Vincent Tymms then gave the address to the students. In the course of his remarks, he said: "Novel-reading is dangerous to those who cannot control their appetite for this kind of food. The fashionable novel, however, identifies realism with reeking and rottenness, and only deserves to be cast upon a dunghill. Remember, you are to be ministers of the Word. Your great business hereafter will be to explain and expound that Word to men; but before a man can speak the Word he must learn to read it and understand it, and to apply it to himself. Let those who are shortly leaving College remember that no furnace burns with a pure white heat until it has been lighted a good while. One thing needful in a servant is to stand waiting at his Master's gates, without pretending to be indifferent to honour and fame and praise, yet not unprepared for sacrifice. He needs to be able to say, 'Oh, use me, Lord—use even me. Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where.'"

City-Street-Orderly-Boys.—Nearly 200 of these lads responded to the invitation of friends to a meat tea at the Old Welcome, Little Britain, on Saturday. A Gospel meeting was afterwards held in the lecture hall of the Y.M.C.A., which was addressed by Mr. J. Albinson and Miss Button. The meeting was of a most interesting character, the boys thoroughly appreciating the solos, etc., rendered. On leaving, each boy was presented with a copy of "Probable Sons" and an illustrated Gospel (the gift of the Scripture Gift Mission), also cards, "Trust Jesus," by Mr. G. Kelsey. It is felt that a good permanent work might be done among this class of boys, and a movement is on foot to provide an institute for reading, etc., for their use; as, also, for the emigration of some without parents. Information respecting this work may be had of Mr. Albinson, 75, Southampton-row, W.C.

The John Bost Homes.

THE Laforce Homes, which have done so much good work since their foundation by the beloved John Bost, go on in full activity and vigour. An English report is now being printed, so that friends in Great Britain may be informed of the present state of that Christian and philanthropic work. The report gives an historical sketch of the founding of the different parts of the institution, reminding the reader of the providential way in which the Lord led John Bost from the founding of one Home to the founding of another, until the nine present Homes had been erected. One sees at the same time what a variety of illnesses and complaints can there receive the care and attendance of which they are so much in need: orphan girls, blind, idiot, deficient, infirm, epileptic boys and girls, aged governesses and old servants—in a word, incurables of every degree and description.

It is not, as some think, an institution which has been built once for all, and to which nothing is to be added. It is in the prime of life, and its growth is increasing. Some four years ago, the old Bethesda (an old house enlarged bit by bit) was pulled down and replaced by a larger home in a lovely situation, overlooking the grand valley of the Dordogne. Built to contain 120 inmates, it was not expected to be filled for some time. Alas! it already shelters 125 sufferers. Since then Siloé (for blind, imbecile, and infirm boys) has had to be enlarged by the addition of a new wing. And there is a cry for la Retraite (for old servants) and le Répos (for aged governesses). They are literally overflowing, and several poor applicants can only hope to obtain admittance upon the death of some of the present inmates. The repairs at Siloé are not yet fully paid for, and the committee are obliged to wait for the gifts of generous friends before they dare undertake the necessary enlargement of the two homes for aged people.

The general financial situation is good, owing to the constant efforts of the committee and of the general director, Pastor Rayroux, and to the unrelaxing sympathy of Christian friends. It is a pleasing thing to know that the Protestants of France are supporting these homes with increasing generosity. But the steady increase of expenses renders foreign aid still necessary. There were 510 inmates three years ago; there are now 540, and the total ordinary expense amounts to less than £9500 per annum, that is to say less than 11½d. a day for each inmate. Considering the special food and medical attendance constantly required the cost will certainly not appear exorbitant. Some most interesting facts are given in the report, showing that the souls of the inmates are cared for as well as their bodies.

Pastor John D. Bost, nephew of the founder, is now in Great Britain hoping to advocate the cause of those Homes for about two months. He will be happy to give information concerning the Laforce "Asiles," or to receive any gifts addressed to him at the West Central Temperance Hotel, Southampton-row, London, W.C.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a nine days' mission at Oldham, which closed on the 25th inst.

Welcome Mission, Portsmouth. — The monthly meeting for the promotion of Christian Holiness was held last Tuesday under the presidency of Mr. Hogben. Ministers and Christians of all denominations in the town gathered in good numbers and many were helped by the addresses of Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, of Brighton. His subject in the afternoon was "The Faith of God," and at night "The Life of God."

Palestine Exploration Fund.—In the new Quarterly Statement, Sir Charles Wilson writes:—"The principal feature in this year's excavations has been the determination of the dimensions of the true Pool of Siloam, and the discovery of the church built, or perhaps rebuilt, by the Empress Eudocia, on its north side. Here we have, without doubt, the pool mentioned in the Bible, and it is to be hoped that the site may be purchased, and the whole pool thoroughly cleared out and restored to its original condition, as far as this may be possible. Next in interest is the paved street with steps, which is apparently that by which Antoninus descended to Siloam. This street points towards the 'Double Gate,' and by following it up, that all-important landmark, the steps that go up to the City of David, may be discovered, and a clue obtained to the position of David's sepulchre." It is matter of regret that, with promise of a rich harvest of discovery, the Fund has to struggle with an adverse balance of £790.

Paul's Determination.

DR. PARKER'S THURSDAY LECTURE.

SOON after the opening of the City Temple Thursday service last week the congregation began to overflow the area into the galleries. Before the service closed the building was full from top to bottom. The unusual stir was caused by the presence and song of the Welsh choir from Bethesda, Lord Penrhyn's slate quarry in North Wales.

Dr. PARKER'S discourse had no direct, but a plainly indirect, reference to this exciting society topic of the day. It was an eloquent exposition of Paul's determination, as expressed to the Corinthian believers, to know nothing among them except Jesus Christ and Him crucified. The preacher explained that the words did not at all, in his opinion, carry the common acceptation—that Paul would never speak on any other theme, and that it was his one topic of meditation and conversation morning, noon, and night. The true reading of the utterance is this—according to the best authorities—the only thing about which his mind was definitely and irrevocably made up was that Jesus Christ crucified is the Saviour of the world; on other matters, such as church discipline or misconduct, or charges against one another among the Corinthian believers, he would not come to any judgment till he had heard the evidence.

This view casts a very different light on the apostolic utterance. Paul was a man of affairs; he took an interest in all that was going on around him. He was no hermit; he did not shut himself up in religious isolation, and say he would have nothing to do with what was happening in the world from day to day. These things come and go, and he was ready to judge them by their immediate relationships. But one thing he had resolved on—to know Jesus Christ and Him crucified; and he would regulate the whole of his conduct by that supreme and dominating fact.

If Christians would follow this great example, nothing of social interest and obligation would be trifled with or neglected. They would be considered on their merits; while the central, substantial, vital, unchangeable thing would be that Jesus Christ crucified is the Saviour of the world. That is Christianity. Do not, therefore, charge Christians with withdrawing from all things present, urgent and distressful, and with spending their time in the contemplation of metaphysical and sentimental subjects. Such a charge is libellous. All such things come within the purview of Christian men. But the one thing that they have settled in their minds is that there cannot be two Saviours. Here all the Churches of Christ are at one. We find the unity of the Church in that direction; not in changing politics, in varying hypotheses, in mere opinions which are one thing to-day, and to-morrow will be re-adapted to their surroundings. The one certain thing is that we stand at the Cross, for the Cross, and that we trust to the Cross for our present forgiveness and our eternal well-being.

This is a philosophy of life which does not exclude anything, but which regulates everything. Only he who takes a right view of the Cross can take a right view of society. Be right in your supreme purpose and that will make everything else perfectly clear. Faith is greater than creed; faith is the substance of which all creed is made. If your faith be living, then conduct and obligation to society will be ruled it. Apply this to questions that are giving a good deal of trouble. There is, for example, the question of the Bible. I am not learned enough to arbitrate between contending critics. You must go to another tribunal for judgments as to matters of verbal criticism. The one thing I have determined to know is this—hat holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Inspiration is greater than any theory of inspiration. God still breathes, as He has always breathed, upon the souls of reverent men. If we anchored ourselves to that, as Paul did to Jesus Christ and Him crucified, we should be able properly to relate ourselves to the changing questions that agitate the moment. Many of these questions I cannot settle, but I am determined to know one thing—that the Holy Ghost is in the Church as a living Spirit, and has guaranteed unto us a revelation which the penitent spirit can receive; a revelation which provides the greatest answer to human sin and human woe that has ever been addressed to the enquiring mind. That is my point of rest.

Dr. Parker proceeded to apply the same principle to the question of the different forms of worship in the Church. Some like to read prayers written by other men; others prefer free prayer; while yet others prefer silence. The one thing to be settled about is that God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must do it in spirit and in truth. Wherever there is a praying man, with form or without, there is an answering God. So there is here one grand supreme determination in the spirit of which all other questions may be settled. How much also depends upon atmosphere in the settlement of controverted questions. How much better we can approach any question along the line of mutual trustfulness and the absence of mean suspicion. Compared with a thorough, loving, obedient trust in Jesus Christ and Him crucified all other questions are comparatively small and trivial. Are we orthodox at the Cross? To explain it all is beyond me, but I feel the need and the preciousness of it. I shall have the long day of eternity in which to understand it all. To those who are so anxious to settle where there were two Jeremiahs, or ten Isaiahs, or fifteen Moses, I would say: What do you think about Jesus and Him crucified? Do you know Christ? If so, stand to that; see that no man and no speculation detach your grip of that great central living principle. What you have to do is to cherish an obedient spirit. Do the will, and little by little light will come upon the doctrine.

After the discourse the Welsh male choir ascended the platform, and greatly moved the congregation by their skilled harmonious song. One piece, sung in the English, was "In the heavenly country"; another, in Welsh, was entitled "Gwady-groes" (Blood of the Cross). Dr. Parker, in some greatly applauded remarks, said that these Welsh brethren by their song had won all their hearts. They inspired no terror in him; it was impossible on the face of it that such men could be quarrymen. They were students, artists, men of culture. God must have a special meaning in making such heads as they had. They are true noblemen; they ought to own the quarry. He was no partisan in the dispute. These men have sought arbitration. Let both sides be fairly heard before a competent impartial tribunal, and let the decision be accepted.

A collection was taken for the quarrymen, which totalled close on £40.

Work in Southsea.

THE report of the work in Southsea, Portsmouth, and neighbourhood shows that during the past year God has given much blessing. For sixteen years Gospel tent work has been carried on on Southsea Common, and last season this proved a fruitful effort. The Gospel mission work consists of preaching the Gospel in the King-street Hall, holding cottage meetings, house-to-house visitation, open-air preaching, and tract distribution. Three special missions have been held during the past year, in addition to the ordinary regular preaching of the Gospel. These special efforts have been the means of real blessing. The various branches have also been greatly used of God. The Mission is carried on on simple, undenominational, evangelical lines. There is great need for help that this useful mission work may be extended. The superintendent is Mr. John Denning, Myrtle House, St. James-road, Southsea.

The Servants' Mission.

OPENING OF A NEW HOME.

MANY know the useful work which Mr. and Mrs. Goodchild and their helpers have been doing for some thirty years among men and women servants, large numbers of whom have been won to the Saviour, and have banded themselves in the Servants' Christian Association, in order to endeavour to bring their fellow servants to Christ.

In connection with this Mission to Servants, a Home has been opened in Sloane-terrace for over twenty-six years for men servants, and another in Buckingham Palace-road for women servants. Last year, however, in the course of rebuilding operations the Men's Home was closed, and it became absolutely necessary to find new premises. An appeal was made to Christian stewards, which brought in about £400. After many disappointments and much prayer two houses were found in Eaton-terrace—a most convenient centre—but one of these required very heavy repairs. After careful inspection and due consideration, the houses were secured by the help of certain friends, who advanced the amount needed, and one of them was put in the builder's hands to be repaired and made fit for the Men's Home. The work was to be done in eight weeks, but it has taken twenty-four, and even yet is scarcely complete. It has involved practically rebuilding, with the addition of a new upper floor. Meanwhile the adjoining house, by-and-by to be the Women's Home, has been used in a temporary way.

This new Home, although barely finished, was opened on Thursday week, when a large company of friends, helpers, and members of the Christian Association met to unite with Mr. and Mrs. Goodchild in praise to God for the way He has led them and provided for the needs of the work. The Home will accommodate sixteen residents. The lower floor is kitchen, dining, and reading room, the ground floor is a large hall for services, prayer-meetings, and classes. Two spacious rooms on the second floor are to be used as bedrooms. The third and fourth floor have been fitted up with roomy cubicles for the use of men while out of place and staying in the Home.

In due course No. 111, next door, will be ready for occupancy by women servants seeking a situation. Thus the two Homes so long separated will come under the personal supervision of the superintendent—a change which must conduce to economy as well as efficiency. At the opening meeting sympathetic and kindly letters were read from Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton, Mrs. J. F. W. Deacon, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and other well-known helpers. There is still about £250 wanted to complete the work, as well as the furnishing and settling up the builder's bill. We doubt not the director will have generous aid of many in his good work. He may be addressed, Mr. James Goodchild, 109, Eaton-terrace, S.W.

A United Gospel Temperance Mission was held in St. John's, Blackheath, January 18 to 24 inclusive, in which all the churches united. The meetings were held in the mission-room of the parish church and in the schoolroom of the Wesleyan Church. The chair was taken on the different nights by the vicar of the parish church, and the ministers of the Presbyterian, Wesleyan, and Baptist Churches, by the secretary of the Irish Church Missions, and a member of the Congregational Church respectively. The address was given on Monday, the 18th, by Mr. William Noble, who spoke on "Doubts," Romans xiv. 23, the missioner for the rest of the week being Rev. T. Aldwell, of Moate, Ireland, who gave a short simple Gospel address first, and afterwards a temperance address. There was a united choir from the different churches, and sacred solos were sung by various ladies and gentlemen. Sermons were preached in all the churches which had united in the mission, on Sunday, 24th, Rev. T. Aldwell preaching morning and afternoon in the parish church, and in the evening in the mission-room. The addresses were characterised by wise, earnest, faithful words. The attendance throughout was very encouraging, that on the first night being very great indeed. A number of pledges were taken and a great impetus given to the temperance cause in the neighbourhood on the highest grounds.

Letter to the Editor.

"PAPERS ON MISSIONS."

Sir,—As you invite correspondence, I should like to ask you by what authority you state "the Church is by God's appointment the great missionary society," and that "to Christ and his Church God committed the responsibility of being his witnesses." I read that the eleven disciples were commanded to "go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing," etc., and as individuals personally responsible, they sought to carry out the command, and every real disciple of our Lord is equally responsible to do so now. I am quite aware that if this was generally admitted, there would be a howl by some that "their craft was in danger," but I verily believe that until this is accepted and acknowledged as a personal command, mission work will flag, and our Heavenly Father withhold his blessing to a considerable extent.—Yours very faithfully,

Constant Reader.

[The writers of the Papers entirely agree with "Constant Reader." The Church, in their view, consists of and comprises every disciple of our Lord, individually and corporately. The commission, in Acts i. 8, and the promise of the Spirit to his witnesses, was fulfilled not only to the eleven, but to the 120, the nucleus of the infant Church.—Ed.]

Friendless and Fallen.

The New Year's prayer-meeting of the supporters and workers in the various Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge was held on Tuesday week in the Council Room of Exeter Hall. The gathering has usually been one of the most cheering of all the meetings held during the year, and the assembly of last week was no exception, the spirit of devotion and hearty zeal leaving nothing to be desired. The meeting was presided over by Mr. C. H. Marten, a member of committee, who, in a few words, spoke thankfully of the great blessing which had been vouchsafed to the work during the past year, both financially and spiritually. Rev. Dr. Davies delivered a stirring address to workers. The better part of the time was, however, principally given up to thanksgiving, and prayer that a richer blessing might rest upon the labours of those who are more especially engaged in the spiritual work.

Upwards of one thousand young women and girls participated in the benefits of the Homes and Refuge last year, and not one slept in the institution for even a night without having God's message of salvation in Jesus Christ brought before her. At their first meeting on January 6 this year the committee, as an act of faith, resolved to give immediate succour to every suitable case applying day or night during this year, irrespective of the state of the funds at the time the application is made, relying upon the goodness and mercy of the loving Father, who during the past forty-one years of the Society's history has not failed to supply their need. Further particulars may be had from Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

Forward Movement in Deptford.

The sore needs of Deptford have been pressing on the minds of earnest Methodists, who have been endeavouring successfully to push forward a fresh mission. In connection therewith a large and enthusiastic audience assembled in the High-street schoolroom on Monday week to inaugurate the proposed new hall. Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., presided, and Rev. R. M. Spoor gave details showing the need for a big evangelistic centre amidst that dense population. The Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund has promised £6000 towards £9015 required.

Mr. Perks was delighted with the co-operation of rich and poor in that enterprise, for it represented one of the characteristic features of the Methodist Connexion. Mr. Spoor had said that this new undertaking was to be a big evangelistic centre, and not an ordinary Methodist chapel. How had they fallen away! Every Methodist chapel should be evangelistic; they must get back to old-fashioned methods as revived by the London Mission. There must be no locked pews. Their chief object was to save souls; for when a man was converted his clothes came out of pawn, gin-palaces were passed by, and even his tobacco was reduced. In this way they would be following in the footsteps of that "energetic little despot"—John Wesley. Mr. James Vanner, Revs. Walford Green, and George Charter, Captain Symons, and Mr. W. Powell delivered very short addresses.

THE BOOK WORLD.

A CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST.*

In this life of Dr. James Croll Mr. Campbell Irons has produced a book which cannot fail to interest a large part of the reading world, especially the scientific and religious sections. It has the fascination peculiar to the story of the struggles of a self-made man, the interest of a record of wonderful scientific discoveries, and the attraction of a character which was based on simple Christian faith.

James Croll, the son of a stonemason, was born at Cargill, in Perthshire, in 1821. He was a dull scholar, "as far as regards getting up his lessons sharply and correctly." He was poor at reading and bad at spelling, and beyond this he did not go very far. It was the wonders of the natural world which arrested his attention and aroused his interest. Without help from anyone, he studied pneumatics, hydrostatics, light, heat, electricity, and magnetism. His delight was in the law which lay behind all phenomena; the great principles underlying all branches of science were the objects of his incessant, patient study. He was a philosopher at fifteen. Strange to say, he had a great dislike of chemistry and geology, and yet lived to be a distinguished professional geologist.

He began life as a millwright, and a rough life it was. At twenty-two he became a joiner, but an accident forced him out of that calling. Next he served in a tea-seller's shop; then became an insurance agent; from that, again driven by physical unfitness, he passed on to be a janitor in the Andersonian Institute in Glasgow, and then to hold, in Edinburgh, a situation in the Geological Survey of Scotland. In all these positions he found or made time for study, and achieved the distinction of becoming LL.D. of St. Andrew's University and a Fellow of the Royal Society.

Dr. Croll's scientific papers were numerous, and soon attracted the attention of the most distinguished scientists of the day. His mind being naturally of a philosophic cast, the first treatise of importance he wrote was on "The Philosophy of Theism," which Dr. Cairns pronounced a work "far above the great body of similar contributions." To philosophic studies he returned in his old age and wrote the "Philosophical Basis of Evolution." Dr. Croll achieved great fame by his papers on Climate and Time, in which he set forth the causes of the changes which have passed over the climate in the same region at different periods of the earth's history. His calculations of the eccentricity of the earth's orbit as the cause of glacial epochs are very marvellous, especially when it is considered that they were made by a method of his own, as he had never enjoyed any mathematical training. To be sure that he was correct, he used to submit them for verification to his friends, and apparently they were always accurate.

His work brought him into correspondence with the foremost men of his day, many of whom acknowledged their indebtedness to him. Darwin says, in one of his letters, "Your results have been of more use to me than, I think, any other set of papers which I can remember." His views were, of course, in some cases stoutly contested, notably those on ocean currents, but he was a man whose strength and penetration all admitted. Wide, bold generalisations, based on carefully collected and ascertained facts, were the characteristics of his work.

To the Christian reader one of the charms of the book will be the record of simple faith in God and his Son which it contains. When Croll was about eighteen years old he became deeply impressed with spiritual things. He says:—"Simple trust in Christ's vicarious death gave me complete peace of mind and true happiness. The agnostic will smile at my experience. How different would he feel if he experienced this blessed peace himself!" Among his earliest friends was Rev. Andrew Bonar, then of Collace, who saw Croll's remarkable ability as a metaphysician. No decline of faith ever came over him. In the midst of his labours, successes, and honours he remained a humble follower of Jesus. In the midst of his pains and trials he was ever resigned. He never courted public applause; he did not care to appear at the British Association meetings because he had no sympathy with its leading idea, that science is the all-important thing; mental, moral, and metaphysical philosophy was, he thought, a more ennobling study. There was "a cold materialistic atmosphere around scientific men in general" which he says he did not like. As he had lived, so he died, "trusting to the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ as my only, but, thank God, all-sufficient ground of hope for the future."

THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

An Exposition of the Book of Isaiah. By William Kelly. (T. Weston, 53, Paternoster-row.) This is a new and enlarged edition of a work which has long been out of print. The author has scholarship, but not of the modern type. He is deeply versed in Holy Scripture, and sees no reason why God should be left out of prophecy. With many others he holds that all prophecy looks to the End, but more than most expositors he associates the bulk of Isaiah's writings with events yet future, in detail as well as in broad outline. His point of view is that of one who believes the Church to be part of "the mystery," so "hidden" that it was never the definite subject of prophetic discourse; though he allows that principles of the glorious future are already verified in the Gospel and applied thereto. Israel and the Nations, God's Kingdom and Christ's Reign are the burden of this book, in the course of which many well-known works are quoted and at times ably criticised. Although a pronounced "futurist," the author is not so bald a literalist as some, for in his exposition of Isaiah xiv. 3-23, alluding to the opinions of some that in the last days there will be a re-establishment of oriental Babylon—a literal city in the plain of Shinar—he declares the conception to rest upon a wrong principle, and adds that it "appears to be fundamentally false." There is an instructive Introduction on prophecy and Isaiah's place among the prophets. The book is not only an exposition, but an application of great truths and principles; and where we cannot follow the author as to interpretation we are compelled at all times to recognise his loyalty to the inspired Word, and reverence in unfolding its teachings.

The Higher Criticism: The Greatest Apostasy of the Age. By D. K. Paton. (1s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) This is a trenchant essay on (1) "The falsity of the position of the Higher Criticism"; (2) "The worthless character of the work of the Higher Critics." In conclusion, the Higher Criticism is condemned as an attack upon the Word of God, and as a modern re-statement of the objections of blatant atheists of other generations.

Bishop Ellicott's Bible Commentary for English Readers is a work which many ministers and teachers have found of great value, but its accessibility has hitherto been limited by reason of its cost—eight volumes at a guinea each. We welcome the first instalment of a cheap reissue, in thirty-six parts, costing sixpence each. This commentary, which is specially valuable in the department of exposition, will now begin a new career of usefulness. It includes the text of Holy Scripture, and is beautifully printed. (Cassell & Co.)

The Oldest Christian Church. By Henry Holme. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) The terrible peril now threatening the Nestorians lends a peculiar and timely interest to the appearance of this book, which aims at tracing the history of the Nestorians, back to the first mention of them as a people. The writer fully accepts them as a portion of the ten lost tribes of Israel—they call themselves "Beni Israel." Having given evidence for this belief, the author describes their early acceptance of Christianity and their missionary zeal—of which memorials exist in the very heart of China. The volume concludes with a study of Deacon Abraham, and Esther his wife, and of their great work at Oroomiah. We trust it will arouse fresh interest in this ancient and imperilled people.

The Conversion of Armenia to the Christian Faith. By W. St. Clair-Tisdall, M.A. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) This book should command many readers at the present time. Its author is a missionary of the C.M.S., stationed at Julfa, the Armenian suburb of Ispahan; and having for a time to superintend an Armenian congregation, he studied the language and literature. In writing this work he has consulted original authorities, and gathered a large amount of information. It seems that Christianity was introduced into Armenia as early as the first century, and many who first accepted it there, as elsewhere, were called upon to seal their testimony with their blood. In the third century, Christianity became the recognised religion of the country, in what way this book relates with interesting detail.

The Y.M.C.A.

A BAYSWATER DEMONSTRATION.

AN important and largely attended meeting of men was held in the large hall of the Paddington Baths, Queen's-road, on Tuesday week, to rally the young men of the district against the chief vices of the day—intemperance, impurity, betting, and gambling. The demonstration was held under the auspices of the Bayswater Y.M.C.A. The meeting was in every way a great occasion, both as regards the numbers present, and the character and influence of the speakers.

Head of the list came LORD KINNAIRD, who presided. He urged the necessity of men banding themselves together for the purposes of fighting the great social sins of the country, some of which were now of gigantic proportions. Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR gave a stirring address on intemperance, the evils of which were, unhappily, felt in nearly every family. The damage done by that vice to individuals and to the nation at large was incalculable. It was as injurious physically as it was morally, and degraded and debased its victims.

In similar strain Rev. E. A. STUART took for his theme the vice of gambling, a subject on which he held strong views. Where drink destroyed a thousand, gambling had slain its ten thousand. Were he an employer of labour, and found one of his men betting, he would soon find someone else to fill his place. Betting made honest men dishonest; the occupants of many a gaol could verify that. If each man could not feel that he was his brother's keeper, he might at least recognise that he was his brother's brother, and in that brother's interest he ought to set his face against the curse of betting and gambling.

Rev. F. B. MEYER followed with, perhaps, the most weighty and solemn address of the evening, his theme being purity among men. He felt it necessary to address himself to Christian men of standing, as well as to youths entering upon life. Parents and teachers should be watchful and faithful to their children. He attached great importance to the avoidance of lewd or doubtful prints and pictures, loose conversation, and questionable companions. The number of disorderly houses and abandoned women that existed in all parts of London was positively appalling. Young men should avail themselves of all good influences and helpful companionships; but sooner or later they must fight their own battle at close quarters; in this they find their supreme help in the power which each could obtain from Christ Himself, who was ever ready to give them victory.

BRIEF NOTES.

The annual social meeting of the Golspie Association was held on the 12th inst. Mr. Baillie, the oldest member of the Association, was in the chair, and warmly supported the work. Addresses followed by various speakers on the importance of Bible-reading and united fellowship meetings.

The annual meeting of the Beckenham Association was held on the 20th inst. in the Public Hall, the president, Mr. F. W. Lawrence, F.R.G.S., occupying the chair. There was a good attendance of members and friends, addresses were given by Revs. G. E. Weeks and T. Eynon Davies, and others.

The annual meeting of the Weston-super-Mare Association, over which Mr. J. Jackson Barstow presided, was one of the most successful ever held. The speakers were Preb. Ackwith, of Taunton; Rev. Colin Campbell, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. The Sunday Afternoon Men's Bible Class, conducted by the secretary, Mr. H. Harrison, has now an average attendance of over 200.

H.R.H. Prince Oscar Bernadotte of Sweden, who has recently suffered severely from an attack of influenza, writes to Sir George Williams very greatly regretting his inability to attend the opening of the fine new building of the Belfast Association, and adds: "I am happy to tell you that we have had a blessed time in the Y.M.C.A. here, at Stockholm, this winter. Many a young man has there been brought from darkness to light, and has found peace in Jesus."

The Young Men's Sunday Afternoon Bible Class at the Leeds Association reports an average attendance for the past year of 154, while nearly 100 anxious enquirers were dealt with. On Sunday, January 3, 1897, there were thirty-three anxious inquirers, and on the 10th, twenty. Some formerly sceptics and Romanists are now living a consistent Christian life. Others who were drunkards are now clothed and in their right mind. Many of the young converts are entering into Christian work.

As the outcome of a letter addressed to them by Sir George Williams, the Central International Committee of Y.M.C.A.'s at Geneva has forwarded a communication to the National Committee of the various countries comprised in the World's Alliance bringing before them "the delicate and grave question of the direct participation of our Associations in the general stirring up of public opinion in favour of unhappy Armenia." Generous help has already been sent from various committees on the Continent; the matter has also been presented to the Associations in the English Union, and numerous collections have been made in behalf of the Armenian Relief Fund.

During the last quarter, the travelling secretaries of the Scottish National Union of Young Men's Christian Associations and Fellowship Unions and Associations, have gone over an exceptionally large part of Scotland, in furtherance of the work of Christ among young men. Mr. Bell's journeys have extended from the Isle of Stroma in the far north, to Hawick in the south, while Mr. Wright has visited many places between Stornoway and Campbeltown in the west, and Lockerbie in the south. They have had much arduous work, and have encountered many difficulties, but their whole-hearted zeal, combined with tact and perseverance, have carried them through, and enabled them to leave behind permanent results of their visit to many places.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE PREPARATION HOME.

THE Young Women's Christian Association has long felt a desire to attract to its ranks of workers girls who desire to give their life and talents to the service of God and of young women, and who at the same time have to seek a profession in life.

It has been felt, however, that it was impossible in most cases for girls of culture and education to give themselves to Y.W.C.A. work without definite training, and a Preparation Home has consequently been opened at 14, Finsbury-square, E.C. The first session is now half over, and the committee is taking a step forward in preparation for the second session, which will commence March 22 and close July 22.

They are glad to offer two scholarships which will enable intending students to obtain the course at half price. Applications will be carefully considered by the committee, and applicants must mention their age, and forward two references, one, if possible, to be from a secretary of the Y.W.C.A.

The training consists of Bible-study, association-study, book-keeping, domestic work, voice-culture, scientific and historical lectures, and practical work in factories, work-rooms, and in the institute.

We hope that Y.W.C.A. committees will send any intending superintendents or secretaries to be trained at their expense in this way. The usual charge is 15s. or 25s. per week, but as we are anxious also to teach girls outside the Association, may I ask you through your columns to make this known. All applications to be made to the hon. superintendent, 14, Finsbury-square, E.C. KINNAIRD.

BRIEF NOTES.

At the monthly social of the Southport Y.W.C.A., Mrs. Litton gave an address on "Fear not."

The fifth annual meeting of the Tulse Hill branch was held on the 11th inst. Miss Ardill, of Eastbourne, and Miss Ellis, of Gipsy Hill, gave addresses.

The twenty-sixth anniversary of the Philadelphia (U.S.A.) Y.W.C.A. was celebrated on December 18. Mrs. C. N. Judson, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. M. E. Leicester gave addresses.

The officers of the Harlem (U.S.A.) Y.W.C.A. have decided to delay the ceremony in connection with the laying of the corner-stone for the new building until the spring.

At the recent annual meeting of the Inverness Association many testimonies were given as to the excellent work of the branch in ministering to the social and spiritual needs of young women.

The tenth annual meeting of the Lady Havelock branch, Hammersmith, was held on January 21 in the West End Lecture Hall, Hammersmith. The report, as submitted by the secretary, Miss L. Evening, showed every department engaged in to be flourishing. The financial standing, too, is good. Addresses were delivered by Miss Reynolds, Revs. J. Conway and A. G. Edgerton, as well as by the chairman, Mr. David Tweddle.

The members of a number of branches who have contributed to the "coin collection" towards the purchase of the new headquarters met at 25 and 26, George-street, on the 19th inst. The gathering took the form of a social evening, Miss Morley being the hostess. An inspection was made of the building, and after tea a crowded meeting was held, when addresses were given by Mr. W. Joynson Hicks, Miss Morley, and the Hon. Emily and Gertrude Kinnaird. Upwards of £700 has been raised by the "coin collection." A similar social for other branches will follow shortly.

Three gatherings took place at the headquarters, George-street, Hanover-square, on the 22nd inst. In the morning, at the second annual meeting of the World's Y.W.C.A., Mrs. J. H. Tritton presided, and reports of the work were given by Miss Reynolds, Miss M. Gollock, Miss Macandrew, Mrs Hatt Noble, and others. At 2.30 a meeting to pray specially for funds was well attended. Rev. E. W. Moore presided, and gave an address on "Importunity in Prayer." The usual monthly conference followed.

The annual conversazione of the Glasgow Y.W.C.A. was held on Thursday last in the City Hall, which was filled in every part by young women and girls. The chair was occupied by Bailie Chisholm, senior magistrate of the city, who gave a vigorous address from the standpoint of one who knew the life of a large community. The annual report submitted by the hon. secretary, Mrs. W. M. Oatts, showed a membership of 2746, with forty branches including three junior branches, one nurses' union with 150 members, and a recently-formed teachers' branch with fifty-three members. There are two well-equipped institutes—the property of the Y.W.C.A. Addresses were afterwards delivered by Miss Morley and by Mr. D. A. Black.

Obituary.

SIR ISAAC PITMAN.

THE venerable inventor of phonography passed away last week, at a ripe old age. He was a man of strong opinions, and on many subjects held independent views. So, in addition to being a synonym for shorthand in its greatest usefulness and diffusion, his name stood for vegeterian diet, total abstinence from strong drink, anti-vaccination, and abolition of tobacco-smoking. He was a benefactor of his generation, and his services met with hearty acknowledgment, especially during more recent years.

MRS. JOHN BENNETT.

To many Mr. Bennett has endeared himself by his valuable evangelistic services for so many years—being indeed one of the oldest evangelists of the Evangelisation Society. Hence he will have the deep sympathy of many in the bereavement he has been called upon to suffer in the loss of Elizabeth Bennett, his dearly-loved wife, who fell asleep on Jan. 4. She had been his faithful helpmeet for fifty-one years. The testimony of her husband to a friend was that he was not worthy of her. Her quiet motherly ways to many to whom she had been as a mother were without ostentation, and from others who had known her for many years a faithful, steadfast friend. Mr. Bennett has lost a companion to whom in the long period of fifty-six years he had never spoken an angry word, a marvellous testimony to the power of the grace of God.

REV. C. R. HOWELL, HASTINGS.

Well-known to many by his little book, "Jesus, All in All," Rev. C. R. Howell, of Hastings, recently passed away after a life of rich and varied ministry. At a memorial service in Clive Vale Congregational Church, his attached friend, Rev. Charles New, said:—"Prayer was his element. None could hear him pour out his heart in sudden petition—at the meal, or by the wayside, or in the railway carriage, or on the friendly visit, or in any emergency, without feeling that he was much at home in heaven. In the study of the Bible he was a master in Israel. It was his companion, his meditation day and night. He spared no pains to reach its exact meaning, and as he expounded it you knew that he had pierced deep into its hidden treasure. His thought for others was wonderful. Personal convenience counted for nothing if there was a chance of doing others good."

Christian Endeavour.

THE Romney-street Society, Westminster, support a native boy on the Congo, and in addition raised last year £10 for missions.

At the monthly meeting of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Union three new societies were admitted, bringing the total number to 171.

The Endeavour movement is undoubtedly taking hold in Ireland, and evidences of its popularity and progress abound on every hand, some of the most important work being done in small and out-of-the way places where Protestants are few.

The Brixton and Central South London Union has had good meetings at York-road Chapel. An enthusiastic junior rally was held in the afternoon. In the evening a great audience filled the chapel, and rousing addresses were given by Revs. Tolefree Parr, W. Horne, Knight Chaplin, and Allen Redshaw.

A plan has been suggested for the awakening of the Christian world to the needs of missions by a "round-the-world expedition of enquiry" in 1899. It has been proposed to form a company of experts composed of representatives of all evangelical churches, of the religious press and of the young people's organisations, who should travel round the world together, secure the opinions of prominent statesmen and rulers on missions, observe the result of missionary labours, and report to the churches at home, then to have a jubilee year in 1900, making a special effort for the missionary cause.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OXFORD.

The new Hannington Hall, though not yet formally opened, has been used for a tea and meeting in connection with the Gleaners' Union, at which a helpful address was given by Rev. Barnes Lawrence.

Meetings have been held here in the week of United Prayer, and addresses given by Churchmen and Nonconformists.

The annual united service in connection with the Church of England Sunday-school Institute has taken place at St. Aldate's Church. The sermon was preached by Rev. F. J. Colson, vicar of St. John's, Reading, from the words, "Lovest thou Me? Feed My lambs." There must be love, not simply for the work, but to the Lord, and patience and self-sacrifice in dealing with the children.

It is proposed to hold a "Palestine Exhibition" here some time this year, probably in the autumn.

There are not quite so many men at Wycliffe Hall this term, as many were ordained at Advent.

The Roman Catholics are now making great efforts here, so that Evangelicals must be all the more earnest and self-sacrificing. More help is needed for the Oxford pastorate scheme. This has great possibilities of usefulness if it is well supported.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon was preached last Sunday by the Bishop of Chester, Dr. Jayne.

The C.I.C.C.U. meeting was addressed by Rev. W. Madden, and the sermon at 8.30 in the University Church was preached by the Bishop of Wakefield, Dr. Walsham How, who dwelt on the futility of a superficial religion. In forming a judgment of ourselves we must guard against looking either at deeds or words, but by a process of real introspection examine our thoughts and motives; and for our practical help in the Christian life the preacher added that (1) temptation is not sin in itself, and (2) that with every temptation God will provide a way of escape, through his Blessed Son. The sermon was one of the most practical and helpful that we have been privileged to hear for some time, and it will doubtless be the means, with God's blessing, of changing many a life of sin and hypocrisy to a life of sincerity and truth.

On Friday Rev. J. Hudson Taylor is to speak at the C.M.U. on the work of the China Inland Mission.

On Sunday next special sermons will be preached on behalf of the Missions to Seamen.

Irish Notes.

The Belfast Presbytery has forwarded £650 for the relief of the distressed Armenians.

The annual collections on behalf of foreign missions were taken up last Sunday in the various Presbyterian churches throughout the country, and the response was a very generous one.

Mr. Mulligan, Presbyterian missionary to the jungle tribes, India, has been holding a series of meetings in Waterford and other centres in the South of Ireland, in the interests of the mission.

The late Mr. J. Ferguson has bequeathed £500 towards Presbyterian church extension in Belfast, and the Church Extension Committee has inaugurated a scheme giving £2000 each towards the cost of ten new churches in Belfast.

Rev. Dr. Magee, of Dublin, has intimated his intention to resign his connection with the Irish Mission Press of the General Assembly. Dr. Magee entered on the work of the Irish Mission early in 1848, so that he has been nearly fifty years in the field.

Requests for Prayer.—For a three weeks' mission at Newlyn, Penzance, Cornwall, to be conducted by Mr. G. W. Legg, commencing Sunday, January 31. For special services to be conducted at Llandrindod Wells Baptist Chapel, February 1 and 2, by Rev. A. T. Jones, Newport, Mon.; also for services at Stroud being held this week.—For a ten-days' mission at Low Laithe, Summerbridge P.M. Church, from January 31, by Miss M. E. Parker.

Praise.—For a time of remarkable blessing at Broadwas in connection with Mr. J. J. Scroggie's mission.

Homes for the Aged Poor.—The annual tea to the inmates of the homes for the aged poor was held last week in St. John's Hall, Notting-hill. Out of the thirteen homes, which have a total of 162 inmates, 110 accepted the invitation. After the tea an address of welcome was delivered by Rev. R. Hancock. Then followed a long and interesting programme, which the aged folk enjoyed for two and a-half hours. Each inmate received a large bundle of useful articles, including a packet of tea.

Temperance Notes.

Mr. John H. Esterbrooke, of New Cross, founder of the London Band of Hope movement, has just completed his eightieth year.

The Irish Temperance League has resolved to establish a fund of £10,000, to be devoted to the Temperance education of the young in day schools.

A Salvation Army worker makes the statement that at a drapery establishment alcoholic drinks supplied to lady customers is charged on the bill as "trimmings."

Canon Hicks, speaking at Salford, said he knew of streets in that town which were entirely peopled by drunkards. Drink prevented the solution of many labour and social problems.

The Manchester and Salford Temperance Union has passed a resolution that, in view of the recent police revelations in Manchester, it is undesirable that any person having a pecuniary interest in the liquor trade should be upon the Watch Committee.

It is stated that one effect of the correspondence on the tied-house system initiated by Mr. W. H. Hornby, M.P., at Blackburn, is that the Assessment Committee of the Blackburn Union have resolved that all the breweries in the district shall be at once revalued.

The C.E.T.S. Sunday Closing Bill, to be introduced into the House of Commons during the present Session, provides for the closing of public-houses throughout the whole of Sunday; but a licensing authority will be empowered to grant licences for the sale of drinks on Sunday.

All temperance workers will welcome the National Temperance League's Annual for 1897, giving full and complete information as to temperance movements, councils, and organisations, the present position and the prospects of the cause politically and socially, and appending a large variety of miscellaneous facts and statistics likely to be of great service to speakers and writers of the subject. A Directory is added to temperance bodies and societies of all kinds. (Thos. Rowe, 33, Paternoster-row, 1s.)

An appeal case concerning the bona-fide traveller has been settled. At Highgate a publican served two men with beer on a Sunday morning, which they took to the park and there consumed. For this the publican was summoned. The men were found to be bona-fide travellers, but the prosecution contended that even in this capacity they were only entitled to have drink for consumption on the premises. The magistrates refused to convict the publican, but two judges, before whom the appeal came, said the justices ought to have convicted, and sent the case back for them to deal with it.

The English Sunday Closing Bill is down for second reading on February 10. No time is therefore to be lost in expressing the opinion of all Christians in favour of the measure. Resolutions asking members to vote for the Bill should be passed by every organisation in connection with the Church as well as at all Church meetings, and sent to the local members of Parliament. Petitions should be prepared without delay, and sent up to the House. If there is one branch of the temperance question upon which all ought to be united, whether they are abstainers or non-abstainers, surely it is this question of closing the public-houses on the Lord's Day.

At a meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, Dr. Pitcairn, assistant surgeon at the prisons of Holloway and Newgate, read a paper in which he stated that large as was the number of drunkards of both sexes in our prisons, the proportion of females was appalling. Ordinary crime did not account for more than ten per cent. of the female prison population; the gaols had been swollen to repletion by the slaves of drink. There were to-day thousands of Jane Cakebreads in existence. Drunkenness would have to be regarded as a vice and not as a crime. To talk of civil rights or liberty of the subject in the case of women who spent nearly all their time in prison as the result of drunkenness was ridiculous. To deal with the vice the regimen of an asylum and not the discipline of a gaol was needed.

A fierce political controversy is being waged in the Isle of Man over the temperance question. The next election is to be fought on the issue whether licences are to be granted to boarding-houses in Douglas. A provisional bill, which had been passed for three years, making such a provision has just expired, and a strong agitation against its renewal has been taking place over the island. The Legislative Council finds itself outvoted in the House of Keys, and the latter has been dissolved with a view of taking the popular vote on the subject. The strange feature of the case is that both the boarding-house keepers and the publicans seem indifferent as to the fate of the bill; but the temperance party are so thoroughly convinced of its injurious effects in the past that they are making every endeavour to defeat it. This is probably the only case of a political election turning on the question of the licensing laws pure and simple.

Personalia.

Mr. George Rettie, who has been for many years on the editorial staff of The Christian, will have the deep sympathy of many friends in the bereavement which he has been called on to suffer, in the death on Monday afternoon of his beloved wife, after an illness extending over several weeks.

Rev. Dr. McLaren's Jubilee commemoration has been completed by the placing of his portrait (painted by Sir George Reed), in the Manchester City Gallery. At the formal presentation, addresses were given by Mr F. W. Crossley, the Bishop of Manchester, Dr. Randles, the Lord Mayor, and other representative men. Dr. McLaren, in his reply, expressed his profound conviction that his grand work is to preach Christ, adding:—"But, whilst I strongly hold that my own proper work as a Christian minister is more than enough to occupy all my strength, I still hold that it is very imperfectly done unless we Christian ministers are able to show in our own personal cases that the religion we hold underlies and is only rightly represented when it is developed into other subsidiary and collateral modes of action. So, not because my sympathies are narrow, but because I believe I am best promoting the broadest interests, I say this one thing I do. My work has been for thirty-eight years, and I hope will be for a little while longer yet, to preach Jesus Christ as the King of England and the Lord of all our communities and the Saviour and friend of the individual soul."

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

Twenty years' constant contact with prisoners immediately on their release has given us an intimate knowledge of phases of misery which cannot easily be described. We give a free breakfast to about 20,000 discharged prisoners annually in our rooms near the prison gates, and we seek to help as many as possible to gain an honest living.

But the difficulties are enormous. Everything is against the ex-prisoner; character is gone, and nearly always he is homeless, friendless, and most inadequately clothed. To help him effectually requires our most strenuous efforts. The success which has attended our work proves it is worth while to continue the endeavour to turn dissolute and lazy men into law-abiding and hard-working citizens.

Will your readers help us? The work is always going on and the need for financial support always exists, because we are dependent upon voluntary contributions. Wm. Wheatley, Superintendent.

Appeals.

A country church asks for a set of Gospel books suitable for circulating among the people. Address, care of Mr. F. Doddridge Humphreys, 4, Beresford-road, Highbury, London, N.

Captain Knox, R.N., 27, Cliveden-place, Eaton-square, W., will be glad to receive (by book or parcel post) Christmas cards and out-of-date pictorial calendars for use in making Bible albums for Sunday-schools in Newfoundland.

Dock Labourers' Mission—The bitter cry for food and fuel is being heard among the dock men and their families. During the severe weather of last week the suffering was intense, especially amongst the women and children. May we ask a renewal and, if possible, an increase of their support?—C. H. Coleman, 130, Boleyn-road, West Ham, E.

Missions to Seamen.—The steam launch Oriel, at work on the river Medway, has been condemned, and it has been decided to build a new one at a cost of £600. Friends have subscribed £400, and the Christian public are invited to contribute towards the £200 still required. Last year services were held with 253 crews, and many temperance pledges taken. The secretary of the Mission is Commander W. Dawson, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand.

TRUE AND FALSE GIVING.—Acts iv. 32 to v. 11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—1 Sam. xvi. 7.

GIVING is one of the graces of the Christian character (2 Cor. viii. 7). Whatever we have from God is ours, not for our own use alone, but that we may impart it to others. Without this grace of Christian giving we lose the enjoyment of every blessing. We are meant to be, not cisterns, but fountains. "Ceasing to give, we cease to have,—such is the law of love."

Like every other Christian grace this is counterfeited. There is a spurious, as well as a genuine, liberality. The Golden Text is calculated to correct mere ostentation. To remember that God sees our gifts, and places a true estimate upon them, and even offers to reward them, would lead to fidelity in this work.

Our lesson place the true in contrast with the false. Imitate the one and be warned by the other.

I. The true giving seems to have been manifest in all the Church generally. Barnabas (36, 37) was a very conspicuous example; but he was not alone. "Neither said any of them that aught of the things he possessed was his own" (32). Their circumstances were different; they were not equally possessed of means, but all were moved by the one spirit. Selfishness seemed to have been driven out. Apply this. Some can deal with large amounts, others with pence. The small gift is just as valuable in God's esteem as the great. It is folly to say you will give nothing because you can only give little.

It was evidently prompted by love. No urgent appeals were addressed to the disciples. No attempts were made to touch, their emotions. Their giving seemed as natural an outcome of the spirit of love that dwelt in them, as grapes are the natural product of the vine. They gave not as a duty, but as a delight. They possessed so much in Christ that their earthly goods were parted with easily. And where the same spirit dwells there will be a similar manifestation of it. The child parts with the treasured toy when something much more valuable and desirable is possessed. The waterpot was very much to the Samaritan woman until she had drunk of the water of life; then she left her pot at the well without feeling the loss (John iv.)

It took a very remarkable form. What Barnabas did (36, 37) was also done by others (34, 35). Instead of seeking to acquire property, they parted with what they had, and were content to share equally with the rest. The example thus set does not seem to have been continued in the Church. The incident that follows indicates how liable it was to be abused. But we may all seek the spirit that prompted it. What have we to give? Are we giving from the spirit of love? And do we remember that our giving is known to the God who searches the heart?

II. Briefly tell the story of Ananias and Sapphira (v. 1-11), which illustrates false giving. Speculation as to whether these two were really converted, or were mere hypocrites, can lead to no good result. They were the subject of very summary judgment, inflicted by the Holy Ghost, who dwelt in the church. Their doom warns other professors that God desires "truth in the inward part" (Psa. li. 6).

What was their sin? They did what Barnabas had done, but when their possessions were sold they brought part of the price, and represented that to be the whole. Was that wrong?

(1) Their motive was wrong. Not the spirit of love, but the spirit of ambition actuated them. They would be as eminent as Barnabas. How easily that spirit may spoil our gifts! It is possible to give now in order to win for ourselves a good name. Remember the Golden Text.

(2) They lied. This needs to be emphasised. For what Ananias did would hardly be called a lie by many. He did sell the property for so much, but he did not say for how much more. Let it be made clear that any intentional deception is a lie. You do not save yourselves by using words that are true, if you intend to convey a false impression. Illustrate by what are called "white lies."

(3) They told this lie because they were covetous. The love of money had not been driven out of their hearts. Perhaps, when they resolved to sell their property they intended to give the whole price of it. But the opportunity of deceiving without being found out, and while winning a reputation for generosity, led them to alter their purpose. They took back what they had professed to devote to God, because they loved their wealth more than they loved God. We do not possess wealth unless we can part with it.

The story is a very solemn one, full of practical teaching. What meaning there is in the words "durst no man" in verse 13! Who would dare join such an assembly if he was not resolved to be true? Remember we deal with the same Spirit now.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

THE Day of Intercession for Home Missions will be observed on Wednesday, March 10.

Rev. A. H. Prior, who acted as secretary during the late mission in Derby, has been appointed Rural Dean.

The Duke of Devonshire has offered the vicarage of Flookburgh to Rev. J. Fowler, of Barrow-in-Furness.

The Simeon Trustees have presented the living of Donington, near Spalding, to Rev. H. M. Fowler, of Hereford.

News have been received from the C.M.S. Uganda party up to December 7, when they had crossed the waterless desert, and all were well.

Rev. Samuel Smith, who was for fifty-three years vicar of St. George's, Camberwell, has just attained his ninety-third year, and is in excellent health.

There is now a proposal to subdivide the diocese of London by forming a Bishopric of St. Paul's and a Bishopric of St. Peter's, including Westminster.

The Hurdsfield Church Messenger shows that a vigorous and fruitful work is being done in the parish under the energetic lead of the vicar, Rev. C. W. Laycock, M.A.

Rev. G. Harford-Battersby, son of the late vicar, St. John's, Keswick, and himself a devoted Evangelical clergyman, has been appointed to the vicarage of Mossley Hill, Liverpool.

Canon Punchard, vicar of Christ Church, Luton, has declined the Bishopric of Antigua, which has been offered to him. It is said that this is the third time that he has refused a bishopric.

It is announced that Mrs. Ridley, wife of the Bishop of Caledonia, died on December 6. She was herself an intrepid missionary, who, despite severe illness, persevered in work for the Indians almost up to the day of her death.

The Bishop of Wakefield, in an address to his diocese, says that with the end of last year he completed his jubilee of service in the Church, having been ordained, to the curacy of Kidderminster, in Worcester Cathedral, on December 20, 1846

The annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Auxiliary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held last week. Dr. Vernon Smith, chancellor of the diocese, was in the chair. The annual report stated that the general income of the society for last year was £63,182. The expenditure during the year had been £60,678. At the present time seventy-nine curates, sixteen lay agents, and two women workers were labouring, whose stipends were largely furnished by the society.

Congregational.

Rev. R. Mackintosh has been welcomed to the pastorate at Sawston.

Mr. W. Kendall Gale has entered upon the pastorate at Great Bowden.

Rev. J. Pandy Williams has conducted a six days' mission at New Mills.

Mr. A. Norman Rowland has been ordained pastor of Oxford-road Chapel, Putney.

A mission-hall has been opened in the village of Cuxton in connection with Vines Chapel, Rochester.

On Wednesday, Jan. 20, Rev. Herbert J. Hayward was ordained by Rev. J. Knaggs to the pastorate at Purley.

Rev. W. P. Duke, chairman of the Somersetshire Union, has completed twenty-one years' pastoral labours at Ilminster.

Rev. Gilbert T. Sadler, who has accepted the pastorate of Chester-street Church, Wrexham, is the son of Rev. James Sadler, of Amoy.

Mr. Alexander Barber, late agent of Leicester Temperance Union, has been recognised as minister at Wymondham and South Witham.

Rev. J. Fulton, of Trowse, Norwich, who has been laid aside by serious indisposition for three months, is making steady progress towards recovery.

The annual social meeting of Islington Chapel, Upperstreet, was held last week, when the financial secretary made a statement to the effect that the effort to reduce the debt on the chapel by £1000 had been successful. The membership is now 500.

The Year-book of Princes-street Church, Norwich (Dr. Barrett), reports 829 members. In the Sunday-schools are—Home school, 848 scholars; Trowse, 247; Mariner's-lane, 216; Old Lakenham, 102; Kirby, 52; Arminghall, 45. The P.S.A. class numbers 755; the Band of Hope, 550.

Rev. John Holroyd, of Wilpshire, Blackburn, has been appointed by the Countess of Carlisle to work as her minister in the promotion of temperance, educational, and philanthropic objects, and to co-operate with the churches of all denominations on her estate at Castle Howard, Yorks.

Rev. Robert Turner Sole, who has been pastor of Emmanuel Church, Margate, for six years, has resigned to the trustees on the ground of the ineligibility for the ministry in the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion of one who, like himself, holds, teaches, and practises believers' baptism. The resignation takes effect on April 19.

Calls.—Rev. Dr. Lawson Forster, of Harecourt, Canonbury, to Queen's Park Chapel, Harrow-road; Rev. A. T. S. James, to Hazel-grove, Stockport; Rev. W. B. Hogben, to Horningsham; Rev. J. R. MacNamara, of Fritchley, to Horwich; Rev. R. Macintosh to Sawston; Rev. W. S. Todd, Motherwell, to City-road, Glasgow; Rev. A. Maclennan, Wick, to Dunfermline; Rev. T. Parker, of Windermere, to Lowther-street, Carlisle.

Resignations.—Rev. G. Buchanan Ryley, of Harley-street, Bow; Rev. A. G. Pritchard, of Denton.

Baptist.

Bishop's Stortford Church reports 117 members.

Cow-lane Early Morning School, Coventry, reports 329 members.

Mount Pleasant Church, Northampton, reports 335 members.

Mr. W. B. Meikleham has been recognised as pastor at Horncastle.

Mr. F. C. Lusty has been recognised as pastor at Sackville-street, Kettering.

Mr. Spurgeon's Church at West Croydon reports 1000 scholars in the Sunday-school.

At Higham Chapel, Walthamstow, the anniversary has been held with much encouragement.

Rev. Alfred Bax, late of Salter's Hall, Islington, has been recognised as pastor of Wycliffe Chapel, Reading.

The new church at Wellingborough, under the auspices of the County Association, is making steady progress. At the first tea and social meeting about 150 were present.

At Kingsthorpe, Northampton (Rev. F. Neal), a baptismal service was held on Wednesday, 20th inst. Six candidates were baptized, all of whom are members of the N.P.S.C.E.

A memorial hall and new Sunday-schools have been erected at Sittingbourne in connection with the Tabernacle at a cost of £1500, the whole of which has been given by an anonymous friend of the children.

The first anniversary of the mission and Sunday-school at Strood (in connection with the Baptist Church, Rochester) was celebrated on Sunday week, when Rev. S. A. Woolings was the preacher. A public meeting was held on the Monday night. The mission is doing good work.

At the annual meeting at Dalston Junction, the first anniversary of Rev. R. O. Johns's settlement as pastor, the secretary announced that the congregation had steadily risen during the past year, until the chapel was now quite full. There had been received into the church 133 new members, while seventeen were waiting. Rev. R. O. Johns gave a brief account of the various agencies connected with the church. The Sunday-school has now forty-nine teachers and 700 scholars.

Calls.—Mr. F. C. M. Buck, to Hillsborough, Sheffield; Mr. J. W. Kemp, of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, to Kelso, N.B.

Methodist.

Miss Costin has held missions at Bradford and Blackburn

Rev. J. Sampson has concluded a fortnight's mission at Nanpean.

Special evangelistic services are being held at New Brompton by Rev. T. Quance and others.

Rev. Seth Backhouse has concluded a very successful mission at Ashton-road Chapel, Higher Openshaw.

Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., preached the thirty-first anniversary sermons of the Bible-classes at Denbigh-road, Bayswater, on Sunday week.

Rev. W. J. Ward, who has been selected for the new Primitive Methodist Mission at Jamestown, West Africa, will leave England next month.

A convention to consider the Methodist relationship to other evangelical agencies in the town, and to promote holiness, has been held at Blackburn.

Bristol Methodist Council hopes to further in every way the evangelistic Mission, soon to be held in the city, under the auspices of the Free Church Council.

Statistics collected with great care show that the Primitive Methodists have 4379 Sunday-schools and 466,052 scholars. During the last ten years the increase in the number of scholars has been 54,117.

The anniversary of the Great Bridgewater-street Mission, Manchester, has been held. Apart from the perennial difficulty about funds, the work has been very successful. One of the Bible-classes has 500 members. The cottage and lodging-houses' services have produced good results.

Revs. Samuel Gifford, George Glandfield, and W. Sherratt were ordained for missionary work at Brunswick Chapel, Liverpool, on Friday week; and on the following morning Revs. S. Gifford and G. Glandfield sailed by the ss. Bathurst for Lagos and the Gold Coast respectively, and Rev. W. Sherratt on Thursday by the ss. Shropshire for Rangoon.

At the Wesleyan London ministers' meeting last week Rev. W. L. Watkinson gave his third and concluding paper on "The Sanctions of Science to the Christian Interpretation of the World." He spent some time in showing that the theories and findings of modern science are in full accord with the Scriptures in relation to the world. Nature is a right happy system which has been unfortunately spoiled. A moral catastrophe has wrecked the original design. Revelation solves the problem by affirming that the existing condition of things is not according to God's original purpose.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Samuel Hester has had an eight days' successful mission at St. Thomas's-square, Hackney.

The Welsh Presbyterian Churches of Liverpool have collected £3329 towards the Bala Divinity Hall Fund.

The Grange-road Church, Birkenhead (Rev. Wm. Hutton), is considering the erection of fresh church buildings on a site nearer the Prenton and Oxton districts.

During the four years Dr. Pentecost has been the minister of the Marylebone church the congregation has contributed for various objects the sum of £21,061.

Forest Hill Church reports a membership of 363, a net gain of twenty-one for the year. The total income was £2,200. The agencies of the church are numerous and active.

The Crouch Hill congregation (Rev. J. B. Meharry) reports an income for the year of £3125, and a membership of 837. Many and varied agencies were reported to be in vigorous operation.

Rev. James Mackenzie, organising secretary of the Church Building Fund, while on a visit to Liverpool in the interest of the fund, was seized with a sharp attack of pleurisy, and is still laid up at the house of Rev. R. McLean. He is improving, and hopes to return home this week.

Fallen Asleep.

At Cerdynham, Rev. ATHELSTAN COODE, aged thirty-eight, rector of the parish.—At Bombay, Rev. J. F. GARDINER, Professor of History in Wilson College.—At Greenock, on 16th inst., Rev. ROBERT BELL, minister of East Church since 1879.—At Swansea, while on a visit to his nephew, Rev. RICHARD RICHARD, a well-known Congregational minister in America.—At Porth, suddenly, on 16th inst., Rev. T. MORRIS, the esteemed minister of the Welsh chapel.—At Doncaster, Mr. JOSEPH MARSDEN, aged seventy-six, a preacher of the Gospel for forty years.—At Halifax, Mr. W. M. ISLE, a devoted worker at Rhodes-street Chapel.—At Brithdir, Dolgelly, Mr. J. B. DAVIES, one of the leading Sunday-school workers in the town.—At Leeds, Rev. SAMUEL TAYLOR, aged eighty-six, for forty-three years a devoted and useful Methodist minister.—At Rawmarsh, Mr. A. G. HAWLEY, aged forty-eight, a large and generous giver.—At Great Haseley, Mr. GEORGE SLATTER, aged seventy-one, a Christian worker and helper of the Lord's work.—At Heyshot, Chichester, aged ninety-two, Rev. THOMAS HOOPER, rector of the parish, and a descendant of Bishop Hooper, the martyr.—At Bromley, Mr. THOMAS NETTLETON, one of the founders of and leading workers in Bromley Common Chapel.—At Worstead, Mr. W. BULLIMORE, a beloved worker.—At Thornhill, Rev. WILLIAM WATTER, minister of the Free Church since the disruption.—At Barmouth, MRS. MARY OWEN, a devoted servant of Christ.—At Northampton, on 21st inst., Rev. THOMAS ARNOLD, for many years minister of Doddridge's church in the town and a leader in the oral method of teaching deaf and dumb mutes.—At Belfast, Mrs. DONALD, wife of Rev. Dr. Donald, Methodist minister, and sister of the late W. R. Masaroon, of London.—At Ballymasclanton, near Dundalk, Rev. J. T. WARREN, for forty-five years rector of the parish, aged seventy-six years.—At Haglis House, Wendover, Mrs. SCRIVENER, wife of Mr. A. P. Scrivener, J.P., a life-long helper of Christian work.—At 3, York-crescent, West Norwood, S.E., on January 25, after a month's painful illness, JEANNIE P. RAE, beloved wife of G. Rettie, of the staff of THE CHRISTIAN.

OF THE

Turkish Branch of the Nestorian Nation.

Letters have just been received by the Committee of the Nestorian Mission, from Deacon Abraham, as well as from the Rev. W. Shedd, and the Wife of Dr. Labaree, of the American Mission in Oroomiah, Persia, giving awful details of the Destitution of Thousands of Nestorians who have escaped from their mountain homes into Persia. The Tens of Thousands left behind are entirely surrounded by Kurds, who guard the mountain passes to prevent Caravans from coming out or going in, that they may exterminate them by starvation.

The Deacon writes: "Besieged by Refugees. All money gone. Selling the Mount Seir vineyards to buy food." The Rev. W. Shedd again writes: "The need cannot be exaggerated."

WILL GOD'S STEWARDS HELP IN THIS AWFUL EMERGENCY?

The Committee promptly placed £270 at their disposal by telegraph, and, through contributions received, have since telegraphed £518.

COMMITTEE.

LADY WANTAGE, Lockinge Hall, Wantage, Berks.

Training Homes for Lady Missionaries.

THE LADY MISSIONARIES' TRAINING HOME, 15, Burnbank Gardens, Glasgow, is intended for Christian Ladies of any Evangelical denomination, desirous of becoming Missionaries at home or abroad (preferentially the latter), and who, in view of this, wish one or two years' Biblical instruction, with some experience in evangelistic work, &c.

Practical Christian Work is carried on in connection with Grove Street Institute, and embraces Visiting the Sick, District Visiting, Teaching the Young, Domestic Classes, Dispensary Work, &c.

Fees for Board and Instruction, £30 per annum, payable £10 per term in advance.

THE MEDICAL TRAINING HOME FOR LADY MISSIONARIES, in co-operation with Grove-street Institute, is open to applicants from Mission Boards, and to those whose purpose it is to work in the foreign field, who are members of recognised Evangelical churches.

Here there is given a sound theoretical and practical training (of 2½ years' duration) in the chief branches of Medical Science, viz.: Practice of Medicine, Surgery, and Midwifery. The Visitation of the Sick, etc., in connection with the Medical Mission, affords opportunities for gaining experience in Practical Christ an Work.

Fees for Board and Instruction £42 per annum, payable in April and September.

As the next session begins in April, it is requested that all who desire admission make formal application at earliest convenience.

For full particulars of both Homes, applicants are desired to communicate with the Hon. Sec.,

Miss FORRESTER-PATON, Mar's Hill House, Alloa.

STARVING AND DESTITUTE

Sheltered and Fed.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

Already, since this work began, over 40,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

Free Meals for the very poor, both Adults and Children, are given every week to some hundreds all the year, and have proved a great boon to many really starving and destitute poor.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary; or Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THERE is not much time to aid the English Sunday Closing Bill, which is down for its second reading on February 10; but whatever can be done by resolutions and petitions and letters to members of Parliament should be done without delay. And let not prayer be forgotten. The chapter of accidents is written by the finger of God; the hearts of men are turned by Him as He turns the rivers of water.

The Bill for amending the Welsh Sunday Closing Act was read a second time last week. This embodies the recommendations of the Commission that sat some years ago on the subject, and aims at making the provisions of the Act more satisfactory, by dealing with illicit drinking in clubs and shebeens, and by including Monmouthshire within its scope. Though a private, it is a non-party measure, and ought to command the thorough devotion of all the friends of temperance. The Act was proved to the satisfaction of the Commission to be a great success as it stands, and only needs extension to complete the good work it has already done in the Principality. It will then be time to consider its application to England.

With what astonishing, not to say exasperating, thoughtlessness do people sometimes enter or leave a religious service, and often at most solemn moments. Several times has this been impressed upon us recently. Two ladies, seated well to the front, wait till the preacher has fairly secured the quiet attention of his audience, when up they rise and walk down the full length of the aisle. But not together! One waits till the other is half way down before she starts. Could they not as well have left five minutes earlier, during the preceding hymn? Or a man, not a stranger or casual "dropper in," enters during the most impressive moments of an after-meeting, and walks proudly to the centre pew. Might he not have been content for once with a seat near the door? "Trivialities!" some may call them; yet they go far to destroy the impression the preacher is striving to obtain.

But the power of a bad example often makes matters even worse; and we witnessed only last week an instance in which one pioneer was gradually joined by others en route, until a procession of fifteen men and women filed along an aisle across the entire width of the hall, so that one-third of the audience could see or hear nothing of the preacher until they had passed out.

Evil is wrought by want of thought,
As well as want of heart!

Is there any difference between "Christian work" and real "spiritual activity"? We fear there is, sometimes. A district, a town, a city stands in dire need of some direct, aggressive Gospel effort. The clergy, the ministers, the Christian workers are approached; their help is sought, nay entreated. But they are "so fully occupied"; "every evening filled"; and each deems his own work the most important of all. Not for a moment would we deprecate an organised, continuous routine of church and mission work; but would not even that be done with fresh inspiration if once in a year or two all would agree to merge their several endeavours for a single fortnight into one strong, united, evangelistic effort for the salvation of the perishing multitudes without? We are so apt to work in ruts.

"'Tis not thy WORK the Master wants,
But THEE!"

Mr. Stopford Brooke says that "modern liberal theology seems to have reached that point of negation from which there is 'no advance' possible except into unbelief in God." We fail to see why that should be styled "liberal theology" which has reached its last negation but one, which has taken away the authority of the Scriptures, the reality of miracles, the Divinity of our Lord, the merit of his death, the glory of his resurrection, and the life to come, and a few more things of minor importance. Liberal! it is mean and dishonest. And then, again, why should the course of such theology be called "an advance"? It is backsliding. Its extent and danger are evidently alarming to Mr. Brooke; to us, still more.

It is very disquieting to note that Sir H. Havelock-Allan believes that strong evidences of "living national military spirit are given in the existing institutions of volunteers, public schools battalions, and Boys' Brigades." He is pleased to see that 45,000 lads have received a tolerable knowledge of military training in connection with Sunday-schools. But he goes still further than this. After training them in the principles of the Sermon on the Mount, we may send them out to kill and slay. Sir H. Havelock-Allan wants to sweep all these boys into the army by means of a law which should withhold free education from the children of those parents who will not allow their sons to be trained in arms; at the age of twenty-one, these sons should be liable to the law of conscription for the militia.

Do parents, then, send their boys to the Sunday-school and Boys' Brigade for this? Are Christian institutions to become recruiting grounds for the army? Give the Boys' Brigade all the credit we may for the utility of its discipline, and the obedience it requires; but its officials must disprove such imputations if they would maintain the confidence and support of the Christian public. On the other hand, what the gallant officer would like is one thing; what he will get is another; and we should like to know what proportion of "Brigade" boys do, as an actual fact, enter the army. This is necessary to a right understanding of the case.

The "ubiquitous interviewer" has already been at work on the new Bishop of London, and has published the outcome in Great Thoughts. The result, especially some incidental remarks made by the interviewer, Mr. Blathwayt, is likely to raise some keen controversy. But there is a frank, outspoken element in the Bishop's attitude towards Nonconformists as such which they at least will appreciate. He holds that there is no hope of reunion except by absorption into the National Church; and opines further that the differences between the two great parties are "wearing very thin." True, many on both sides are realising that the differences are not vital to religion in its essence; but they are for the most part very real, affecting as they do the notions of Sacrament, Establishment, and Ritual. The conflicts of the past in relation to these matters have done something to clear the ground, and it is at least a hopeful sign that both sides are beginning to understand each other's aims and purposes a little better.

There is a sad reproach to the churches, implied but not intended, in the words of the Westminster Gazette, when it says that the Bishop of Liverpool cannot be accused of want of courage in action more than in speech. And why? Because he attended a meeting of the Wesleyan Mission Society at Liverpool both to do honour to the Rev. Charles Garrett and in memory of his grandfather's friendship for John Wesley. When it requires special courage to honour a brother whom God has honoured, and to be true to a good grandfather's memory, we must be far out of the right way. And so we are.

The rapid change of attitude of the nation towards the Sunday question is powerfully indicated in an article in the Quarterly Review. Although the author takes up a latitudinarian position, he adduces evidence that the secular party will never be satisfied till all the social and legal restrictions that obtain in England are removed, and the Lord's Day becomes what it is on the Continent—a purely secular day of rest, during which many thousands are employed in catering to the amusements of the others. It is well that the issue should be faced by all parties. Many who do so frankly, and whose sympathy is with a spiritual use of the day, are growing alarmed at the steady extension of concerts, etc., which are "voluntary" now, but which will soon become a vested interest claiming "rights" if they are not carefully and firmly dealt with.

The final remedy for Sabbath desecration, however, is not in any legal restriction, or external pressure, but a more consistent idea among Christians of its spirit and purpose. The ordinary conception is too negative; it is ruled by what we must not do, rather than by what it is our privilege to do. "The Sabbath was made for man" was the utterance of Him who proclaimed Himself its "Lord"; and it is for man in the highest and deepest facts of his nature. It should not be a day of dreary inactivity and idleness, but be filled with all that is bright and helpful in thought, and word, and deed. A day with Christ will be neither idle nor empty; it will be glorious with the sense of his presence and the activity of his love. Those who keep it in the Spirit will be too busy using it for high ends to be hankering after the forbidden, or wearying for the "delights" of the world.

When it is remembered that the standard of argument in the discussion of political affairs is not always of the highest, it is a pleasure to find prominent statesmen of opposing parties in hearty agreement in their advocacy of high moral principle in political matters. There was a noteworthy instance of this a few days ago. Speaking in the House of Commons last Friday, with regard to the special committee appointed to deal with South African affairs, Sir William Harcourt said :—

This inquiry...is intended to give an assurance to the world that this country has the desire and has the resolution to deal fairly with other nations. Sometimes I have heard: "After all, what does it signify, so long as England can derive profit and advantage from it?" That is the language which is used by the enemies and not by the friends of Great Britain. In the words of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach at Bristol, the other day, there is one thing more important than money and men and ships, in dealing with the affairs of such an Empire as ours—that the honour and good faith and the word of an Englishman must be maintained, that treaties made must be kept. "However great our power and fleet, our Empire," declared the Chancellor of the Exchequer, "is maintained more truly than anything else by the honour and good faith of the Government."

"Righteousness exalteth a nation." If our statesmen would let such sentiments as these be the ruling influences when they are considering and planning their lines of policy and action, how many difficulties and crises might be avoided, and how much happier and more peaceful would be the peoples whom they lead. "When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice."

The demands of this generation for sectarian education at the cost of the State have culminated in that for a Roman Catholic University for Ireland. Thus we have the contradiction of one set of men teaching one system as true, and another set opposing them, and both supported by the State. The case is made all the worse in Ireland, owing to the fact that there is now ample provision for the university training of all who desire it, of whatever faith; what the Papists want is the training, plus their own religion, and it looks as if they would get it. Then will come a terrible penalty for our violation of Christian principle.

A peculiarly sad case was before a London magistrate last week, when the parents—described as "very respectable, but poor"—of a blind child were summoned for not sending her to school. To do so involved a daily journey from Lambeth to Holborn and back, which, obviously, the child could not take alone; equally impossible was it for the mother to give the time herself, or to afford the services of a guide. Doubtless, the task of the School Board is a hard one to provide for all contingencies, but if more "centres" cannot be provided for afflicted children it is surely not unreasonable to ask for a staff of travelling teachers, each of whom could visit three or four districts during the day.

The optimism which affirms the gradual diminution of crime finds small comfort in the latest statistics published by criminologists. Rev. W. D. Morrison, in his new work on "Juvenile Criminals" (Fisher Unwin, 6s.), says :—

It is perfectly well known to every serious student of criminal questions, both at home and abroad, that the proportion of habitual criminals is steadily on the increase, and was never so high as it is now. Our crowded civilisation tends directly to produce them, and that at a very early age; and when produced, our penal system utterly fails to eradicate the evil by reforming the culprit. This is as true of England and America as of European countries generally. A more humiliating social discovery could scarcely be made.

It is clear that no remedy can be effected which does not sap the causes of an evil. In this case the main causes are, first, bad heredity, including bad training; and, secondly, an evil environment, including poverty, overcrowding, and degrading example. The utter failure of punishment to produce amendment in most cases must be added as a third. Mr. Morrison finds in the sudden emancipation of prisoners after their term is out a serious difficulty, and advocates conditional liberation in the case of young offenders as bridging over the gulf between imprisonment and absolute liberty, so that an opportunity may be given them of "regaining their mental balance." We miss in all this a recognition of the deeper need of the spiritual redemption. Punishment is never remedial till its process is perfected by Divine grace. Apart from this radical renewal of the heart, the old adage holds true: "This world is a very good world to sin in, and a very poor world to repent in." This is where the value of "Prison-Gate Missions" comes in.

In our satisfaction with much of our work in India, and in our present desire to aid the perishing, we must not lose sight of the chronic state of poverty in which millions of the people live. A time of scarcity finds them ready to succumb. Our methods of government do not seem to be adapted in all respects to the peculiarities of Indian life; e.g., an authority on these matters says that when he went to India every ryot in the district in which he served had a supply of grain which was put away, and was sufficient to keep his family in case of failure of crop, but now our methods of government have swept all that away. We are aware that there are conflicting statements, and the distance from here is so great and the country so large that it is difficult to form a satisfactory opinion; but this, at least, may be pleaded for—a dispassionate consideration of the testimony of competent public men, and an honest determination to carry on every kind of work by which famine shall be made impossible.

It has been truly said that "we increase our power by knowing objects that are beneath us; our goodness by knowing those that are above us." We are saved by our ideals, all which become possible to us through faith in the love and power of God. The pure and lovely things of Christ impress their image upon us as we look upon them. The things which are above impart their heavenliness to him who sits in the heavenlies "in Christ Jesus," and he bears their very atmosphere about with him. Not increased knowledge of material things, which perish or change in the using, do men need to make them better and society more bearable, but constant fellowship in the light with God and his Son.

In praying about our troubles, we should ask for insight to distinguish between such as are self-incurred, and such as may be an essential part in our lot sent to us by God "for our profit." Most of the trials that afflict us are of the first kind. Our peril is first to acquiesce in them, as though they were irremovable, and then to rebel against God, when often the remedy is within our own reach. On the other hand, we often waste valuable energy in praying continuously for the removal of trials that must remain. When Paul had entreated the Lord three times against the "thorn in the flesh" he desisted, and accepted a better solution in the fellowship and grace of Christ. He found then that its sting was gone, not because the trouble had disappeared, but in the grace that made him strong to bear it.

"Our lips are our own; who is lord over us?" So said some of the boastful ungodly in olden times. They have too many descendants still. The assertion that "a man may do as he likes with his own" is the modern phrasing of the old error. All fall into the snare who think that their resources are to be disposed of according to their own ideas of what may be right and expedient and with no consideration for the rights and wishes and conscience of others. Even social economics teach the unsoundness and unwisdom of the selfish view of life; while the Gospel meets it with the great truth, "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price."

MODERN intellectualism is as intolerant as old time ignorance. It used to be the fashion to persecute pioneers in thought and speculation to-day there is a danger of the bolder advocates of advanced theories acting unreasonably in regard to those who are more cautious and conservative. The Evolutionist says that all scientists of note are on his side, forgetting that the roll of great names against his view is steadily growing. The Higher Critic thinks that Scripture learning and his occupation in literary analysis and historical reconstruction are convertible terms. Hence books against Evolution and the Higher Criticism are not brought under public notice so generally as is the case with works in favour of the theories controverted. Assuredly a frowning on discussion will not assist in the attainment of truth on any subject that may fairly be discussed.

These remarks are suggested by an article in The King's Own (6d. Marshall Bros.) for February by Rev. Dr. Baxter, entitled "Wellhausen at the Stake." The article does not describe a martyrdom but deals with a controversy which has taken place in The Expository Times, in the course of which Professor Wellhausen, of Göttingen, the well-known apostle of Higher Criticism, poses as one whom it is the delight of some to misunderstand and whom, indeed, some would rejoice to see "burned at the stake"! The controversy arose on Dr. Baxter's book, "Sanctuary and Sacrifice: A reply to Wellhausen," a work of deep interest and great importance, issued a few months ago by the Queen's Printers. The editor of The Expository Times published communications against Dr. Baxter, to which he declined to allow a reply. These are now examined at length in an article that is a model of respectful argument and strong reasoning. It is shown (1) that a champion of Wellhausen, Professor Peake, of Manchester, failed to represent with accuracy the views of his master; and (2) that, in subsequently endorsing the views actually advanced, Wellhausen flagrantly stultifies himself!

It is unfair that silence and misrepresentation should stand in the way of such a book as "Sanctuary and Sacrifice." We hope that many who read Dr. Baxter's article will also read his book the force and cogency of which have been attested by Mr. Gladstone, Professor Sayce, Bishop Ellicott and many others who have given much attention to this subject. In due course the contention will have to be allowed that common-sense has its place in criticism as well as in other departments of mental activity. Above all, it will have to be allowed that the spiritual content of Scripture is greater than the letter in which it is expressed; and that the letter is the vehicle which God has used, and honoured in the using, to bring to man the only history of Divine revelation, and the only record of salvation by Jesus Christ.

God's Word and Witnesses.*

III.—"GOD'S WATCHMAN."

"O Son of Man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel." For God having chosen the children of Abraham, his friend, that through them all the families of the earth should be blessed, they must be warned in order that they may become a blessing in the land of their captivity. So the risen Saviour said, "Ye shall be my witnesses...beginning at Jerusalem." Therefore the apostles addressed the men of Israel, and announced Jesus as exalted, a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Israel and forgiveness of sins," unto Israel first, on behalf of all men everywhere.

Now, every child of God, and especially everyone gifted as a preacher, is constituted a watchman to his fellow-men. You will have observed that the commission contained in our motto is repeated from ch. ii. 7, just as, again and again, the disciples and apostles are commissioned to be Christ's witnesses at home and to the uttermost part of the earth.

We must each receive the Word from the mouth of God and of his Christ, as is recorded by Paul of the visit and message of Ananias to himself: "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness of all that thou hast seen and heard." We must be able to say, "We speak what we do know, and testify that we have seen." But we can know nothing, from the first conviction of sin to the fullest utterance of the Gospel of God, unless it have been revealed to us from the mouth of God, speaking through his written Word, and opened to our understanding and heart by the Holy Ghost.

"And thou shalt warn them from Me." As we have received our message from God, so we must warn the people from God. It is not enough that we proclaim the glad tidings. We must be the Lord's messengers and bear the Lord's message. No exposition of the Word, no declaration of the Gospel, no denunciation of sin, must satisfy us, for it will not satisfy God. The word in our mouth must come to us from the mouth of God. The roll, the little book, must be eaten up. It will be sweet in the mouth, for the words of God are sweeter than honey and the honeycomb; but it will be bitter in our inward parts, for it is full of lamentation and mourning and woe (Ezekiel ii., Rev. x.). We shall find ourselves in fellowship with the weeping Saviour when He beheld the beloved city and wept over it, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes" (Luke xix. 42). We must know Him and the power of his resurrection, that we may be able to bear, with Him, the fellowship of his sufferings. But Christ will endow his witnesses with the power of the Spirit outpoured without measure (Acts i. 8, Rev. xi. 3-13).

Ezekiel and Paul were such men as this. All their revelations on the one hand, and their sufferings on the other, educated and trained them for the ministry to which their Lord had called them. Compare the commission of Ezekiel iii. with that of Paul: "Rise, and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified, by faith in Me" (Acts xxvi. 16-18).

Observe here, that while the Old Testament message may be summed up in the word, "Warn them from Me," the Gospel brings a message of salvation. It is necessary to warn; necessary that the seven thunders of the law should utter their voices, to convict of sin and to make the offence abound; but "He has hushed the Law's loud thunder,

He has quenched Mount Sinai's flame."

We must not end with warning, but remember our calling as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. The throne of the kingdom, during the acceptable year of the Lord, is a throne of grace. In the day of vengeance of our God it will be a throne of judgment.

I cannot conclude more suitably, more profitably, than in the words of (with one supreme exception) the greatest evangelist, "Preach the Word [of the Kingdom]; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine. For the time [has] come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts...heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they... turn away their ears from the truth, and [are] turned into fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."

May that, by the grace of God, be our record. Then we shall be able, in fellowship with our beloved brother Paul, to say, "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

The Joy of Forgiveness.

Luke vii. 48-50.

Tender heart, by sorrow rent,
Bruisèd reed, by suffering bent,
Blighted blossom, storm-tossed bark,
Traveller groping in the dark;
Jesus hears thy contrite sigh,
He for thee was lifted high,
On the cross his life-blood shed
To redeem thee from the dead;
Listen! 'tis his gentle voice,
Bids thine aching heart rejoice:
"Go in peace"—thou art forgiven.

Though thy sins as spectres rise,
Gloom-clouds veil love's azure skies,
Sick and wounded, worn with grief,
Jesus proffers sure relief;
'Twas thy guilt which made Him mourn,
Crowned his brow with torturing thorn,
Pierced his hands, his feet, his side,
He for thee was crucified.
Cancelled is thy condemnation,
Christ Himself thy full salvation:
"Go in peace"—thou art forgiven.

Cast thy vain resolves aside,
Every thought of self or pride.
He must save, for He alone
Doth for sin and guilt atone.
He the dreaded winepress trod,
Son of Man, yet Son of God.
By his birth, his life, his death,
By his Holy Spirit's breath—
His compassion's melting story,
Thou art made an heir of glory—
"Go in peace"—thou art forgiven.

Armenian Martyrs.

As an illustration of what took place in numberless Armenian towns and villages, Consul Cumberbatch gives in the new Blue Book a description of the plundering of Shepik, in which the following occurs:—

"On the eighth day, as they had finished their work, they came to us who were on the banks of the stream. They killed Brother Baghdos's son and Pastor Melcon on the other side of the stream because they would not change their religion, and they proposed to us to change our religion. It became night, darkness was upon us, but they came with lanterns and selected forty-five of the young men and of those who had acquired wisdom, saying that the Government (authorities) wanted them Knowing what would befall them, they asked for an hour's grace. They prayed and sung, they asked forgiveness of each other, they kissed the hands of their relations, and parted with tears, with the expectation of never seeing each other again.

"Taking them to a lonely place half-an-hour's distance, and taking them apart two by two, they threatened to kill them if they would not change their religion. They all, with one voice, agreed in saying boldly, 'We will not deny our religion. We are ready to die for our Saviour's love.' Only five succeeded in making their escape, but the remaining forty became martyrs for the love of Jesus."

A Reuter's telegram from Constantinople says:—According to intelligence received from several of the provinces largely inhabited by Armenians, great anxiety prevails among the Christians owing to the hostile attitude of the Mussulmans.

An Armenian Orphan Home.

THE Orphan Home which Rev. Krikor Behesnilian, superintendent of the Tarsus Evangelistic Society, has been enabled to open at Marash, has proved a great blessing to a number of bereaved Armenian girls. It may be remembered that in Marash alone upwards of 1300 Christians were slaughtered during the disturbance.

A Protestant resident at Marash, writing recently to Mr. Behesnilian, said: "The ten girls now in your home fare better than one's own children with regard to house accommodation, clothing, food, religious and secular instruction, and training for the duties of life. One of them is my uncle's daughter, whose mother was shot dead during the massacres, leaving four daughters motherless. She feels exceedingly rejoiced at being under Mrs. Behesnilian's care."

Many sympathisers in England have written to Mr. Behesnilian. The following are extracts from the letter of one lady: "My heart has often bled in reading about the sufferings endured by your poor fellow countrymen, and I have longed to do something to help them. I am not rich, but I think I might be able to support an Armenian orphan. As I see from your book, 'In Bonds: An Armenian's Experiences' that £10 will support an Armenian orphan for a year, I send you a cheque for that amount. Might I have particulars of the rescued child sent from time to time, so that I may remember it in my prayers as an adopted child? It is indeed a great blessing that you and your wife are able to do so much for your poor suffering fellow-creatures, and I pray that God may bless and spare you, and increase your usefulness, and also build up his church again in poor Armenia."

In addition to the ten girls provided for in the Home, some widows are assisted pecuniarily by Mrs. Behesnilian in looking after their children in their own impoverished homes; but there are still hundreds of orphans, fatherless and destitute girls, at Marash and in the neighbouring villages for whom there may be found accommodation in the Home if the necessary funds are forthcoming. Further information regarding the Home may be had from Mr. Behesnilian, care of Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

Madagascar.—M. Escande, of the Paris Missionary Society, has been appointed one of the pastors of the Palace Church. The Queen remains firm in her Protestant faith, though persistent efforts have been made to induce her to enter the Roman Catholic Church. M. Escande's appointment will encourage and strengthen her in these troublous times, and may perhaps do something to shield her from these constant solicitations.

Letters from North Africa—3.

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

THE history of this Mission from its inception may be of interest. I give it as it was gathered from my dear old friend, Mr. George Pearse. He and his devoted wife have many friends among our readers; though the greater part of them are fallen asleep, some remain unto this present.

From the time of Mrs. Pearse's conversion, long before her marriage, she became an uncompromising, undaunted, and tactful winner of souls. In very early days she stood on one of the stone seats at the Arc de Triomphe, in Paris, and told the sinners sitting round what a dear Saviour she had found, pointed to his redeeming blood, and said, "Behold the way to God."

One day, her father (who had then no sympathy with the evangelistic vagaries of his mad daughter) was walking in that neighbourhood with another daughter, Miss Mary Bonnycastle, and observed a woman addressing the people who crowded around. Jane, the preacher, saw and recognised them, and telegraphed to the Throne, "Lord, let his eyes be holden, that he may not see." Mary recognised her sister, and led her father away, so that he was not scandalised nor his mad Jane silenced. He was himself, I believe, subsequently led to the Saviour by his daughters; and Miss Bonnycastle has been for many years as earnest and useful an evangelist as Mrs. Pearse.

Later, after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Pearse visited the French barracks, distributed Testaments and held meetings, during three fruitful years, with the soldiers, who appreciated their work and highly regarded them. Then it was forbidden by the authorities, on the ground that though their work was good and unobjectionable, other similar visits could not be prohibited and theirs allowed; they were therefore courteously required to discontinue them.

Madame André Walther (the warm friend mentioned in the "Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe, by his Wife") urged the Pearses to go to Algeria, which they complied with in 1876. They went to Fort National and took rooms, having before the house an open space, which is now built over. Mrs. Pearse got up one night and saw in the moonlight three Kabyles lying on the ground. They did not move, and she thought they must be dead. In the morning she asked the water carrier, and he said, "Yes, they are dead Kabyles. They are thought no more of than dead dogs." She was greatly shocked, and deeply sympathised with the poor Kabyle people, and purposed in her heart to do them good.

Mr. and Mrs. Pearse wrote to Mr. Grattan Guinness, and asked if some one could not come out to work among the Kabyles. They afterwards went to England, and said to Mr. Guinness, "You should do this," but the way did not open; and they went to the C.M.S. with the same result. Then by Mr. Guinness's advice they returned and took a piece of ground at Djemaa Sahridj, and built a house which, however, afterwards fell down.

Mr. and Mrs. Pearse felt that they were not fitted for the superintendence of a Mission of this kind, and being at Mildmay they saw a young man walking with his father, both of whom were earnest Christians and interested in missions. I used to go down sometimes, years before this, to spend the Sunday at Barking and found Mr. Glenny and his family doing missionary work in their own neighbourhood; while also sending periodicals regularly and otherwise keeping themselves in contact with missionaries and their works abroad.

Mr. Pearse, finding the son, Mr. Edward H. Glenny, a liberal and earnest-minded young man, asked him to take up this work, and he consented. Through many difficulties and some instructive mistakes it has gone on until now. The tumbled-down house was rebuilt, and we have just spent in it, and the villages and mountains near, a most interesting week. The secret of the fallen house consists, I imagine, in the shifting ground, for the present structure now and then cracks and widens; and not long ago the two ladies had just time to remove their belongings before one of the internal walls fell into the room. I shall have occasion to return to this. Meanwhile Mr. Francis gives his record of a visit to Miss Gillard, who was once attached to the N.A.M., but has for several years been working in a region beyond, quite independently and alone.

A VISIT TO TAAROOT

necessitated a journey of about thirty miles on muleback, over rugged mountains and through deep sombre valleys. Above, were peaks glistening with snow and ice; glaciers slowly melting, bring down the débris of grinding rocks and huge boulders. In the valleys rushing streams, swollen by recent rain, had to be forded. On rocky cliffs, every here and there, are perched Kabyle villages, with children and women peeping out from among the huts or cottages, with a curious frightened look, to see the strangely-dressed missionary. At last Tâaroot was reached. In some respects it looked like an English village, and had its green, upon which the boys were playing, after the manner of boys all the world over.

Upon one side of this green, a little out of the way, was Miss Gillard's Mission house, a plain stone structure of one storey, of Swiss appearance.

For about ten years has this brave woman toiled and worked. The story of these years would make quite a thrilling book. She has been minister, doctor, schoolmistress, director-general, and mother. Indeed, with a loving appeciation of all this, she is called "The old woman of the village." Although not yet old in years, privation and hard life have made her appear thus.

I spent the day with her. After our modest breakfast, there was the loud ringing of the mission bell, and soon after, coming in twos and threes, the poor women were seen approaching. How sad they looked—mostly married women, bought by the husband off the father, for from £6 to £20, more or less, according to beauty or position, and liable to be sent back to the parental home at almost any moment by the husband. I was glad to have a little talk with them about the Saviour who loved them.

Their life is a very hard one, and many appeared, and indeed (as I found out after) were, half starved. One poor thing was almost wild with neuralgia in the head. Miss G— inquired when she had her last food. She replied, "Upon the day before." Again, asked what the food was, she said it was acorns ground and made into "cous-cous," a native dish. Asked if she were able to do much to help them in their times of poverty and need, Miss Gillard replied, "Oh, my heart has got to be a heart of stone by having to say 'No' to them continually." Yet, with all this to sadden, there is much over which to rejoice.

A large neighbouring village is also opening up to Miss Gillard's ministrations. I mean by neighbouring that it is some twenty miles away. She goes occasionally to it, and is well received. Her heart is much drawn to it. It would be a fresh centre of work for those who as yet have never heard the Gospel.

S. Trevor Francis.

Before I proceed further with these letters, I ask all my friends to pray that God may guide me in writing and them in reading, that He may use The Christian more and more widely in comforting, encouraging, and edifying his servants at home and abroad; and that many may be led to see that there are few more effective and economical ways of doing good than to send a copy weekly to a missionary. I am affording myself the luxury of doing this in several cases, but what are they among so many?

"Winter Mission" to India.

Dec. 15.—We started for Raghavapuram before five a.m., and away we went, with two great bullock bandies (carts) with our luggage, etc. We walked with lanterns in front, bright stars overhead, accompanied to the station by a band of native Christians. A little after one we arrived at Rāghavapuram, where the Rev. Mr. Eales gave us a loving welcome. We had our first service at four on the day of our arrival. We found a church, built through the energy of dear Rev. James Stone, of Bezwada, where we hope to go in less than a fortnight. I found numbers of people converted to God and baptized by Rev. T. J. Darling, who has a living near Dorchester, and the people love him dearly. There are two native pastors here, one of whom was baptized by Mr. Darling.

Dec. 16.—The church here holds 600, and this morning at seven there were 405 present. Mr. Standen was too tired, after the rough journey of yesterday, so I took the service, and a very searching time we had. At the evening service we had 500, and fully fifty heathen, who listened to the glorious story of God's love. After service I went with Mr. Panes and a whole band of Christians into the bazaar (market). We sang a hymn, told all the Christians to stand eight or ten yards back, and we beckoned the heathen to come near to us, and soon we had seventy round us, and I spoke to them, and questioned them. It was most interesting. They all think when they die they will, if good, go into another man; if bad into a snake, or frog, or cow, etc.

Dec. 17.—The service this morning was well attended; there were twenty-five heathen and about 250 Christian men, and 130 Christian women. The whole congregation stood outside, to make low salaams to us and to get a good look at us, some to shake hands. God's goodness to us is wonderful; we are quite well, and full of joy. The tide of blessing rises as the mission proceeds, and many openly confess blessing. At the close of the service a Brahmin came, and begged us to come to his village where all are Hindus, and as we are only two miles off, we said we would come in the moonlight after service to-morrow. This is very wonderful, and shows how they are discontented with their own religion.

Dec. 19.—The interesting event is, that after service to-night we started for Kammavariparam. The whole village turned out to welcome us; the head man, the Brahmin, met us at the foot of a big tree in the middle of the village, and there we found 200 heathen men. A man was engaged with a fiddle, and (out of compliment to us) actually (though a heathen) sang Gospel hymns. Then the Brahmin came forward, placed two garlands of flowers on Mr. Standen's neck and on mine, and one on Mr. Pane's. Then he gave us oranges, limes, and sweetmeats. Mr. Standen and I gave straight Gospel addresses. We stopped two hours in the village.

Dec. 20.—This is our last day at Raghavapuram. We had a crowded church this evening, and there was the largest communion ever known; the number was 171. How this would rejoice the heart of good Mr. Darling. The thank-offering amounted to rupees 112, and some jewellery.

Constantinople.—Last week the Constantinople branch of the British and Foreign Sailors Society was publicly inaugurated, and the new Sailors' Rest was formally opened by Sir Philip Currie. There was a large concourse of members of the British Colony. Detachments of bluejackets and marines of the guardships Melita and Imogena, with their officers, were also present. The proceedings were opened with prayer by Mr. Anketell, Chaplain to the British Embassy. Appropriate speeches were made by Sir Philip Currie, Mr. Whitall, and others, dwelling on the advantages of the institution, and paying a tribute to the generous efforts of Miss Green-Armytage, who founded the rest and mission for the benefit of British and other seamen. There are two boats, but a steam launch is much required on account of the swift currents of the port. This energetic lady is unable to further continue her work, hence the transfer. Judge Tarring will be treasurer, Mr. and Mrs. Haire will be the missionaries in charge of the work ashore and afloat, and a local committee will represent the British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

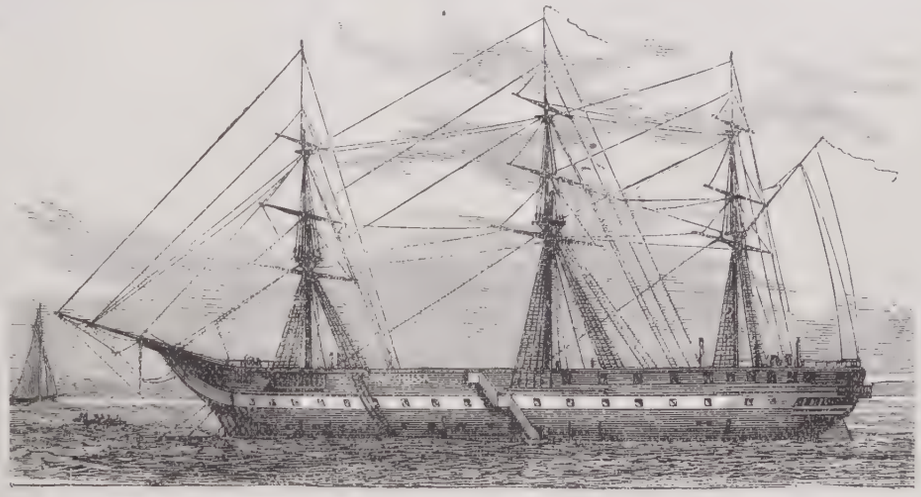
Saved from Shipwreck.

GIVEN genial, sunny weather, it is a delightful trip to pay a day's visit to the Arethusa training ship, moored in the Thames, off Greenhithe. In the summer this is done by many of the kind friends and helpers of the excellent Society to which the vessel belongs, viz., the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. In winter, however, the attraction as an outing materially diminishes, and the visitors are but a "faithful few," confined practically to members of committee who conscientiously pay their periodical visits), and any other friends in whom they can arouse sufficient enthusiasm to accompany them. Yet ought it to be so? One of the difficulties which many charitable institutions have to contend with is to sustain interest of subscribers without providing trips, dinners, festivals, garden parties, and such like, as if the work itself were not of sufficient importance to excite, at least, an occasional desire to see it in active operation.

After a railway journey of half-an-hour or so from London Bridge, Greenhithe station is reached, whence a few minutes' walk brings the vessel in sight. A crew of the ship's lads salute the visitor as he nears the river's bank, and swiftly row him alongside. A musical salute welcomes him on board, and then he is free to examine anything and everything, and question everybody he comes across—for one rule of the Society is that, in Home and ship alike, every branch of the work is open to the inspection of visitors at any time; no special days are appointed, nor abnormal preparations made.

The superintendent of the Arethusa is Commander G. O. Moore, R.N., a gentleman particularly well suited to the post—dignified yet genial, a strict disciplinarian, but with heart so kind as to win simultaneously the love and respect of the boys. Indeed, the Society would seem to have been singularly fortunate in selecting as ship's officers men possessing in a marked degree those qualifications as to personal character, technical education, and practical experience which are necessary in an efficient and successful staff.

As many of our readers know, there used to be two ships, the Chichester and the Arethusa, both stationary, and accommodating between them 400 boys. In 1889, however, the former was broken up and replaced by a smaller vessel, to which her name has been transferred, and in which the boys can make voyages out to sea to aid in the acquirement of practical seamanship. The Arethusa, therefore, is now the senior ship, and forms the home of the boys during their period of training. There are at the present time 170 boys on board, many of whom have been saved from the risks of moral shipwreck and criminality, and all are embarked toward a creditable and successful career. Of course only those lads are taken on board who have a taste for the sea (others being dealt with at other branches of the Society). The great desideratum is to get into the Navy, and many do; but the strictness of the conditions disqualify many a youthful aspirant on the ground of height, breadth, stamina, general health, and what not. Still, the merchant service is open to many even of these; and for the rest, well, their time is by no means lost, for there are few if any walks in life in which they will not benefit by having gone through the discipline and general sharpening up which their training gives them.



In the thirty years of service which the ships have rendered to the Society, about 4500 lads have entered the merchant service, the Navy has passed 650, about 900 have joined the Royal Marines, the Army, the Fire Brigade, lightships, etc. Nor are their subsequent records anything to be ashamed of, not a few having attained to such responsible positions as mates, chief and petty officers, master mariners, gunnery instructors, etc.

Their life on board, though not unnecessarily luxurious ("far from that" no doubt many of their visitors would exclaim!), forms, nevertheless, a strong contrast to what many of them have previously been accustomed to, poor lads, and it is a curious fact that the physical development which is so noticeable in them is largely due not only to the regular food and exercise (of which they have abundance), but also to the amount of sleep they get! This is about ten hours, but in their former ragamuffin life many of them would be awake long after midnight, whereas the "lights-out" on board is sounded at 8 p.m.

The cost per boy per annum is £25, certainly not a large sum; and in these days of bad investments and disappointed expectations in financial schemes, there are few directions in which money can be better placed in trust than in the redeeming of such young lives as these from the degradation on the one hand, or the honest poverty on the other, in which they were bred and born, to make them decent, useful men; and above all, children of God, for that end this invaluable Society ever keeps in view.

The secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, can be found by letter or by personal call at the headquarters of the Society, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, London, W.C.

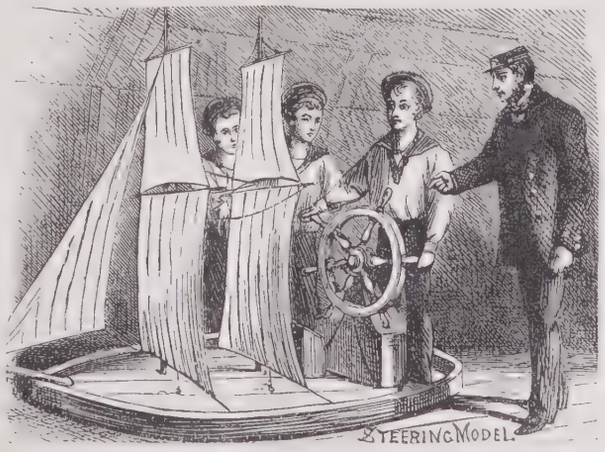
A C.I.M. Farewell.

In connection with the departure of Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness and others for mission service in China, a meeting was held on Wednesday last week in Exeter Hall. The new missionaries are Mr. William Hyslop, Miss Edith Higgs, Miss Blackmore, and Mrs. A. E. Glover.

Mr. A. A. Head, who presided, stated that Mr. Whitfield Guinness is going out as the representative of the Keswick Mission, and in association with the China Inland Mission. In the course of his remarks, the Chairman paid a warm tribute to the efforts of the Guinness family on behalf of foreign missions, and (alluding to the presence of representatives of the Church Missionary Society) expressed thanks for the unity of the platform.

Dr. Whitfield Guinness followed, recounting some of the influences which had led him to go out as a foreign missionary, referring to family teaching and example, to the influence of Rev. Dr. Handley Moule, of Cambridge, and of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, the pledge of which was, "I purpose, if God permit, to become a foreign missionary."

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor said it was three years since they bade adieu to Miss Geraldine Guinness, and thirty years since he first saw Dr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness in Ireland. They consecrated themselves to foreign mission work, and to day there was scarcely a family which had done more for that enterprise than the Guinness family. Dr. Guinness himself was at present in India, and now that the youngest was going forth, Mrs. Guinness would be left alone at Harley House. During the last three years 200 workers had gone out from various countries in connection with the China Inland Mission, and this is certainly an answer to prayer. But a million persons a month were dying in China "without God, without Christ, and without hope." Ten years ago the churches of the China Inland Mission had about 1,650 communicants; this last year about 1,200 had been baptized, and there were now over 6,000 in their Church fellowship. Other speakers included Mrs. Stott, of Wun-chau, Rev. Edward W. Moore, of Wimbledon, and Mr. Eugene Stock, of the C.M.S.



OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, February 7.

"Incline thine ear unto my cry, for my soul is full of troubles."—Psa. lxxxviii. 2, 3.

THE Psalmist had found the quickest argument before his God. There is nothing that so quickly makes the bell ring in heaven as the touch of a troubled hand. When a man is full of the interests of life, of prosperity, and self-content, when the voice of applause resound on every side, when his home is full of children, and his barn of sheaves, his prayer halts, and God seems far away. But let trouble come, let the waters, swollen by many confluent streams, begin to rise within his soul, so that lover and friend are far away, and he compassed with terror (16, 18), then God bends his ear and heart.

Oh, child of sorrow, do not count that you are cast away. It is true that your Lord recited words from this psalm on the Cross, when He said, "Why hast Thou forsaken me?" but even Him, though laden with the sins of the world, the Father held near his heart. And He has not left you, neither can He.

> The earth and every vassal star
> All space beyond the soar of angel wings,
> Wait on his word; and yet He stays his ear
> For every sigh a suppliant sinner brings.

Try and think of trouble as storing your heart with seeds of joy, as acting upon you as the fire upon the primeval earth, scattering jewels through its crust; or as the glaciers that brought the rich soil into the valleys; or as the husbandman who buries the seeds of spring in the autumn fields. A veiled angel, nothing else!

MONDAY, February 8.

"I will visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes; nevertheless my loving kindness will I not utterly take from him."—Psa. lxxxix. 32, 33.

I was asked the other day if I believed, as an increasing number were said to do, that each man bears his own sin, and that there is no such thing as the vicarious imputation of the sins of the world to the Lamb of God. I said at once that this idea, so growingly prevalent, would not avail to help men and women like many of those with whom I come in contact, and are deeply dyed. Tell them that they must bear their own sin, and they turn from you in despair. This is what conscience has been reading from the stony book of the law. A dying man said recently, "I have been into the valley of death, and where is my covering?" Men need a covering. It is requisite that help should be laid upon One that is mighty (v. 19).

We need to distinguish between guilt and secondary consequences of sin. In guilt we must have the transference of the black load of sin to our Saviour. But it is also perfectly true that the nervous or physical system of the drunkard will never be what it might have been. The consequences of wrong-doing must be reaped. God will forgive you, and his loving kindness will not depart, but He will visit your transgression with the rod, and your iniquity with stripes. There is also such power in his grace as to transform the curse into a blessing, and make myrtles bloom where thistles had flourished.

TUESDAY, February 9.

"Oh, satisfy us in the morning with thy mercy, that we may rejoice and be glad all our days."—Psa. xc. 14 (R.V.).

It was towards the close of the desert wanderings that Moses wrote this sublime Psalm, all the imagery of which is borrowed from the wilderness. The watch around the camp-fire at night; the rush of the mountain flood; the grass that sprouts so quickly after the rain, and is as quickly scorched; the sigh of the wearied pilgrim (9, R.V. marg.). And as the old man looks back on life, he gives it as his experience that the heart which is satisfied with mercy in the morning never fails to rejoice and be glad.

There is no hour like that of morning prime for fellowship with God. If we would dare to wait before Him for satisfaction, the filling of that hour would overflow into all other hours. A bright Christian lad, giving his brief testimony for Jesus, recently, told his secret when he said that at his conversion he trusted the Lord with his morning hour; and the way he spoke of it indicated the radiancy of the light that shone for him then.

Perhaps the morning of life was rather in Mose's thought. If so, the old man has prepared a prayer in which successive generations of bright children may join. Young ones, do you want a glad and a rejoicing life? Do you want to live by the wells that never dry up or freeze? Seek God's mercy, his gracious forgiveness in Jesus Christ. Find your satisfaction there, and all things else will be added unto you.

"Thou, O Lord, art my refuge."—Psa. xci. 9 (R.V.).

The structure of this Psalm is often obscured. It begins with the announcement on the part of the chorus of the general truth that to dwell in the inner place of fellowship is to abide under the protection of Divine Power.

Twice the Psalmist speaks. In the second verse we hear him saying:—

> I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress,
> My God in whom I trust,

In the ninth verse he breaks in again:—

> For Thou, O Lord, art my refuge.

And each profession on his part is followed by the outburst of the chorus with an enunciation of all the blessings which most certainly will accrue.

In the three last verses God Himself is introduced, assuring his child of all that he is prepared to do and be. Have you ever said definitely, "O Lord, Thou art my refuge"? Fleeing from all other, have you sheltered in Him from the windy storm and tempest, from the arrow by day, and pestilence by night, from man and devil? You must say it. Do not only think it, but say it. Keep saying it because it is true, rather than because you feel it to be true. Not only in the midst of sympathising friends, but in hours of loneliness, desertion, and opposition. Make your habitation in God, and avow it. Often the voice gives courage to the heart. We preach to ourselves until foreboding flees, and the courage of faith asserts itself again.

"I am anointed with fresh oil."—Psa. xcii. 10.

There is perennial freshness in God. In the works of nature, in his love, and in the renewal of the soul. Does the eye ever tire of the changeful beauty of the clouds? Though we look out from childhood to old age on the same landscape, there is always something fresh to captivate the roving eye. Think of the unfailing freshness in love—love of woman to man, of mother to child. Think of the freshness of each returning day, of earth in her springtime robe, with the myriads of sweet children, whose laughter is as ringing and their eyes as bright as if the earth was young, instead of being old and weary. And if God can do this for the works of his hands, is there any limit in the freshness which He will communicate to his children?

Each morning bend your heads, ye priests of the Most High, for the fresh anointing for the new ministries that await you. The former grace and strength will not suffice; old texts must be rejuvenated and reminted; old vows must be respoken; the in-filling of the Holy Spirit must be as vivid, and may be as definite, as at the first. See to it that the door of the oratory does not shut behind you, till as you rise from your knees, you can say, "I have been, and am anointed with the fresh oil." And the anointing that ye receive from Him shall abide on you, teaching you how to abide in Him. So you shall bring forth fruit in old age, and in life's winter be full of sap and fervour.

FRIDAY, February 12.

"The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice."—Psa. xciii. 3.

How often a man says these words over to himself as he paces the deck of the steamer in mid-Atlantic. There is no commentary to this psalm like that supplied by the break of the waves. Sometimes the voice of the floods is deafening; you cannot hear yourself speak; at other times all night, through the port-hole, you hear their musica break beneath. The lifted-up voice of the sea gives many notes in the great organ of nature, sometimes the deep bass, at other times the silvery treble. One says to one's self—

> What are the wild waves saying?

They may be inciting one another to a work of destruction and devastation, roaring in their rage, fretting for supremacy. Why should they endure the presence of man in their wild waste? He is an intruder. The sea-gulls are welcome; they are at home as in their native element, but man has no right.

So do the waves of trouble roar wildly around the bark of our life. There are times when surge on surge rolls in upon the soul, and breaks with boom and roar; but always there floats upon the soul the refrain of this sublime canticle, "Above the voices of many waters the Lord on High is mighty." He sits as King, higher than the spray is tossed, deeper than the fathomless depths, mightier than the strongest billow. Let Him but say, "Peace, be still!" and the greatest storm that ever swept the waves with wild fury sinks into the tranquil sleep of childhood.

SATURDAY, February 13.

"Blessed is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest out of thy law; that Thou mayest give him rest."—Psa. xciv. 12, 13.

The reason for chastening is rest-giving. God chastens us that He may give us rest from the days of adversity. In sorrow we learn lessons which serve us in good stead when others suffer without remedy. In trial-times the child of God falls back upon the lessons His Father taught him out of the black letter-book of pain, and he knows how to comport himself. Thus, he finds rest to his soul, rest in the will of God, rest in humble submission to his lot, rest in the wisdom that cannot err, in the love that cannot forget.

God teaches all the scholars in his school. He dares entrust none to an usher. Enter thyself as a scholar in the academy of grace, and thou shalt at once be taught as all the children are, of God.

There is but one text-book for the whole school. It is always the Law of God. We learn from it when we are babes. In mature life we resort to it at every emergency. In old age we feel we never understood before its meaning or beauty. It is God's "horn-book."

Those who have sat longest under God's tuition profess they know least. Instead of beginning at the lowest class and working up, we begin at the highest, and work down. The grey-heads sit on the infants' forms, and the simplest are the wisest. There is blessedness, not in roaming the fields, but in sitting on the bench and learning what God teaches each soul that will give heed.

Theatrical Tea Meeting.—Mr. William Forbes held one of his meetings for theatrical women and girls of the Northern district, on Friday last, in the lecture hall of Islington Presbyterian Church. After tea, addresses were given by the pastor, Rev. H. Norwell, Mrs. Mackenzie, and Mr. Forbes. Miss Ada Rose sang two solos and gave a short address.

THE EVANGELIST.

Through a Keyhole.

By Mrs. E. M. WHITTEMORE.

Door of Hope Mission, New York.

HIS name was John ——, and though but thirty-two he had travelled sea and land thousands and thousands of miles, visiting most of the principal seaport places, where as a rule of late years he would disgrace himself through drink, but managing somehow to sober up sufficiently when his vessel was about to set sail, so as to be admitted on board.

This little leave of absence was filled up in the usual way, gambling and carousing in general. After a somewhat disappointing day, that evening he could have been seen coming out of a corner grog-shop, and with an oath, turned down the street with clenched hands, quickening his steps into almost a run. Suddenly, in a most mysterious manner, his course was checked by the penetrating sound of singing that issued forth from the Bradley-street Mission. He came to a standstill, gazed up at those well-lighted windows, then with an unexplainable curiosity actually walked up the steps, but finding the large doors closed, he stooped over and looked through the keyhole. He was in direct line of the desk at the other end of the hall, upon which hung a bright red banner, and on it he read, "Jesus only."

For a moment his attention was so rivetted to the words that he almost forgot to breathe, when, with a quick jerk, strengthening himself up with a sneering laugh, he started down the street again, but with each step, those two words sounded in his ears, "Jesus only, Jesus only." No matter how fast he went, they kept pace with him till he reached the large square, some blocks away, when he decided to have another drink, resolving to drive even the memory of the Mission away.

Entering a crowded saloon, he called for a drink, but just as he was raising a glass of liquor to his lips, those words, "Jesus only," once more seemed to echo in his heart. To the astonishment of all, down fell the glass with a crash, followed by a few seconds of silence, which was broken by John's own voice stating with a determined tone, "Boys, I've taken my last drink, with the help of God."

Amidst numerous jeers, oaths, and laughter from those companions of sin, he rushed out into the night air again, almost bewildered and frightened at what he had done. Without being really conscious of the street he next entered, he found himself in less than ten minutes later retracing those hasty steps until the Mission was once more in sight. Quietly entering, he sat down on one of the rear seats, listened somewhat intently to all that was said, but becoming restless, finally jumped up and started off once more; but, as before, with each step those words, "Jesus only," kept repeating themselves in his brain, until suddenly he turned completely round, and entered the Mission again.

The meeting over, most of the lights were turned out, but in one corner were kneeling two poor outcasts, asking God for mercy, as a few of the workers knelt by their side. He was requested to join them, and in less time than it takes to record the fact, he became prostrated before God, acknowledging his sins, and craving pardon through the blood of the Lamb. He was, indeed, in earnest, and so desirous that the shackles of sin which had bound him for years might be loosed, but no manifestation was granted that those prayers were heard; still, as he finally arose from his knees, he agreed to trust God, feeling or no feeling, and even dared to express the hope that for ever after he might prove a blessing instead of a curse to those with whom he was obliged to mingle. Half-an-hour later, with this resolve still fresh, he threw himself upon the bed, but found sleep was impossible, as hour after hour slipped by occupied with most vivid thoughts of the past. Oh, the record of those misspent days!

Remembering of having seen a Bible somewhere in the closet of his room, and thinking it might throw some light of comfort into his troubled heart, he arose, and reaching up to the shelf, soon brought it over to the lamp. Brushing off the dust which had long clung to the cover, he reverently opened its long unused pages, and read these words:—"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever—" and he paused as with the reading a strange sweet peace seemed to take possession of his entire being, and aloud he exclaimed, "Why, that's me, myself, that surely means me." Then he read the remaining portion of the verse—"believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16). Yes, yes, he was accepted, and as the Spirit bore witness with his spirit that such was the fact, he fell upon his knees with exclamations of praise, and surrendered himself even more unreservedly to God than was possible to do even in the little Mission a few hours before.

Months rolled by, and nothing further was heard from or about this man of the sea, as he sailed shortly after his conversion. Still all who knew the circumstance felt convinced his life would tell for God. Just before the beginning of one of our services about a year later, a few of us were wondering concerning his whereabouts, little imagining that that very evening we were to listen to a letter from foreign parts directly concerning him. After the reading of the Scriptures, a lady arose stating she had a most interesting note to read. "It comes from Australia, and refers to a most singular conversion of a drunken sailor, who claims that the Bradley-street Mission had become in consequence the dearest spot to him on earth." As she proceeded, none could doubt that it was the very same John —— himself. He had not only been true to his consecration, but had been so led of God as to desert his regular occupation, and was then, and had been for months, engaged in bringing souls to a knowledge of the Saviour. The one who wrote stated that his example was well worthy of following, as his life was a daily reminder of the work of grace in his heart. Let us, indeed, pray that he may ever be kept for the Master's use. "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved."

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

"That no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for, The just shall live by faith.

"And the law is not of faith.

"By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin.

"But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested...

"Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference;

"For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;

"Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ."

(Gal. iii. 11, 12. Rom. iii. 20-24.)

Evangelistic Notes.

At the Hucknall Gospel Mission Hall a successful fortnight's mission has been conducted by Mr. Kennedy, Connexional evangelist. The congregations were exceptionally large, the spiritual tone of the services high, and the inquiry-room was filled nearly every night.

Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a fortnight of special services amongst the fishermen of Ferryden, Montrose, in connection with the Free Church of Craig. The week-night meetings were well attended all through, notwithstanding the excitement of a keenly-contested political election. On Sabbaths the church was filled with earnest listeners, many of whom seemed deeply impressed. The addresses were pithy, pointed, and plain. One noteworthy result of Mr. Galletly's visit to Ferryden in the beginning of last year was the number of young married men who professed conversion after the mission had closed, and sought admission to the membership of the church. Forty-two new members were added at the next Communion, and a similar addition is anticipated as the fruits of the special mission now brought to a close.

A successful series of evangelistic meetings, extending over a fortnight, has been concluded in the Free Church, Deskford. The meetings were addressed by Mr. James A. Smith, whose earnest addresses were much appreciated. The interest deepened as the mission drew to a close, and not a few professed conversion, while others received fresh quickening and stimulus in the Christian life.

Mr. F. L. Smith, of New York, has been engaged in Gospel work in Belfast for the past month. He began in Bethany Presbyterian Church (Rev. S. Simms, pastor), and had a fruitful fortnight there. Then he joined Rev. Henry Montgomery in his tent mission on the Shankhill-road, where he reached a lower section of the community, work amongst whom the evangelist evidently much enjoyed. Several devil-battered and devil-branded sinners were reached during Mr. Smith's visit, and are now encouraging the workers by signs of the new life. Mr. Smith spent part of his second fortnight in giving a series of Bible-readings, which proved very helpful. He is now conducting his closing mission in Belfast, which is being held in the Macrory Memorial Presbyterian Church (Rev. J. Northey, pastor). Mr. Smith expects to return to America early in March.

Dr. Munhall's Mission in Ottawa has closed with remarkable tokens of blessing. Crowded meetings and intense interest have marked the whole campaign. A detailed list has been published by the local journals of 1,300 who have made public profession of Christ and of a changed life. These represent all classes of the community, many leading business and professional men, and all denominations in the city. Dr. Munhall has now gone on to California for mission service.

A very successful Mission in Duncan-street Baptist Church, Edinburgh, conducted by Mr. W. D. Dunn, was brought to a close last Saturday with a Christian conference. The evangelist conducted Bible-readings in the afternoon and preached the Gospel at night. The meetings increased in numbers and interest, and many souls were added to the Lord, while not a few of the saints were made to rejoice in restored communion and renewed consideration. Mr. Dunn also presided at the daily noon prayer meeting in Carrubbers Close Mission. The closing conference was felt to be a season of special power and blessing.

The McAll Mission.

SILVER WEDDING.

TWENTY-FIVE years! The shop, 103, Rue Julien Lacroix, Belleville; forty people, of whom twenty-eight came in response to a written card of invitation given in the Rue de Bellevilie, January 17, 1872. Now, on January 17, 1897, in the numerous halls in the provinces and in Paris this small beginning was gratefully recalled alike by speakers and hearers.

I could only visit two of the gatherings, so that these glimpses are of the tiniest! At 23, Rue Royale, on the Sunday afternoon, were gathered Pasteurs Georges Appia, Henry Fourneau, and Messieurs Eugène Réveillaud and Louis Sautter. "Mr. McAll lives in the permanence of the work," said M. Appia to me. A touching tribute was offered by M. Réveillaud to the memory of my husband.

At Ménilmoritant, the young pasteur, Louis Appia, translated a passage from Dr. McAll's life, recently published by the Religious Tract Society, describing the first meeting, and Dr. McAll's own hymns were sung. M. Christol, artist and missionary, told of his first meeting with Mr. McAll, and how it ever remains with him as a fadeless mental photograph. Invaluable, as director of the children's meetings in those early years, the artist yet shone through his addresses, transforming them into lovely pictures. Regretfully was he ceded by Mr. McAll to the French mission on the Dark continent. Glad, indeed, was she who writes to meet once more the loyal Lutheran pastors, who so faithfully worked with her husband, as M. Damas rose, and with strength and fervour brought home the lessons of the day.

We did not separate before M. Appia had confided to me a petite collecte of five francs improvised on the spot for the treasury—a true love—token from these poor people for the mission and founder.

Elizabeth Liddall McAll (Mrs. McAll).

Peace Conference.—The eighth inter-Parliamentary Peace Conference will meet at Brussels during the summer. Luxembourg will probably be chosen as the meeting-place for the Universal Peace Congress, whose sittings will coincide, as usual, with the inter-Parliamentary Congress.

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER FOURTH.

LANGUAGES.

I COME now to consider the best way of learning a foreign language for the purpose of speaking it or preaching in it.

Languages are divided into two classes:

1. Dead languages.
2. Living languages.

The purposes for which these two classes of languages are studied are generally quite different. As a rule, the dead languages are studied only for the purpose of reading them. On the other hand, the living languages are generally studied for the sake of speaking them. It is to the latter of these classes of languages, when studied for the latter of these purposes, that the remarks contained in these lessons principally apply.

It is quite possible to be able to read a language without being able to speak it. It is possible to be able to read a language without being able to understand it when spoken. As Dr. Somerville says: "A person who reads a dead language with fluency and accuracy may be incapable of understanding it otherwise than imperfectly when spoken." This must be so; different powers of the mind are brought into operation.

In order to be able to speak a language easily and naturally, five things are primarily necessary:—

1. A good vocabulary.
2. A knowledge of the correct pronunciation.
3. Power to give this pronunciation without having to think how to give it.
4. A good practical knowledge of the idioms and construction of the language.
5. Power to think in the language whilst speaking in it.

I want to keep all these in view whilst writing the following lessons, and to arrange the suggestions in such a way as to be likely to lead to their attainment.

To all who are studying a language for the purpose of speaking it or preaching in it, I would say:

1. Keep clearly in view from the beginning the purpose for which you are studying the language. It is important in everything to keep the end aimed at clearly in view. We seldom attain an end when we lose sight of it.

This is, in a sense, specially true when trying to learn a language in order to speak it. Only thus will you be likely to bring into exercise, and fit for use, the faculties needed for the purpose intended.

2. Lay more stress on seeking the Divine blessing than on your own work or effort.

Nothing will succeed without that blessing; nothing will fail with it. If we were to succeed without seeking that blessing, we should probably not trace our success to it. All success which is not traced to the Divine blessing, and where the Divine blessing is not acknowledged, injures rather than helping; it leads us further from God instead of leading us, as all success ought to do, nearer to Him.

3. After asking God for his blessing, expect success.

He seldom succeeds who expects to fail. He who, in reliance on the Divine blessing, expects to succeed, seldom fails. This applies to everything. It applies particularly to those things in which our mental and physical powers are concerned, and probably more so still to those things in which the memory is concerned.

If you think that you will not remember a word, you will not be likely to do so. If you think that you cannot pronounce a phrase correctly, the probability is that you will not. Fear, like anxiety, will impair your faculties, and defeat your purpose.

4. If possible, begin, not by studying the grammar, but by trying to acquire the words and phrases in common use.

This is a matter of considerable importance, and that for the following reasons:—

(a) You can learn almost any language more quickly and easily thus.

Milton says strongly, but with much reason: "We spend seven or eight years in merely scraping together as much miserable Latin and Greek as might be learnt otherwise easily and delightfully in one year."

John Stuart Mill is almost equally strong. He says: "If a boy learned Latin and Greek on the same principle on which a mere child learns, with such ease and rapidity, any modern language, namely, by acquiring some familiarity with the vocabulary by practice and repetition before being troubled with grammatical rules,.....an average schoolboy, long before the age at which schooling terminates, would be able to read fluently, and with intelligent interest, any ordinary Greek or Latin author, either in prose or verse."

The method here indicated is the natural method. It is the way in which children learn their mother tongue. Those who reverse it will be likely to require at least twice as much time as they would otherwise have done. Milton, according to the passage quoted above, would make it much more.

(b) You will not merely learn a language more quickly and easily thus, but you will also be likely to speak it more naturally and effectively.

No one can walk naturally and easily who thinks how he is walking. No one can speak naturally and easily who thinks how he is speaking, or who, while he is speaking, is thinking if he is speaking grammatically.

That which is not natural is never effective, and never powerful. It never does the work it ought to do, nor accomplishes the purpose it is intended to accomplish.

Again, when speaking, whether privately or publicly, the mind ought to be occupied with the thoughts, not with the words. Just in proportion as the mind is occupied with the words, in any language, will it be taken away from the thoughts. Just to the extent to which the mind is taken away from the thoughts will those thoughts fail to touch the heart of him who utters them, and to reach the hearts of those to whom he utters them.

It increases the difficulty of thinking of the thoughts and forgetting the words, if the language has, so to speak, been learnt from the grammar, or if more attention has been paid to mastering the grammar than to acquiring a vocabulary.

(c) You will, in this way, acquire a good practical knowledge of the idioms and construction of the language with much greater ease than you could otherwise do.

John Stuart Mill, speaking of the rules of grammar, and of the desirability of beginning the study of the grammar after we have learnt something of the language, says: "Those rules are acquired with tenfold greater facility when the cases to which they belong are already familiar to the mind."

(d) In this way you will be likely to acquire the power to think in the language more rapidly than you otherwise could.

5. Do not merely try to acquire the words and phrases in common use; but commit to memory striking passages of Scripture, in the language which is being studied, especially those which are generally both simple and idiomatic.

This will be very helpful and very useful; especially if you first try to grasp the meaning as a whole before thinking at all of the particular words, and if you let your thoughts turn to these sentences, and dwell on them whenever you can. By this means they will become, as it were, part of yourself.

This will enlarge your vocabulary; and not only so, it will help you to get a good knowledge of the construction of the language, and to learn to think in it without thinking about thinking in it. The Gospel of John in any language is specially well adapted for the selection of brief sentences. A copy carried in the pocket, and referred to as opportunity offers, would help greatly.

6. As soon as possible some book ought to be read. Reading assists in acquiring a vocabulary. Each word and phrase and sentence read leaves its impress on the mind. You may not—you probably will not—be able to recall it after the first time of reading. You do not fell a tree with one blow, but every blow tells—and helps. So with reading.

Next to listening to someone speaking a language, reading is the best way of becoming practically acquainted with its idioms and its construction.

Let me make two remarks on reading:—

(a) Do not read too much at once. The impression made on the memory and the mind is generally in the inverse ratio of the amount read. Read slowly, think of what you read, and let the mind grasp it; and you will never read in vain.

(b) Master one book thoroughly before beginning another. The Gospel of John read and re-read half a-dozen times would be likely to benefit you more than a dozen books of the same size read once over.

Think, too, how much more quickly you can read one book half a-dozen times than a dozen books of the same size once.

Each time you read a book over again, it becomes easier to you to read. It is equally true, up to a certain point—say for the purpose now in view—that each reading becomes more helpful.

There may be some who, on account of some prescribed course of study, or for other reasons, have to begin by the study of the grammar. To such I would say:—

(a) Do not give more time to the grammar than is necessary; but do what you do as thoroughly as you can do it.

(b) Combine the two methods. While studying the grammar, seek to acquire as many words and phrases as you can without overworking. Avoid overwork; it would impede, not advance, your progress. One phrase a day would bring you forward more quickly than you think.

7. Learn to work in your thoughts instead of working with your pen; and to trust to your memory instead of your paper or notebook. In trying to learn a language which has to be spoken, it is better to do as much as possible in the thoughts. The more you do in your thoughts, the more you will be able to do. The more you do in your thoughts, the sooner you will learn to think in the language you are trying to learn.

I hope to resume the subject of this letter in my next; and afterwards to deal with the best way of learning the words and phrases of a language.

As I desire to make these Lessons as useful as possible, I shall be glad if any who have difficulties to solve, or suggestions to make, would write to me. My address is—Eza, Alpes Maritimes, France. (Please note that letters require 2½d. postage.)

The late Mr. J. B. Mead, of Brockley.

By Rev. JOHN LEWIS.

THE life of Mr. Joseph Burgess Mead, of Brockley, which has just closed on earth to continue in heaven, is in many respects worthy of thoughtful attention. Especially does it contain a message to men of business and to all to whom God has entrusted wealth.

The facts of Mr. Mead's career are soon told, but the lesson they teach are for all time. Born in Redruth, Cornwall, on Sept. 26, 1833, he died on Jan. 3 of this year, being little more than sixty-three years of age. His parents, who were Wesleyans, removed when he was quite a child to Lostwithiel, and afterwards to Plymouth. When a youth he saw reason to alter his views on the question of baptism, and allied himself with the Baptist church at George-street, Plymouth, where for some time he was a teacher in the Sunday-school. Here, in 1858, he married Miss Annie Frean, who survives him, together with one son and two daughters. But in a carriage accident, which occurred only a few months after their marriage, Mrs. Mead was so injured that she has been more or less of an invalid ever since. The dark shadow which thus rested upon their union almost from its commencement was faced with great fortitude and cheerfulness, and in many ways, as Mr. Mead has more than once observed to the writer, has been productive of fruit in their lives.

In 1859 Mr. Mead moved to London, and joined the well-known firm of Peek, Frean, and Co. To the building up of this business he brought immense energy and business capacity, and in it he continued a partner until his retirement in 1888. All through the wonderful prosperity with which God crowned his efforts, he maintained a high standard of Christian character, based upon a living union with Christ. He had an unblemished business record, and gained a wide reputation for all that is honourable and high minded. He thus secured the enthusiastic devotion of those who worked under him, a fact to which the beautiful testimonial presented to him by the employés of the firm on his retirement bears eloquent witness. Seldom, indeed, does it happen that the head of a great firm is held in such loving esteem, that it is possible for those with whom he has worked to say, "Many are the instances we can recall of burdens being lightened and rough places being made plain by your loving thoughtfulness, so that the ordinary relations between employer and employed have merged into affectionate and grateful regard."

May we not say that Mr. Mead has shown this generation how it is possible for men of God to amass wealth by means strictly honest, as well as how a great employer can win the hearts of those who work for him. Great business aptitude, untiring energy, intense firmness of purpose, and integrity of soul were in him united to generous consideration and tender thoughtfulness for all about him. But Mr. Mead by no means gave up all his time and energy to business. For some years after coming to London he served as an elder at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and soon after he had joined the church at Brockley-road in 1869 he was appointed to the office of deacon. He occupied this position until his death, and it is impossible to say how much of the success of the church has been due to his wise counsels, painstaking attention to all its interests, even the most minute, his generous gifts and saintly character. He was also president of the choir, in which he took a deep interest, and amid all his other responsibilities he found time to compile the Congregational and School editions of "The Treasury," the companion tune books to "Psalms and Hymns."

He had for many years a class of young women in the Sunday-school, and was also treasurer of the local association of the Baptist Missionary Society. In the latter capacity he did much to develop the interest of his fellow worshippers in the work of foreign missions. He took a deep concern in every part of the spiritual work of the church, and never allowed his gifts to release him from the privilege and responsibility of personal effort for the salvation of souls. In this respect many might learn a lesson from him, as too often the fact that a man is willing and able to support others to do Christian work is regarded as a valid excuse for personal lack of service.

Nor were Mr. Mead's energies by any means exhausted by what he was doing in connection with his own church. The earnestness of purpose and splendid capacity for affairs which made him such a power in business life were all used for many years previous to his death for the furtherance of Christ's kingdom in various directions. As a member of the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society he was known and loved not only for his princely munificence, but also for the ripe judgment and the patience with which he dealt with everything which came before him. His interest in the missionaries themselves was of the most real and personal kind, and nothing pleased him more than to see them at his house whenever it was possible to have them there. The work in China, India, on the Congo, and in Rome, all received his constant attention and support.

The same devotion showed itself in connection with his work as treasurer of the Baptist Building Fund, and of Psalms and Hymns Trust. Both these societies owe more than can be told to his self-denying labours. But it is perhaps as an example to the Lord's stewards that Mr. Mead's life is most to be remembered. He has shown us not only how to make money honestly, but also how to spend it well. Though he began life on a very modest income, from the first he resolutely set aside a tenth to be devoted to the Lord's work, and on this tenth, as he has been heard to say, he did not draw for such things as pew subscriptions, which he regarded as payment for value received. With growing prosperity he increased the proportion as well as the amount of his gifts, until perhaps it would be more true to say that he kept the tenth for himself, and gave the rest away. Nor was it merely out of his abundance that he gave, but even to the point of self-denial, for his expenditure on himself was on the most modest scale at the very time he was giving thousands yearly to the Lord's work.

It is worthy of note, too, that the same conscientiousness manifested in earning money was also shown in its distribution. It was ever Mr. Mead's desire to make all he had to bestow go as far as possible, and so his gifts were not the outcome merely of easy good nature, but of deep principle and prolonged thought. Every application for help, and his applications were legion, was carefully considered, and if the object commended itself to him he would respond to the best of his power. Where he felt he could do nothing, he would listen with the greatest courtesy and offer the wisest advice, but more often than not wise advice and generous sums accompanied each other. Without any affectation it may be said that it caused him as much joy to bestow his charities as it did the happy recipients to take them. Giving seemed more and more to be the joy of his life, so fully did he drink in the spirit of Him who "so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son." And all this was done with a simple modesty which made his gifts doubly precious.

He will long be remembered as the originator of the Chapel Debt Relief Fund of the London Baptist Association. Mr. Mead's own gifts to this fund amounted to about £10,000, and were so wisely bestowed that debts equal to five times that amount were cleared off during its operation. In connection with the Centenary Celebration of the Baptist Missionary Society he gave through his own church, in order to encourage others by his example, the sum of £500, but he left it to be found out that he was the anonymous donor, direct to the society, of £5000 to the same object.

Time would fail to tell of the assistance rendered by him to churches in London and the country. There can be hardly a Baptist church in the Metropolis which has not been helped at some time or another by him, and his gifts to mission halls and Sunday-schools have been in like proportion—only "the Day" will declare it all. But Mr. Mead's simple explanation would be that he did what he could and no more. During the closing months of his life, while suffering from the disease which eventually proved fatal, it was his joy to reflect on how much he had been enabled to do. But it was a joy which was as humble and grateful as it was glad.

In him we have one of the best modern exemplifications of the apostle's command to rich men as given in 1 Tim. vi. 17-19. He has made it plain that money can be made and used in such a way as not to injure but to promote the spiritual welfare of the one who holds it, that thereby he may "lay hold on the life which is life indeed." When our merchant princes add his practical Christlikeness near home, to their reputation for generosity abroad, there will be less unbelief in our offices and workshops. When men of all classes learn to look on their possessions as a solemn trust to be used for the good of their fellow-creatures and the glory of God, there will be less wild socialistic talk in our parks and streets. And when all Christians learn to do what they can as earnestly and as simply as he did, the pitiful appeals for help which come from all parts of the field will no longer be heard.

It is one of the mysteries of Divine providence that a man seemingly so indispensable should be removed so soon, but it may be partly for this reason, that his example, made the more vivid by his departure, may constrain others to follow in his steps. To every reader of The Christian Mr. Mead's life says: "As far as God shall enable thee, go thou and do likewise." And it is with this object that this short memoir is here given.

City Workers.

In connection with the work which Mrs. Fisher has been carrying on for so many years amongst young women employed in the work-rooms and factories of the City, a conference was held at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, on Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. Fisher herself opened the proceedings by telling of the goodness of the Lord during the past year, maintaining the work, providing workers, opening fresh doors, and blessing souls not a few. Amongst the letters read by Mrs. Fisher was one from the first girl converted, in the first meeting, in the Shaftesbury Institute twenty years ago, and now serving the Lord. The dinner-hour services have lately been fairly well attended, and endeavours are made to win souls to the Saviour, to build them up in the faith, and to lead them to read and study their Bibles. Various supplementary efforts, such as teas in the Old Welcome given by ladies, were referred to as of real usefulness in winning somewhat wayward girls.

Mr. M. H. Hodder, who presided, said that he had known this work from the very commencement and had watched over it closely, and he had the fullest confidence that it was of the Lord. He also felt that it ought to be more largely supported.

Mr. Apted, who kindly supervises the books, spoke of the careful economy exercised in every detail. He pointed out that the rent, etc., was £83 and the whole work of the mission but £75 more—so that the entire cost of this wide-reaching work is but £158. Of course, with larger funds, more could be done.

Testimonies followed by Miss Green and a number of other ladies, telling of house-meetings and how these had been blessed, of the visitation from work-room to work-room, of difficulties overcome, and of many working girls won to Christ. From the accounts thus given, it is evident that God is blessing greatly this quiet and faithful service.

The second anniversary festival of the London United Temperance Council took place on Friday night, at Queen's Hall. Mr. A. F. Hills presided, and expressed the view that pressure should be brought to bear on the School Board for London in the matter of temperance education, which had been productive of much good in West Ham, with the doings in which locality he was familiar. A resolution was adopted rejoicing in the successful work accomplished by the council, and commending to temperance organisations throughout the country "the great value and importance of that unity which the council seeks to promote." Addresses followed by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., and others. Some disappointment was felt at the unavoidable absence of Lady Henry Somerset.

Work in Chicago.

The work at the Bible Institute is in a most flourishing condition. There are at present about 230 students. Many of those who have passed through the institution are carrying on work for God in different parts of the globe. During the past five weeks it has been a privilege for me to lecture to these students every morning. In the evenings they are busily engaged in mission work in the city.

A work that Mr. Moody is deeply interested in just now is the Colportage work. Nearly six hundred godly men and women in rural parts of this great country are at work disseminating publications issued by the Colportage Association. There are something like 750,000 criminals in the United States, not all behind prison bars at one time, but including those who have been prisoners. It is Mr. Moody's desire that a book showing the way of life should be put into the hands of each of these prisoners. Up to the present time over 130,000 volumes have been placed; scarcely a day passes that Mr. Moody or the Association does not receive letters from prisoners who have been blessed by these silent messengers.

The work in Chicago Avenue Church goes on with unabated interest; perhaps never in its history has it been in such a flourishing condition as now through the pastorate of Rev. R. A. Torrey. It has been my joy to preach there almost nightly during the past month. The Sunday-school is the largest in the city, and all classes are being reached through its instrumentality, including Chinese.

After a month's mission in Winnipeg, I am hoping to pay a short visit to the Pacific Coast and also to Salt Lake City. I expect to reach England during March.—Yours very truly,

Chicago. Charles Inglis.

Rawei at West Norwood.

The Maori evangelist Rawei has held a series of attractive and successful meetings in Chatsworth-road Chapel, West Norwood. He preached with good results three times on Sunday week. He lectured on three week evenings, on New Zealand and Gospel work among the Maoris, the lectures being illustrated by a magnificent series of limelight views. Congregations of 800 to 1000 assembled each night. Rawei appeared in native costume, and sang some hymns and Christian songs in Maori and in English, accompanying himself on a guitar. The lectures, which were different on each evening, were most interesting and instructive, being delivered with marvellous ease and gracefulness, and characterised by great intelligence and refinement.

Rawei's purpose is to return to New Zealand in April with his wife, in order to carry on Gospel work among the Maoris. He has a deep sympathy for his own race, and he and his wife are really devoting themselves to their salvation, physically and spiritually. They purpose living among the people, so as to give an object lesson in family life, and to influence them in a better direction, as well as by establishing a school and preaching the Gospel. They are endeavouring to raise a few hundred pounds to help them in this good work. Their visits to churches whose aid they seek are a means of blessing to the churches themselves.

Hinè, the wife of Rawei, has been ill, but is now recovering. They merit the sympathy and liberality of Christians everywhere.

Dublin Medical Mission.

Five years and a-half ago, I was in Dublin speaking on behalf of medical missions, with a view to the establishment of medical mission work among the poor of that city. A start was made, and the first day only two patients presented themselves, but these two patients have now swelled into an average attendance of 100 thrice weekly. The great majority of these hear the Gospel preached and sung every time they come. On a recent visit I found 134 in attendance keeping Dr. Long, the medical superintendent, and Dr. Pigott and Dr. Wright, busy all the day. I addressed the patients on two days, and never had a more attentive audience, though it was evident that to many the simple Gospel of the love of God was a new story. A striking feature of the work is the meeting for men only, on Tuesday evenings, when over 100 poor working men attend a Gospel service, and are then seen by the doctors and treated, while a band of voluntary trained male dispensers make up the medicines and dress the wounds of those who come. All the dispensing and dressing of wounds are done by a voluntary band of ladies and gentlemen specially trained for the purpose. Two paid nurses are also kept busy all day, and have been greatly blessed in the homes of the poor. Altogether the Mission is worked on the best lines, and at a remarkably low cost.

Last year the average attendance at the Mission three mornings a week was eighty-two each morning. This year it will be 100.

I went into some of the homes with Dr. Long on his rounds, and found much need, but a very warm welcome. No part of Dublin is now closed to the nurses and doctors. The Bible woman, too, is doing an excellent work, and children's meetings and Sunday service testify to the permanence of impressions produced during sickness. Such a living witness to the power and blessing of medical mission work should be fully recognised.

All communications respecting the work, which is greatly needing pecuniary help, should be addressed to Mrs. Figgis, jun,, 6, Simmons Court-villas, Donnybrook, Dublin. Henry Soltau.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins.

Writing on the meetings at Kilmarnock, a correspondent says: "There has been much reason for encouragement. On Sunday (January 24) the large church (Grange Free) was full, and people assembled in the adjoining hall for an overflow, which was conducted by Rev. G. B. Watt, of the Established Church, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins.

"Day by day the meetings were large, both afternoon and evening, and the after meetings were uniformly fruitful through inquirers coming to the light. As the interest deepened, there was enlarged blessing on the Word as preached and sung. The choir, under the leadership of Mr. Heir, who is conductor of the Kilmarnock Christian Union Choir, has rendered excellent service. The pieces in the 'New Christian Choir' have been rendered night by night with attendant blessing.

"From Kilmarnock the evangelists go to Greenock, where the meetings begin on Sunday next. A week later Mrs. Stebbins will go to Dumbarton, to asist in a mission in connection with Lady Overtoun's work among young women."

The forthcoming engagements of Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins are:—Greenock, February 7-19; Dumfries, February 21-March 5; Airdrie, March 7-19; Aberdeen, March 21-April 2; Thurso, April 4-15; Woolwich, April 18-May 2.

The Joy of Giving.—The Church at Home and Abroad tells the story of a good man who regularly gave every Sunday five dollars for the support of the church. A poor widow, a member of the same church, who supported herself and her six children by washing, was just as regular in making her offering of five cents per week, which was all she could spare from her scant earnings. One day the rich man came to the minister and said the poor woman ought not to pay anything, and that he would pay the five cents for her every week. When the pastor called and told her of the offer she replied, "Do you want to take from me the comfort I experience in giving to the Lord? Think how much I owe Him. My health is good, my children keep well, and I receive so many blessings that I feel I could not live if I did not make my little offering to Jesus each week."

Faithful Unto Death.

"A BABY for sale, cheap! Who will buy a fine baby"? cried some Spanish soldiers at Oran nearly three hundred and fifty years ago. A handsome child of Arab birth was to be sold as a slave, but good Juan Caro, the vicar-general of Oran, bought the baby boy and baptized him in the name of Geronimo.

When he was eight years old, some Arab slaves escaping from Oran carried the boy with them, hoping to restore him to his people, and with them he lived for some years in the Mohammedan faith.

"His body is with us," said his relations among themselves, "but his spirit is in Oran. What can be the power that holds him?" They did their best to tear and torture out of Geronimo's heart the holy faith which Juan Caro had planted there when he was a little child, but it was all to no purpose. They asked him, "Shall we never make thee as one of ourselves?" "Never!" said Geronimo, "for my heart is elsewhere."

He waited until he was twenty-five years old, and then he did what he knew no Arab would forgive—he fled from his home to his old friend Juan Caro and told him of all the dangers he had had to encounter in his hasty flight.

"But why have you come to me?" asked Caro, to test him.

"Because," said Geronimo, "I wish henceforth to live in the faith of the Divine Saviour of men."

"This is my son who was lost and is found again," cried the delighted Juan, and the two rejoiced together, Geronimo feeling that he could not do enough to show his benefactor all the love and gratitude he felt for him. Entering the Spanish Guard, Geronimo performed such feats of bravery that he gained high honours, and with a heart full of joy and ambition he made a request to his friend and patron, the vicar-general:

"Will you consent that I marry a sweet Christian girl of my own race, for she is in danger of her people's ire?"

Good Juan Caro gave his consent, and they were married. Ten happy years passed, Geronimo being as a dutiful son, and his wife as a tender daughter to Juan Caro, and then came sorrow.

On a bright May morning in 1569, some Arabs encamped near Oran, and Geronimo was deputed to manage them. He took nine soldiers, and rowed out of the harbour in a small boat, the sun shining and brightening everything, and his wife and Juan encouraging him by smiles in the work he had to do. Two Moorish brigantines suddenly gave the little band chase and ran them down.

All the soldiers escaped, but Geronimo was seized and taken before 'Alj Ali, the Calabrian renegade. A great cry spread among the Arabs through Algeria that the apostate was a prisoner, and the Moors made a vow that Geronimo should embrace his old religion.

"All that thy heart desires shall be given thee, and no man shall ever hurt thee if thou wilt become a Mohammedan," promised the teachers who had been sent to convert him.

"I am Christian," replied Geronimo, "and serve Christ, Him only will I serve; therefore, keep your offers for those who will accept them."

They then loaded him with chains and tortured him, and when he was all but spent, the teachers gathered round him and again offered him liberty, power, riches, honour. All he could do was to shake his head, signifying refusal.

"They think they will make me a Mohammedan," he once panted, after the torture, "but that they shall never do, even if they kill me."

For four months he endured fresh daily tortures, never yielding.

"Is the apostate still obstinate?" at last cried 'Alj Ali. "Then the dog of a slave shall suffer as he deserves to suffer."

"Michel," called Ali, to a Navarrese mason, who was also a Christian slave, "You see this empty mould? leave it as it is, for the present; soon it shall hold that dog of Oran who refuses to return to the faith of Islam."

Poor Michel had to obey, and with a very sad heart he returned to the prison and told Geronimo Ali's command. M. BUTLER GERDS.

A New "Uncle."

I HAVE an announcement to make. I am going to visit Palestine and Egypt for two or three months, and while I am away this page is going to be conducted by a friend of mine, whom I must introduce to you as "Uncle Ted." Next week, he will, I dare say, introduce himself in a little letter to you, so for the next eight or ten weeks, please, address your envelopes to him at this address instead of to me. I have no doubt he will be able to interest you even more than I have done, as he has travelled all over the world, has spent many hours in different countries, and is very fond of children. I hope you will do your best to please him, as of course he will set the "Bible Searchers" every week; and all the arrangements will be carried on in the same way as they have been hitherto. When I come back, I daresay I shall have some interesting things to tell you about, and more than likely I shall be able to write to you once or twice while I am away.

Personal.

Many kind friends have sent parcels of dainty blotters, comforters, cuffs, pincushions, &c., for the soldiers, and scrap books for the sick children, which will be very much appreciated, and I heartily thank all those who have contributed.

SPECIAL NOTE.—Many of you who have done your papers very nicely indeed have been counted incorrect because you did not answer the second half of question 2, as to the lesson to be learned from "what happened on a snowy day." I want you all to remember that the object of Bible searching is not to find out all the curious or interesting passages, but to find out some of the truths and lessons contained in that precious Book.

Those who were disheartened at not finding a text for "X" may be comforted by hearing that no one else did so, and the omission was not counted wrong. FREDDA HUNTON.—"If at first you don't succeed"—you know the rest. BOYS AT LEIGHAM-TERRACE.—It is very nice to hear of you all doing the Searcher together, but you must not help one another, you know. I am sorry there was a mistake about some of your names last quarter, but I am setting this right this week. If you had some hundreds of nephews and nieces you would forgive me. It takes an hour and a-half just to get all your envelopes opened and the answers arranged for correction, and that takes whole days! MAMIE CONNETT.—I am looking out for the things. TREVOR MATTHEWS.—I am glad you always do your best. Thanks for address. IBLA WOODMAN.—If your questions had been quite right, your name would have been given. MARY BARTON.—You will have to enter the competition as over thirteen, since your birthday comes before the competition (many happy returns!), but till then you need only do the lesser number of questions, though if you do all, so much the better. FREDA RAYNER.—Glad to welcome you and other new nieces to-day, though you and SIDNEY LAW were too late. H. M. E. MORRIS.—I have made a note about your name. You will find the rules in January 7. LILLY WHENDAY.—Am very sorry your name is not in the correct list again, but you only answered half of question 3. EDITH BRAYFIELD.—Your paper was very nicely done, but you left out No. 5 answer. RALPH BOURNE.—I think if you wrote on lined paper you could manage to write your own answers. Try next week. MAUDE EVANS.—It is a great pity your answer for No. 5 is wrong. The rest of your paper is done very carefully and neatly. HILDA RAWSON.—Your paper was very neatly done, but you omitted Answers 1 and 2. CHARLES PARKIN.—I do not think there is another of your name. FANNY AND NELLIE AMES.—As it was not your mistake, I have examined your papers and found them correct. EDWIN PETERS.—Your name was not mentioned as you were incorrect. Unfortunately you have made a mistake this week. CATHERINE FIRTH.—Send your answers a little earlier.

Rev. John McNeill at Manchester.

[By our Special Correspondent.]

THREE weeks of heavy work and heavier weather brought to a close on Sunday last a mission, the like of which has seldom, if ever, been seen in Manchester, and upon which hundreds of persons will look back with a never-to-be-forgotten interest. On the committee all the evangelical denominations of the city were well represented, Churchmen and Nonconformists alike joining in hearty co-operation.

Not often are the promoters of a direct evangelistic effort on so large a scale brought face to face with so many unpropitious circumstances at the outset and during its course. In the first place, the period selected proved most unfortunate, so far as the engagement of suitable halls was concerned, most of them being engaged six, and even twelve, months ahead, for all purposes, good, bad and indifferent. Hence, during the three weeks of the mission, no less than six large buildings were successively—and, in spite of all, successfully—occupied, with varying capacities for from 1500 to 8000 persons. The obvious disadvantage of being thus "driven from pillar to post" is patent to all experienced in such gatherings; and with weather alternately severe, sloppy, and slippery, truly it needed both faith and courage to go forward.

But these were just the qualities which were not wanting. The evangelist was surrounded with men and women strong in faith, instant in prayer, valiant in endeavour, whose hearts God had touched; and who, undaunted by frost or fear, went forward with him in the name of the Lord of Hosts. Small wonder then that the halls were filled. Out came the people in throngs difficult to number; and "what else but the Gospel of Christ," asked Mr. McNeill on the closing day, "will produce the attendance of 25,000 persons per week, twice a day, for three weeks? Neither concerts nor plays, no, nor yet football," he added, with pointed allusion to the passion so prevalent thereabouts,

"IT WOULD BE THE DEATH OF IT!"

And so, week in week out, spite snow or slush, the work went on with increasing vigour, until at last the vast St. James's Hall, more suited to bazaars and shows than public meetings, was crowded out, with hundreds of persons standing in the aisles and on the gallery stairs.

There is no need to characterise here the preacher's methods of procedure; they are well known. But a city like Manchester could not fail to be touched by his broad, sound common-sense, and practical business-like way of stating his message. "You talk as if you meant me," he imagined someone saying. "I do mean you; I have a message," he retorted; and the subject matter of his discourses convinced his hearers that it was not himself that he preached, but Christ and Him crucified. In this connection may be mentioned his address upon the healing of the lame man (Acts iii.). The problem of human sin and misery was here represented at its worst, but Peter and James challenged it—"In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." If the man had not risen, heaven would have been baffled, and sin and hell triumphant. The Apostles risked all upon that appeal; and Jesus answered to his name, and testified by his presence of his power to heal.

It matters little which address might be referred to, each was bristling with home truths—and very sharply-pointed, some of them—thrust home fearlessly, and even mercilessly when necessary; yet with a tender entreaty and a winsomeness of appeal. The midday were quite a feature of the mission. Four and sometimes five a week of these were held, and thus were reached hundreds of hard-headed, practical men who, hitherto filled with indifference to, and even contempt for, "religion," were bound to admit that the claims of Christ upon the human heart cannot be trifled with, or lightly set aside. Conspicuous in this series of addresses stands out the powerful study of Shammah in the garden of lentils (2 Sam. xxiii. 11) acting on the defensive, single-handed, against tremendous odds, and Benaiah (ibid. v. 20) content with nothing short of personal aggressive effort for the destruction of a common foe. These incidents gave free scope for the preacher's descriptive forte, and for the unfailing fidelity with which he applies the lessons to be learned from them.

An interesting fact came to light during the mission. At one meeting there were no less than twenty employés from a single warehouse (each unaware of the presence of the others) who the next day made the mutual discovery that they had decided for Christ the night before, naively remarked Mr. McNeill to his audience, as he related the fact at a succeeding meeting.

"FOR IT WILL COME OUT,"

It would be difficult to find a more inspiring sight than the immense concourse of people, 8,000 strong, as viewed from the platform of St. James's Hall on Sunday night. Most earnestly they listened to an address from Phil. ii. 12-15, which was a masterly setting forth of the freeness of the gift salvation, on the one hand, and, on the other, its claims upon the daily life. The objections which are so often raised to the preaching of free salvation by those who cling to "dead works" were pleasantly but ruthlessly brushed away; and the Christian life was set forth as the only means of true happiness, from which unhallowed tastes and worldly desires "drop off like dead flies"—this in answer to such questions as, "May I not go to the theatre, ball, card-party, etc., and still be a Christian?" "Salvation is a full cup," urged the speaker, "and needs careful carrying"; hence the warning of the Apostle as to "fear and trembling"—not lest the soul be lost, but lest the life be hindered. "To those who have drunk deeply of the water of life, worldly pleasures are poisonous at their worst, and

BRACKISH AT THEIR BEST."

A prominent and most helpful feature of the mission was the excellent service rendered by the choir, which has a history of its own. It was formed for the meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey twenty-three years ago; and, under the title of "The Sacred Song Association," has during the interim done splendid work in the workhouses, infirmaries, and slums of the city, as well as at special meetings that have been held from time to time. The work has all been voluntary, and the members pay their own expenses. Such a body of consecrated men and women cannot fail to be of immense utility to the Church of Christ. The pity of it is that they are found in so few of our great centres of population. The Gospel in song may be made a great power for good, and certainly its presentation at this mission was a marked blessing. Then, too, the members of the Manchester City Mission, acting as stewards, and helping in a variety of ways, showed what can be done, so far as externals go, to make the course of a mission run smoothly. Well trained and instructed, they were ready for any emergency to an extent which would have proved invaluable had any untoward event or accident occurred during the progress of the meetings. It were invidious to mention any names, so well was every post filled, from committee and secretary downwards, and each duty performed in the several departments of what has proved an exceptionally arduous enterprise.

Mr. McNeill begins his next mission on Sunday, at York. Then, on March 7, Liverpool, Spurgeon Memorial Service.

A SPECIAL service in connection with the fifth anniversary of the death of the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Thursday evening, under the auspices of the Spurgeon Sermon Memorial Society.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presided, and in opening the proceedings observed that when the Senators of the American Republic were discussing the best way to celebrate the achievements and discoveries of Columbus, one of them declared there could be no better way than to continue the prosecution of his researches and explorations, and to launch out upon yet another exploration. Similarly, the Chairman thought the best way to commemorate the deceased pastor was to perpetuate his work by scattering his sermons and helping the institutions his people had assisted him to found. If further memorial services were held the promoters would be more than justified if they arranged that the next should be in connection with the Pastors' College, the firstborn of Mr. Spurgeon's children, another directly associated with the Orphanage, and so on. The sermons issued by the Spurgeon Sermon Memorial Society were the living echoes of the voice that was still and of the tones that had ceased to ring.

Mr. Taverner, the founder of the Sermon Society, said that there were 563 branch secretaries, each representing a distinct town. One year ago they had 210 distributors; to-day they had 4695. In Belfast alone they had 215; and, in fact, they had more encouragement from Ireland than from any other part of the country. As proof of how much the sermons distributed are appreciated was the fact that no fewer than 17,149 had been kept by readers during the year and paid for; and the Society had put into circulation 985,341 sermons. The publishers had given 100,000 copies as a memorial to the memory of Mr. and Mrs. Passmore. It is hoped shortly to bring out the sermons in Welsh.

Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, referred to a visit he had paid a year ago to the hotel at Mentone, in which the beloved pastor had breathed his last—the man who, if he did not preach the "higher life," lived it. The reason why people used to hang upon his lips, and now that he has gone long to read his words, was because his words were so full of everything that was true.

Rev. D. Davies said he was told the other day that Mr. Spurgeon was only a man. Well, he was a man, and the speaker did not think he ever thought he was anything else. He was a man inspired with a message, and with special gifts and fitness for the delivery of the message. He was a man whose life would live when they had passed away. He was a man to be remembered, and would be remembered—indeed, he lived in the world now as he had never lived in it before.

On Sunday, the fifth anniversary of the day on which Mr. Spurgeon died, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon preached two memorial sermons at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.—On Monday last week a New Year's reception for sailors was held, when about 250 sat down to tea. Mr. E. Beauchamp Rogers, who was the generous host, presided at the meeting which followed, and spoke some faithful and loving words. Mr. W. H. Seagram gave an earnest address, and was followed by Mr. John Line, sen., of Reading, who spoke with great power, and narrated striking incidents from his own history. Mr. John Rogers and other friends added much to the enjoyment of the sailors by their sweet Gospel songs.

Rome and the Bible.—Miss M. F. Cusack, the Nun of Kenmare, has a vigilant eye for the assumptions of Rome, and a ready pen in exposing the arrogant claims of that Church. Recently, in a Brighton paper, she controverted the Romish position from Scripture and history. With reference to Rome's treatment of the Bible, she quoted Cardinal Manning's dictum that the master-error of the Reformation was that Christianity was derived from the Bible (!), and added: "If one of Rome's greatest controversialists and converts declares that she does not derive her religion from the Bible, let us not have the Bible quoted as an authority by her priests. Rome likes to bring forward the Bible on occasion, but when Rome rescinds her bulls denouncing the reading of the Bible, and establishes a Bible Society in Rome, for the circulation of even the Bible according to Rome, then we may believe that she believes the Bible. Rome is fond of appealing to Scripture when addressing a Protestant audience."

Advance in Finland.

FINLAND is a country with a comparatively small population, but it is, nevertheless, a land having a deeply interesting history, and at present experiencing development in important directions. The surface of the country is for the most part covered with hills and woodlands, another natural characteristic giving rise to the alternative name, "The Land of a Thousand Lakes." The resources of the country are limited, and the people poor.

Many centuries ago the Greek and Roman Churches fought for religious supremacy in Finland; at length the Lutheran Reformation was introduced, and remains to-day the State form of worship. Dissent is tolerated, however, and various Evangelical bodies are at work in the towns and villages of the country. Among these are the Methodists, who have churches and schools, a printing-press, and other important agencies. They labour among both the Swedish and Finnish populations, and have seen much blessing upon their exertions. Out of the thirty-seven towns in Finland, they have work going on in eleven, and from every quarter they are being urged to extend their preaching of a living faith and a full and free Gospel. The villages are not overlooked, and with aggressive efforts at home the little churches do not forget the claims of the great heathen world outside.

A large scheme is now before the churches for the erection of mission premises, with an Evangelical Training Home and printing and publishing offices, at Helsingfors, the capital of the country. This is an enterprise essential to the advancement of the work, and in its details highly creditable to the wisdom of the church leaders, for Helsingfors is the heart of Finland, the centre of its thought, and the starting-point for all expansive effort. With a view to interest British Christians in the undertaking, Mrs. F. Swensson Parker, a helper in many ways, has come to England to renew acquaintance with those who have already supported the work, and to seek out new friends. Her credentials are in every way satisfactory, and she brings a little book entitled, "Suomi: the Land of a Thousand Lakes," by Pastor Hiden, which gives an outline of the history of the Grand Duchy, with many excellent illustrations and a map of the country on an unusually large scale (7d. and 1s. 1d., post free). Our Finnish friends deserve encouragement in their bold enterprise. Communications to Mrs. Parker should be addressed, care of Miss Mason, House of Rest, 10, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

South America.

IN connection with the South American Evangelical Mission of Toronto, two missionaries, Revs. John Linton and W. B. Sallans, left Liverpool early in August last, en route for Bolivia, an enormous inland state, with a population of over two millions. Out of many interesting letters received since their departure comes one dated from Tucumen, in which Mr. Linton says:—"What needs doing at once is to pray and work for the gathering together of large stocks of Spanish religious literature, to be sent out here either with the missionaries or at other times. Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, portions, good tracts, booklets, etc., are urgently needed."

Tucumen, where these two pioneers are staying until they master the language, is the principal town of N.W. Argentina, and though connected by rail with Buenos Ayres, and containing some 49,000 inhabitants, has not a single soul occupying the ground for Christ. The whole town is dependent for its knowledge of God's wondrous love upon the occasional visits of a colporteur.

The South American Evangelical Mission is not yet officially represented in England, but a small prayer-circle in touch with the Mission and the field itself has been formed, and any inquiries or offers of assistance which may be addressed to Bryce W. Ranken, 34, Broadgreen road, Old Swan, Liverpool, will receive willing and prompt attention.

Northampton.—Says a writer in the February Leisure Hour, "Notwithstanding its political associations, there is more church and chapel going in Northampton, and less crime, than in any other manufacturing town of the same size."

The Indian Famine.

THE Fund promoted by the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, for which Lord Kinnaird issued an appeal at Christmas, amounted on January 30 to £3500. The Society is still appealing for further aid. Letters from India show that there is very urgent need for such assistance as the Society's missionaries are giving. Large numbers of poor, but respectable, women, who are secluded in the Zenanas, will not receive aid from Government because of the publicity it would involve.

One of the Society's missionaries, Miss Marston, has been asked to distribute relief in connection with the local committee at Lucknow, which makes her a grant of Rs. 760 monthly. With this sum, amounting to about £50, she is able to afford help in between 300 and 400 houses, sufficient to enable the inmates, with their slender resources, to maintain life. From this it appears that about 2s. per head monthly is enough, in many cases, to meet most pressing needs. The secretary of the Mission is Rev. A. R. Cavalier, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

A Prayer for India.

ETERNAL Father, strong to save,
For India now thy help we crave;
O heavenly Father, stretch thy hand
O'er that poor famine-stricken land;
Oh, hear us in the hour of need,
Do Thou the starving millions feed!

Eternal Father, God of Power,
Send India rain in copious shower;
And give her children daily bread!
Now let the multitudes be fed.
Oh, hear us in the hour of need,
Do Thou the starving millions feed!

Eternal Father, God of Love,
Now hear us from thy throne above;
Stretch forth thy hand, let mercy flow,
And save thy Hindoo children now.
Oh, hear us in the hour of need,
Do Thou the starving millions feed.

Eternal Father, God of Peace,
Let plague and famine quickly cease;
Oh, let the prayer of faith prevail,
Now stay the orphans' hungry wail;
Oh, hear us in the hour of need,
Do Thou the starving millions feed!

Eternal Father, strong to heal,
Oh, hear us as we now appeal;
Feed Thou the hungry, ease their pain,
Restore to health the wasted frame;
Oh, hear us in the hour of need,
Do Thou the starving millions feed!

Eternal Father, God Divine,
O'er India let thy Gospel shine;
Let doubt and error flee away,
And turn their midnight into day;
Oh, keep this nation in thy sight,
And turn their darkness into light.

The Navvy Mission.—The report issued by the missionary, Mr. S. Creber, working on the M. S. and L. Extensions in St. John's Wood, shows that amongst the men (about 2500) employed on these construction works, active efforts are carried on in the way of Gospel testimony, dinner-hour, and sometimes midnight, talks, the distribution of literature, and home visitation. Open-air meetings in Lisson Grove and Kilburn have been well attended, and good temperance work has been done. There is, however, urgent need of larger help. Communications should be made to Rev. E. A. Midwinter, 35, Blandford-square, W.

Armenian Orphans.—We have received from Mrs. Mary Hickson, hon. sec. of the Women's Armenian Relief Fund, copy of a letter from Major Williams, English Vice-Consul at Van, as to the progress of the relief work. He says:—"I cannot but admire the practical way in which the orphanage is conducted. It is quite a treat, in this wretched country, to see their happy faces, and to know that, while they are being looked after and educated, they are not being cared for in a way that will unfit them for their future life. I consider that the lines on which the Orphanage and the women's industrial work are worked are most excellent, and that the good done is incalculable. I sincerely hope the necessary funds will be obtained to carry on the work."

Letters to the Editor.

"PAPERS ON MISSIONS."

DEAR SIR,—I have recently been reading "The New Acts of the Apostles," by Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. (6s. Nisbet.) It is a stirring history of missions. Apostolic succession is a reality. Every new God-sent missionary is an Apostle, "a sent one." The Lord is continually sending them forth, as heralds and witnesses, to preach the Gospel, to make disciples, and to organise churches. Still the prayer reverberates, "Send forth more labourers into the vineyard." Every member of the true Church of Christ is bound to further missions, and so to hasten his coming.

A Spirit-filled missionary is the best gift of God's love to the world. He is the noblest work of God. He is a living testimony to the truth. When he puts foot on a foreign land, he takes possession of it for the Lord. Are not our hearts stirred within us, as we follow the noble pioneers in this greatest work? They respond to the exclamation, "Here am I, send me!" Some may truly say, "I cannot go." Then SEND.

Every one can help. Missionaries need outfits, sustentation in the field; above all, the support of our prayers. What are you doing? The duty is clear—"Preach the Gospel to every creature." Missionaries need Bibles in foreign languages, and good Gospel tracts. There is scope for the rich and the poor to bear a hand. Let us be "up and doing," and diligently inquire, "What more can I do to hasten the coming of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ?" CHEYNE BRADY.

EFFECTUAL PRAYER FOR LONDON.

DEAR SIR,—"The beginning of the hourly intercession," in 1727, marked a time of revival among the United Brethren at Herrnhut. The day and night were divided among the seventy volunteers who first responded to the proposal of continuous prayer on behalf of the community, and the custom so begun was long a distinctive observance of this devoted and heroic church.

The contrast between the village of Herrnhut and the City of London need not obscure the common interests and possibilities of spiritual life. The need of revival is deeply felt by many. Conversions are few, and the experience of converts often alarmingly superficial. The prevalent disregard of all authority but that of civil law, the loss of reverence for the Lord's Day and the Lord's Word, the varieties of self-satisfied agnosticism, and the insatiable craving for amusement, together with strong drink, which does the work of war, famine, and pestilence seven days of every week, are too much by far for the spiritual strength which appears in the churches.

But history as well as Scripture reminds us of unused power within the reach of all. We pray much, but for the most part vaguely, separately, and spasmodically. We want prayer for London which shall be definite, united, and constant. There must be thousands who would join in this, and readily carry the burden of such an intercession.

I appeal to you to draw these together, not in place, but in heart, and to make known the time covered by their offers until the whole day and night are provided with intercessors. Each offer might be made for one week, while the renewal of promises for the same or some other half-hour would be earnestly invited. An alarum clock would enable any one to participate at any time of the night, but health and circumstances would necessarily make these watchers few, and in no case would it be well to break the night long at the same hour.

The churches represented should, I think, be named, and perhaps the number of intercessors in each, and remembrance of these churches would be a special feature of the intercession. But the great common object would be the quickening of the people of God in London and the enduement of power for the conversion of sinners.—Yours sincerely,

J. F. B. TINLING.

International S.S. Lessons.

February 14.

The Prison Opened.—Acts v. 17 to 32.

Golden Text. Verse 29.

THE teaching of this lesson may be presented in a few of the scenes which the story brings before us.

I. A prison (17, 18), not some deep, dark dungeon cell, but probably a room connected with the Temple, where the Apostles could be well guarded (23) until sentence was passed upon them. It appears that other Apostles besides Peter and John (29) were confined here. For a time the apostolical testimony seems to be silenced. Why were they here? Their crime was, preaching the Gospel, healing the sick, winning converts to Jesus of Nazareth. Against this work and against God, who commanded the Apostles to do it, the Sadducees, led by Annas, the high priest (17), opposed themselves. Zealous work for God always meets with opposition in this world. A dead religion that will let the world alone may escape persecution, because it is not worth persecuting. What did the Apostles think of their imprisonment? Of this we may be sure they did not regard it as failure. A path is not wrong because there are difficulties in it. God wins his triumphs through seeming defeats.

II. Liberty (19, 20).—The warders who kept watch could have dealt with any human attempt to secure the release of the prisoners, but the securest prison and the strongest guard can do nothing against angelic ministry. How much our Lord and the early Church owed to the ministry of angels! And how much they do for us, though they are unseen (Heb. i. 14). So the Apostles' imprisonment taught them another lesson as to the power of God. Picture their being led out through the open door into liberty. That is what God can do. He does not always take that method of delivering his servants. Contrast the experience of Stephen (vii.), and of James (xii.). Has fidelity to God led you into difficulty? Expect some signal display of his power and grace.

III. The Temple (21).—Here they had been at work when their enemies took them captive. Yet they did not hesitate to enter again into the same place, and continue their work. How did they dare do this? Did not the authorities forbid and threaten them? True, but the angel had commanded (20), and the people needed to hear "the words of this life." They had to decide, what we have all to decide also, whether we will obey God or man. Truest courage is that which does God's will, whatever consequences are threatened, and such courage the Spirit of God gives to all. It is always right and safe to obey God.

IV. The Sanhedrim (21-32).—First, see the assembly baffled and humiliated. They have a full meeting, including "all the senate" (21), for they have important work to do. Picture their sending for the prisoners, and the result (22, 23). "Unlearned and ignorant men" the Apostles were, able to command none of the power and influence of this world; yet the great ecclesiastical court of the Jews was powerless against them. Is it not time the Council should recognise that they are fighting, not against the Apostles, but against God? If they had not been hopelessly hardened they would have yielded. What an awful picture they present of the hardening influence of sin!

Next, see the Apostles boldly witnessing before them (27-32). The Golden Text is a part of their address, and contains the justification for their action. It states a principle which even their enemies must admit. Has God spoken to them? The answer is in Peter's words: God raised up Jesus (30); exalted Him with his own right hand (31); gave his Spirit to these men as witnesses (32). Opposition had done its worst in putting Jesus to death (30); but it had not stopped the work of witnessing for Jesus. A picture in front of Wickliffe's Bible represents Christianity as a fire burning and spreading rapidly. Many are seeking to put out the fire. Satan is there with horns and tail. The Pope is there with his red-coated cardinals. Infidelity is there. At length all resolve to unite in blowing out the fire. And there they are, "with swollen cheeks and extended lips, blowing with all their might, but instead of putting out the fire they are increasing it. The fire is inextinguishable."

Corruption in Canada.—Investigations into the Dominion elections held last June in Manitoba show that there were gross irregularities during the contest. Six deputy returning officers have been committed for trial for abuse of trust. It is alleged that an organised system of stuffing the ballot-boxes prevailed, cardsharpers being employed to substitute one kind of ballot paper for another. Bribery sufficient to void an election is admitted at Winnipeg.

Anchors for Every Vessel.

LIFE is a voyage from the scenes of Time to the shores of Eternity and its varied experiences are as changeable and restless as the ocean; and what the anchor is to the ship, so is hope to the soul, its salvation, support, and security. The anchor to the ship is an unseen friend fixed on the ground, fastened to the cable, in order to stay the vessel in the time of storm. So a good hope through grace to every believer is a friend, a stay, a power, and a joy. "Which hope we have as an anchor for the soul, both sure and steadfast" (Heb. vi. 19).

1. The anchor saves the ship in times of danger: Salvation (Heb. vi. 18).
   So does hope save our soul.
2. The anchor steadies the ship in times of storm: Steadfastness (Heb. vi. 19; Rom. v. 4).
   So does hope steady our hearts.
3. The anchor sustains the ship in times of trouble: Strength (Acts xxvii. 29; 1 Peter i. 3, 21).
   So does hope sustain our lives.
4. The anchor stays the ship in times of difficulty: Stability (1 Thess. i. 3; Heb. vi. 11; iii. 14).
   So does hope stay our peace.
5. The anchor secures the ship in times of fear: Security (1 John iii. 3; Rom. viii. 24; Col. i. 3).
   So does hope secure our minds.

Hope is the twin sister of Faith (1 Cor. xiii. 13), the pilgrim's staff (Heb. xi. 13, 14), the anchor of the soul (Heb. vi. 19), the key to open Doubting Castle (Heb. x. 23), the Christian's helmet (1 Thess. v. 8), the Christian's anticipation (1 John iii. 2, 3), and the great holdfast of life (1 Pet. i. 13).

"Hope (says Thomas Watson) is an active grace; it is called a living hope. It is like the spring in the watch, it sets all the wheels of the soul in motion; hope of a crop makes the husbandman sow his seed; hope of victory makes the soldier fight; and a true hope of glory makes a Christian vigorous and earnest in seeking glory; this is a spiritual touchstone by which to try our Christian life."

A dying sailor was near his end. The death-sweat stood upon his brow, and a friend said, "Well, how is it with you now?" The dying man, with a smile, made answer, "The anchor holds—the anchor holds." God grant that every one of us may be able to say this when our last moments come. May we catch the light of the guiding star of hope which will lead us to eternal day.

We are out on the ocean sailing,
Homeward bound we sweetly glide;
We are out on the ocean sailing,
To a home beyond the tide.
All the storms will soon be over,
Then we'll anchor in the harbour;
We are out on the ocean sailing,
To a home beyond the tide.

Winchester. C. Edwards.

Mr. W. R. Lane in the City.

Mr. Lane has inaugurated his year's evangelistic engagements in connection with the Y.M.C.A. by a mission to young men in the City. This has proved one of the most fruitful seasons ever experienced at Aldersgate-street. The first meeting, being held on Sunday afternoon, when the City is comparatively deserted, was small, but very interesting in its character. The real work, however, began on the Monday evening (January 11), when Sir George Williams (though himself absent in Devonshire) invited the young men of the City to a social tea. About 500 of the right stamp responded, and after an earnest address by Mr. Lane quite a number sought further help. On the first occasion twenty made public profession of a desire to accept Christ. Thus happily commenced, the meetings during the week—although not widely advertised—were well attended and full of power. Some forty-five added their names to those already registered as having decided to follow Christ.

The mission closed with a deeply interesting and impressive meeting on Friday evening, when the evangelist gave an account of his conversion while serving in the Coldstream Guards, and of the soul-struggles through which he passed ere he found peace in believing. Many were deeply impressed, and it is expected that further fruit will be found from this gathering. It is exceedingly interesting to find that of the sixty-four who professed Christ, as a result of the mission, thirty-five are young men in the large business houses—just the class specially sought after. It is felt that there is much cause for praise in the blessing granted on this City mission.

An eight days' mission conducted by Mr. Lane, at the Y.M.C.A. Whitehaven, was brought to a close on January 31. The meetings, which at first were not very large, owing to adverse circumstances, gradually laid hold upon the people, until during the last few days the Hall was filled to overflowing. The Lord indeed spoke through his servant, and we feel that the effect of the earnest prayerful words will live on in the hearts and consciences of his hearers. On Sunday afternoon the attention of from three to four hundred men was riveted during an hour's straight talk, which cannot fail to produce lasting results, given as it so evidently was under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Major Cole in Nebraska.

A most remarkable series of united evangelistic meetings has been held by Major Cole in Hastings, Nebraska. Commencing on November 6, these were continued to middle of January, so great was the interest awakened.

A local editor says: "With a perseverance before unknown in this city, with a large corps of earnest workers, with the pastors of seven churches united in the most perfect harmony and hearty co-operation, Major Cole has continued the siege, using every method, reaching every class, until the whole population of Hastings has been brought face to face with the greatest of all questions, 'Will you accept the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour?' There have been awful battles over the question. One man confessed in the meeting that when conviction came upon him, he went to the gambling-table, the saloon, and the theatre to drown his convictions. Then he sought rest in sleep. No rest was to be found. In the night, he went and aroused a minister to lead him into light and rest in accepting Christ. He did so, and all things became new to him. One man confessed that he had not slept any the night before, but still struggled against his convictions until in one awful struggle, he said, 'Well, I'll do it, if it kills me.' And the One who calmed the storm on the Sea of Galilee, stilled the tempest in his soul and 'there was a great calm.'

"The work has been characterised by persevering importunate prayer on the one hand and deep conviction of sin on the other. It has ploughed right through all grades of society, all the professions and avocations. The homeless unemployed, friendless wanderer has found a home and friend in Christ. Some of our most prominent lawyers now have an Advocate on high. Some of our leading physicians have taken the prescription of the Great Physician. Some of our leading merchants are now doing business for Christ. Some of our society belles are now giving a clear ringing testimony to new delights in a personal Saviour. The richest, deepest testimony of spiritual blessing received has come from the ministers who have been so constantly and closely associated with Major Cole in this work.

"There has been the greatest freedom, many things have been done spontaneously, unconscious of the fact that anything so very unusual was happening. Meetings have been held at all the churches and many other places, such as barber shops, blacksmith shops, business offices, street corners, hotels, in G. A. R. Hall every Sunday, anywhere, everywhere, as of old in Palestine, where souls might be reached and saved. Through all the variety of time, place and surrounding conditions, the one increasing purpose ran of saving souls."

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

CAMBRIDGE.

On Friday last, in the Henry Martyn Hall, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor delivered an address on the work of the China Inland Mission. Mr. Hudson Taylor intimated that his son and daughter-in-law were recently very near the glory of martyrdom. In the course of riots at a place which he did not name they were only removed by a few minutes from death. A mandarin, however, opportunely interposed and saved them at imminent peril to his own life. Details of this incident will not be published until lapse of time has removed the danger of revenge upon the mandarin who so heroically overruled the opposition of his adherents, and saved the lives of the missionaries.

Professor Cheetham preached the University sermon on Sunday 31st. As Hulsean lecturer, he drew a beautiful and instructive parallel between the pagan "mysteries" and the mysteries of the Christian religion, showing the points of contrast and resemblance.

The C.I.C.C.U. addresses on Sunday were by Dr. Butler, Master of Trinity College, in the afternoon, and by Professor MacAlister in the evening. The C.U.C.G. sermon, at 8.30 p.m., was preached by Rev. G. A. Lefroy, of the Cambridge Delhi Mission.

Abyssinia.—Mr. J. M. Flad writes from Kornthal to the Jewish Missionary Intelligencer that the Swedish missionaries at Harrar have been compelled to leave Abyssinia. This augurs badly for the chances of sending European missionaries to Western Abyssinia for some time to come.

The Y.M.C.A.

By permission of the Government, a Y.M.C.A. has been organised in Tabor, Bohemia.

The Bishop of Newcastle has consented to address the Sunday afternoon Bible-class of the Newcastle Association on March 21.

A special mission to young men, one of a series organised in the north-eastern district, was held at West Hartlepool from January 25 to 29 by Messrs. C. T. Dymond and W. M. Hudson.

Lord Kinnaird attended a meeting of the Worthing Association on the 29th ult. in the Literary Institute, to celebrate the entrance by the Association into new premises in Liverpool-terrace.

The Putney Association has entered new premises at 100, High-street. On Wednesday evening Sir W. H. White presided over a meeting held to mark the event, and addresses were given by Messrs. F. Howe and George H. Lee.

Col. Wroughton, president of the Bedford Association, held a reception at the Institute on the 28th ult., when Mr. W. Hind Smith delivered an address. The Association is contemplating a removal into larger premises better adapted to its work.

A social reception of the members and friends of the New Cross and Brockley Y.M.C.A. was held on Monday evening by Major Davidson in the schoolroom of St. James's, Hatcham. The vicar, Rev. E. J. Kennedy, gave an address.

A very successful gathering of members was held in connection with the Burton-on-Trent Association on January 19. The occasion was taken advantage of to formally open the library which has been inaugurated, when over 130 books were presented by the members.

Rev. F. B. Meyer visited Trowbridge on the 20th ult., gave a Bible reading in the afternoon, and preached to a large congregation at the Tabernacle in the evening, on behalf of the local Association. At the latter, a large number of young men occupied the front seats of the galleries.

Mr. D. A. Black gave the first of a series of addresses in the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. on Saturday week, and continued them on Sunday in the same building. His eloquence and enthusiasm drew crowded attendances at each of the meetings. On Monday night he spoke on "Social Purity" to a large audience.

The annual meeting of the Morpeth Association was held on Thursday week. The chair was occupied by Mr. Cuthbert Bainbridge, Espley Hall. Mr. Wilkinson said the Association had attained its majority that night, for it was on the 14th of January, twenty-one years ago, that at a meeting in the "British Workman" the Association had been formed. It was gratifying to find that five of the original members were present that night to help to celebrate the coming of age of the Association. Rev. W. S. H. Wylie, Newcastle, delivered an address to young men.

The annual meeting of the Manchester Association took place on the 26th ult. in the large hall in Peter-street, which was well filled for the occasion. The proceedings commenced with a reception by the president, Mr. W. J. Crossley, and Mrs. Crossley, and with various interesting exhibitions in side rooms of the building. Mr. Crossley presided over the public gathering, and addresses were delivered by the Bishops of Manchester and Ballarat, Messrs. D. A. Black and R. D. Thomas. An abstract report, presented by Mr. W. H. Newett, showed that during 1896 589 new members and associates had been admitted; 846 entries were made for forty evening commercial classes; 514 Bible-classes and other religious meetings were held; 7,395 volumes were issued from the circulating library; employment was found for eighty-seven young men; eighty-nine commercial men were assisted by relief; and introductory letters in connection with the Young Men's Emigration Advice Society were given to forty-five young men going abroad.

The Lessouto Mission.—Not long ago the chief Lerotholi, in this mission, expressed the wish that his tribe should possess another industrial school, the one which our mission founded at Leloaleng being too far from the centre of the country to supply all needs. It was impossible for our Society to establish this new school; and the time had come when the progress of the tribe and its growing appreciation of the benefits of civilisation demanded that it should make sacrifices which would not have been asked of it formerly. The chief Lerotholi understood this. He levied a tax on the whole country. In the middle of last June its produce amounted to 75,000 francs. After this he sought advice both from the administration and the missionaries, and asked their interest in his enterprise. The final result, in which we greatly rejoice, was that the direction of the school was offered to our Society without any share in the expense.—Journal des Missions Evangéliques.

The Y.W.C.A.

REV. G. LOWE delivered the annual address to the members of the Frenchie branch, N.B.

The annual social of the Dingwall Institute was held on the 14th inst. The reports read were very encouraging.

About forty blind poor were entertained at tea recently by the members of the Bilston branch, which was followed by a public meeting, presided over by Mr. J. W. Sankey.

At the annual meeting of the Sunday afternoon Bible-class of the Whitehaven branch, Dr. Jackson presided, and Mrs. Bragg read the report. About five years ago a foreign mission fund was started, which has sent yearly several pounds towards foreign mission work. A Bible woman is maintained in India, as well as work in connection with the lepers. Miss Entrican gave an address.

At the annual meeting of the New York Y.W.C.A. it was stated that the Margaret Louisa Home has furnished over 6000 women with board and rooms at reasonable rates. Out of 3212 applications for employment, positions had been found for 1728 applicants. The number of books in the library is 25,000. There had been 4561 students in the classes and 1435 in the Bible class. Altogether the work seems to be in a very satisfactory condition.

The annual meeting of the Adelaide Y.W.C.A. was held on November 20th. Mr. C. H. Goode presided. The report showed that the meetings during the year had been well attended. A missionary library is in process of formation. Eight of the members have gone out to the foreign field. Various social and interesting meetings have been held. The report of the Flower Mission at the Adelaide Hospital was also read. Lady Buxton is patroness and Lady Colton president.

The report of the Loving Service League for 1897 is an encouraging one. Continued interest is shown by the members in the Zenana Bible and Medical missionary work in India, especially in the work at Jaunpur. The members of this Association are the only European missionaries in Jaunpur, and they are proved to be competent to deal with all the varied needs of the work. The Central Nurses' Union and the Nurses' Union at Norwich have both joined the League. A dispensary is much needed at Jaunpur. The Dorchester branch of the Y.W.C.A. takes a large share in supporting Miss Owston, who is about to undertake evangelistic work in the Patna Hospital. Miss Ballard is Hon. Secretary.

The report of the Foreign Mission Department for London, states that the number of members now in the foreign field is sixty-four, not including those who have gone out from the Central Institute, or candidates now in training; twenty-three Y.W.C.A. branches have missionary prayer meetings; and sixteen missionary secretaries met together in May last for an informal conference. The report expressed regret at the absence of Missionary Bible study among the members. All the leading Evangelical societies are helped, and a number of smaller ones, such as the Garenganze Mission, the Moravian Missions in Labrador, the Missions to Lepers, the Jewish Girls' School in Jerusalem, etc. A few branches still show lack of interest in missionary work, and it is earnestly hoped that the cause of the heathen will be laid to heart more during the coming year. It is proposed, in order to deepen this interest, to hold a strong Central Missionary Conference as soon as possible. The Hon. Secs. are Mrs. Percy Grubb and Miss Ellen Legg.

Requests for Prayer.—For special services to be conducted by Mr. F. L. Smith in Macrory Memorial Presbyterian Church, Belfast, from Jan. 31 till Feb. 12.—For meetings being held in co. Clare, Ireland.—For God's gracious blessing upon Mr. Henry Lakin's visit to St. Matthew's, Birmingham, Jan. 30—Feb. 12.—For a blessing on a mission at Monmouth, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie, Feb. 20 to 27.

Christian Evidence Literature.—Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A., is well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a writer in defence of Christianity. Of his pamphlet, "Will the Old Book Stand?" nearly three million copies have been circulated in fifteen or twenty different languages. It is the initial issue of the "Anti-Infidel Library," a series of which contains some fifty publications. These works are brief, popular in style, full of facts, illustrations, and telling points, and especially adapted for circulation among the common people. For the instruction of the masses in the evidences of Christianity, the "Anti-Infidel Library" deserves a wide circulation. A shilling in stamps to Marshall Brothers, 5A, Paternoster-row, London, E.C., will secure a quantity of these tracts, which would confirm the faith of the wavering, stop the mouths of the scoffing, and convince some honest sceptics of the error of their ways.

Scottish Notes.

A GENERAL evangelistic mission is in progress this week in fifty Free Churches in Edinburgh.

The death of Bailie James Paton, of Glasgow, has deprived that community of an active temperance, Sunday-school, and Y.M.C.A. worker.

Aberdeen temperance reformers recently met in conference and declared that nothing short of the total abolition of the drink traffic would meet the needs of the case.

At a conference last week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, a Vigilance Association was formed for furthering the better administration of the licensing laws and the abolition of places of resort that are inimical to the moral well-being of the community.

The two Scottish societies for furthering the distribution of Christian literature in India and China held their annual meetings in Edinburgh last week. Encouraging testimony was given by speakers of the good work done by both organisations, and of the great need for their operations.

Efforts are being made by the Dumbarton Social Union to give a trial to the Bishop of Chester's licensing plan, and they are negotiating for a site whereon to build premises. A motion emphatically protesting against the plan has been passed by the local branch of the British Women's Temperance Association.

The Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow met in private last week to discuss the prospects of union with the United Presbyterian Church. There was a large attendance, and the proceedings lasted over two hours. It was stated that the discussion in the Presbytery was characterised by great harmony and unanimity, and that a general opinion seemed to prevail that there should be little difficulty in overcoming the apparent obstacles in the way of the union.

The Free Presbytery of Hamilton, at a recent meeting, had read to them extracts of letters from Mrs. Torrance (daughter of Rev. Mr. Gilchrist, Shotts), who, with her husband, is a missionary in Poona, India. The letters described the dreadful sufferings of children near Jubbulpore, who were given one meal a day by the Government. In some cases people were eating their children. Amongst these children, one lady missionary was constantly labouring, and was distributing them in batches amongst the missionaries to be cared for. She appealed for special help on behalf of the children. The Presbytery, after hearing a letter from Dr. Lindsay on the subject, resolved to send its special famine offerings to Poona, it being remitted to the Presbyterial foreign mission committee to draw up an appeal to the congregations on the subject.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society was held last week. The report of the year's work showed that the society had gradually developed with the shipping trade of the port of Glasgow, till now it had at active work seven paid missionaries and agents, assisted by about 140 voluntary workers. A special feature of the work of the society is the effort to keep in touch with the wives and families of sailors. The recreation, reading, and writing rooms on both sides of the river are extensively used by seamen while in port, and in 1896 over 210,000 visits were made to them. During the year 2683 libraries, bags, and parcels of good reading were put on board outward bound ships. A further feature of the society is the ladies' auxiliary, who specially looked after the widows and families of deceased seamen, and at present over 200 widows were receiving help.

Irish Notes.

THE first regular meeting of the newly-established Dublin Ministers' Union was held last week, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. McMullen.

The Presbyterian Sunday School Society for Ireland has forwarded a special prize to a girl who has attended Sabbath School for twelve years without missing a single day.

The Central Presbyterian Association, Belfast, is doing capital work, and has since October last largely increased in membership. An attractive programme has been issued for the coming session.

Glossop.—The Gospel Union Mission Hall reports good among working men and women as well as the girls employed in the mills. Many cases are given showing how the Gospel has won its way among the rough and sinful. The superintendent is Rev. R. Howton.

The Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission gives a good record of work for last year in local and tent missions. Factory girls and ballet girls' socials, police-court mission work, and varied efforts to reach and rescue the victims of intemperance and vice. Information as to this good work may be had of Mr. F. H. Butler, Temperance Institute, Birmingham.

Obituary.

REV. T. B. BURROWS, WORCESTER.

This devoted servant of Christ, who for more than forty years has rendered—under Rev. W. H. Havergal (the father of Frances Ridley Havergal) and a succession of godly vicars—invaluable service in Worcester, has passed away, ripe in years and mourned by many. Rev. Charles Bullock, in The News, pays a warm tribute to his departed friend and co-worker.

REV. A. E. WHERRETT.

Yet another young missionary has laid down his life on the Congo for the evangelisation of Central Africa. A telegram has been received reporting the death of Rev. A. E. Wherrett, but the communication simply gives the information that the death resulted from fever. Mr. Wherrett only went out to the Congo in June last, and was associated with Mr. White at the new station, Yakusu, on the Upper Congo. Bristol College was deceased's Alma Mater, and he had also received ministerial training at Dr. Guinness's East London Training Institute.

MRS. MASSINGBERD.

The British Women's Temperance Association has suffered a very serious loss through the death of Mrs. Massingberd, of Cunby. While deeply interested in all phases of temperance work, Mrs. Massingberd was specially interested in the B.W.T.A., having been for some years a member of the National Executive, and also of the sub-committee, charged with all the detail work at the London headquarters. She also took an active interest in the Industrial Farm Home Colony at Duxhurst, of which she was treasurer so long as her health permitted. One of the Duxhurst cottages was her gift, and is named after her.

REV. BENJAMIN BROWNE.

This faithful minister of Christ passed, after a short illness, to his rest, at the residence of his son, Rev. W. Arthur Browne, in Accrington, on Thursday week. The son of the late Rev. J. Rockwood Browne, he grew up amidst associations which caused him to become deeply interested in the works of the Wesleyan Methodist Church—an interest which became the more intense as life advanced. Entering the ministry in the year 1850, he laboured for many years in the county of Cornwall, where the spiritual results of his work were remarkably apparent revivals breaking out and spreading throughout the whole circuit. Ever on the alert to help others, his delight was to guide the studies and aid the mental development of younger men. Many who are to-day in the ranks of the ministry have testified to the benefit they received from his kindly counsel and judicious advice. During his last illness there were abundant tokens that the Gospel he delighted to proclaim, and to preach so faithfully, was his own consolation. Towards the end he said to those who were watching with him, "Peace, perfect peace."

MISS CATCHPOOL, NAROWAL, PUNJAB.

A telegram from Rev. R. Clark, dated Amritsar, January 16, told that this faithful missionary had succumbed to an attack of small-pox. The news came with startling suddenness to her friends. Her last letters were full of bright details of the Christmas festivities. Miss Catchpool has from the first been engaged in the Punjab Village Mission. In 1881 she joined Miss Clay, who had occupied the first station at Jandiala in the beginning of the year. During Miss Clay's absence in England, she took charge of the Mission, making Ajnala, which was occupied in 1883, her headquarters. In 1885 she began work at Narowal, with which her name will always be specially identified. Her work has ever been marked by singularly unselfish devotion. Since her return to India from her second furlough, she has manifested an increasing desire to come nearer in manner of life and sympathy to those among whom she laboured. She has only recently been at Agra, helping in a mission conducted by Rev. Ihsan Ullah, the native pastor at Narowal. It did seem as if the Master was preparing her for yet more fruitful service here below, but He had better things in store for her, even promotion to the service in his immediate presence. Meantime, sympathy is with the bereaved relatives at home, and her sorrowing fellow-labourers and the native Christians at Narowal.

CLERICAL SECRETARY of the C.E.Z.M.S.

GEN. SIR ROBERT PHAYRE, K.C.B.

Many will mourn the departure of this faithful witness for Christ, who passed to his rest, at his residence, St. George's-square, S.W., on Thursday last, at the ripe age of seventy-seven. He entered the Indian army fifty-eight years ago, and rendered distinguished service in many campaigns. In 1889 we gave his portrait with a sketch of his career. Brought up in a Christian home, he was in youth a professing Christian, but the turning point in his life came when lying seriously wounded, after the celebrated battle of Meanee. Two years soul-struggles followed his recovery, but eventually through reading "McCheyne's Memoirs" he was led into peace and newness of life. Subsequently in all his responsible posts he bore bright and fearless testimony to Christ. After forty-eight years' active service in India, Abyssinia, and Afghanistan, he retired in 1886, covered with honours. These, however, he esteemed but light things, giving himself, after coming home, to earnest service as an evangelist and personal worker in many directions. Of late his special testimony has been on behalf of the simplicity of the Gospel, the veracity of Scripture, while his voice has frequently been heard protesting against the allied evils of Rationalism and Ritualism. The truth of the Lord's coming was also deeply laid on his heart, and occupied a prominent place in his public teaching. He was ever ready to help what seemed to him a real evangelistic institution, and hence he will be sorely missed by many of the workers of the day.

Personalia.

Principal Miller, of the Madras College, has undergone an operation for abscess on the liver. Though his strength is maintained his condition is still critical.

Mr. John Wanamaker announces that he will build a church to testify his thanks to Providence for saving his store from total destruction during the recent great fire in Philadelphia.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler writes: "I have just come from a grand evangelistic service in my old church conducted by Dr. Chapman. I saw my neighbour, Mr. Sankey, to-day, he is well and busy as ever."

The Lady Mayoress of Manchester has a deep interest in mission work, and was for some time honorary missionary in China. Though happy in her present position she prefers the life of a missionary.

Mr. J. Louis Fenn, one of the staff of lecturers of the National Temperance League, is making arrangements for an extensive van and tent work during the coming summer in the interests of the temperance cause.

Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical and Medical Mission to Israel, is now on his way to this country to plead the cause of the work among the poor Jews in Palestine. He may be addressed, care of Mr. F. Newth, Sutton, Surrey.

Rev. Charles Ray Palmer, D.D., of New Haven, Connecticut, U.S.A., who sailed from New York on the 19th ult. for this country, is to take charge of the Congregational Church, Allen-street, Kensington, in the absence of Rev. C. Silvester Horne, during the months of February and March.

Dr. Eliot Curwen, of the L.M.S., Peking, was in October last laid aside by an attack of malarial fever, and in consequence of a recurrence of the fever with rheumatic complications, after a short interval of imperfect convalescence, he has been compelled to return home for a period of rest.

Dr. Pentecost has finally decided to accept the call to Yonkers. The resolution of the London Presbytery was communicated to Yonkers, but they held that it was extra-Presbyterial, and refused to recognise it. Accordingly, Dr. Pentecost has definitely resolved to return to America. The congregation to which he is going is smaller and the salary lower than at Marylebone.

Count Tolstoi.—Some weeks ago it was the intention of the Ober Procuror of the Most Holy Synod to obtain a judgment of the Orthodox Church against Count Leo Tolstoi. This project has been thwarted by the Czar, who refuses to allow the Tolstoi to be harassed in any way. His Majesty has, however, given his assent to the proposal that pamphlets on religious subjects which are calculated to lessen respect for the teachings of the Orthodox Church be withdrawn from circulation.

Mr. Colin Young, widely known for his interest in evangelical work, and specially in connection with efforts to disseminate the Gospel among the Jews in the East-end, has been for nearly a fortnight lying seriously unwell at the Wild Olive Graft Mission House, 4, Vine-street, Minories. During the last week his condition has often occasioned grave anxiety. He is still in a state of great weakness. Prayer is asked for him. Mr. Young is in his seventy-third year.

Dr. H. L. Mackenzie.—The much-loved and highly-respected senior missionary of the Church of England, Moderator-elect of the coming synod, has had to suffer the loss of his wife, who died on the 9th of January. Mrs. Mackenzie was a splendid missionary's wife, a self-forgetful friend, a gentle and lovable and devout spirit. It was the great trial of Mr. Mackenzie's last term of service in China that Mrs. Mackenzie had to remain at home to care for their children. It will sadly cloud the year of his moderatorship, that between his nomination and his period of office she has been taken from him.

The late Mr. Gordon Oswald.—Dr. Albert W. Clark writes from Prague, Smichov:—"Your paper has mentioned the loss that France and Italy have sustained in the death of this faithful servant of God. But Austria, too, has great cause to remember with deep gratitude the long-continued kindness, the wise counsel, and the liberal gifts of this Christian gentleman. For many years he sustained an evangelist in this difficult field, and in the last years two evangelists and a deaconess. For many months it was a special pleasure to aid Mr. Gordon Oswald in corresponding with workers whose language he did not fully understand. We never met, but through his letters I learned to respect greatly his fervent piety and complete trust in our Divine Saviour."

Mr. and Mrs. Innes-Wright, Nepal, finding it advisable to return to Scotland for two months, previous to settling down on the frontier of Nepal, will be glad to address meetings in Scotland and England where the opportunity will be given them of telling of the needs of Nepal, and of their experiences among the Nepalis. They will also be able to show various Nepalese and Tibetan articles. As their object is to return to India in time to start work at Sukia before "the rains" begin in June, their stay at home must be a short one, and it is hoped that those desiring to arrange for meetings will communicate with them as soon as possible. Letters sent to care of Mr. W. B. Sloan, China Inland Mission, Newington Green, Mildmay, N., will reach them on their arrival in London about March 1.

Portsmouth and Gosport Mission.

The Lord has been giving much blessing in Seamen's Mission, and there is a wide field for labour. On Wednesday, last week, a tea for watermen and fishermen was given in the Bethel, Gosport. Scarcely one of those who attended is ever found in a place of worship. After tea the Gospel was spoken and sung, and a solemn time was spent with the men, many of them seeming to be deeply touched; they stayed on long after the service. Indeed, it seemed difficult to get them to move, and we gladly stayed on till late with them. At the close each man had a comforter, a pair of cuffs, and a bag of books, which were much appreciated by them at this cold season.

Will friends pray for the work amongst the men, that many of them may be won for the Master? One man for whom there has been much prayer for a long time was converted a fortnight ago, and gives abundant evidence of its being a real work of grace. Praise God with us for this one.

The reading-room is open every night, through which we get more individual dealing with them. Many of the younger men too come to the room, who are anxious to improve in reading, writing, etc. To these we give all the attention possible, always with the one end in view, to enlist volunteers for our King's army.

"Themselves being Witnesses."

Dr. Harford Battersby concludes in Niger and Yoruba Notes an interesting article on "Hausa Literature." Some of the moral sentiments and sayings quoted from Hausa poems, and current in this Central African country, afford remarkable evidence of being derived from Scripture sources, doubtless through the Koran:

"Whoever chooses this world rejects the choice of the next: he seizes one cowrie but loses two thousand cowries." This is a striking statement, but of course the attainment of the next world is made to depend upon merit, for the writer says:—

"Whatever you have given away here you will meet with in the next world: you will obtain riches which will be free from the attacks of mice, much more of ants."

"Make much preparation: leave alone the things that belong to this world, which is to come to an end."

"Give up delaying and saying, 'It will do when you are old:' death will come before you are old."

The idea of repentance, given in one of the poems, is distinctly forcible:—

"My friend, repent truly and leave off falsehood, leave off deceit, leave off drinking gia and bam and buza. Repent to God, leave off repenting like a wild cat: it repents with the fowl in its mouth, it puts it not down."

An important case under the tied house system was heard at Westminster, when a nominal fine was inflicted upon a beer-house manager for selling beer without a licence, the licence being held by a brewery company.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Bombay is about to resign his see.

The Bishop of Worcester has become president of the Birmingham Y.M.C.A. this year.

The Gordon memorial sermon was preached on Sunday afternoon at Westminster Abbey by Canon Eyton.

Canon Bardsley, vicar of Huddersfield, acting under medical orders, has left home for the coast of the Mediterranean for a couple of months.

The friends of the C.M.S. will be glad to know the Lay Workers' Union of Birmingham, for some years extinct, is being vigorously resuscitated.

Over £50 has already been subscribed towards a second Church Army Mission and Colportage Van for the diocese of Down, Connor, and Dromore.

The farewell services at St. Mary Abbott's, Kensington, in connection with the departure of Hon. and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, were marked by considerable interest.

Dr. Wace having resigned the office of preacher to the Society of Lincoln's Inn, the Benchers have appointed a number of preachers to officiate at Lincoln's Inn Chapel up to Easter. The Bishop of London will preach at the morning service on Sunday, March 21, and Rev. Dr. Wace will continue his course of Warburton Lectures on February 7, March 7, and April 4 respectively.

Seven or eight hundred men are accustomed to meet on Sunday afternoon at St. Peter's, Dartmouth Park-hill, N., for religious service. They have also reading-rooms, sick benefit funds, and other agencies of an educational and social character, most of which are due to the energy of Rev. J. E. W. Ditchfield, one of the curates, who is now in Egypt trying to recruit his health. Preachers of note address these assemblies, the Head Master of Harrow accepting the duty on Sunday week.

The South American Missionary Society is about to send out with Mr. W. B. Grubb (who has been some time in England on furlough), two new missionaries, Messrs. S. Hawtrey and W. Mark, to mission work in Paraguay. At a valedictory meeting, held in the committee-room of the Society, Mr. Henry Morris presided, and described the work as having vastly extended in recent years. Mr. Grubb gave interesting particulars of his sphere of labour, and pointed out the great need there is for more workers. The valedictory address was given by Rev. W. Martin.

Congregational.

Mr. Herbert J. Hayward has been ordained to the pastorate at Purley.

Rev. Richard Parry, of Llandudno, has attained his ninety-fourth year.

The Church at West Kensington is prospering, 222 members are now reported.

Rev. E. E. Cleal has been recognised as pastor of Bethany Church, South Hackney.

A new church is to be formed at Tunbridge Wells, of which Rev. J. Mountain has accepted the pastorate.

Rev. J. Barton Dadd has resumed his ministry at Dunmow after recovering from a long and serious illness.

Rev. Wardlaw Thompson and Mr. H. Crossfield have sailed for the South Sea Islands, Madagascar, and New Guinea.

The Manual of Baxter Church, Kidderminster, shows that sixty members have been added during the year, the total standing at 517. The Sunday scholars number 867.

Great George-street Church, Liverpool, has raised during the past year £1950 for all purposes. The membership has grown from 467 to 482. The Pleasant Sunday Afternoon has 1500 names on the roll.

East Parade Church, Leeds (Rev. C. Lemoine), reports that there are now 424 members on the roll, 100 having been added during the present ministry. Mr. Lemoine is completing the third year of his pastorate.

Rev. George Bailey sailed in the Para on Wednesday for Jamaica, having undertaken the pastorate of the churches in Ridgemount district; also Rev. Herbert C. Baker, who becomes minister of the Brixton Hill group of churches.

A step towards the federation of the churches for mission enterprise was taken when workers of various denominations rallied to the aid of Sidney-street Congregational Church, Bethnal Green, by forming a committee to aid the deacons in their difficult enterprise. Pastor Archibald G. Brown was the first to give the helping hand, and he was followed by others representing the Presbyterians, the Wesleyans, and the Congregationalists. A most enthusiastic inaugural meeting was held on Monday, Jan. 25, presided over by Mr. F. Horner.

Calls.—Rev. W. R. Edwards, of Brynmawr, to Granville, New York State (accepted); Rev. R. D. Jones, of Bootle, to Llanhaiadr.

Resignations.—Rev. John Clarke, of Westbury; Rev. W. R. Hough, of Yuysgan, Cardiff; Rev. A. T. Hill, of Melrose.

Baptist.

The Tabernacle, Southport, reports a membership of 308.

Lord-street Early Morning School, Coventry, reports eighty-six members.

Broad-street Church, Nottingham, reports 261 members, besides members at the branch church in Daybrook.

On Thursday, January 21, Rev. F. J. Feltham was welcomed as pastor at Wellington-street, Stockton-on-Tees.

Pastor A. G. Brown, who is staying at Mentone, has preached in the Scotch Church, being heard with much profit.

Baxter-gate Church, Loughborough, reports 481 members. In the Sunday-school are 791 scholars, with seventy-three teachers.

East-hill Church, Wandsworth, reports 563 members. In the Sunday-school there are 460 scholars, with thirty-eight teachers.

A new church has been built in the centre of Malvern, where Rev. William Povey is doing a good work, midst surrounding difficulties.

A memorial-hall and Sunday-school have been erected at Sittingbourne, at a cost of £1500, the gift of an anonymous "Friend of the Children."

Rev. J. Clark, first pastor of Bunyan Tabernacle, Norbiton, Kingston-on-Thames, conducted a farewell service there prior to his departure for a pastorate at Auckland, New Zealand.

The Sunday evening services at Central-hill, Norwood, have been discontinued. Rev. S. A. Tipple, whose ministrations have extended over forty years there, finds himself unequal to the task of a double attendance on Sundays, and the providing of supplies for the evening services has not proved successful.

At the first anniversary of Callow Land Chapel, Watford, Rev. C. Williams preached. At the public meeting, Rev. James Stuart, of Beechen-grove Church, with which the chapel is connected, announced that the debt upon the new building had been entirely cleared. Mr. Horlick, of Bristol College, has undertaken the charge for twelve months.

On Wednesday, Jan. 27, the anniversary of the Bromley-road Chapel was celebrated. A service was conducted in the afternoon by Rev. Thos. Spurgeon, assisted by his brother, Rev. C. Spurgeon. At a public tea, presided over by the pastor (J. W. Davies), addresses were delivered by Revs. G. Critchley, B.A., A. Hancock, and Isaac Levinsohn. In the evening Rev. C. B. Sawday preached.

At a meeting held recently in South Woodford, at which Revs. T. J. Hazzard, G. Cook, and G. T. Bailey, of the East London Baptist Ministers' Fraternal, were present, a Baptist Church was formed. The services are being held, for the time being, in a building in Primrose-road, close to George Lane Station. The new church commences with a membership of forty-five and nine candidates.

The Baptist Missionary Society has issued its programme for the annual meetings. On Sunday, April 25, the annual sermons will be be preached in the various chapels in the metropolis. Mr. John Town, of Leeds, will preside over the members' meeting on Tuesday morning, the 27th; in the evening there will be the missionary soirée in Cannon-street Hotel, with Sir Charles Elliott, K.C.S.I., late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, as chairman, and Revs. James Baillie, J. P. Bruce (China), and J. H. Weeks (Congo) as speakers. Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, Oxford, has consented to preach the annual sermon, in Bloomsbury Chapel, on Wednesday, 28th, at noon. At the annual public meeting in Exeter Hall, on the evening of the 29th, the chairman will be Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.; speches will be given by Revs. W. J. Dawson, R. Wright Hay (Dacca), and A. G. Shorrock (China). On Friday, 30th, the engagements will be the missionary breakfast conference, with Mr. W. R. Rickett in the chair. At the young people's meeting in the evening Judge Bompas is to preside; Revs. R. Glennie (Congo), W. Bowen James (India), and Moir Duncan (China) will speak. Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., will preside at the missionary breakfast of the Ladies' Zenana Association on the 28th, when Rev. A. G. Shorrock (China) and two Indian missionaries on furlough will deliver addresses.

Calls.—Rev. E. G. Gange, of Regent's Park, to St. Andrew's-street, Cambridge; Mr. A. O. Hopkins, of Cardiff, to Caerphilly.

Methodist.

An important conference on foreign missions has been held in Birmingham.

Rev. James Flanagan, of Southwark, has conducted a very successful five days' mission in Birmingham.

A new chapel has been opened in Airton, a small village in Yorkshire, by the kindness of Mr. W. Illingworth, J.P.

The latest statistical reports show that the Primitive Methodist Connexion has 4379 Sunday-schools, with 466,052 scholars.

Rev. Thomas Cook has concluded an eight days' mission at Tewkesbury. The chapel was packed to the doors, and scores turned away.

The Duke-street United Methodist Free Church, Southport, for many years under Rev. Silas K. Hocking, continues to prosper. It has now a membership of 300.

Mr. Weedon, who for many years has laboured with great success as a Connexional evangelist, is now retiring from that position to take charge of the Felling Chapel.

The pulpit at King-street, Derby, from which, during the last fifty years, some of the best preachers of Methodism have preached their finest sermons, was occupied on Sunday week by the President of the Wesleyan Conference.

Large and enthusiastic meetings in aid of the rescue work of the Manchester Mission were held on Wednesday at Mornington-road Chapel, Southport. The speakers were Rev. S. F. Collier, Gipsy Smith, Sister Daisy, and Sister Annie.

The band of Bible Christian missionaries who left England on November 5, 1896, reached Shanghai on December 17. A hearty reception was accorded them at the China Inland Mission Home, where they spent the Christmas. Their inland journey of 2000 miles will probably take about three months.

The Liverpool Wesleyan Mission, under the superintendence of Rev. Charles Garrett, entered last week upon the twenty-second year of its existence. At the annual meeting, held on Tuesday, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, the chief speakers were the Bishop of Liverpool, Rev. Dr. Marshall Randles, the President of the Conference, and the Mayor of Bootle.

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. H. Gavin, late of Stirling, has been ordained to the pastorate at Swindon.

Rev. Johnstone Ross, of Bridge of Allan, has accepted the call to Westbourne-grove, London.

The annual meeting of the Literary Societies' Union, held on Monday night in Regent-square Church, was largely attended.

Miss Mann has had to go abroad for a few months' rest and change. Friends wishing information as to the Women's Missionary Association, of which Miss Mann is the secretary, should write to Miss Matheson, Heathlands, Hampstead, N.W.

The annual meeting of Trinity Church, Notting Hill, was held on 3rd inst., under the presidency of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A., when the various office-bearers submitted encouraging reports of steady progress being made in every department. The membership had seventy-three names added during 1896; total funds raised, £2629, an increase of £288 on 1895.

The prosperity of the work at Regent-square, under the ministry of Rev. A. Connell, is evidenced by the new manual, which shows that the membership stands at 716, a net increase of forty-four, the total income being £3181 against £2871 in 1895. The site adjoining the church secured for new schools and other buildings, together with the building, will entail an outlay of £10,000. Details are given of the mission and other work carried on at the church, also in connection with the missions in Compton-place and Somers Town, mention being made of the Aldenham Institute. The attendance at the services is good and increasing. The monthly At Homes for young men, after the evening service on the first Sunday in each month, continue an interesting feature of the operations.

Fallen Asleep.

At Ipswich, Mr. Josiah Rands, a Presbyterian office-bearer, president of the Y.M.C.A., and an earnest helper in Christian and benevolent efforts.—At Bellevue-terrace, Scarborough, on 26th ult., Mr. Thomas Ward, aged eighty-five, who for sixty-eight years had been an active worker in York, Manchester, and Scarborough.—At Rhos, Ruabon, on 23rd ult., Rev. Josiah Jones, for nineteen years Calvinistic Methodist minister at Flint.— At St. George's, Salop, Rev. John Hopkins, aged seventy-five, who, for forty-four years did good work in the Primitive Methodist ministry.—At Spalding, on 24th ult., Mrs. Sellars, the beloved wife of Rev. S. Sellars. — At Tottenham, on 24th ult., Mr. James Johnston, a useful leader among the Methodists. — At North Elmham, very suddenly, while attending service in the village chapel on Sunday, 24th ult., Mr. B. Sainty, aged sixty-nine, an earnest believer.—At Aberowmboy, Rev. Jonah Davies, a Methodist minister of many years' standing.—At Todmorden, Mr. James Uttley, a Christian worker for over half a century.—At Gunnerthwaite, Lancaster, Mrs. Waterhouse, an aged servant of Christ, one of whose sons is Rev. John Waterhouse, the Wesleyan Superintendent at St. Kerverne. —At Rothwell, Kettering, Rev. Charles Andrew, aged thirty, pastor of Latchford Baptist Chapel.—At Durham, on 23rd ult., Rev. John Hammond, D.D., aged sixty-four, formerly a missionary and later a clergyman in Notts and Midlothian.—At Torquay, on 24th ult., Rev. C. F. Seymour, of Cronood, Ramsbury, aged seventy-nine.—At Pickwell Rectory, Oakham, suddenly, Rev. E. Harman, rector of the parish.—At Newcastle, co. Down, Rev. Robert Montgomery, founder and first minister of Great Victoria-street Presbyterian Congregation, Belfast, in the sixty-sixth year of his age and thirty-seventh of his pastorate.—At Ballyfarnon, co. Roscommon, Mr. James Johnston, an earnest worker in connection with the Methodist Church, aged seventy-four years.

Appeals.

Tower Hamlets Mission.—The last Parliamentary return reported that seventy-one persons died from hunger during last year against thirty-nine in the previous year. This severe weather has again brought to our doors those who are suffering for want of the necessaries of life, and our visitors report cases of sad destitution which have come under their notice. We earnestly appeal for help to enable us to give aid in time.

Frederick N. Charrington.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E.

The Church Army.— Notwithstanding the mildness of the early part of the winter, there has been a large amount of distress in London and the larger provincial towns, and the severe weather of the past fortnight has caused a great increase in the daily number of applicants for help, and for admission into our Homes. Many really helpable persons, most of them starving and in rags, have to be turned away day after day simply for want of space and means. The central committee have made special arrangements for supplying large numbers of selected, deserving persons and families with food, clothes, and coals, but more money and old clothes are sorely needed.

W. Carlile, Hon. Chief Sec.

Japanese Strangers.—To show care for the strangers, especially those of another kindred, is one of the highest Christian virtues. To this good work Miss M. McLean has devoted herself for years past, so far as Japanese sailors and other strangers from the Land of the Rising Sun are concerned. She has lately been chaperoning a company of 200 of these seamen in Scotland; it was a time of seed-sowing in their hearts and of hopeful Gospel testimony. Another band of Japanese are now in London to take back a new vessel for their navy. Miss McLean is earnestly desiring to get a room near the docks, where these men could be received and delivered from the temptations of the drink saloon. Miss McLean's address is 46, Pyrland-road, Canonbury, N.

Fugitive Stundists.—The Odessa correspondent of The Chronicle says:—"Several fugitive Stundists have recently arrived in Roumania from Russia, having suffered great hardships en route, and marvellously escaped recapture. Among the latest arrivals are four preachers, three of whom escaped from Gerusi, their place of banishment, in Transcaucasia, the other being from Central Russia. The latter states that both he and his wife were tortured in their village in a most horrible manner, with the consent of the local authorities and priest, in order to compel them to renounce their Protestantism. His body bore marks of numerous wounds, many caused by burning irons. During the imprisonment which followed, his wife was scandalously treated by the villagers."

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, February 1, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

THE 'LIBERATOR' RELIEF FUND.

Patron—H.R.H. PRINCE CHRISTIAN.

Hundreds of aged people—the thriftiest of our fellow-subjects—face to face with the Workhouse, through no fault of their own.

2,750 CASES ON THE BOOKS OF THE FUND.
1,440 ARE WIDOWS OR LONE WOMEN.
1,355 ARE OVER 60 YEARS OF AGE.

More than 50 of these have died during last year, their end hastened, according to the Medical certificate, by the sorrow and suffering caused by the loss of their life-savings.

Writes ONE WHO KNOWS:—"I have sometimes been fain to think that the poor creatures bludgeoned to death in the streets of Constantinople were treated with more mercy than many of the Victims of the Gigantic Liberator Fraud, doomed as they were to years of torturing anxiety, and a lingering death by slow starvation!"

The editor of "Truth," in his issue of November 12, 1896, writes:—"I need hardly say that I would gladly do anything in my power to increase the flow of Subscriptions to the Fund."

DONATIONS URGENTLY NEEDED,—

that Numerous Aged and Destitute Victims, who are looking to us for the usual half-yearly grant, as a partial substitute for their lost dividend, may not be disappointed.

Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed "The City Bank, Aldgate Branch," to the account of "The 'Liberator' Relief Fund," and sent to the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, office, 16, Farringdon-street, E.C., who will promptly acknowledge the same with an official receipt.

ROYAL NAVAL SCRIPTURE-READERS SOCIETY.

(Entirely Devoted to the Spiritual Welfare of the Navy.)

OUR 90,000 SEAMEN and MARINES are serving all over the Globe. All friends of those "that go down to the sea in ships," as defenders of their Queen and country, are earnestly asked to enable the Society to double the present totally inadequate number of twelve Readers.

Contributions, offertories, and drawing-room meetings solicited. Address, Rear-Admiral H. Campion, C.B., 112, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

INSTITUTED 1807.

Treasurers: Frank A. Bevan, Esq.; W. J. Parks, Esq.

When was it instituted? 89 years ago.

Whom does it assist? The Lord's aged poor of both sexes, and of various denominations, who are 60 years of age and upwards. The pensioners dwell in all parts of the United Kingdom. Many are widows, some are blind, others have been long afflicted, and one has been bedridden upwards of 30 years; 917 are over 70 years of age, and of this number 239 are upwards of 80, and 16 more than 90. 1370 pensioners are now upon the books.

How does it assist? By pensions of Five, Seven, and Ten Guineas per annum, and by Homes at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Stamford Hill, and Brighton for 180 of the pensioners. £9500 per annum are expended in pensions alone, and £2000 in maintaining the Homes and the various funds connected with them. The pensions are distributed to the recipients at their own abodes. The Homes are open for the inspection of visitors daily (Sundays excepted).

What Help is required? The Annual Subscription List needs doubling. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

John E. Hazelton, Sec.
Office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland

Training Homes for Lady Missionaries.

THE LADY MISSIONARIES' TRAINING HOME, 15, Burnbank Gardens, Glasgow, is intended for Christian Ladies of any Evangelical denomination, desirous of becoming Missionaries at home or abroad (preferentially the latter), and who, in view of this, wish one or two years' Biblical instruction, with some experience in evangelistic work, &c.

Practical Christian Work is carried on in connection with Grove Street Institute, and embraces Visiting the Sick, District Visiting, Teaching the Young, Domestic Classes, Dispensary Work, &c.

Fees for Board and Instruction, £30 per annum, payable £10 per term in advance.

THE MEDICAL TRAINING HOME FOR LADY MISSIONARIES, in co-operation with Grove-street Institute, is open to applicants from Mission Boards, and to those whose purpose it is to work in the foreign field, who are members of recognised Evangelical churches.

Here there is given a sound theoretical and practical training (of 2½ years' duration) in the chief branches of Medical Science, viz.: Practice of Medicine, Surgery, and Midwifery. The Visitation of the Sick, etc., in connection with the Medical Mission, affords opportunities for gaining experience in Practical Christian Work.

Fees for Board and Instruction £42 per annum, payable in April and September.

As the next Session begins in April, it is requested that all who desire admission make formal application at earliest convenience.

For full particulars of both Homes, applicants are desired to communicate with the Hon. Sec.,

Miss FORRESTER-PATON, Mar's Hill House, Alloa.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

OLDEST TO HEATHEN. FIRST TO LEPERS.

THE LONDON ASSOCIATION

Earnestly Appeals for Increased Funds to meet Increasing Needs.

In addition to the increase in General Fund of £8000, the following are among specially pressing requirements:—

The Labrador Emergency Fund, to provide for the two new Stations and imperative Increased Ship Accommodation.

The Two New Missions in East Central Africa and North Queensland.

The fresh openings in Central America, Surinam, with its New Leper Asylum—Alaska and South Africa; and last, but not least—

The all-important Medical Missionary Training Fund; all of which needs prompt, constant, and generous help.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Rev. W. Wetton Cox, Clerical Secretary, Office—2, Furnival's Inn, London, E.C.

N.B.—One in sixty members of this devoted little Church is a Missionary; and so richly is their work blessed, that the converts number over 93,000, or more than Three Times as many as the Parent Church. There are no fewer than 400 Missionaries in the field, and the whole expenditure, of which more than half is contributed by the Native Churches, is only £80,000.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE commend to the attention of our readers the letter on p. 25, in which a thoroughly trustworthy correspondent shows that the C.D. Acts have completely failed in the purpose for which they were passed.

The arrangements for the "Keswick" Conference in St. James's Hall, London, from April 6—10, are now being completed. An earnest letter of invitation has been issued by Mr. Robert Wilson, of Broughton Grange, who will preside at the Conference. Meetings for special prayer to entreat God's blessing on the gatherings, are being held in many London churches. The honorary secretary (4, Haymarket, S.W.), will be pleased to forward, if desired, copies of circulars, etc., to any of the clergy or ministers in London who may not already have received them. United prayer is earnestly desired for blessing upon the Convention, especially that the hearts of Christians may be drawn out in stronger desire for the manifested unity of the Lord's people, for a fuller consecration, and for greater power in seeking the conversion of the unsaved.

The Prince of Wales has made an interesting proposal, by permission of the Queen, in connection with the celebration of the sixtieth year of her reign. The scheme is as bold as it is well conceived. It applies to London only, but it is an object-lesson of what may become a local effort in all our large towns. The present reign has seen a remarkable awakening of philanthropy and kindly feeling for the unfortunate and suffering, and the Prince's suggestion is to inaugurate a "Prince of Wales Hospital Fund for London," which is to take the form of a subscription-list to be continued from year to year. At present the funds of our metropolitan hospitals are in such a condition that the authorities can only continue their work by availing themselves of State and parochial aid, unless the voluntary sources of income are greatly increased. Ten shillings a year, says the Prince, from 225,000 households, would make up the sum needed, and make the required increase an assured certainty. The proposal will command attention and ensure success. It has the merit of being so moderate in its demands that it leaves abundant scope for continuing the commemoration in other forms.

The Child's Guardian calls attention to the fact that "every statute upon the Statute-book for the protection of the helpless subjects of the Crown has been passed during the reign of Queen Victoria." In 1837, when the Queen began her reign, children were bought and sold for business purposes.

The mad demand of their factories for children divested some owners and some foremen of almost every trace of humanity.

The whole story of the treatment of children is a very sad one, and despite all that is done there remains much to be done. Some day, perhaps, the pay and the treatment of our thousands of boys in offices, warehouses, and other places of business will receive consideration. A Mothers' League for the Protection of Boys should be formed. It would be an appropriate event in this memorable year.

The East End publican who has in the High Court twice sued Rev. Peter Thompson, of the East End Forward Mission, for libel, with no definite result—the jury having disagreed on both occasions—has now dropped the action on the understanding that both parties should pay their own costs. We rejoice that Mr. Thompson is now freed from further litigation in connection with this matter; and we trust that many of our readers will help him in defraying his heavy bill of costs. It is not right that he should personally suffer for the efforts he has made to purify the neighbourhood.

It is claimed by the Secretary for the Colonies that

We are the great governing race predestined by our defects as well as by our virtues to spread over the habitable globe, to enter into relations with all the countries of the earth.

This view is largely shared by Englishmen. If true, the more virtues we carry abroad, and the fewer defects, or vices, the better. The improvement of the race at home is plainly one of the principal means by which it may become a missionary nation to all the earth.

In a letter to "the Assembly of those who help Nations of Strangers in Resisting Liquors," King Khama expresses himself with the picturesqueness and force with which we became so familiar during his visit to England. He is thankful because they "stand true in the word they spoke to him in England." He is still struggling against the drink, but fears he will not succeed. He has "Europeans who like liquor exceedingly, and they are not the people who like to save a nation." He has rejoiced exceedingly to see "the path of the train" in his country, but there is something in it which he does not like, viz., "the little houses to sell liquor in them." He begs help in this matter, or it will kill his nation. The request of this noble-hearted king contains an "interest" quite as important as some that are called imperial. This ought to be imperious.

The tongues and pens of men who believe that India might be saved from a recurrence of famines are beginning to move. Archdeacon Colley, speaking from personal observation in the East, says that the famines in India are "in no small degree attributable to the insane disforesting of the country"—a statement which staggers us when we remember that there is a Woods and Forests Department of the Indian Civil Service, which we always thought existed to guard the forests. That veteran Sir Arthur Cotton, writing in The Friend of China, expresses his amazement at the strange opposition of the Government to irrigation and internal navigation, and affirms that the Godavery river might at this moment be pouring rice into the famine districts of the north in immense quantities at a nominal cost of carriage of one penny a bushel, if only the several pieces of canal in the 1000 miles between were united, which they might be for the cost of twenty miles of railway.

A question ought to be asked in the House of Commons whether such a desirable scheme of public works could not be carried out.

When President Cleveland's fiery message at the end of 1895 set the world in commotion, the warlike feeling of the United States was largely subdued by the energetic action of the Christian public, especially by the preaching of Christian ministers. Cannot that public, led once more by ministers, succeed in bringing the Arbitration Treaty safely through? If that treaty fails to obtain ratification as an honest effective instrument, Americans will miss one of the most glorious opportunities ever nation had of aiding the world to enter on a higher plane of international conduct. We are far more concerned for the credit and dominance of reason and righteousness than for any good it may be to our country. The resources of Christianity ought to be equal to the present grave emergency.

The letter of an American lady journalist to the Daily News reveals a sad state of degradation among ladies who are bent on meeting the demand of editors and the public by serving up what is called "hot stuff." They get into all manner of doubtful places, and employ all manner of doubtful or positively wicked means to provide the greatest sensation. It is not literary skill that is required—some of the most successful cannot construct a sentence grammatically—but nerve to dare danger, and, we may add, shamelessness to defy decency. One is horrified at a woman wrestling with a trainer of professional prize-fighters, acting with the police in New York harbour, riding one among seven men on an eight-manned wheel, feigning drunkenness in the streets "in order to get committed to gaol to expose the experience of a woman behind the bar," and worse. It is some comfort to know that the writer of this letter, having failed in this sort of newspaper work, lives humbly by her pen; let us hope that many more of her sex and profession do the same thing, and that modesty is not defunct among lady journalists.

A mournful echo of the old cry, "Vanity of vanities; all is vanity," comes from Prince Bismarck, who says, "My illness is want of the joy of life." He feels lonely, useless, and cut off from the pleasures of open-air life and the struggles of politics. To say that he should, in the day of health, have had some interests outside politics, art, or music, or literature, is to say only part of the truth. Something above and beyond the routine of life is well enough for relaxation, but the soul requires something eternal, requires God. "I will go unto God, unto God my exceeding joy."

Seldom has the precept "Be ye wise as serpents" been more happily carried out than it was by a London city missionary who was co-operating with a husband to save his drunken wife. Having obtained a book which he wished them to read, "Homes Made and Marred," he advised the husband not to ask his wife to read it, but to hide it away while she was looking at him. Curiosity did its part. She read the book while her husband was at work, and a change began to appear in her life. Then they both began to act upon its advice, and peace was restored. The method of working is as important as the work; the manner of saying a thing as the thing said. The indirect way to the heart is not seldom the shortest and easiest.

Mr. Howard Evans, in the February Contemporary Review, gives some suggestive figures as to the comparative statistics of the religious bodies in England and Wales. Comparisons are given between the Church of England and other churches, and between present religious accommodation and the state of things in 1851 and in 1801. If these are approximately correct, the Free Churches have been specially active in providing for the growth of population. The problem, however, is not so much how we may provide sitting accommodation for worshippers as how we may fill the churches and chapels with men and women earnestly desiring to hear the Word of God. While there is so much preaching to empty pews, it is obvious that the time has not arrived to indulge in self-gratulation regarding measures adopted for the evangelisation of the people.

According to Mr. Bryce, the absorption of the thoughts of English men and boys so exclusively in athletic sports is having a distinctly prejudicial effect on the national industry. Most youths are so engrossed in their favourite recreations during their hours of leisure that they have ceased to cultivate their minds, or to prepare themselves for taking higher positions in the world. If this is true of the affairs of the life that now is, we may be sure it applies still more to the culture of the higher life. When recreation makes so great a tax on the nature, there is small room for the soul to have its right place in the time and affections of the rising generation. It would be well if this danger were more earnestly brought home to the young people in our Sunday-schools and congregations.

"Thy word is a light unto my feet, and a lamp unto my path." Those familiar words imply that the writer let the light fall upon his path, and that he walked in it. It is of no use to those who turn away from it, or neglect it, or are not true to it. How differently some steps would be led, if they were guided in everything by the Word of God! A general acquiescence is given to the proposition that we ought to live according to it, but practical obedience to it at every step and in every particular is not so common. Now and again, when searching its pages, the faithful reader, who wishes to know his Lord's will and to do it, is startled to find that in something he has unconsciously offended; and then, as he obediently walks in the light, he finds that it is growing brighter and brighter.

"As I have loved you." There is something profoundly affecting in the way in which our Lord Jesus Christ returns again and again in his last words to "the new commandment" He gave to his apostles. He speaks it formally, gravely, impressively, as a command should be given. Then He lets it drop as if accidentally from his lips. It steals into his speech as the deepest convictions and most cherished thoughts of a man will colour all he says. He declares that obedience to it is the secret of a close and tender fellowship between the loving soul and the Father and the Son. He says that our love one to another is inseparably intertwined with the love of God to us. What a spiritual marvel any church would be in which all the members loved one another as Jesus has loved them! What warmth of feeling, what gentleness of manner, what generosity of action, what nobleness of life there would be! This would be the conclusive argument for the heavenly origin of Christianity.

When preachers are charged with being too "personal" they might inquire in the words of Latimer: "Sir, what form of preaching would you appoint me to preach before a king? Would you have me to preach nothing as concerning a king in the king's sermon?" Like the famous martyr, every preacher should discharge his conscience and "frame his doctrine according to his audience." It is curious to notice how the pulpit is blamed for not being practical enough, not adapted to life as it is, but as soon as it does touch things as they are, there is an outcry raised against its "personalities."

Memory: Its Pains and Gains.

WHILE, under the instruction of Mr. Kilburn, we are seeking to improve our memory, are not many of us crying out in bitterness of spirit, "Oh that I could forget!" Memory makes us to possess the sins of our youth. By the law of association the name of a person or a place, the recollection of an incident or a song, or a story, a word or a sound, a touch or an odour, may bring back a chain of painful remembrances—

> Regrets that glide through the spirit's gloom,
> Memories that make the heart a tomb, voices crying through the corridors of the soul, "Oh that I never had! Oh that I never had!" We would beseech those who are young, in the words of Paul the aged to his son in the Gospel, "Keep thyself pure."

Mental associations are continually being formed without effort on our part, and when we would avoid it most, one harmful or even harmless thought will recall another and another, until we almost ask that we may die that we may forget. "The child is father of the man, and I should wish your days to be bound each to each," by obedient faith in God and loving seeds to men.

But memory has its pleasures as surely as its pains. Let us, therefore, earnestly endeavour to multiply holy and wholesome associations, to link wise thoughts with loving acts, and right words with righteous deeds. For in mentally uniting one good thing with another we are not only increasing our wealth in the true riches, we are also forming, strengthening, and maturing character. Instead of accreting and accumulating useless and deleterious matter, we are concentrating and concreting grace upon grace, that we may show forth the virtues of Him who called us out of darkness into his marvellous light.

The greatest catastrophe since the flood was the confusion of tongues. Even Christian historians and philosophers seemed not to have adequately estimated the far-reaching effects of this influential cause, or traced its multifarious results in the history of man. Disobedience and defiance of God were met by the confounding of human language; the gift of tongues at Pentecost, as the Spirit gave them utterance, was in order that they might speak the wonderful works of God.

The cultivation of the memory is as much to be desired for the acquisition of languages as for any other purpose. The gates of all nations have been unbarred, and their doors thrown wide open to the Gospel; but of what avail is this so long as the messengers of Christ are debarred from communication with the peoples by inability to understand one another's speech?

Second to communion with God there is no higher human joy than communion with our fellowmen. And the crest of the wave of that communion is the impartation of the Divine nature to another soul, when utterance is given unto us to open our mouth with great plainness of speech (compare Eph. vi. 19 with 2 Cor. iii. 12) to make known the mystery of the Gospel.

We hope therefore that a multitude of readers, old and new, may derive all the help that is possible to them from Mr. Kilburn's Lessons on Memory, in our own columns and in those simultaneously appearing in our contemporary, The Life of Faith.

We cull the following from the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. Bulletin, and would suggest that the same plan might be largely adopted with advantage in Bible classes for young men and young women, as well as in the numerous Associations in the kingdom. The numbers of The Christian and also of The Life of Faith, containing the lessons which have already appeared, may still be had:—

"MEMORY TRAINING CLASS.

"A class for the study of Mnemonics has recently been formed in the Y.M.C.A. The basis of study will be found in the lessons which appear fortnightly in The Christian and The Life of Faith. The class meets each Wednesday, at 7.30 p.m., and is open to all who care to come. The system has received the greatest praise from competent judges in such matters. Rev. J. D. Kilburn, the author of the system, has sent us the following reply to the query as to the best mode of conducting such a class:—

"Lou Pescaire, Eza, Alpes Maritimes,
"France, Jan. 1897.

"1.—Don't attempt to take up two lessons, the one from The Christian and the other from The Life of Faith, on one evening. The lessons are on different subjects, and will help best if the one is taken one week, and the other the next. Taken thus they will cast light on each other.

"2.—Go carefully over a few of the Facts and Principles from time to time, till you have gone through the whole. Consider how far you agree with these, and let any who can, quote either confirmatory or contradictory opinions from well-known writers.

"3.—Let each give his experience as to the way he himself has learnt different things. You will probably find that each can give something that will be likely to help others. Many who have not studied Mnemonics work, in some things, according to the highest principles of Mnemonics, even without knowing it.

"4.—Master the exercises given in each lesson before beginning the next one. The exercises are so arranged as to bring into use the principles on which the system is founded. The full benefit of the system will hardly be gained if the exercises are not mastered in the order given and in the way indicated.

"5.—Before beginning a new lesson, go over briefly anything important in the former lesson of the same course—i.e., the one studied a fortnight previously. Where the lesson contained exercises these ought always to be recapitulated."

The Royal Commission appointed to consider the question of the licensing laws met again last week. The chief constables of Leeds and Wolverhampton were examined with respect to clubs. Both suggested registration and right of free entry by the police as remedies for the evils of which clubs are the cause.

Revivals—Helped or Hindered.

By THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

EVERY genuine revival has a Divine side and a human side. The Holy Spirit works, and Christians work; and the results are the most deep, widespread and enduring when Christians co-operate with the Holy Spirit. The power that produces a true revival comes from heaven; it is not manufactured down here by any method or machinery. The Spirit of God is indispensable. How shall the presence of the awakening, converting, purifying and life-giving Spirit be obtained?

There must be, in the first place, a felt need of a new and better condition of things; there must be a hunger for such blessings as the Holy Spirit can bestow. When the famine pinched them sorely in Canaan, Jacob sent his sons over to Egypt to buy corn. Deep desire breeds prayer, and it ought to be penitential prayer. Penitence is not a thing to be done by wholesale; it is an individual act, and no confession of sin is of much avail unless sin be abandoned. When a certain church in the olden times had abandoned its first love and become cold and barren, the Divine command was to "remember whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works." That counsel is just as applicable to-day as it was in Ephesus hundreds of years ago. The pastor of a certain frigid church in one of our cities, called his officers together night after night into his study; they confessed their sins together, and warmed up their own hearts by fervent, honest prayer. The baptism of fire came down; the flame, kindled in that group of wrestling souls, spread through the whole congregation, and a large number of solid conversions followed. Nearly all revivals have a small beginning. The Pentecostal work began in a prayer-meeting in that "upper room" in Jerusalem. The pastors and church officers that I am speaking of intensely desired and hungered for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. They did not send off for any man to come and impart a blessing; they went straight to God. After the revival began, they co-operated with the Holy Spirit by zealous personal effort; the Divine and the human worked together.

There is often a strong temptation to pastors and churches to shirk their own responsibility, neglect their own duty, and to send off after somebody to come and do their work for them. The pastor thinks that perhaps a new voice may wake up the sleeping souls in his parish, and his officers suggest that some novelty may draw the people out, and, accordingly, some evangelist is sent for. I am the very last man to speak disparagingly of any earnest, faithful soul-winning evangelist on whose labours the Almighty has already set the seal of his approval by blessing his labours. But there are not Moodys and Sankeys, and Chapmans and Whittles enough to supply a whole nation. And if there were, has not every pastor the responsibility laid on him to preach, pray and toil for the salvation of souls; and shall he not have the joy and delight of doing it? The idea has become quite too current that the business of a pastor is to prepare sermons, visit his flock, console the sorrowing, comfort the sick, and bury the dead; but if souls are to be converted then somebody must be sent for whose profession it is to convert people! If this wretched notion were to prevail generally, no young man of brains and godly heart would ever enter the ministry. Surely if no itinerant preacher can import a new Gospel or a new Saviour, or another Holy Spirit than the one that is promised to the prayer of faith, why should a zealous pastor and his church officers look anywhere else than heavenward? Sometimes it may be wise to invite a brother minister or a discreet evangelist to aid in revival work; but commonly a minister had better sow his own seed, and reap his own harvest. Everything that tends to diminish our sense of personal responsibility and our dependence upon God is an effectual hindrance to a revival.

Another serious hindrance is what may be called

ALMANAC PIETY.

A "Week of Prayer" is appointed for the early part of the year; and when that week is made a season for earnest praying, and is followed up with earnest working, it has often produced glorious results. But in too many churches the praying which begins in that week ends with that week. Then it becomes a solemn farce. If the services of that week are as sincere and fervent as they ought to be, why should they not be followed up by special services and personal effort during the next week, and as long as the Divine blessing attends them? The long evenings and the comparative suspension of many kinds of business make the midwinter the best time of the year for evangelizing efforts. It is a lamentable fact that too many church members become so absorbed in social festivities, parties, and divers amusements, that they are not willing to devote their evenings to the service of their Saviour. They hope to be saved themselves, but they are quite too busy in self-indulgence to give much time or thought to perishing souls around them. To put the plain truth in a word—it is the intense and pitiable wordly-mindedness of a vast portion of Christ's professed followers which obstructs a widespread work of grace in any community.

In spite of this obstruction, the truly earnest and Christ-loving members of his church should follow up the "Week of Prayer," not only by more fervent appeals to God for an outpouring of his Spirit, but by PERSONAL EFFORTS AMONG THE UNSAVED.

Politicians were shrewd enough not to rely on mass meetings during the late Presidential campaign; they plied their neighbours with documents and personal arguments and appeals in order to win votes. And the winning of souls to Jesus Christ must mainly be accomplished by personal effort. Everyone familiar with the New Testament knows how much Christ and his apostles relied upon individual effort—as in the cases of the Samaritan woman, the Ethiopian treasurer, the Philippian gaoler, and many others. Hand-picked apples keep the longest. Souls are not converted by regiments; they are brought in one by one. Each church member that is quickened by the Holy Spirit should strive to become a soul-winner; and that sort of love work is the best way to start a revival, and to keep it under way when it has begun.

I shall waste no time or ink in defending revivals—and the kind of revivals which produce godly conduct and character, which sweeten homes, and purify trade and politics, and reform drunkards and outcasts, and put a Bible-conscience into men's daily lives. Such revivals are a vital necessity. Some churches must have them, or else they may well "pull their feet up into their bed" and die. We need a new baptism of the Holy Spirit—a downpouring of the power from on high. Whoever is working with Christ faithfully is working for this glorious blessing—the most gladdening that any church can know. Whoever is praying with Elijah's persevering faith is hastening its coming.

But the minister who blunts the "sword of the Spirit," and fails to preach a blood-heat Gospel every Sunday, is hindering a revival. The church member who cares more to make money, or to enjoy worldly pleasures than to do good, is hindering the advent of the Holy Spirit. When I see certain vacant seats in a prayer-meeting, or in God's house on an unpleasant Sabbath, I say to myself, Here are

VOTES AGAINST A REVIVAL.

When I hear of church members quitting their religious duties for haunts of gaiety—unwilling to put Christ above sinful self—I say again, Here are votes against a revival! Christ "did not many mighty works in Nazareth because of their unbelief." They blocked his purposes of love! They repelled his offered blessings! And it is a fearfully solemn fact that in these days also it is in the power of human folly and indolence and selfishness and unbelief to resist the Holy Spirit, and to block the blessings of heaven. Whoever does not actually help our Master's cause, actually hinders it.

The Need of To-day.

NOT HOLIDAYS BUT HOLY DAYS.

'Tis not more holidays we want,
'Tis holy days we need—
Days of deep thought, and days of prayer,
And not alone from toil and care,
And labour, to be freed.

We need more holy days to mark
Time's onward speedy flight;
To pause, and take a calm survey
Of where I am, and what, to-day,
How standing in the fight.

Is progress made—more earnest now
Than ever heretofore—
More consecrated to the Lord,
More interested in the Word,
Delighting in it more.

Is progress made?—earth less esteemed,
Self-abnegation known?
Is secret prayer as often sought,
And is the soul as often brought
In spirit near the throne?

Is progress made? doth heart expand
To love more real and true—
Love for the Christ of God, who died,
Love for the saints to Him allied,
And love for sinners, too?

Ah, no! 'Tis not more holidays,
'Tis holy days we need;
To be alone—alone with God—
While onward sways the raging flood,
For holy days we plead.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Jubilee.

DEAR SIR,—At a special meeting of trustees and elders, convened to consider the best manner whereby the church and congregation should commemorate the fiftieth birthday of our pastor, Rev. F. B. Meyer (which he will attain on April 8), it was unanimously resolved that a testimonial be presented to him, and that it should take the form of a sum of money.

Feeling it to be an opportunity that all connected with our church would like to avail themselves of, to thus express their appreciation of a life so self-denyingly spent in the cause of our Saviour, it was further decided to open a Jubilee Fund to which all friends should be invited to subscribe. We trust that his wider congregation will kindly co-operate with us to ensure the success of this effort. Contributions should be sent to Mr. W. Looker, at Christ Church, on or before March 31 next.

THE MAINTENANCE OF MISSIONARIES.

IF Christian travellers had an idea how much profit and pleasure they would themselves derive, and how much encouragement they would impart, by looking in upon missionaries on their route, they would surely do so. A tour for this special purpose would possibly prove the most enjoyable travelling experience of their lives. It would, perhaps, lead to their interesting their church, or association, or circle of friends, to the extent of providing for the maintenance of a missionary, one or more. Wealthy worldlings afford themselves the luxury of horses and carriages, a box at the theatre, etc., etc.; why should "new creatures in Christ Jesus" debar themselves and Him the modest luxury of a few missionaries of their own, as many as they can afford? Does it not seem a gratification of which they are not only entitled, but commanded to avail themselves, if uncalled personally to the high places of the field? It would be an exceeding joy to me if some of my readers should feel called upon to confer this happiness upon themselves and their families, their church or Sunday-school, their Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., Y.P.S.C.E., or any other circle to which they are attached.

ATTITUDE TOWARD THE FRENCH.

During the days we have spent at Djemaa Sahridj and other stations in North Africa, we have heard no word spoken by our English missionaries wanting in respect to the French authorities. On the contrary, they point out to the native people, whether Kabyle or Arab, that the law and order established by the French have saved, and continue to save, them from destructive tribal wars (which would still decimate them but for the French occupation), and they prevent innumerable murders from private revenge; they have made splendid roads, and conferred other advantages of civilisation upon hem.

Under French law marriage is permanent. It will be an unspeakable blessing when the union of one man to one woman for life is substituted for the loose contract which constitutes the woman a chattel or a toy, makes a baby girl a disappointment to the mother, and renders orderly and affectionate family life impossible.

If the French could banish the missionaries from their possessions in Africa they would find that they had followed the bad example of the Gergesenes, who, when Jesus had cast demons out of the men among the tombs, besought Him to depart out of their coasts.

My journeyings here so far have afforded me much satisfaction. The difficulties are doubtless great, but I have an increased conviction that God has sent our missionaries here, and that they are sowing living seed which must in due time bring forth good and abundant fruit. It has to penetrate the crust of ages, and the progress must be slow, but already there are signs of spiritual life; even now the green is seen above the mould, and by and by a harvest of saved souls will wave upon these now apparently barren hills.

FRENCH PROTESTANT CHRISTIANS, who are earnest and devoted, are suffering equally with ourselves. A symposium has recently appeared in L'Eclaireur, an evangelical paper, in response to the threefold question, "Is it true that Protestantism has become in recent years more unpopular in France? What are the causes of this recrudescence of unpopularity? What means should be taken to overthrow this obstacle and to ward off this danger?" A number of experienced and representative pasteurs have replied.

Pasteur R. Hollard says, in answer to the first question: "Yes and No. It depends upon what France you speak of. If it be France taken in its mass, of that which none have succeeded to fanaticise or to frighten; of that which our evangelists meet in this and that department of the Centre and the West; of that which in our great towns assembles in the salles of the McAll Mission; of that which, on the 'day of the dead,' presses into our cemeteries, and which discerns the difference between the Latin rites celebrated by the Catholic priest, and the words of Christ spoken in French by the Protestant pasteur, at the side of the grave; of that which, under all degrees of culture, judges Protestantism when it knows it in the independence of the instincts and experiences which are peculiar to itself—if the question applies to this France, No, Protestantism has not become of late years more unpopular in France: rather it is the contrary that must be said.

"But if the question is asked concerning another France—that which makes the most noise, and certes also does the least good; that which gravitates round that section of the Press to which truth and the welfare of the mother-country are the least concern, and the great business of which is to flatter and excite the passions of the most sectarian, the most envious, the most stupid, and the most immoral—if this France is meant, then it is Yes that must be answered to the question proposed. And it is again Yes that must be replied, if it is the fearful and faltering of all classes, of those to whom the best policy will always be that which seems to them the best adapted to guarantee security at whatever cost; and the best religion that which shall have in the highest degree the character of being, as it is termed, 'a government.'

"For there are always some of the fearful and faltering in every country; but the number has increased with us these last few years, because of the hopes that had been formed of establishing a moral union and security in the country by means of an intellectual and political character, and of the disappointment in which these hopes appear to have ended.

"Thence comes, to those more anxious for security than truth, and more in love with uniformity than with true union, an attraction to the shelter which secular Catholicism offers them at little cost. Thence comes, too, a dislike more and more marked for that Christianity which puts above a chimerical uniformity the living union which can only be formed by men who know how to believe and think and will for themselves."

It has been said that some of my letters consist too much of extracts from other writers. But my business is to convey information, and it is better for one who has just entered a country to record what thoughtful men of God are thinking and saying, than to utter undigested opinions of his own.

One obvious reflection appears to be that Christians in France and Christians in England should cultivate closer relations with each other. They are both equally opposed by the same enemy of God and man—the Jesuit; and the closer Protestants of all nationalities unite together, the better they will be able to resist him.

M. Hanotaux requested that out of courteous consideration of their difficulties, the North Africa Mission should withdraw from Tlemcen, and this was acceded to. Now it is said that M. Hanotaux is not satisfied, but desires a further concession. A well-informed Christian Frenchman thinks it will be wiser to maintain our ground. 'It will then become a question between the two Governments. A lady missionary quotes Isaac, who, when his servants had digged Esek and Sitnah, digged another well, for which the Philistines strove not, and he called the name of it Rehoboth, "For now the Lord hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land" (Gen. xxvi. 17-23). "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Pasteur Horrors in Paris.

IN an article with this title in the February Animals' Friend, Dr. Edward Berdoe gives a terribly realistic account of a visit paid to the Pasteur Institute. He says: "The process of inoculation was demonstrated to me by one of the medical staff, and I was allowed to stand by the side of the operator of the day while he inoculated some sixty patients with the dirty-looking fluid of various degrees of potency which stood in bottles before him.

"After the patients had all been attended to, I was conducted over the great laboratories and the menagerie. My concern was chiefly with the hundreds of poor animals of many species crowded in baskets, cages, and hutches, and afflicted in various ways by the hands of their cruel tormentors.

"Next I saw the rabbit room. In this great dark gloomy chamber were scores of large baskets and cages full of rabbits of all colours and sizes. Most of them were lying on their sides, evidently suffering in one way or another, paralysed in their hind legs, sloughing at the eyes, hideous and distressing degradations of the dear bunnies of my schoolboy days. In odd corners here and there were horses, donkeys, goats, and other animals, two or three of each, and all for one or other sort of cruel experiment. Be sure that none was spared the last extremity of pain or wasting misery of poisoned blood and weakened frame.

"They kept the worst sight till last, and here I had to exercise great restraint to keep myself from unprofessional, unparliamentary, and imprecatory language. The rats and mice I mildly pitied, the rabbits I inwardly grieved for, but the dogs—oh! that awful cage, like the wolves' den at the Zoo, or a great car in Wombwell's show, with a dozen mad dogs all raging, barking wildly, tearing at the iron bars, frantic to be free, furious to escape and bite and tear even me, whose heart bled for them—all made mad experimentally, for mad dogs are not sold in the markets, nor are they carried about the streets. Beautiful, high-bred creatures, whose mouths foamed with bloody matter as they flung themselves at the strong iron bars and appealed to each new-comer to set them at liberty. One's first impulse is to shrink back from the dangerous proximity of such wholesale rabies. Next one looks at the bars and mentally gauges their strength, then pity comes, then one's heart burns with indignation against a system which demands and must secure a continual succession of such tortures to keep going the vast machinery of a great Pasteur Institute.

"Over and over again I have seen it stated that Pasteur did not use dogs for inoculation, but there they were before me; stolen, no doubt, by men employed for the purpose, as the Chelsea dogs will be captured for the new London Institute when it is licensed, which may God avert! Who that is sufficiently a human being to know dog nature and love it, could unmoved see such a sight as the Dog Hell of Paris, or keep his curses in due bounds as he turned to leave the place? The attendant thrusts an iron rod through the bars and drives the creatures back; we leave them hopeless, as wrecked sailors who see the treacherous sail fade on the horizon, the sail they fondly hoped was the sign of help."

The Bible in Brittany.—The rooted antipathy of the Romish Church to the circulation of the Christian Scriptures was illustrated in a marked manner lately in Brittany. The island of Molène, near which the Drummond Castle recently went down, is inhabited only by Roman Catholics. In view of the recent disaster the committee of the Trinitarian Bible Society sent some colporteurs to the island for the purpose of presenting a copy of the Bible to every inhabitant. They were heartily welcomed by all except the parish priest, who was furious at this interference with his special domain, and spoke against it from the pulpit. Next day the priest went to pay a visit to the Mayor, and saw a copy of the Bible. He said: "Mons. le Maire, you have one of those Protestant books." "Yes, Mons. le Curé," replied the Mayor, "and yesterday you surprised us all very much by saying that the book was a good one, and yet you asked us to destroy it. Please explain this." The priest invented an excuse, and went back to his presbytery. The true policy of the Church of Rome is to be seen in such incidents as these, and not by her attitude in a country like England, where she is in the minority and face to face with deep-rooted liberties.

A Neglected Bible—Revived Popery.

THAT the Church of Rome is fully alive, in the political and religious spheres, is a fact to which many Protestants have long opened their eyes, although many of their fellows seem to be asleep as to the dangers and evils that are sure to arise from Papal intrigue and tyranny. We are continually receiving letters on the subject, but many of them cover ground that is generally familiar, instead of pointing the moral of present-day developments. Among recent communications is one from Rev. Thomas Evans, the veteran Indian missionary, who says:—

"One strange and deplorable aspect of the question is the utter indifference with which the progress of Papal power is regarded by the great majority of Protestant people. It strikes me that one of the chief causes of this apathy is to be found in the fact that we have fallen upon sad times, when the great mass of our people are too fully engrossed either with money-making or with frivolous pleasure-seeking to pay any serious attention to higher and nobler concerns. This may not be as apparent to regular residents as it is to those who, like myself, visit the homeland after an absence of a number of years.

"My own country, Wales, I used to regard, years ago, as a model for Scripture knowledge and religious devotion. I am sorry to have to say that even here a sad declension has taken place, at least so it appears to me in my travels through the hills and dales of the land of my fathers. The Word of God is sadly neglected, and the houses of professed Christians often crowded with trashy 'light reading.' With few exceptions, the fire of family devotion, which in days of yore shone brightly and continuously, has been allowed to die out. Complaints are made by the servants of God that the mass of our young people, and many of them nominal church-members, are so fully absorbed with the excitement of football matches, or so engrossed with preparations for musical and other competitions for praise and profit, that even portions of the Lord's Day are set apart for rehearsals and practices.

"Does not all this folly and worldliness afford the emissaries of the evil one a favourable opportunity to sow broadcast the tares of Romish error, while men sleep? Why is it that Romanism and even rank Ritualism have failed to win over the people of Wales, so that we have not a single Welsh Romish church in the land? This is doubtless due to the fact that the people of Wales have been so deeply versed in the Word of God. The Bible is the only real Rock to resist the dashing waves of Popery. Therefore, let us fill the minds of the rising generation with rich stores of Divine truth from the oracles of God, and spread abroad stirring facts illustrative of the abominations of Popish error and iniquity."

Revival in Chicago.

THE work of the Chicago Avenue Church through the entire year has been greatly blessed. Two hundred and eighty have joined the fellowship during the year, making a total of nearly nine hundred in the last three years.

On Monday, Jan. 11, there was a union meeting of all the ministers of Chicago. A great many laymen also attended. There were over eleven hundred present in all. There are evident indications of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the city, a unanimous feeling that some special work ought to be done.

As a beginning a committee of fifteen was appointed to have general charge of it. A second step was taken in starting a daily noon meeting at the Auditorium of the Y.M.C.A. as a centre. There have since been noon meetings daily, with an attendance of about one thousand per day.

Meetings have been begun in a very large number of the Protestant churches of the city every night this week. It is thought that the churches will continue the movement in different parts of the city.

There is no very definite plan, as the feeling seems general to move only as the Spirit may lead. Many of the churches are already reporting a deep interest and many conversions. There has been no call yet to evangelists from the outside. The ministers are doing most of the preaching.

Orphans at Clacton.

IT is difficult to conceive of a more beneficent work than that conducted in the Orphanage of the "Flower Girls' Mission" at Clacton. The resident superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. James Groom, are a genial couple, and the gentleness combined with firmness which they display towards their charge elicit the heartiest co-operation of the staff of workers as well as the obedience and love of the one hundred odd orphan girls under their care.

In each of the five pretty houses named respectively "Buttercup," "Daisy," "Primrose," "Violet," and "Blue Bell," in the old road at Clacton are about twenty girls, ranging from five to fourteen years of age, with a "mother," who is loved and respected by all the children, and who is made responsible for the family of which she is the head. The youngest children help one another in the thousand-and-one minor duties of family life; while those who are at all capable of assisting in the domestic affairs are all requisitioned for the more arduous duties of the establishment. Some are housemaids, some cooks, some general servants; whilst others are engaged in mending and darning, of which work there is no small amount in a family of twenty girls.

On a recent Saturday the writer visited the orphanage, and was delighted to witness the cheerfulness with which the work was being done. Scrubbing floors, cleaning boots, and other duties necessary to secure a sweet and enjoyable day of rest on the morrow, were being accomplished with a heartiness which characterises the children in the playground. One could not but observe that everything was well done, reflecting great credit upon the girls themselves as well as upon those in authority. This domestic training, coupled with their educational advantages—for each girl under fourteen years of age attends day-school—fits them for domestic service when they attain the age of sixteen.

But, alas! a sad history attaches to many of the happy little faces enfolded within the floral retreat at Clacton.

BLIND SOPHIE.

I was much interested, though pained, to hear the story of this old-fashioned child of five years. It is just a twelvemonth since she was received into the orphanage, being then in a terrible state of neglect. One of the Biblewomen of the Flower Girls' Mission at Clerkenwell had discovered Sophie in a dark, gloomy cellar, which was the nearest approach to an apartment which the poor widowed mother could afford. Here the poor child was often left lying on a bundle of straw with a few old clothes serving as a coverlet from six in the morning till four in the afternoon. The mother struggled hard to keep herself and her little one from starving; but sometimes Sophie was left all these hours without a morsel of food and without anyone to hear her cry of distress.

Sometimes, wrapped in a shawl, Sophie would accompany her mother from beershop to beershop to sing and beg; and even yet the expressions then learnt by the child find involuntary utterance in her new surroundings. It is remarkable that a child of such tender age should have received and retained in her mind such phrases as occasionally escape her lips; for in her play or at meals she will exclaim, "How's the missis, and how's the baby?" or "Mrs. What's It, give us a drop of beer!" or "How's the old man?" Still, these expressions are happily more rare than they used to be; and it is hoped that ere long they may cease to be heard.

"Sophie," I said to her, taking her upon my knee, on visiting the Home the next day, "what shall we sing?"—the Sunday evening service was just about to begin—"I should like us to sing your favourite hymn."

And as if I had been no stranger to the child, she replied, "Jesus loves me!" And without any ceremony whatever she commenced with her weird voice to sing the simple song, which was listened to with rapt attention by her one hundred "sisters."

Space will not permit my relating other cases equally interesting. Here are children once neglected and ill-treated, cared for by loving hands, and ministered to in a Christ-like manner by those whose hearts are in touch with Him who said, "It is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." The "Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission" has numerous industrial branches besides evangelistic agencies; but amongst its many philanthropic efforts the Orphanage at Clacton deserves a high place; for here the works of rescue, education, and soul-saving are pursued simultaneously, and with blessed results. Full particulars of the objects of the Mission, and also of the Orphanage at Clacton, will gladly be sent on application to the superintendent, Mr. John A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, London, E.C. F. T. W.

The Bridge of Hope.

For the last year the need of more room for our children at the Chingford Cottage Homes has been very much felt. So many of our girls being under School Board age, we are compelled to have a schoolroom and a competent teacher, as the circumstances under which, as a rule, the children come to us make it desirable that they should not attend ordinary schools.

I am anxious to convert the present laundry into class rooms, and to build a more commodious laundry, where the older girls, whilst doing this work for the little colony, are gaining valuable training. Over the laundry I propose having a dormitory, with cubicles for these elder ones. These alterations and additions can be made on our own freehold, and will be a very solid and permanent benefit to the Homes, whilst the comparatively small outlay of £350 to £400 will cover the expenses. Fifty pounds have already been promised conditionally.

It would be a great pleasure to get the building up soon, and name it the "Victoria Cottage Home," thus in our work, which is so essentially "women's work," commemorating our Queen's eventful reign. Apart from any such pleasant sentiment, the great need of this addition is pressing. Every little bed is full, and many children whose histories make me feel I dare not send them away are now boarded out. We want to gather them all under the roofs of our own Cottage Homes, which would be more economical and better in every way.

We dare not—indeed, we cannot—take from the general subscriptions for this purpose, for, whilst God has wonderfully provided for us in times of greatest difficulty, there is never a margin for such a special need as the present,

The American Baptist Missionary Union has bought in those South African countries so recently swept by war, Mashonaland and Matabeleland, three farms of 3000 acres each. These will be used in connection with Baptist missionary work in Africa, and it is hoped will do much toward training the natives in those industrial arts regarding which they are so deplorably ignorant.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, February 14.

"Unto whom I sware in my wrath, that they should not enter into my rest."—Psa. xcv. 11.

God's rest does not consist in circumstances, or conditions of existence, but in disposition. It does not lie, as sacred poets have too often suggested, beyond the confines of this world—it is now, and here. They who believe do now enter into his rest. Canaan is not primarily a type of heaven, but of that blessed experience when we have passed the Jordan of death to natural impulse or selfish choice, and have elected for evermore to accept, and delight in; the will of God.

Will you not take up this position to-day? To-day! Oh, that ye would hear his voice! To hear his voice speaking in the heart, in circumstances and in nature, and to obey promptly, gladly, blithely—this would bring the soul into the rest that remains unexhausted for the people of God. Are you hardening your heart? Is there some evident duty, to which you are called, which you are evading? Are you hardening your heart to some appeal which comes to you through the ties of kinship and nature? Are you saying, Can God subdue these Canaanites, instead of God can? Beware, for this is the sin of Massah and Meribah, which, being interpreted, means strife. Woe to those that strive with their Maker; let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth.

MONDAY, February 15.

"Say among the nations, the Lord reigneth."—Psa. xcvi. 10.

Tell it out! The message is too good to warrant silence. That the Lord is King is the secret of jubilation and blessing for all the world.

Nature is glad, because his rule will emancipate her from the thraldom under which she has groaned too long. When the kingdom is established in the hand of the Son of Man, the long travail of creation will be over, the new heavens and earth will have emerged. Therefore the Psalmist depicts the outburst of thanksgiving from seas, and fields, and trees. What a hallelujah chorus is being rehearsed! What an orchestra! What a theme! Crown him, crown him!

The world of men may be glad also, because the reign of Jesus means equity for the oppressed, equal-handed justice for the poor, peace among the nations.

But, above all, gladness becomes the saints. If the Lord Jesus has become king of your heart, and has brought blessing to you, do not hesitate to give voice to your allegiance. In private, sing unto Him a new song; in public, show forth his salvation, and declare his glory. Tell it out, tell it out. Why should you not give up your life to going forth to distant lands, to tell it out that God has made Jesus King, and that he must reign, and that his reign is blessedness?

TUESDAY, February 16.

"Light is sown for the righteous and gladness for the upright in heart."—Psa. xcvii. 11.

Light means recognition, joy, song. These await such as are clad about with the righteousness of Christ, and are following the paths of righteousness for his Name's sake. Never swerve from the path of the righteous; however trying and dark your present experience may be, it leads to a harvest-home of joy beyond the years.

Sowing is sad work. It is a casting away of precious seed, the flinging far and wide of the treasured stores of the barn, an expenditure of the present for the future. The sower's heart might fail if it pictured the field mice, the rotting rains, the blighting mildew, which have ruined so many hopes, and lie in wait. So the present is your sowing-time; but every moment of trial, each stab of pain, nobly borne, is a seed-germ cast into the furrows, which will certainly bring a blessed recompense of light. You do not realise it, but you are sowing light. Each act of self-denial, in which you cast yourself unto the ground to die, is a seed-germ of the harvest of gladness.

Coal is sown light. When the forests in all the glory of their foliage were hurled into the bosom of the primeval earth, and desolation reigned, it seemed a sad waste of the Creator's work. Who could have realised then that God was really sowing the light of winter nights, the fires of factory and forge? Do not be too sad. Harvest will come, though the weeks move slowly. "Thou shalt be recompensed at the Resurrection of the just."

WEDNESDAY, February 17.

"O sing unto the Lord a new song."—Psa. xcviii. 1.

Come, my soul, thou must awake to sing. Thou hast dwelt on those old, sad, minor chords long enough, of loss and disappointment, of regret for the withered past, of bitter remorse. Too long has thy heart been used for themes like these, or hung upon the willows. Surely there is something better, nobler, worthier of thee and thy great Lord.

Has he not done, is he not doing, marvellous new things in thy daily experience? Are not his mercies new every morning, and his faithfulness every night? Is not his love always at work spreading thy table for new meals, making thy bed for new slumber, contriving new alleviations and delights? Look out for these till meditation induces thanksgiving.

There is always a new song in heaven, because ever a fresh and deepening appreciation of God. The exploring parties are continually bringing back some fresh and wonderful produce of God's wisdom and grace, and as they hold it up to the admiration of kindred spirits the exhibition elicits new songs. Through the Church is made known to the principalities and powers of the heavenlies the manifold wisdom of God. The song of redeeming grace can never grow old, even though the same words recur; they resemble the banks of the stream through which waters are passing that never passed before. My soul, listen to the bursting harmonies of creation, seas, floods, hills; they chide thee. Cast off the spirit of weariness, and don the garment of praise. It is more becoming for such as thee.

THURSDAY, February 18.

"Samuel among them that call upon his name."—Psa. xcix. 6.

Evidently those that call on the name of God compose a separate class. There are classes of prophets, pastors, teachers, and there are the mighty wrestlers with God, whose voices are familiar sounds in the Divine presence chamber. It is a high honour to be included among them that call upon his name. If you cannot find your place in any other class, perhaps it is here. Possibly you have great gifts of prayer and intercession, which you have never rightly employed, to your own great loss, and the loss of others. Do not wait for God's Angel of Providence to shut you forcibly into a lonely chamber, and compel you to use your great gift.

Samuel's prayers are frequently referred to. At times he would cry unto God all night. He counted it a sin to cease to pray for the people. His prayers secured the defeat of the Philistines; and the nation sheltered itself in his intercessions. We can never estimate the worth of a good man's prayers; and they lift a man like Samuel, destitute of commanding genius, to stand side by side with Moses in the estimate of Eternity.

Lately I had a memorable interview with George Müller, who told me some of his wonderful experiences in dealing with a prayer-answering God. May not he, and such as he, be remembered in this holy category? Oh, to be remembered among those that call on God's name! But always bear in mind the thrice accentuated message of this Psalm (3, 5, 9), that God is holy.

FRIDAY, February 19.

"We are his; we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture."—Psa. c. 3 (R.V.).

The sense of God's proprietorship is the true basis of our consecration. We must realise his rights over us before we can freely give Him his due. Those rights are manifold in their sweet reasonableness, but amongst them all, this of creation is one of the chief. God has a right to us because He has made us.

He made us, as the potter fashions the clay, for a distinct purpose; and surely he has a right to use the vessels of his workmanship for the purpose unto which He has designed them.

He made us, as the builder erects a house for the purpose of inhabiting it; and surely He has a right to occupy every distinct room, and go to and fro in it as He may please.

He made us as the hand of the weaver makes some textile fabric for wearing; and surely He must not be debarred from the free and unquestioned disposal of that on which He has expended anxiety and time.

We are Christ's by creation, by purchase, by toils and tears, by the gift of the Father. The Good Shepherd owns us, though we do not always acknowledge his ownership, or repay his pains and wounds on our behalf. Look up into his face and say, "I am thine by a myriad ties, and am bound to Thee for evermore. Pasture me where Thou wilt; guide me whither Thou choosest; count me as one of thy people; feed me on thy pasture-lands; number me with thy saints in glory everlasting."

SATURDAY, February 20.

"I will walk within my house with a perfect heart."—Psa. ci. 2.

This is the hardest place to walk in perfectly. It seems easier to walk perfectly among strangers than in one's own house. But you may rest assured that a man is really no better than he is to his own. You must not gauge your worth by what the outside world thinks and says, but by the estimate of those that see you in the ordinary intercourse of the home.

To be perfectly courteous to those whom you are meeting at every meal, to hold yourself under perfect control when worried by tiny, insidious jars and stung by almost invisible gnats; to maintain always the perfect girding of the loins; to have the head always anointed and the face always washed; to realise God's ideal, love's ideal, and your own. Ah, me! this requires the utmost grace that God can give. To die once is easy; to live always with an undivided heart, this is hard.

Understand that in the home-life God is educating and training you for the greatest victories. There you are learning the deepest lessons in sanctification. You need not run to conventions, sermons, and holiness meetings; if you would resolve to walk in your house with a perfect heart, you would discover how far from perfect you are, and how you are the least of his saints. Then God would come unto you, and dwell beneath your roof, and the story of Bethany would be reduplicated for your household and yourself.

Bibles in Biscuit-tins.—The empty two-pound biscuit-tin, which is carelessly thrown on one side in England, becomes in tropical Africa an article of considerable value. The people of Uganda use it to preserve the books given to them by missionaries from the attacks of insects. In this manner many a Bible has been carried about in safety. Taking note of this, the British and Foreign Bible Society has made its latest version in the Luganda language of a shape to fit a biscuit-tin. A thousand copies of the new Luganda Bible have been printed and are probably by now in the hands of the Baganda (as the people of Uganda are called), who are said to show remarkable intelligence in the study of the Word of God.

THE EVANGELIST.

The Soldier's Furlough.

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

THE old man's face was aglow with thankfulness, and the eyes of his wife held the reflection of its light in their sparkling tears, for the home circle was complete. Tom the miller, their support and stay, and Ada their comfort and companion, and the soldier son, sat round the table, and they talked of childhood's games and dreams, and tears and smiles chased each other, as the thoughts gave pain or joy.

"Mother you wear an older look, and father bends lower," said Robert, as they drew near the fire at night.

"Care makes her marks, and sorrow is a heavy load for a frail back to bear, my son, but thank God after the storm there's a calm; and you are home once more," and she laid her hand on his scarlet sleeve.

Home had never seemed such a sacred shelter before, love had never been such a peaceful influence to the soldier, as on that first night of furlough.

He knelt as meekly as a child and heard his father pray. He sang the old hymns with his sister to please the old folks. He even listened attentively to the words of a Saviour's love; but they could not tell—he did not say—if his heart was right with God.

"Never speak of the past, lead him on to the good," said the father one day; "Jesus said, 'Neither do I condemn thee, go, sin no more'; and shall we not cover his past, and point to a better future?" And the holiday was one of pleasure and ended all too soon.

The afternoon was closing in as Robert Holmes walked up the dreary street leading to the barracks. If ever a heart knew the pain of an aching void, it was his that day, but on his face no trace of feeling was seen. No one gave a kindly glance at him, yet under the bright coat there was a human heart, and it was beating in doubly muffled throbs.

"HAD A GOOD TIME OF IT, EH?"

asked a sergeant, as he neared the place.

Yes, he knew it had been a good time, for during those days and weeks he had felt something of the sinfulness of sin and the beauty of goodness, and returning, he brought the parting blessing of those at home, and knew their prayers would follow. The great red buildings looked more prison-like than ever. The sharp words of the young officer, who was showing his power over the men on drill, sounded harshly on his ear. The banter and coarse jokes of comrades greeted him, and the hollow laughter echoed through his brain.

"What's up with Holmes? Haven't seen him in the canteen since his return," said a private some days later.

"Goodness knows. He's got the blues, and prefers sulking, likely."

These, and similar remarks, Robert did not hear; but wherever he went he did hear the old tones of the voices at home, and the warm light of that fireside was still before his eyes. Strange questions, too, were in his mind,—

"WHAT IS LIFE WORTH WITHOUT GOD?

What can satisfy the heart without Christ's love?"—and neither the bustle of occupation, nor the jargon of noisy talk, could banish these thoughts. Meanwhile the prayers at home went up to God for the soldier son. Evening time saw the men free, homeless and often heartless, and the powers of evil hovered round to seize and ruin the manhood of those men.

A week that night Robert's furlough had ended in point of time, but not in influence; the atmosphere of the little house yonder was about him—the reading, the singing, the laughter, and the tears, all were forces shutting him in to decision or despair.

"The Soldiers' Home" was not frequented much by him. It stood in a side street, and savoured to him of a cold sort of charity. No personal kindness, no soul in it; but that night he sauntered in, not having seen the bills announcing an address by an unknown name. Very few made up the audience, but Robert made one in time to hear, "Take up thy cross, and follow Me." At the close of the evening he saw the great end of life, the beauty of the Cross, and the hope that maketh not ashamed. He heard the barrack clock strike one; the other men lay sleeping, but the grim bare room was as though some soft light hovered about its walls, and a face, more to be esteemed than any, cast a fascinating spell upon him, but uttered not a word. Drawn out in admiring fear, he said, "Have mercy, Lord, on me," and then in low tones, close to his ear, he seemed to hear an answering sound, "Take up thy cross, and follow Me." Lying thus awake for hours, he gathered in the hindrances that he must lay down before he could obey. His fear of the opinion of men, his cowardice, and his entangling habits, that led him into appearances of evil; and, wrestling with self-weakness, he said: "Ready, Lord. Shall the soldier shrink? Drill me, order me, restrain me; only let me serve under thy banner of love"; and his heart was yearning for response, when the light seemed fading, and the voice seemed more distant as it said, "Follow Me," and then he lay thinking of Jesus, the one his parents loved, and before he slept once more he heard, "Me."

A manlier man, a better soldier was Robert Holmes in the months that followed. Scoffing and jeers soon ceased when it was seen he felt it an honour to bear anything for Christ, and all along the ranks his bright example told.

Once more the old man's face shone with joy in the cottage home as he leaned on his stick and listened while his wife read the soldier's letter.

"Does he say that now? Read that line again."

She wiped her eyes and read: "I'll never forget my last furlough; home was like an outer court of heaven, and the love there like

A SPARK OF GOD'S GREAT LOVE."

"Now I'm content to go; not one of them will be missing, not even our soldier boy, praise the Lord," said the thankful father.

"Poor dear Robert," said Ada. "I almost thought you hoped against all hope, he had grown so careless and wild."

"Prayer and love, my girl, never fail; that's how the wanderers are to be saved."

Long prayed and waited for through months so drear;
Each day it seemed the anxious hearts must break.
Yet is it that our loved ones grow more dear,
The more we suffer for their dear souls' sake.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Thomson, jun., has concluded a most successful three weeks' Gospel Mission by limelight in Hope Hall, Paisley. At three o'clock each day Mr. Thomson had a Bible reading, and at 5.30 addressed large meetings of children, the hall one week being filled with boys and the next with girls. Nearly every night many were turned away. At the evening meetings for grown-up people the attendance was very large, and the interest deepened each night. Some hundreds professed to having received blessing.

Mr. Hugh C. Wallace, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a twelve days' mission at Kensington Baptist Chapel, Liverpool. On Sundays the large building was filled to the doors.

An eight days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, at Salem Chapel, Romford. The mission was sadly interfered with by the election contest which was proceeding at the same time; still the meetings were fairly well attended and there was real spiritual power present in them. Many professed and have received blessing which it is hoped will be of an abiding character. J. M. S.

Rev. Seth Backhouse, late of the Salvation Army, has concluded a week's mission at Hightown, Manchester. The Lord spoke through the missioner, bringing about the conversion of souls, while the children of God have been very greatly blessed. A large number of temperance pledges were also taken.

Mr. Newton Jones, Sunday-school Union evangelist, has held a six days' mission at Ossett Green. During six days he conducted fourteen services; some for children, but the most of them were intended for adults, and those of maturer years. The burden of Mr. Jones' preaching was the awful reality of sin, and the necessity of salvation from its ravages. He evidently has no sympathy with some modern views which make sin one of the shadows of life. It is rather a disease or a contortion of the will. It is opposition to God—rejection of Jesus Christ.

W. P. C.

Messrs. V. D. David and Wadsworth, the well-known Tamil evangelists, have been at Neyoor, Travancore, engaged in a successful mission. Their addresses have been greatly appreciated by the people, and it is hoped that the mission will prove a source of much blessing to the church there.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise, has concluded a successful eight days' mission at the People's Hall, Lee, Kent. Interest was awakened from the first, and notwithstanding the unfavourable character of the weather, the attendance increased until at the closing service chairs had to be placed in front of the platform and down the aisles. Last Monday he commenced a ten days' Anti-Infidel Crusade at Bolton, Lancashire.

A successful nine days' mission has been concluded in the village of Warwick Bridge, near Carlisle, by Mrs. Gibbon, of Aberdeen, and Miss Wallace, of Edinburgh. The meetings were well attended, and many were pointed to Christ. The children's service and Bible-meetings were much appreciated, being quite new to the villagers. The noonday prayer-meeting was attended by the mill employés in their working clothes, and the Lord was present in power.

Mr. William Nobbs has finished a three weeks' mission at the Pontnewydd Branch of the Pontymoile Christian Mission. The attendance was exceptionally good, believers were refreshed, backsliders were restored, and some unsaved converted.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a seven days' mission at the Congregational Church, Chard, Somersetshire.

At the Iron Mission Hall, Templemore-avenue, Belfast, a special mission, held by Mr. J. Wharton, has been owned of God in the salvation of souls and the quickening of Christians. Bible-readings by Mrs. Wharton have also proved a help to the women who attended. H. D.

Mr. W. J. Mencely concluded a four weeks' mission in Garscube Hall, Glasgow, on Friday, the 5th. The Lord blessed the words spoken, and many professed to have found peace. Dick Hendry, well known in the district as the Converted Carter, continues the special meetings for February.

A mission was held in connection with the Bath City Mission at the Stable Lane Mission Hall by Mr. Henry Collins (formerly of the London police force), from January 16 to 25, and was attended with much blessing. Mr. Collins is an earnest evangelist, and under the power of the Holy Spirit, his addresses were the means of stirring up believers and of awakening the unconverted. He also gave a Bible reading to Bath Police Bible Class.

By permission of the Governor, Mr. C. Cook has been addressing the prisoners in Edinburgh Gaol. On Sunday morning forty men sought prayer on their behalf, and twenty-one stayed behind seeking counsel and aid.

Mr. J. Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a grand mission in Holy Trinity School, Blackburn. It has been most encouraging to see the large crowds increasing night after night, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather. Numbers have been led into light and liberty, while the Christians have had marvellous help. E. A.

Major Whittle with Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins have just finished a fortnight's mission in Kilmarnock with very gratifying results. There has been a good attendance at all the meetings, the afternoon Bible readings and the children's meetings being especially appreciated. Mrs. Stebbins had a good work amongst the young women and girls, many of them professing faith in Jesus as their Saviour, while Mr. Stebbins, along with a large choir, made the meetings attractive to a great many who might not otherwise have come. The evangelists were well supported by a large band of workers, who have also felt it to be "a time of refreshing" to themselves.

Mr. T. E. Ruth, of Harley College, London, has conducted an eighteen days' mission in connection with the Baptist Church, Totnes (Rev. G. D. Evans). The special services have been abundantly blessed. Many have been led to accept the Christ as their Saviour, and the spiritual life of the church has been quickened.

Famine in India.

By LORD RADSTOCK.

DEAR SIR,—A most terrible calamity has fallen on India. But few people can realize the magnitude of the distress which has come on our Indian fellow subjects. The Governor-General informs us that 37,000,000 are "in famine districts, where there is not enough to sustain life, and 44,000,000 men in districts where there is not enough to maintain health." For these, relief works are already open for over two millions. But according to the Famine Commissioners' report, fifteen per cent. of the population of the famine area will eventually come on relief for three months, and 7½ per cent. for twelve months. There will be thus five millions practically helped before long.

The Government of India is doing a magnificent work, but they point out that they can only give enough to sustain life, and that the sick (of whom there must soon be hundreds of thousands, owing to insufficient food and the increase of the plague), little children and the women in zenanas, of whom there are in all India many millions, are beyond the reach of their relief. Besides these, there are large numbers who, from their social position or caste feeling, would not go on the relief works, and who, owing to the rise of the price of grain, amounting too often to two or even three hundred per cent., are sinking in a lingering starvation.

To these must be added hundreds of thousands who will soon be cut off from earning anything, having lost their cattle or industrial implements, or having been ruined by the paralysis of manufactures and business, which is so rapidly taking place owing to the spread of the plague in the Government of Bombay.

The Government of India, in their despatch of December 23, point out that there are four categories for which private relief is needed as being beyond the scope of their operations:—

(1) To supplement the "bare subsistence allowance for aged, sick, and children on relief works."

(2) Wholly to relieve many women in zenanas and young children, and those who, owing to caste prejudices, are unwilling to seek for relief.

(3) To enable hundreds of thousands who are being ruined to start again in their industrial occupation.

(4) There will be many thousands of orphans, who will have to be wholly provided for for several years (say five on the average), till they can earn their own livelihood.

It seems a moderate estimate to say there will be five millions who will, in a greater or less degree, need help for three months till the spring crops are gathered, and two and a-half millions till the autumn crops are gathered, and the revival of industry and trade enables them to be independent.

It must be remembered that, owing to the great rise of prices of food and grain over all India, a rise which is likely to be continued till the spring harvest, the sum given per day will only procure about half the food which could be purchased at ordinary times. I have made a complete estimate based on figures in the Blue Book, which I am now submitting to experts. My personal conviction is that if the English people are to render an efficient help to their deeply-needing fellow-subjects—and an efficient help is the only one which is worthy of them—a sum of over four millions must be raised. This, though it seems large, is less than a penny in the pound on the incomes of Englishmen, and is about one thirty-fifth part of what is annually spent by Englishmen on alcoholic drinks. Surely they will feel it their duty, when they know the need, to raise every penny.

We know the people of England have the means, and we believe that when informed of the need they will have the heart to help their fellow-subjects in their dire distress. The contributions to the Mansion House fund, though large in some cases, are wholly inadequate to the need.

But Christians who know they owe all for time and eternity to their Lord, who died that they might live, will feel that the inarticulate cry of these suffering millions is a call for help, which they, in Christ's Name, must answer, not by giving a conventional dole which involves no sacrifice, but answer in a way worthy of the cross of Christ. Now is the unique opportunity for the hundreds of thousands of Christians, surrounded by the comforts of England, to show that they love not in word only, but in deed, and in truth. Surely the wealthy will give their thousands, and the children their pennies, and the offering often given out of their penury will go to India with a fragrance of the love of Christ, which will doubtless lead many aching hearts, in the shadow of death, to look to Him who will give the light of life.

It has been suggested to transmit the funds so collected to committees of experienced Christian men, in the Presidency and chief towns, who will have unlimited discretion, in concert with the Government relief committees, but using as far as possible Christian agencies, to help in the directions referred to above, and especially to do all in their power for succouring women in zenanas, cut off from other help, the sick and infirm, and, above all, see that orphans and destitute children are provided with a Christian house and home.

The need is great, and the opportunity is great, surely the followers of Jesus will respond in a way worthy of his great compassion and his great Name. There is much more I would like to say, but will conclude by entreating every Christian to pray earnestly that the Lord would stir up his people by his Spirit, to arise in his Name, and by personal service and unstinted contributions to various Christian funds, from every member of Christ's Church, to use this unique opportunity of witnessing of Christ's love to India.

[Those who desire to help in this blessed work, and have not other channels, can remit to "Christian Succour to India," and at Messrs. Barclay's, Pall Mall East, S.W.; or to hon. secs., Lord Radstock, Eccleston-place, S.W.; Col. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay, N.—Ed.]

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to plead the cause of the many little ones who are left destitute on account of the famine. This institution has been in existence since 1840, and we in charge of orphanages naturally feel the strain very much at such a time as this. Parents starve themselves to feed their children, and in the end die, leaving them unprotected, uncared for. We have already gone beyond our means, and have taken in many, trusting God to raise up friends. There are still numbers awaiting admission from various parts.

Rev. C. Gill, M.A., C.M.S., of Jabbalpore, in a letter by this morning's post, writes: "Very sorry you cannot arrange for another batch of orphans just yet. I have now fifty orphan girls and forty boys on my hands, all small, etc."

The friends of the Roman Catholics are enabling them to take in large numbers, and I feel sure that our Protestant friends would not wish us to be behind them in earning the gratitude of our Indian people by caring for their desolate young. We have accommodation for over 400 children, but no funds to support them. Help will be received by Mr. H. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Islington.—Very truly yours,

EDWARD PEGG, Superintendent.

Secundra C.M.S. Orphanage, Agra, India.

A SUGGESTION.

SIR,—The appalling accounts of the dreadful famine in India seem to show that some of the districts which suffer most severely are in close proximity to the places where opium is cultivated. Would it not be more pleasing to God and more profitable to all concerned if we were to grow food for our own people instead of poison for the Chinese, and thus save the lives of both, instead of being guilty of double manslaughter?

The suggestion is that all the people in the Empire of Great Britain should hear the voice of God in his providence, and so make their voices heard in the Legislature that the sinful and shameful traffic in opium shall be immediately and finally abandoned.—Yours truly, AN OLD INDIAN.

Chinese in London.—On Wednesday, Feb. 3, St. John's Memorial Room, Blackheath, was crowded to hear a lecture by Mrs. Piercy on behalf of the East London Chinese Mission, conducted by her husband. The lecture was illustrated by a number of young people in Japanese costume, a special feature being four children in "Ainu" dress. W. H. S.

Armenia.—The International Association of the Friends of Armenia has just issued the first of a series of Occasional Papers, by means of which it is hoped to keep those who are working in the Armenian cause supplied with the most recent and authentic information respecting the condition of the people and the progress of the efforts that are being put forth to relieve their pressing needs, and to rebuild little by little, the social fabric. The Association has also published a large coloured map of the massacres for display at meetings and in clubs, etc. A list of books dealing with the Armenian question, together with new leaflets containing advice concerning clothing and other matters, may be obtained from Mr. Charles Hecht, at 3, Bridge-street, Westminster

Salvation Army in Brussels.

I SHOULD like to tell your readers something of the wonderful meetings Mrs. Booth-Clibborn is holding at Brussels. The meetings take place in a large beautiful concert hall. It has been a most interesting sight to watch the audience, composed of all sorts of people, but principally members of the aristocracy. Many Socialists and professed infidels attend; one of these said he had not been in church for thirty years. Often they mock and are convulsed with laughter; then gradually one notices conviction stealing over their faces.

The people listen entranced and spellbound as the Maréchale reasons of "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." Many remain behind, some to be prayed and pleaded with, and some come out to the penitent form. One evening the Maréchale took for her subject, "The city without tears," first dilating on the sorrows here below, and then speaking from the passage in Revelation — "God shall wipe away all tears." Many all over the hall wept as they remembered and thought of their sorrows. One Sunday evening she spoke on "The Prodigal Son." Several have been broken down, and yielded themselves fully to their Saviour to love and serve Him.

Many infidels come night after night. The Maréchale in one of her addresses happened to make the remark that if there were only fifty apostles in Brussels what a work might be accomplished. One of the infidels, a young man, when she was talking to him afterwards, said "Maréchale, would not twelve apostles like the Saviour had be sufficient?" and as she further dealt with him, and said, "Oh, that you would become one," he looked at her, deeply moved, and added, "Perhaps I may."

A drawing-room meeting was filled with an influential gathering. Mrs. Booth-Clibborn explained the object and methods of the Army, interspersed her talk with beautiful persuasive remarks as to the need of, and the blessed results of, a life of absolute abandonment to God. E. P.

Entering the Last Valley.

(Psalm xxiii. 4.)

JESU, Shepherd, Leader,
Take this trembling hand;
Strange the path before me,
Through an unknown land.

Footprints, spite the dimness,
Show a trampled ground;
Hosts on hosts passed over,
Leaving not a sound.

Never one returnèd,
Saying how he sped;
Silent, ever silent,
All the mighty dead.

Jesu, Shepherd, Leader,
Ever-faithful Guide,
Through Time's mazy desert
Always near my side.

Do not now forsake me,
Take this trembling hand,
Lead me through the valley
None can understand.

Fear with Faith is wrestling,
Thrust my foe away;
Break the silence, whisper
"I will be thy stay."

Hold me, keep me, help me,
Earth sinks out of sight;
Hold me, keep me, help me,
Lift me into light.

Congregational Colleges.—Since the death of Dr. Herber Evans, late principal of Bala-Bangor Theological College, a movement has been set on foot towards the amalgamation of three Congregational Colleges, at Bangor, Brecon, and Carmarthen, and a representative committee has been appointed to consider the question. The present system is inadequate to the needs of the case. They were founded when the conditions of life were very different in Wales from what they are now, and the present system is expensive and wasteful in many ways. It is even felt that possibly a still wider amalgamation of colleges, embracing various denominations, may be desirable, so that Wales might have a theological university of her own.

THE LATE

Rev. Josiah Viney.

MR. VINEY was born in 1816, in the South of London, and had in his early years the advantage of the zealous Evangelical ministry of Rev. Thomas Jackson, of Stockwell-green Congregational Church, who was not only a devoted worker for the people of his own neighbourhood, but also an ardent friend of the London Missionary Society. From his earliest days Mr. Viney was a disciple of the Saviour, never knowing a time when he did not love Him.

At the age of fourteen he entered the business house of his uncle, in Great St. Helen's, London, and on attaining his majority was offered a partnership in it. Had he accepted the position, he would, no doubt, have come into the possession of very ample means. But other thoughts had gained his heart, and that year he offered himself to the London Missionary Society for service abroad. A serious illness which he had soon afterwards, prevented him from carrying out his intentions; and so, with diminished strength, but undiminished love, he turned to the home ministry as his sphere. He was never a robust man, and in the course of his life he had repeated and severe illnesses; nevertheless, he reached four-score years. The time of life having gone by when young men seek training in some college or at a university, he strove to prepare for the ministry by attending classes at University College, and then by placing himself under the guidance of Rev. T. S. Guyer, of Ryde.

In 1841 he began his public labours at Herne Bay, where he continued for three years. His marriage during this period to Miss Anna Piper, of Camberwell, who still survives him, was a happy event, which yielded strength and comfort to all his after years. London was to be the sphere of his activity, for thither he returned in 1844, to the charge of a church at Bethnal Green; there he laboured for fourteen years, until he had quite spent his strength. The building of a new chapel was only an extra, though a heavy extra, to his daily attention to the poor and suffering, and to his indefatigable preaching of the Word. A gentleman who knew him in these days says that his religion was of "the right practical sort," for he might often be seen sallying forth "with his New Testament in one hand and a rice pudding in the other," bent on some good errand. He was an open-air preacher, though a nervous and retiring man. His love to Christ made him a true home missionary, and from a chair in his chapel yard or at the entrance to Victoria Park he delighted to preach the Gospel to the crowds.

In 1858 his broken health compelled him to resign his charge at Bethnal Green, and take a year's rest. He travelled much during this time, and did all he could to recruit his strength. As soon as he felt able to resume work, he accepted the charge of a small church at Highgate. His zeal and liberality found some vent for themselves in the building of a new chapel, and bringing the small congregation out of its confined situation. His consistent life and wise labours won universal esteem. A member of the Church of England testifies that whenever he was at Highgate he always went to hear Mr. Viney preach, because he felt he was such a true Christian. One wonders how many persons are influenced on any given Sunday by a similar motive; more perhaps than might be supposed.

Mr. Viney's practical religion set about the better housing of the poor of Highgate. Although he was not the originator of improved dwellings for the working classes, he was a pioneer in the movement, and erected several good buildings which were from the first financially successful.

At the suggestion of the late Mr. Samuel Morley and of Mr. Binney, Mr. Viney was induced to accept the position of secretary of the School for the Sons of Congregational Ministers, then situated at Lewisham; and here he may be said to have found his life-work. When, at the end of twenty-five years work, he was free from pastoral service at Highgate, the most of his time was given to the school. His pastoral service altogether extended over forty-two years, and still he retained zeal and energy enough to work in other ways, but chiefly for the boys whom he loved with a fatherly affection. His genius for new buildings aided in securing the erection at Caterham of a new school, admirably arranged and fitted for its purpose, and placed in a salubrious country. When Mr. Viney resigned his charge at Highgate a generous testimonial of £720 which was given to him was all devoted to the founding of scholarships in connection with the school. He lived to serve the boys in every respect, watching over their physical, their mental, and their religious welfare. His sympathy with them was wonderful; and he kept the boy's spirit to the very last. When he lay dying on November 5, it was proposed to dispense with the fireworks amusements, lest the noise should disturb him, but he promptly sent word down that the boys were to have them as usual.

He was for many years a member of a Trust which dispenses gifts to students for the ministry, and seeks to promote the diffusion of the Gospel. His early love for missionary work among the heathen also never declined, and as long as health and strength permitted he attended the meetings of the directors of the L.M.S.

He was at one time co-editor of the Evangelical Magazine, one of the oldest magazines in the country, and for many years the treasurer of its fund for aiding ministers' widows. His thoughtfulness and sympathy found scope among the cases of sorrow which were always coming under his notice. His attachment to the Magazine for the testimony it has always borne to Evangelical truth was very ardent. In 1895 he said of it: "If it has not been great, it has been good and faithful over a few things; it has survived many periodicals of far loftier pretensions, and in the first year of the second century it enters by sympathy into the joy of its Lord."

Mr. Viney was led, through J. B. Gough's influence, to adopt and act upon temperance principles in early life, and remained true to them to the last, neither the influence of custom nor the plea of delicate health sufficing to turn his purpose. His end was full of the sunshine of faith and hope. Heaven was to him "a glorious reality." A man of quiet spirit and few words, he nevertheless gave at the last a bright testimony to the Saviour's love and power. To young ministers his advice was, "Preach, live, and trust Christ; for He is equal to everything." In his times of great prostration, when he could not pray, he still enjoyed "sweet fellowship with Jesus." In full assurance he entered into his eternal rest and joy on November 8 last.

Chamberi Mission, Madrid.

THE 12th and 19th January were red letter days in the history of this work for our Lord. On the former I purchased the property adjoining that which was secured a little over a year ago, so that now the church and schools have a permanent and well-situated home. Very grateful indeed am I to our gracious God, who has permitted me to realise what beloved brother Fenn had for so long prayed and laboured. It would have interested you to witness the spontaneous tokens of thanksgiving on the day when, at the close of the usual weekly prayer-meeting, I announced the good news. Three brethren and two sisters rose and poured out their hearts in praise and prayer, not forgetting to seek blessings abundant upon the kind friends whose gifts had obtained for us so precious a possession. On the 19th the pastors and brethren of the three other churches in Madrid heartily responded to our invitation to join us in a special meeting, and for an hour and a-half, praise, exhortation, and prayer succeeded one another; the prominent note was that God would fill the house with his glory in the saving and fructifying of many souls, and one brother reminded us of the solemn but reassuring words in Zech. iv. 6.

I have, however, a still better item of news; on the first Lord's day of this year, a young lady, previously anxious, found peace whilst I was preaching, and on returning home said to the friend who brought her to the services some weeks ago, "Oh, why did you not take me there sooner?" She is like a caged bird set free. The conversion is specially interesting to me as she was evangelised in the first instance by one in whose conversion we were instrumental some six years ago, and whose consistent walk ever since has given such joy to us all. I earnestly hope and pray that God may be pleased speedily to give me the needful means so as to return the sum kindly lent in order to secure these premises, viz., £350, and to make the absolutely necessary alterations and repairs to the buildings, that are far from fulfilling proper hygienic conditions, whether for chapel or schools. You will, I am sure, join in prayer that our highest hopes may be realised regarding precious souls and also for this other great boon.

CHAS. E. FAITHFULL.

Testimony to Israel.

THE annual gatherings for praise and prayer in connection with the Hebrew-Christian Testimony to Israel were held on Friday last, in Brunswick Chapel, Whitechapel-road. The weather was most unfavourable, but this did not prevent a goodly number of friends of the work from attending, both in the afternoon and evening. The afternoon meeting was presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who spoke words of sympathy and encouragement. He referred to the duty of the Church to evangelise Israel, and to the awakening to national life which is now being realised by the Chosen People.

Rev. David Baron described the work and its difficulties and blessings. The East-end of London has a greater Jewish population than all Palestine, and every week that population grows. Those who preach the Gospel to Israel are entitled to see in this the hand of God, in bringing the people under the influence of Christian truth. Mr. Baron referred to the daily Bible classes and other sections of the work, and in conclusion read extracts from a letter by a City gentleman, who suggested the extension of the mission accommodation at 114, Whitechapel-road. In the event of his proposal being acted upon, the gentleman promised substantial financial help. Rev. C. A. Schönberger, in a few remarks, held that the Mission House is a standing testimony for the Lord Jesus, and is well known to the Jews.

After some words by Mr. A. Boake, on Israel's place in prophecy, an address was delivered by Pastor James Stephens, of Highgate-road, who spoke of his pleasant acquaintance with Mr. Baron, whom he had known for nineteen years. The Pastor rejoiced to have a prayerful interest in the work of the Mission. With reference to the number of agencies directing their efforts for the enlightenment of Jews, he met the objection founded on this fact with the statement that in proportion to population there are fewer workers among Jews than among Gentiles in East London.

Rev. Robert Graves Walker followed, showing that missions to Jews bring direct as well as indirect benefit to the Church of Christ. He showed from the writings of the prophets that the good time in store for the people is assured by the covenant promise of a faithful God (Jer. xxxi. 33-40).

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

An ordination service in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews was held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on Friday last, when Mr. Samuel Wilkinson (youngest son of the director) and Mr. Henry Goodman were set apart for the public ministry of the Gospel. Colonel J. F. Morton presided, and the following ministers (representing different sections of the Church of Christ) took part in the service: Rev. J. Gritton, D.D., Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D., Rev. T. R. H. Sturges, Rev. M. Nachim, Pastor Fuller Gooch, and Rev. John Wilkinson.

In the course of the proceedings Rev. J. Wilkinson referred to his own ordination, which took place more than forty years ago, and blessed God that he was permitted to take part in the setting apart of his son. After the laying on of hands and dedicatory prayer, Dr. Bullinger delivered the ordination charge. Mr. S. Wilkinson followed with a brief statement on his own behalf and Mr. Goodman's. Prayer and praise had a large part in the proceedings.

Wesleyan Relics.—Rev. C. H. Kelly, to whom Methodism is greatly indebted for the discovery of old and valuable documents relating to the early history of the Wesleyan body, has within the past few days had the good fortune to come upon another great find. During his researches in the archives of the Wesleyan Book-room, in City-road, he discovered a box containing practically the whole of the manuscript journals of both John and Charles Wesley, with some two hundred of their letters. Amongst the latter were several of John Wesley's letters to the famous Swiss Vicar of Madeley, Rev. John W. de la Flechere, better known among the Evangelical churches at home and abroad as "Fletcher of Madeley," who, after an adventurous career, entered the Church of England, and became a staunch supporter and follower of the Wesleys. There are also original letters of Mrs. Susannah Wesley; one from John Wesley to William Pitt; five in the handwriting of George Whitefield; and thirteen by the Countess of Huntingdon.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

THE Sunday meetings of the evangelists in New York continue to be crowded, as may be seen on any Sunday afternoon by those who are able to get inside of Carnegie Hall. In the intervals of Mr. Moody's appeals the voice of Mr. Sankey thrills the vast assembly. We regret to learn (says a New York contemporary) that we are not to have the latter much longer, as Mr. Sankey is soon to go to Southern California with his wife that she may escape the cold weather of Brooklyn.

The Tremont Temple audiences in Boston have reached the superlative degree of fulness, and the popular response to the efforts of Mr. Moody and his corps of helpers is measured now in part by the number of disappointed ones who would pass closed doors. A glance at the large audiences (says The Congregationalist) makes it plain that suburban and country neighbourhoods are to all appearances taking advantage largely of the special opportunity of hearing the Northfield preacher.

What Mr. Moody would have on the part of Christians, judging from the general line of his talks, he has expressed in the homely phrase: "Get up and go to work." He addressed the suggestion to parents, church members, neighbours, pastors—to all who would have power through the grace of God. No doubt he has already made more than a surface impression on the minds of his auditors. But while he is giving thanks for that Mr. Moody craves a deeper arousing. His courage is stimulated by hopeful indications in the adjoining towns and cities.

Among the Lepers.

Famine-stricken lepers are surely the most pitiable of the children of men, and they are numerous in India just now. They are applying at our already crowded asylums, and are received as long as there is an inch of room or a scrap of food. The committee and the workers of the Mission to Lepers are feeling the pinch of this terrible time severely, as the cost of food is so high, and daily portions for the inmates must be found. Some starving outcasts are driven to self-destruction as the only escape from their misery. Yet £6 a year supports an adult, and £4 a child in our asylums. The last year was the best in the history of the Mission as to spiritual results; 200 lepers received Christian baptism in the institutions.

In addition to the general needs, two are special: (1) Miss Mary Reed is needing £25 for the completion of the new chapel of the asylum at Chandag. It was opened and dedicated on Christmas Day, which proved a day of much blessing. (2) £120 is required for the extension of the Home for Lepers at Tokio, Japan, where Miss Youngman, of the C.M.S., is doing a noble work. One friend has offered £10 towards this amount if eleven others will give the same, or if the amount is raised in smaller sums. John Jackson, Hon. Sec.

A Veteran.—Rev. Wm. Walker, the last original member of the Gaboon Mission, passed to his rest at Milton, Wis., on Dec. 9. He went first to Cape Palmas, Liberia, but was transferred to Gaboon in 1843. For thirty years after he was most of the time in Africa, and the corner-stone of the church, of the Mpongwe literature, and the civilisation within Gaboon Mission was chiefly laid by his hands and by his associate, Rev. Albert Bushnell.

Mission at Finsbury Park.

ONE of the most encouraging missions ever held in the north of London is now in progress at Finsbury Park Congregational Church. The pastor is Rev. Llewellyn Parsons, and the missioner Mr. George Clarke.

Beginning on the 24th ult., it was to be concluded last Sunday, but so great has been the interest manifested that it has been deemed desirable to continue the meetings every afternoon and evening during the present week, except Saturday, the final one being on Sunday evening.

Next Sunday morning the service will take the form of a "United Communion," in which those of any denomination who have received blessing during the mission will be invited to participate. Indeed, this spirit of inter-denominational union has been very manifest, both as to the workers, and to the invitation given to the unsaved.

The mission affords a striking instance of what may be accomplished by means of systematic "working up," an element which is often rather lacking. That there has been much prayer in public and private during the preceding months goes without saying. But in addition to this, much is due to the very thorough and well organised house-to-house visitation of the neighbourhood, and capital advertising, not only on the chapel itself, but for miles around. No one travelling on the busy tram and 'bus route of Seven Sisters-road could fail to be struck with this, and it is easy to conceive that many persons, usually thoughtless or careless, have been drawn within by the attractive notice outside. Be this as it may, the building has been filled to overflowing night after night, while on Sundays it has been impossible to accommodate a very large number seeking admission, and the doors have had to be resolutely closed. It was pathetic to listen to the appeal of a man who had come a long distance, only to be denied admission. "But there's always room in any church for he pleaded; and with pardonable leniency he was admitted to such confined space as he could squeeze himself into.

But let it not be thought that crowds have been synonymous terms for rush and bustle. One of the most noticeable features of the meetings has been the hush and quiet pervading them. No human power has been at work, either in rhetoric, illustration, or "man's wisdom." If any elements have been conspicuously absent, these have. The crucified and risen Christ has been exalted day by day; the addresses have been solemn in the extreme, and at times even severe; yet the large audiences have listened, as it were breathless, to the tender entreaty of the preacher, or his earnest setting forth of truth. And the Holy Spirit has been at work awakening slumbering consciences, and quickening dead souls into spiritual activity and life. For which many hearts are giving heartfelt praise to God.

A Local Resident.

Mr. Josiah Nix at Bromsgrove.

A very successful mission has been conducted in the Wesleyan Chapel, Bromsgrove, by Mr. Josiah Nix—his first mission as Connexional Evangelist under the Home Mission Committee. Its results show that in this as in his former sphere of labour, he is likely to be the means of great blessing to the Church, and to the unsaved masses of the people. Very large congregations were gathered together, and the town was roused. At the last service the chapel was crowded, and many had to go away. The mission was well prepared for, and the workers on the spot gave themselves to the work with devoted zeal. Mr. Nix's vigorous and attractive statements of the truth went to many hearts. The power of the Holy Spirit was manifest in all the meetings. The church has been quickened, and about 300 entered the inquiry-room. Young and old yielded to the claims of Christ. The hearts of parents and teachers were gladdened by the conversion of children and scholars. Over 300 temperance pledges were taken, about 250 being new pledges, including some of the worst drunkards in the town. On the Saturday evening the most remarkable temperance meeting ever known in the town was held, when 150 signed. In the lists of inquirers there are some from every church and chapel in Bromsgrove, and a number from the surrounding villages. E. H. M.

Faithful unto Death.

(Concluded.)

"GOD'S holy will be done!" said the poor prisoner. "Let not these miserable men think they will frighten me out of the faith of Christ by the idea of this cruel death. May my blessed Saviour only pardon me my sins, and preserve me my soul!"

Can you imagine his thoughts? Must he die—give up all memory of his fame, all hope of ever again seeing his beautiful young wife, and of enjoying the patronage and kindness of his great friend Juan Caro? Was this horrible death, then, to be the end? Was his life, after all, but a dream, and should he awake to find nothing but darkness and despair?

"I am ready now," said he, "for all that men may do," as a guard hurried him into the Pasha Ali's presence. Here he stood, a suffering prisoner in chains, before a crowd of Turks and Arabs, being buffetted and abused by those in authority.

A hooting crowd dragged him, faint with blows, to the gate of Bab-el-Wád, where the Pasha sat surrounded by his officers.

"Abjure thy foolish faith," cried Ali, "and become a true follower of Islám, and commands and provinces shall be thine to choose."

"Nothing shall separate me from the love of Christ," spake Geronimo. Slowly and clearly Ali explained to him the nature of the death he must die if he remained a Christian; every detail and torture of such a death was dwelt upon, and at last Ali said:—

"Dog of an Arab, do you refuse to return to the faith of Islám?"

"I am a Christian, and as a Christian I will die," was the response.

"As you will," replied the Pasha. "Then here," pointing to a huge stone mould, "shall you be buried alive."

"Do your will—death shall not make me abandon my Lord," were Geronimo's last words.

Some soldiers came forward, and, binding the prisoner, placed him face downwards in the mould. Liquid plaster was poured over him, and Tamango, a renegade Spaniard, wanting to prove his fervour in the Mohammedan religion, jumped on Geronimo's body, and crushed the ribs.

"Well done!" cried Ali: and others followed Tamango's example. Bleeding, suffering, dying, in the block of plaster; amid the cruel cries of his enemies, and with an African sun pouring its scorching beams upon his head, the brave, faithful, uncomplaining child of God lay there for twenty-four hours, and when the morning broke again there was one more joined to the noble army of martyrs above, "who see His face, and His Name is in their foreheads."

"But how does the world know that all this happened?" asks some little friend.

That is just the point I am going to explain to you, my readers. For three hundred years the story was told by one generation to another, until at last many persons regarded it only as a romance. But in 1853, when the wall of Bab-el-Wád was being taken down for alterations, the builders came upon a hollow in the wall and a human skeleton. The Governor recalled the story of Geronimo, and ordered plaster of Paris to be thrown into the mould, when the life-size figure of Geronimo was seen, to prove that his martyrdom was no fable.

"The cast shows a slight figure, a face with the veins all raised; a poor mouth closed, with a patient, determined expression; the hands are tied, the legs are swollen, the ribs are broken. Three hundred years of history holding its peace; and, lo! the very stones, as it were, cry out, and the noble Arab's martyrdom is brought to light."

Can we learn anything from this story of faith in Christ? Yes; it shows the power of God in the heart of Geronimo when a little child. "None shall pluck thee out of my hand"; and the all-sufficiency of the love of God in the hour of trial, when He reveals Himself to his children, and gives them strength and victory to overcome death. "Who, then, is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" (1 Chron. xxix. 5.)

M. Butler Gerds.

A Letter for You All.

MY DEAR NEPHEWS AND NIECES,—I want to ask you one or two questions which you can answer with those of the Searcher. I want you all to feel that this page is your very own, and to take your share in editing it. I want to know what you like best, and how we can best make our page really useful to one another as children of God.

First, I want to know how many of you read your Bibles regularly every morning, if only a few verses, allowing time to think about them, and to listen for the still, small voice of our Father, as He puts into our hearts the lessons we must learn from them, and shows us where we have been wrong. We can no more live a happy and useful day without that than we can do so without our breakfasts. The quiet time with God enables us to take a breakfast for our souls, just as in the half-hour at the table we get a breakfast for our bodies. If we would be strong Christians, we must feed on God's Word regularly, just as if we wish to be strong boys and girls, we must feed on the good bread and other things provided for us. And remember that the time to read the Bible is, wherever possible, BEFORE BREAKFAST.

And when you tell me if you read your Bibles every morning (or if you are going to begin now, asking God's help that you may do so all your lives), tell me if you have joined any Scripture Reading Union. If not, you will find portions for each day in the week given on this page. I will set the fourth Bible Searcher in each month from those portions.

It will interest you to know that over six hundred thousand children belonged to the Scripture Union last year, enough to make up a big city without any "grown-ups" among them! But what a curious city they would make! You can't imagine it, but I think I can, for I have seen and talked to members in ever so many countries, many of them of different colours—black children, white children, brown children, and yellow children; all of them with different dresses, far more different than you can dream of, with long hair, short hair, no hair at all, and speaking different languages—no less than thirty altogether!

Think of all these boys and girls not only reading but also praying in their different tongues! Is it not wonderful? Indeed, it is, yet though we could not understand them, Christ understands them all.

But I want you to remember something else about these children, that they are only a very few by the side of the many millions more who have not yet even heard the name of Christ. And THE DEBT OF LOVE THAT YOU AND I OWE TO CHRIST HE WANTS US TO PAY TO THEM.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 58).

All answers to be found in the Epistle to the Galatians i. to iii., except where otherwise stated. Children under ten do four, under thirteen do eight. First write chapter and verse in the margin, then give the answer in the words of Scripture. Number your answers.

1. What was accounted to Abraham for righteousness?
2. How may a man be justified?
3. By what do the just live?
4. From what part of the Old Testament is the verse answering question 3 quoted? Give that verse in full. Where else is it quoted?
5. To whom was it said, "In thee shall all nations be blessed"? Where do we find the promise recorded? In whom was it fulfilled?
6. Under what conditions may we become heirs to this promise?
7. By what did Paul say he lived?
8. Why did Christ give Himself for our sins?
9. In whom may we all be one?
10. Where and what was Galatia? (Use any book.)

OUR PROGRAMME.—In order to encourage systematic study, and that our contributors may know exactly what will be of use to us, the first week in each month will be devoted to all forms of Christian Endeavour work, as far as possible, but one phase being dealt with at a time, the Bible Searcher being on the lines of Old Testament characters, selected chronologically. The second week will be devoted to the Christian Life, and the Bible Searcher will be from consecutive portions in the Epistles. The third week will be open for Miscellaneous contributions—the shorter the better—with Miscellaneous Bible Searchers. The fourth week will be Missionary Week, with the Bible Searcher taken from the past month's portions of the Scripture Reading Union. The quarterly fifth week will be devoted to letters from our Nephews and Nieces, and the Bible Searching competition.

I have from time to time received letters from those belonging to the Searcher saying that they believed their answers correct, although their names do not appear in the correct list. In every case in which their papers have been looked up they were found incorrect. But this takes up far too much time, and in future no paper can be re-examined.

BERYL MORRIS.—Please send me your address. DOROTHY STALKER: Thank you for telling your friend about the Searcher. When we find a good thing we should always "pass it on."—MRS. MARSTON: There is no subscription for doing the Searcher, and I hope soon to hear from your little girls.—E. and A. LAWSON: I am having the rules printed on a card, which will be sent you if you will send your address; the envelope has been mislaid. See Jan. 7 issue.—JACK HARRIS: I am sorry Reg. and Tom fear they will have too much school work to be able to continue the Searcher this term, but if they did what they could of them every Sunday, they would find them really helpful. I hope you will be successful.—Elsie and Anna Cowley: Your answers to the Enigmas are very nicely done, but I only want those to the Seachers sent to me. Though too late to try for this quarter's prize, you can begin to answer at any time, and your names will be given if right. Gaining a prize is a very small matter: Bible Searching is the very important point.—Ezra Mathews: Try and get some of the Bethany House School to answer the Searchers too.—Gracie Chatterton: I hope that you will be able to take first prize, when a little older and stronger.—Jessie Bone: We shall certainly continue to regard you as one of our nieces, and hope that from your new school you may be able to introduce other nieces.—Lexie Jack: I am so glad you are going to continue the Searchers.—J. W. P. and T. Murley: Many thanks for your enigmas.—E. S. Hayward: Never mind, please go on answering.—Bessie Whitehead: The next Prize Competition will be the last week of March. After your tenth or thirteenth birthday you must do the questions for the higher division.—I am glad to welcome Victor Henry and the little Peacheys.—Maggie A. Buchanan: Thank you for your kind letter and good wishes.—Willie Edmonds: I hope you will very soon be quite well.—Dorothy Stalker: Your answer for last week came too late.

Uncle Ted.

More about the Blotters.

Dear Uncle Ted,—Again we have to thank you for a very useful parcel of blotters for our soldiers, which are greatly appreciated by them. The demand is great and constant, and we thank your kind nephews and nieces for so thoughtfully and generously supplying our wants. God has graciously blessed these little gifts, as a means to speak to our soldiers about their eternal welfare.—With repeated thanks, believe me, yours truly, L. Perks.

A Girl With Two Faces!

I heard a strange thing the other day. It was of a little girl who had two faces! When she is dressed up in her best clothes, when some friends are expected to come to tea, or when she is going out with her mother to call on some neighbours, she looks so bright and sweet and good that you would like to kiss her. With a nice white dress on, and perhaps a blue sash and pretty little shoes, she expects her mother's friends will say, "What a little darling!" or, "What a sweet face; let me kiss it!"

But, do you know, when she is alone with her mother, and no company is expected, she does not look at all the same little girl. If she cannot have what she would like, or do just what she wishes, she will pout and scream and cry, and no one would ever think of kissing her then.

So you see the little girl has two faces; one she uses in company, and puts it on just like her best dress, and the other she wears when she is at home alone with her mother.

I also know a little girl who has only one face, which is always as sweet as a peach, and never sweeter than when she is at home, and her mother wants her to be as useful as she can and help her. I think that I need scarcely ask you which of these little girls you like best, or which of them you would most like to resemble.—Olive Plants.

The Girls That Are Wanted.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good from the heart to the lips;
Pure, as the lily is white and pure
From its heart to its sweet leaf-tips.
The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand,
That fathers and brothers can trust in,
And the little ones understand.
Girls that are fair on the hearthstone.
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folks,
Ready and anxious to please.
The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to do and say;
That drive with a smile and a loving word
The gloom of the household away.—Selected.

The First Christian Martyr.—Acts vi. 8-15; vii. 54-60.

Golden Text.—Rev. ii. 10.

SINCE the day of Pentecost the history of the Christian Church has been one of progress in spite of difficulties. The presence of the Holy Ghost in fulness of power does not secure for a church or an individual believer exemption from trial and opposition, but victory over them.

The most serious difficulty that has yet troubled the Church is that described in vi. 1. "Murmuring" among the members themselves can do more to hinder the work than the most powerful opposition from without. Briefly describe the occasion for the murmuring. The Jerusalem Church included two kinds of Christian Jews:—(1) Those of Palestine, and with them such foreign Jews as used the Hebrew Scriptures; and (2) those from other lands who spoke Greek, and used the Greek instead of the Hebrew Bible. How much ground there was for the complaint of partiality does not appear. Perhaps, as in most cases, there was a misunderstanding at the basis of the murmuring. But the murmuring was there, and was calculated to hinder the Church's progress if it was not stayed.

The Apostles showed true wisdom in dealing with the difficulty (2-7). To the Church was committed the choice of seven men. Observe that while the "business" they were to do appeared of a secular character, yet they needed to be "full of the Holy Ghost" for their work. In truth there is nothing secular in connection with the Church of Christ. All service, however simple and ordinary, is sacred. The Greek names of those who were appointed suggest that the choice was made largely from the complaining party. Among these was Stephen, who soon began to develop great gifts for public service. Already the difficulty has been overruled for good. But for the murmuring which the Adversary stirred up in the Church the latent gift of Stephen might never have been known. How often Satan outwits himself.

Of the character of Stephen before he was chosen all we know is in vv. 3, 5. Note the several things said concerning him. After his election he is described as "full of grace and of power" (8, R.V.). His piety was of a beautiful character. The fruit of the Spirit appeared in him (Gal. v. 22). Yet he had "power" also. Beauty and strength were combined in him.

His work was as convincing as his character (8-10). The synagogues whose members rose in dispute with him received their names from the countries to which they belonged (9), except the first, who are called libertines because they were Roman captives who had been set free. It is not improbable that Saul was an active member of the synagogue of Cilicia. Against all these Stephen disputed, and found the truth of the Saviour's promise (Luke xxi. 15). If his arguments drawn from Scripture were unanswerable, why did not his adversaries yield? Few men have dignity enough to acknowledge defeat. Better own ourselves in the wrong than persist in defending what our conscience and judgment do not approve.

But if they could not answer these arguments of Stephen, they could persecute him (11-15). In repeating the story of these verses, show how the experiences of Jesus are reproduced in his servant. He is before the same Sanhedrim, has false accusations laid against him, and is possessed with the same inward calm, which shines out of his face (15). The only angel face in that company was that of the man who was being hounded to a cruel death.

Stephen's reply should be carefully studied. If vv. 51-53 give the application, then the aim of the narrative was to show that the Jews' opposition to Jesus was only a continuation of their conduct towards other men sent of God. Joseph and Moses were in this respect true types of Jesus Christ.

This direct personal application maddened the people (54). Every passion was roused within them. They became possessed of ungovernable rage. Yet Stephen was not ruffled. His peace grew deeper as the angry storm raged around him (55, 56). His view was not of earthly things. Heaven, and the exalted Son of Man—not sitting, but standing, as if to receive the first martyr, were present to his vision. See how our Lord gives suitable grace for every form of experience. Never fear to take your stand for Him. You will not be left alone.

The martyrdom was not a judicial act, but that of an angry mob. Stoning was the Jewish form of capital punishment. The witnesses were to cast the first stone (Deut. xvii. 6, 7). What a calamity his death appeared! Yet it teaches that death is but a sleep; that Christ gives grace to forgive; that the death of one may lead to the life of another; for after Stephen came Saul

THE PERILS OF INACTION.

In any state of leisure to which so many minds are exposed, woe and trial to the spirit that has nothing for the hands to do! Misery to him or her who emancipates himself or herself from the universal law, "In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." Evil thoughts, despondency, sensual feeling, sin in every shape is before him, to beset and madden, and often to ruin him.—F. W. Robertson.

THE SOURCE OF TRUE THEOLOGY.

There has been in this world too much of the imitation of great names and great authorities in theology, and too little of exclusive adherence to the Bible; too much human nomenclature, and too little Divine baptism. O for the spirit of combined independence and humility that characterized the noble army of martyrs and reformers! We need a greater independence of all human authority, church or individual, and a more entire dependence on the Word and the Spirit of God. This makes a true theologian; and doubtless if we could all be shut up in prison for twelve years, like Bunyan, with nothing but the Bible and Foxe's old Book of Martyrs, we too should come out with a living theology, drawn from no man's system, but ready to set all men's hearts on fire. Indeed, this is what is needed in this day of the resurrection of rites and forms and apostolical successions, and patristical authorities, and traditions of the fathers, and of the rags of Judaism itself patched and gilded anew; this return to the Scriptures solely, and the Spirit of God is what is needed.—Dr. Cheever.

Evian les Bains.

The Misses Wellington, who conduct a promising little mission at this place in the Haute Savoie, France, say in their new report: "The general work has continued; the evangelist has visited distant villages, having many opportunities of sowing the seed by the wayside and in the cafés by conversation with the men. There have been evangelistic, temperance, and lantern meetings, Sunday and Thursday school for children, women's and girls' working meetings, and English lessons to young men. Much work has been done among the sick by our indefatigable nurse, Miss Reeve, who has visited the poor in their wretched homes, doing the most disagreeable work for them in His Name, and being a comfort to many. The temperance work has made progress; it is being recognised by the authorities as a good thing for France. We were offered a room for meetings in a village about one hour distant, this we took for three months, the small sum of £2 covering all the expenses. The first few weeks, the room was filled with attentive hearers; then fierce opposition arose, and the place had to be given up. The evangelist, after nearly three years' work here, has left us. We have not as yet another to take his place, but are waiting for God to make known his will by clearly showing, as He has done before, the man suited for the work, and sending also the means for his support."

North London Laundry Workers.

In a communication telling of much blessing having come to the girls working in the new laundry at Clissold-park through the death and bright testimony of one of the young women, a correspondent says:—

"Prayer is asked on behalf of this work of God amongst girls whom many regard as 'very rough,' but who have hearts that can be reached by love and wakened by kindness. To know that now one-third of those in that laundry are on the Lord's side, causes great joy in the hearts of those who so recently started this new business, which God is blessing financially and spiritually.

"We want to form a little library for the girls, especially of Sunday reading books and magazines, and shall be so grateful if some of your readers will send us a few good and interesting books. Parcels may be addresssed to the secretary, The Hygienic Steam Laundry Co., Limited, 10a, Church-street, Stoke Newington."

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.—An interesting meeting of Christian workers was help here on Friday last. Mr. Isaac, hon. secretary, told of blessing given amongst Spanish sailors. Miss Culverwell, of the C.I.M., recently returned from Si chuen, spoke of the work begun some years ago in one of its cities by two lady workers. Some of the most ignorant and degraded of the women have been won to Christ. Rev. F. W. Baller, of the same mission, gave a deeply interesting account of the work in Shen-si province, contrasting the present state of things with that of twenty-five years ago.

Letters to the Editor.

ALTERNATIVES OF CRITICISM.

DEAR SIR,—Some of us, who profess to be no more than commonsense believers in the Bible and the "Old Gospel," contemplate, with a shudder, the alternative involved in setting aside the testimony of our Lord and Saviour to the Old Testament Scriptures or various parts thereof, in order more fully to establish certain positions maintained by modern critics. In regard to Christ's servant and apostle Paul, a scarcely less solemn alternative is involved in the disparagement or denial of his full testimony to the nature of the Gospel.

Let us examine some of the expressions which Paul uses in regard to his Gospel:—It was "committed" to him as a solemn "trust," and he was "separated" to it by "the Lord Jesus"; "taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ," the ascended Saviour; with a "woe" realised to himself, if he did not "preach it," and anathema to those who would "preach any other Gospel," which he "delivered," "as received," and, most fully entered into and plained in all its bearings towards God and man; in which he was also recognised by the other Apostles; in which (Gospel) he "gloried" (spite of its offence) and counted it the aim and end of his life and ministry to "declare," "defend," and "publish," "to all nations for the obedience of faith"; crowning all, even as Christ Himself did, by reference to the Old Testament Scriptures throughout.

In face of all this, and much more; and let alone (now) the larger or primary question of the integrity of all Scripture revelation, what alternative have they who reject, or dispute, Paul's testimony, but the perilous and even awful one of conceiving, either that he was a "gross deceiver," or, at best, grossly mistaken and deceived? Which irrational, and (surely) impious alternative, may God forbid the least thought of being entertained, in any shape or degree!—Yours faithfully,

INTEREST IN CABMEN.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to invite any of your readers who are interested in cabmen, to communicate with me, with the object of forming a union for prayer on their behalf? So much might be done by Christians everywhere, visiting the cabmen's shelters, and so few think of doing it!

God has so richly blessed very feeble efforts made in this direction, that I feel if those of us who care for cabmen could first unite in prayer together, we would find God leading us out into fresh effort for them, and raising up many new friends to care for their souls. For "No man sought after my soul" (Ps. cxlii. 4, margin) is still terribly true of numbers of cabmen everywhere.—Yours, in Christ's service,

(Miss) MARION MCBRYDE BROWN.

"THE SONG OF THE SHIRT."

DEAR SIR,—I read with interest and sorrow the words of the Vicar of St. Jude's, Birmingham, in THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 21. Surely it is the duty of every Christian woman to work and pray in this matter, or we are verily guilty concerning our suffering ill-paid sisters.

Last autumn a Christian worker from one of our large towns gave me heartbreaking instances of immorality among young women who had really been brought up respectably, but, through loss of money and friends, had been obliged to earn their own livings, and, having learned no trade, had to turn to making crochet doyleys, shirts, pinafores, etc., by which they could earn about 6d. per day, some even less than that. The worker added, "No, it is not drink so much as starvation that drives so many girls into the paths of sin and shame." We can easily believe that such incessant work, and lack of proper food and clothing, are likely to crush the self-respect and right feelings out of lonely, unprotected girls.

There are similar cases in our own village. One woman, who is not strong enough for mill work, has been obliged to work for a warehouse in town, and was paid 3½d. for making a shirt, and there she sat in her lonely cottage from early morning till late at night sewing hard, with a gnawing pain at her side, and obliged to live on porridge or gruel without milk. When I heard of her I gave her some sewing, and got friends to take their needlework, for which she was properly paid, and thus stopped the warehouse injustice.

It seems cruel to purchase "cheap bargains" in needlework, and our shops (even our good ones) are stocked with hand-made articles that tell their own tale of cruelty and injustice to the worker. Can nothing be done to stop this "sweating system"? Surely some more experienced workers can suggest some practical method of helping our untrained sisters who are willing to help themselves. Does it seem a small matter? Let us remember that "He [she] that is faithful in little is faithful also in much."—Yours truly,

Halifax. ONE IN SYMPATHY.

"A CRITIC AT THE STAKE."

SIR,—An article has been published in The King's Own for February, in which I am charged with unfairness to Dr. Baxter, of Cameron Manse, St. Andrews, who wrote a book recently in reply to Wellhausen. I am surprised at the publication of such an article without inquiry if its statements are accurate, and I am astonished that you also should pen and publish, without inquiry, such a sentence as this: "The editor of The Expository Times published communications against Dr. Baxter to which he declined to allow a reply." Let me state the facts:—

A copy of Dr. Baxter's book was sent for review. I at once inserted a brief notice of it, and then, according to my custom, published in a following issue a full review, by Professor Peake, of the Primitive Methodist College, Manchester. Now you know very well that it is only of courtesy that an editor accepts an answer from the author of a book to a review that has appeared in his columns, for he has then to give the reviewer an opportunity of reply. Yet I accepted from Dr. Baxter and published an answer to Professor Peake's review, which was a great deal longer than the review itself. Professor Peake answered that. Again Dr. Baxter replied, and most reluctantly I accepted it, and published it again, though it compelled me to admit Professor Peake's rejoinder. The matter should have ended then, and I told Dr. Baxter so. But Wellhausen himself, having seen the controversy, sent a few lines, which I inserted along with a translation. That there might be no occasion to say that this was giving an unfair advantage to one side, I published in the same number, a contribution strongly in favour of Dr. Baxter from Dr. Moore, of Philadelphia. This communication was many times the length of Wellhausen's note, and Professor Peake felt himself entitled to a reply to it. But I could not prolong the controversy, and declined to insert his reply. If anyone has reason to say I was partial to the other side, it is surely not Dr. Baxter.

Your insertion of this letter will oblige, yours truly,

THE EDITOR OF The Expository Times.

The Lord's Prayer.

(A PARAPHRASE.)

FATHER, who in heaven dwellest,
"Hallowed be thy name";
We would praise Thee who remainest
Evermore the same.
Teach us how to spread thy kingdom,
Trusting in thy love,
May we do the things which please Thee,
Like the host above.
For the inner life and outer,
Daily food provide.
May the sense of sins forgiven
Draw us to thy side.
Grant us a forgiving spirit,
Love which suffers long,
Waiting to forgive, should any
Seek to do us wrong;
From the wicket to the pearl gate
Be our guide and friend;
Stand between us and the Tempter,
Mighty to defend.
Thine the kingdom, power, and glory
Now—and without end.
May our prayer arise like incense
To the mercy-seat,
In the fragrant name of Jesus
Hear us, we entreat.

E. ELLEN TRUSTED.

Slum Babies.

WE hear of the needs of the homeless, the destitute, the street waif, the fallen, the drunkard, etc., but how few stretch forth a hand of sympathy to the babies of our back streets. We all love to fondle and caress a nice fat, warm, well-dressed "bundle," redolent of violet powder and clean clothes; but the poor slum babe, whose Sunday garment is an old coarse apron, who imbibes temporary nourishment through a piece of tobacco pipe in a ginger beer bottle; and is dragged up and down its alley in a disused soap box—who wants to love that?

A glance through the little institution known as the Walworth Crèche shows that even these dirty babes have someone to care for them. Here all sorts and conditions are fed, cleansed, and comforted for twelve and sometimes fourteen hours daily at the moderate charge of 2d. Even when that small sum cannot be raised, the helpless one is just as welcome "for His sake."

How many a sad story is represented by these tiny atoms of humanity, each a study in itself? In the corner by the fire sits a thoughtful mite of twenty months, whose parents, brothers, and sisters have just come out of the workhouse to make another start. Next to her is one with a bandaged arm, thrown out of bed by a drunken mother—the little imbecile, who is waiting admission to a suitable home; the brown-faced idol of an itinerant musician, who has relinquished its bed on a piano organ for the superior accommodation of the Crèche during the winter months; the motherless one, youngest of six, with father out of work; the delicate, puny offspring of a lately widowed mother; the babe with a doleful face, and an evident burden on its mind; the smiling, crowing one who was born good and is always good; besides the children of rag-pickers, costers, factory hands, washerwomen, and charwomen, all the very poorest of the poor, and all showing the usefulness of a crèche in a crowded neighbourhood like Walworth.

Hitherto the work has been almost entirely supported by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, and their help is again earnestly asked for. The funds in hand have been exhausted by the heavy expenses attendant upon the cold weather. Visitors are welcome any day from 2 till 4, and gifts in money or in kind will be gratefully received by the hon. supt., Mrs. F. Kinghorne, 18, Wilson-road, Camberwell, S.E.

The Central Soudan Mission.

WRITING from Gakes, Tunisia, where he has been working for four months, Mr. Hermann G. Harris says:—

"For three months we have had a hall open daily for the preaching of the Gospel and distribution of the Scriptures. Numbers of natives, as well as Europeans, have come in and heard the Gospel. They have also received Scripture portions and tracts. Some weeks ago we were ordered by the local authorities not to distribute any books or tracts in our meeting. But, believing that I have a perfect right, I have continued doing it, with the result that to-day I have been summoned before the Juge de Paix, and condemned to pay a fine of thirty francs for breaking the law of the land. I had a good opportunity in the court of witnessing for Christ, and read out of the Gospel of Mark the command to preach the Gospel to every creature. Some of the French soldiers manifest real desire to live for Christ, and are, we trust, truly born again. Some also of the Jews and Arabs appear to be also either truly convinced or else earnestly seeking after something better than they have found in their own religion. Doubtless the enemy of souls is seeking to get us turned out of the country; but we trust God will defeat him. I shall refuse to pay the fine, as I prefer rather to suffer imprisonment or expulsion from the country."

St. John's Mission Hall, Earl's Court.—In connection with the labours of Mr. Jrson, L.C.M. missionary to public-houses, a tea was given by Miss Richardson to a number of men from the public-houses of the neighbourhood. Dr. Moinet was in the chair, and a number of Christian ladies from his church helped to render the meeting pleasing and profitable. After prayer by Mr. E. Osborne, Dr. Moinet, Captain H. Lowe, Mr. R. Smith, and others spoke, and many of the men seemed greatly moved.

Work at Highgate Road.

The twentieth anniversary gathering of the church at Highgate-road Chapel was held on February 3. After tea, a large public meeting was held in the chapel, the pastor presiding.

The church secretary, Mr. Raynes, reported that eighty-five new members had been added during the past year, forty-one on a first profession of faith. On the other hand, forty-eight had been dismissed to other churches, or their names, from removals and various causes, dropped from the church roll; while six had "fallen asleep" in Jesus. The net increase had been thirty-one. The present number of members was 724. It was felt by all how greatly blessed the church had been under the nineteen years' ministry of their pastor, James Stephens, M.A. The clear testimony of the church, especially on three points—the infallibility and authority of the Word of God, the carrying on of spiritual work without the aid of human or worldly attractions, and the raising of funds to carry on God's work in God's own way—had been kept to the front during the year. The number of scholars in the Sunday-school was 609; officers and teachers, 53.

The treasurer of the church, Mr. James Coxeter, read a most satisfactory balance-sheet, showing that £789 had been contributed for foreign missions during the year; while for church expenses, including the remaining cost of the new mission hall, electric lighting of chapel and schoolrooms, and various home missions, had been £905.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. W. R. Lane, who dwelt with great earnestness and power on the Christian's position and duty as a steward of the manifold grace of God. Messrs. A. G. Shorrock, B.A., and Percy Bruce, B.A. (members of the church), missionaries in connection with Baptist Missionary Society gave interesting addresses on their work in China. The pastor concluded with prayer.

"Your New Religion."

Dr. Mary J. Hill writes as to the Medical Mission in Chiningchow, China:—"We have had a large attendance at the hospital. Our rooms for the women are very small and too few to accommodate all the patients wishing to remain with us. It is very hard for us to say we cannot keep them when they come so far and are so anxious to remain for treatment. I feel that these women are sent to us not merely for the benefit we give them physically, and I long to have them remain and hear about the Great Physician, who has led them to us. There is a wide field in Chiningchow for work among the women, and I hope we shall prove true to the charge given us, and do the work only as God would have us. We had some very serious cases last season, that cost us many anxious thoughts and fervent prayers that we might be guided aright in our treatment, and that the friends of the patients might be led to look more favourably on us and the 'doctrine.' A woman from whose face we removed a large growth said one morning, 'Are you glad this lump has gone?' and when we said 'Yes,' she replied, 'Well, I do not understand how it is you are glad, and yet you are strangers. How is it you are so interested in me? It must be your 'new religion.'"

Boulogne.—A correspondent sends an encouraging account of the progress of the McAll Mission work at Marquise, near Boulogne, and adds: The little movable iron room, which is not now large enough for Marquise, is to be moved to another village, and its place will be supplied by a larger permanent room.

St. Kilda.—An interesting account of the state of affairs on this island, socially and religiously, appears in the current Free Church of Scotland Monthly. The inhabitants all adhere to the Free Church, and Rev. Angus Fiddes acts both as pastor and schoolmaster. He says they are "a serious and devout people." The island suffers much from sea storms, and the church buildings are unhealthy from the excessive damp. An appeal is made for £350 to do needful repairs.

Requests for Prayer.—For a great outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on a series of mass meetings for young men at the Victoria Theatre, Walthamstow, Feb. 22, 23, and 24; Conference Hall, Stratford, March 2, 3, and 4; Town Hall, Shoreditch, March 9, 10, and 11; Y.M.C.A., Hackney, March 13 to 19. Special addresses on intemperance, impurity and gambling.—For special addresses to Christians at Hounslow.—For blessing on evangelistic services to be held in First Monaghan Presbyterian Church by Mr. B. W. Jackson.—For blessing on meetings conducted by W. R. Bradlaugh, at Bolton and Blackburn, Feb. 8 to March 2.—For blessing on a mission at Crockham Hill, Kent (February 14 to 21), by B H. Angel.—For a young man dying of consumption, to whom the unknown has neither hopes nor fears.

THE BOOK WORLD.

HELP FOR PREACHERS.

The Preacher's Complete Homiletic Commentary on the New Testament is a very useful work in ten volumes, issued by Funk & Wagnalls Co., 44, Fleet-street, E.C. The first four volumes, dealing with the Gospels, are before us, and a careful examination has impressed us with the excellence of the plan on which they have been prepared, and the practical character of the work as a whole. The volumes have been written and compiled as follows:—Matthew, by Revs. W. Sunderland Lewis, M.A., and H. M. Booth; Mark, by Rev. J. H. Burn, B.D.; Luke, by Rev. J. Willcock, B.D.; and John, by Rev. W. Frank Scott. The method of treatment includes introductory matter, and critical and exegetical notes; and then, the chapters having been divided into sections, there are homiletics on the paragraphs, followed by outlines on the verses, with suggestive notes and other illustrative material. Every verse or clause that can with advantage be used for sermonic purposes seems to have had the attention of the authors of these volumes, who have specially had in mind the needs of ministers who are at once overworked in body and limited in the compass of their libraries. The best works of exposition, old and new, as well as the product of great masters of preaching, have been laid under contribution, and the volumes are good in substance and convenient in arrangement. Being all in English, this commentary will be particularly welcome to those who are unable to benefit by discussions on quotations from the original Greek.

A SURVEY OF THE BIBLE.

A year or so ago there was published in sectional volumes a large work entitled The People's Bible History, and special attention was directed to the undertaking by reason of the fact that the introductory chapter was from the pen of Mr. Gladstone, the octogenarian statesman. Produced in sumptuous style, the work was too expensive for many who would delight to possess it; so we welcome a popular edition, just issued by the Christian Commonwealth Publishing Company (£1 to £1 10s., according to binding). On the title-page this handsome volume of 940 large pages is described as "Prepared in the Light of Recent Investigations by some of the Foremost Thinkers in Europe and America." There are many illustrations after the works of famous artists, also several carefully prepared and beautifully finished maps.

The editor, Rev. George C. Lorimer, LL.D., of Boston, has had the assistance of many well-known scholars in the production of this history, which is by no means adequately described when it is said that it unfolds Divine Revelation from the story of beginnings in Genesis to the Triumph of Christianity in the fourth century of our era. The volume is divided into "books" from the pens of writers representing different Churches, and some of the books include many chapters. After Mr. Gladstone's introduction, which is a closely reasoned and eloquent appeal for the Scriptures, Professor Sayce opens the subject of Old Testament literature and history, being followed by Professor Ives Curtiss on the manuscripts of the Old Testament. The next book is by Dean Farrar, "From the Creation to the Dawn of Human History." Though full of learning, this contribution is not of a piece with the work as a whole, but is excessively controversial, and introduces questions of criticism, even to the point of suggesting the presence in the early chapters of the Bible of "naturalistic myth and idealising moral fiction." The succeeding writers on the Old Testament are Drs. E. H. Capen, F. W. Gunsaulus, G. F. Pentecost, R. S. MacArthur, M. Summerbell, F. M. Bristol, and W. T. Moore. The treatment is uniformly full and eminently readable.

Dr. E. E. Hale having given a succinct account of the "four silent centuries," and described the writings called "Apocrypha," Professor J. Agar Beet deals with the literature of the New Testament, and Professor C. René Gregory tells the story of the manuscript of the New Testament. Then follows a book by Professor W. Cleaver Wilkinson on the life of Christ from the birth to the crucifixion; Professor Samuel Hart continuing the sublime narrative till the ascension. These books furnish a new Life of Christ, and deserve an honoured place among studies of their kind. Dr. J. Monro Gibson contributes "From the Outpouring of the Spirit to the Death of St. Paul" and Dr. Lorimer writes the concluding book, "From the Fall of Jerusalem to the Triumph of Christianity."

We understand that this great work has been several years in preparation, and involved an expenditure of over £20,000 before the first copy was sold! We have expressed disappointment in one particular, but, taken as a whole, the work is a mine of information well digested, and forcefully applied to the explanation of Holy Writ. A full index adds to its usefulness for purposes of reference. This is a capital book for presentation to a pastor or any other thoughtful and discriminating Christian worker.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Church and Household, 1896. Edited by Rev. D. Davies. (Marlborough & Co.) A useful and wholesome home monthly, well adapted for localising. The volume, with its varied contents and numerous illustrations, should find its way to many homes and village libraries.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit. Vol. xlii. Sermons preached by C. H. Spurgeon. Revised and published during the year 1896. (7s. Passmore & Alabaster.) The discourses in this volume proclaim their source and character to the most superficial reader. They have the characteristics of grace and truth, point and vigour which belong to all the work of the great preacher. While such sermons remain, of the thousands that Mr. Spurgeon delivered in the course of his long and blessed ministry, this valuable series of volumes will continue to grow, not only in the world of books, but on also the library shelves of preachers and teachers at home and abroad.

Regions Beyond is not only the organ of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions and its associated evangelistic undertakings, but an advocate of world-wide aggressive work. While looking on the things of Harley House and the Congo-Balolo Mission, Dr. Grattan Guinness has a sympathetic regard also for the things of others—the needs of heathen lands and the operations of all societies that are advancing the Kingdom of God among men. As a monthly this serial is a welcome visitor. The annual volume is a treasury of valuable information and a record of earnest work in many countries. The pages are fully illustrated, and eminently readable. (4s. 3d., post free. Harley House, Bow, E.)

Demon Possession and Allied Themes. This work, by the late Dr. J. L. Nevius, published in America, and reviewed at length in our issue of January 7, may be procured in England (price 7s. 6d.) from Mr. George Redway, 9, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, London, W.C.

Footsteps of Truth. Edited by C. Russell Hurditch. (J. F. Shaw & Co. 1d.) The January issue of this monthly opens with a portrait and sketch of Dr. Pentecost, and the February issue with that of the late Mr. J. Gordon Oswald. There is besides much helpful expository and general matter.

"Mrs. Pumpkin" Series, Illustrated, Nos. I., II., and III. By Mrs. Harrison Lee. (6d. each. National Temperance League Depôt.) These pamphlets, dealing with Gospel truth, the Temperance question, domestic and social life, written in dialect, are replete with "gay wisdom." A humorous and breezy freshness pervades them, and several passages on the habit of tobacco-smoking are exceedingly good. These publications will be immensely helpful and suggestive to leaders of temperance meetings, P.S.A.'s, and kindred gatherings.

Cane Basket Work: A Practical Manual on Weaving Useful and Fancy Baskets. By Annie Firth. (1s. 6d. L. Upcott Gill.) Fully illustrated, this book should at once promote a remunerative industry, and encourage an agreeable occupation for persons of leisure. Those who would provide acceptable articles for sales on behalf of charitable objects, may here learn where to buy materials, and how to produce cane-work goods. The author generously gives her address, and promises further information to such as may require it in the application of her instructions.

The Lights of the North. By James Stark, D.D. (Wylie & Son, Aberdeen.) These chapters, illustrating the rise and progress of Christianity in North-Eastern Scotland, form a most welcome and valuable contribution to the religious history of our land. Dr. Stark has taken evident pains not only to search out and marshal his facts, but to present them in a condensed and interesting way. From the early days of Columba down to the memorable Revival times of 1859, he traces the risings and development of spiritual religion in a region that has been the scene of much of God's working in the hearts of men. The chapter on "Samuel Rutherford in Aberdeen" will be specially interesting to general readers. In his closing chapter on the present outlook, the author shows much insight and judgment. He has earned the hearty thanks of all north-country people for this well-planned and well-executed excursion into the past.

The "Times" of Prophecy is an easy catechism, more particularly upon Daniel, by the author of "Is It an Epoch? 1896-1900." A remarkable amount of information is here given in an eminently readable form. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

In response to a widely expressed wish on the part of subscribers to the just commenced cheap serial edition of Bishop Ellicott's Bible Commentary, Messrs. Cassell and Co. have decided to change the form of issue from monthly to weekly. Part 2 will be published Feb. 25, part 3 March 9, and the subsequent parts weekly thereafter.

The Y.M.C.A.

Devonport Y.M.C.A. held its annual meeting on the 3rd inst., at the Public Hall. The Mayor of Devonport (Mr. W. J. Waycott) presided. Mr. W. Hind-Smith delivered an address.

In the absence of the Mayor (Mr. Rockley), Alderman Callard presided at the annual meeting of the Torquay Y.M.C.A. Addresses were delivered by Revs. A. P. Cox and H. Arnaud Scott.

At a meeting held by the Worthing Association to inaugurate work in the new premises which it has entered, an offer was kindly made by the Mayor to furnish a room, to be called the "Victoria" room, in celebration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee.

The adjourned annual meeting of the Coventry Association was held on Thursday, and there was a large attendance. The roll of members had gone up to 170. New members are being enrolled at the rate of ten every week. The Bible-class and prayer-meetings are full of vigour, and the outlook is very promising.

In the subscriptions for the new buildings of the southern section of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., Lord Overtoun heads the list with £500, and contributions of £100 each are given by Sir John Stirling Maxwell, Bart., M.P., Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P., Mr. David Dreghorn, J.P., and Mr. A. Lamberton.

A meeting of the National Executive was held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, when, in the absence of Sir George Williams, Mr. W. H. Seagram occupied the chair, supported by Professor H. L. Orchard, Mr. F. W. Lawrence, etc. Among other questions considered were those of the best means of celebrating the Queen's Diamond Jubilee and of helping the fund for the relief of the famine-stricken in India.

The second annual meeting of the Omagh Association has been held under the presidency of Mr. J. G. R. Porter. The report submitted by the hon. sec., Mr. W. Thompson, was full of encouragement. Weekly meetings had been continued throughout the year, as well as cottage meetings, etc.; educational classes had been successfully carried on; and a special mission conducted by Mr. J. Stuart Holden had been fraught with blessing.

The anniversary of the Tunbridge Wells Association was celebrated on Wednesday. A drawing-room meeting in the afternoon was addressed by Rev. Sydenham Dixon, of Park Chapel, Chelsea, Rev. Mr. Storey, of Tunbridge Wells, and Mr. W. H. Mills. In the evening the meeting was attended by about 900 persons. Col. Russell occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Sydenham Dixon and Rev. H. E. Stone.

At the annual meeting of the Eastbourne Association it was reported that eighty-two new members had been enrolled during the year; that the finances had been much improved, and that no fewer than seven missions in the district were being manned by Y.M.C.A. members; 250 books had been added during the twelve months to the library, and in other respects the work has been greatly improved under the administration of Mr. A. Thomas, the secretary.

By the kind invitation of Mr. W. H. Seagram a reception was given on Tuesday evening, at Exeter Hall, to waiters engaged at various hotels and boarding-houses in the district. Between 250 and 300 young men attended. Refreshments were served at 10 o'clock, and a meeting was held from a quarter to 11 to midnight, at which addresses were given by Rev. J. Poynder, Mr. J. Steinle (Eastbourne). Solos were sung by Miss Ada Rose and Mr. F. Howe. Mr. Nadrop also spoke, who superintends the Waiters' Home, Clipston-street, W.C., where Bible-classes and other meetings are held for waiters.

During the past seven years the Associations in Devon and Cornwall have been more than doubled in number, whilst the membership has increased from 977 to 3489. The new freehold premises, secured by the Penzance Association and opened by Dr. Hingston, on February 2, make a total of eleven central well-adapted buildings in the principal towns of the south-western district. This exceeds the record of any district in the United Kingdom.

The missionary committee of the Scottish National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s are prepared to send a secretary to Lahore, India, to work among the students and young men of that city. At present there is an association and a building at Lahore, and anyone going to do work among the young men would receive a cordial welcome from the missionaries and Christian workers. Anyone desiring information regarding the position will obtain particulars from Mr. W. M. Oatts, Y.M.C.A., Glasgow.

The Dumbarton Association is doing a good work in its new premises. The buildings were bought by Lord Overtoun and presented to the Association. A handsome addition has been made to them, which makes them eminently suitable for the objects of the Association. To enable the Association to make this addition a subscription list was opened which Lord Overtoun topped with a subscription of £1500. The accommodation now provided comprises a spacious and fully-equipped gymnasium, a large and comfortable hall, and a library and reading-room.

Our readers will learn with regret that Mr. Robert Burn has resigned his position as secretary of the Y.M.C.A., at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., and of the central noon prayer-meeting. During the eighteen years that Mr. Burn has filled these important offices, he has by his high Christian character and warm-hearted courtesy endeared himself to thousands of young men and to a very wide circle of Christian workers. We learn that it is proposed to present to Mr. Burn a substantial token of love and esteem. Friends wishing to participate may communicate with Mr. J. H. Putterill, at Exeter Hall.

The Johannesburg Association reports that all the agencies in this far-off Transvaal town have not been without success. The distinctively religious agencies have been much owned and blessed. Testimony from those attending it show the benefit that has been derived from the workers' training class conducted each Sabbath morning by the general secretary. His conversational Bible-class has likewise been proved a source of help to many young men. The "straight-talk" meeting for men only, and the efforts put forth in the open air and in the evangelistic meeting, have also been the means of salvation. A social purity crusade is being waged at present against the influence of the great social evil so prevalent in this city. Many have already taken the White Cross purity pledge, and have joined the League. The Association is trying hard to get a library together, for which there is urgent need. This is a matter which English Christians who have friends and relatives (young men) out there may well take up. £250 are needed, as well as parcels of books. The secretary is Mr. W. McCulloch.

The Y.W.C.A.

Rev. G. Everard gave an address at the annual tea of the Hampstead branch, urging his hearers to "write their names on human hearts, the only immortal monuments."

On the 19th ult. a conversazione was held at the Macclesfield branch. There was a large gathering of members and friends, presided over by Mrs. Hobby, and an enjoyable evening was spent.

The annual meeting of the Exeter branch has been recently held. There are 200 members belonging to the institute. A small home for servants arriving from a distance is much needed.

At the monthly literary and work meeting of the Moffat Y.W.C.A. there was a large attendance of members. Miss M'Laren, Hartfell House, read an interesting paper on her travels in China and Japan.

A public meeting in connection with the Rochdale branch was held, when Miss Scott presided, and Miss Morley delivered an impressive address on the main objects of the Association. There is an adverse balance of nearly £100.

The committee of the Teignmouth Y.W.C.A. is anxious to provide rooms where young women can spend their evenings in a pleasant manner. They therefore appeal for help towards defraying the cost of a year's rent for a flat which they propose taking.

The annual meeting of the Cambridge Y.W.C.A. was held at Regent House on the 26th ult. Prof. Ryle presided. The Association is in a more satisfactory condition than it has been for some time. Testimony was given by various speakers to the necessity and usefulness of the work.

Dr. Jackson presided at the annual meeting of the Whitehaven branch. Mrs. Bragg, in her report stated that amongst other things great interest had been shown by the members in foreign missionary work, which had been well supported during the past year. Miss Entrican, travelling secretary, in her address showed the advantages of the association in binding young women together and surrounding them with Christian influences.

The members of the Crouch End branch held their annual meeting on Thursday, 28th ult. Mrs. Hindley presided, and Rev. C. Brown spoke in warm terms of the work that was being done. Reports were read by several of the workers, and addresses were given by Miss Hodges and Rev. H. Laurence. An appeal was made for money and furniture (a piano being especially mentioned), as the committee had decided to prepare the house for the reception of boarders.

The Bridlington Quay branch had a visit from Miss Whitwell on Feb. 2, to widen and deepen interest in Y.W.C.A. work in the town. The secretary and members invited the ladies to an afternoon meeting and tea, when a representative committee was formed, to whom Miss Whitwell gave an earnest address on John xvii. 18. The question of having a holiday home was again discussed. The clear air and bracing sea breezes make it a very desirable place for a home for tired workers and young women from large towns.

The twenty-ninth anniversary of the Torquay branch has been observed with thankfulness and enthusiasm. The report was read by the hon. secretary, Miss Jessie Coombs. Rev. Arnaud Scott, Mrs. Cox, Rev. F. W. Dodd, Alderman Callard, Mr. G. W. Williams, and Mr. Thacker testified to the good work the Association and the Home were doing. The Mayor, Mr. J. F. Rockley, J.P., presided at the evening meeting, when Rev. Evan Edwards, Mrs Dodd, and the vicar of Christ Church, Rev. A. P. Cox, gave heart-stirring addresses. There are 320 bonâ fide members, not including the boarders in the Home, and about eighty in the Sunday Bible-class who are not members of the Association.

Christian Endeavour.

A vigorous convention, largely attended, has been held in Barnsley.

There are in the city of New York 6777 members of Christian Endeavour societies. In numbers the Presbyterians lead.

Revs. Dr. C. A. Berry and Dr. G. S. Barrett have accepted invitations to deliver addresses at the forthcoming National C.E. Convention in Liverpool.

The secretary of the Langholm C.E. Union reports a successful series of open-air meetings during the summer months. The visitation of the lodging-houses has also been carried on with vigour.

The Cavendish branch of Y.P.S.C.E., Ramsgate, has celebrated its third anniversary. The public meeting was conducted by the pastor and president, Rev. T. Hancocks. Ministers were present from neighbouring towns. An united consecration meeting was also held, when the roll was called by the chairman.

Star Villa Orphan Home.

The fifteenth annual meeting of this Home, Clive Vale, Hastings, was held at the Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday week. The report of Mrs. Willis (hon. superintendent) stated that since the opening about 120 fatherless and motherless children had been fed, clothed, and educated in the Home. At present we have only twenty-seven in number, some having recently left. We continue to receive satisfactory accounts of our girls in service.

The Chairman, Rev. E. Joyce, said that meeting was called a thanksgiving one on account of the many blessings the Home had received. There had been a change in the management of the Home Mrs. Willis had been suffering from imperfect health, and though she had not lost her sight, she had been attacked with something approaching to that. They realised that some help would have to be forthcoming. They advertised, and providentially they had in response the advent of Miss Redlor She had come there to help Mrs. Willis, and to give her services without any salary. Already she had gained the confidence of the superintendent and the affection of the children.

The Sialkot Mission expects to be reinforced by two new ordained missionaries, Revs. R. R. McClure and O. Crowe, and Miss Josephine Martin, daughter of Dr. S. Martin, of Sialkot. Recent revival meetings show how much we have the right to expect and how much God will bless us. Some of the problems of self-support will be solved when a man, willing to take what the people will give, and not depend on foreign funds, wheresoever raised, comes out. Some have and others will, as a result of these meetings, give themselves thus up a living sacrifice. —Occasional paper.

The Florence Mission of Kansas City, Mo., is doing a wonderful work. At a recent anniversary celebration the managers said that during the past month six thousand women and men had been present at the meetings, and one hundred and forty-six of them had declared themselves determined in Christ's strength to renounce their sinful lives. A large number of women, some of whom are well educated and come of highly respectable families, have been rescued from lives of shame and are now in the home, and give evidences of their being truly converted.

The Women's Holiday Fund, the object of which is to send for a short holiday to the seaside, or into the country, hardworking and deserving women who require rest and change, but who cannot themselves meet the expense which a holiday entails, reports that ninety-four women have been sent to Homes of Rest at Felixstowe, Brighton, Birchington, Herne Bay, Thanet, Broadstairs, Southend, Folkestone and Dover. Twenty-six more were boarded out for a fortnight or three weeks in country cottages in Surrey, Essex, Hampshire and Berkshire. The testimony of the women themselves as to the benefits derived has been most satisfactory. The Honorary Secretary is Miss Gertrude Burt, 47, St. James' Square, W.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OXFORD.

A very successful meeting was held in the Hannington Memorial Hall at its formal opening. Sir John Kennaway, M.P., presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. F. J. Chavasse, Rev. H. E. Fox, and the Rector of Exeter College. The upper room, which holds about 250, was well filled with members of the University and others.

The Sunday evening Greek Testament reading and the weekly missionary meeting will be held in the hall, and it is to be generally a centre for Christian work among the members of the University. There is still about £1000 needed to clear off the debt.

At the first meeting of the Missionary Union this term the address was given by Dr. Handley Moule, and contained much that was valuable. Bishop Tucker spoke at the second meeting, and was listened to by a large number of undergraduates. He is a favourite in Oxford.

Sermons for members of the University have been arranged for Sunday evenings in the University Church. The first was delivered by the Bishop of Oxford. Canon McCormick preached in the University Church in the afternoon.

CAMBRIDGE.

The C.M.U. meeting on Friday last was addressed by Rev. J. E. Peck, of North-West Canada, who gave an interesting account of his work in the mission field.

The University sermon on Sunday was preached by Professor Cheetham. The sermon took the form of the second Hulsean lecture, and was a continuation of last Sunday's parallel between the Pagan and Christian mysteries.

The C.U.C.G. sermon at 8.30 p.m. was preached by Rev. A. F. Winnington Ingram, of the Oxford House. His text was taken from 1 Tim. vi. 20: "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vane babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called." He spoke with great force and pathos, and there were probably many in the unusually large congregation who learned lessons which will not easily be forgotten.

Scottish Notes.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has been conducting a Gospel mission in Forfar with large audiences and much interest.

Gospel services illustrated by limelight views have been conducted in the St. Nicholas U.P. Church, Aberdeen, by Rev. William Baird, the recognised evangelist of the U.P. Church.

The Conference of ministers of the Free Church which has been held in Dunblane Hydropathic for several years, will be held again in the same place this year, from March 16 to 18. The subject of conference, we believe, is to be the Person of Christ.

A deputation has visited the Secretary for Scotland urging the educational claims of over 600 children of travelling tinkers in Scotland for whom no training is provided at present.

Rev. Thomas Brown, minister of the Free Church, Greengairs, died at his manse there last week. The deceased gentleman went to Greengairs between fourteen and fifteen years ago, and has since continued the faithful and devoted minister of the Free Church congregation in that mining district. He was of a quiet, unassuming character; he and his wife were very much respected among the people of the district, towards whom they were very generous, and took an interest in their general welfare. Mr. Brown is survived by a widow and four sons and a daughter.

The F.C. Monthly for the current month records many hopeful signs of revival throughout Scotland. Reference is made to the recent general mission in Aberdeen, to Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins's meetings, to recent effort by Brothers Weaver and Mr. George Clarke, to a time of much spiritual reviving in Hawick, to special meetings in Blairgowrie, and to the general mission just held in some fifty churches of the Edinburgh Presbytery. The Monthly says:—"The desire for and expectation of blessing are very general, and warrant us to hope that Mr. Moody's prediction may be fulfilled here as well as in America."

House of Rest.—Rev. W. Fuller Gooch spoke at the monthly meeting last Friday afternoon, at 10, Finchley-road, on "The bright light in the clouds," and he drew many suggestive and striking lessons from the uses of natural clouds, showing that in the spiritual life trials and sorrows are as necessary to the Christian's growth in grace as clouds are to the well-being of the earth. The evening meeting was addressed by Lieut.-Col. Oldham.

Transatlantic Notes.

Mr. Francis Murphy and Rev. Sam Jones are conducting missions in Boston simultaneously with Mr. Moody.

March 20, Neal Dow's birthday, is henceforth to be kept as "Prohibition Day" by the National W.C.T. Union.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's present ten days' stay in America will be divided up between Boston (Feb. 4-7) and New York (Feb. 8-12).

A successful missionary convention has been held at Toronto by the Methodists of Canada. Some 30,000 persons were present.

Mr. Charles T. Studd is now engaged in visiting colleges in the United States, urging the students to a life of consecration and devotion to missions.

Not less than 400,000 young people have enrolled themselves in the Order of King's Daughters and Sons, which seeks to assist every department of Christian work.

General Booth is to conduct a mammoth "fall campaign" in the United States, including the dedication of twenty-five American officers as missionaries to the heathen.

The hundredth birthday of the late Mary Lyon, founder of Mt. Holyoke College for Women, has been celebrated. Thousands have gone out from this institution to help in blessing the world.

On Friday last, February 5, Mr. Moody's sixtieth birthday, he was presented with £6000, collected by friends on both sides of the sea for the erection of a church at the Boys' School, Mount Hermon.

Lady Aberdeen has suggested that in Canada the measures commemorative of the Queen's long reign should take the form of a "Victorian Order of Home Helpers," who could care for the sick and the suffering.

A writer in the New York Independent calls attention to the fact that many young students lose their Christian faith at college, and demands that college trustees "shall give us not simply literary experts, but sound, godly men to take charge of our boys during these critical years."

South African Mission Notes.

Mr. Walton writes that Miss Harris has been ill with malarial fever in Swazieland, but she is well again. Mr. Suter has been down with typhoid fever in Durban; while he is much better, he is still weak.

Miss Haupt and Miss van Reenen are now in Johannesburg, where they will probably remain a couple of months, when they hope to return to the village work in which they have been so abundantly blessed.

Material is now on its way to Makowe for the new station for Mr. and Mrs. Keys. There seems every prospect of two new stations being started at Lake St. Lucia. Mr. Haigh, who was converted in the work at Durban, is building the station for Mr. Keys.

Locusts have appeared again in Swazieland and Pondoland, and the young mealies have been destroyed. There is great lack of food in Bomvanaland, the North of the Transvaal, and certain parts of Swazieland and Zululand. The rinderpest is raging in the Transvaal and is threatening the whole of South Africa.

The meetings for Jews in Johannesburg have got to a very satisfactory stage—called by some "The Rotten Egg Stage!" We always hold a preliminary open-air meeting before marching up to our hall. At the last open-air meeting nearly every person in the ring received at least one rotten egg. Miss Arnot managed to escape, we believe, though a certain Jew made three attempts to prevent her being an exception. Some received the bad egg in the face, others on the back, some on the head, and so on. Certain Jews who were not "lewd fellows of the baser sort" were most indignant at the treatment of our workers. The indoor meeting after this attack was about the best we have had, as the questions asked showed a real desire to know the truth. Pray on for the Jews.—South Africa's Pioneer.

The Powers and the Sultan.—It is very humbling to see all the Great Powers of Europe defied, and, one might almost say, treated with contempt, by the Sultan. Not one of these can move without the concurrence of the others, and, knowing this, Abdul Hamid evidently concludes that he may continue to take his own way. It is not creditable to the ambassadors that what seems to have moved them at last to threaten coercion is fear for the money of the Turkish bondholders. One would have had more satisfaction if the threats had come earlier, and in the interest of the Armenians; but whether or no, we shall be glad if, on any ground, a period is at last to be put to the disastrous misrule of the Ottoman Empire.—F. C. of Scotland Monthly.

Temperance Notes.

The Newcastle Temperance Society has decided to hold a mission a few weeks before the great Prohibition convention which is to be held in Newcastle early in April, and has secured the services of Mr. Tennyson Smith.

A Veto Bill, a Bill to Amend the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, and one to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays in England, have been read a first time in the House of Commons. The English Sunday Closing Bill was down for second reading on February 10.

A man charged in a London police-court with drunkenness asked if he could sign the pledge there and then. The magistrate said the missionary who was present would no doubt be glad to give him the opportunity, and prisoner and missionary proceeded to another room for the purpose.

On Thursday evening a large audience gathered at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end, on the occasion of the Temperance Festival in connection with the inauguration of the Tower Hamlets Branch of the London United Temperance Council. The chair was occupied by Mr. A. F. Hills. Mr. F. N. Charrington and Rev. C. Chambers spoke, and finally it was agreed that the societies of the district should lend their support to United Council.

An officer of one of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company's station boats writes on Christmas night from off St. Lucia: "I managed to get ashore in the morning and attended service. The ship had previously hauled away from the wharf to a buoy, in order that the crew might not get ashore, and spend a lot of money on drink; but it seemed an unnecessary precaution, as when evening came round, and grog was served out, only about four men would have any, all the rest being, apparently, abstainers. It is not often one comes across a crew of white men like that."

For the first time, perhaps, in the history of the City Companies, a temperance meeting has been held in one of their halls. A largely attended meeting convened by the National Temperance League was held in the Leathersellers' Hall, under the presidency of the Master (Dr. W. H. Perkin), supported by the members of the League's executive and their lady friends. It was mentioned that an appeal will be made for £10,000 to prosecute a forward movement in connection with the sixtieth year of the Queen's reign, for the purpose of greatly increasing the number of abstainers before the dawn of the twentieth century.

The Headquarters Branch of the Army Temperance Association is composed of pensioners and reservists from all parts of the United Kingdom. Meetings are held monthly in St. George's Barracks. General Lord Methuen has presided several times. Many of these men are musicians, and they have started a band; but unless friends help by sending some musical instruments, such as clarionets, cornets, violins etc., they will not be able to make much headway. The object of the band is to assist at A.T.A. meetings and civil societies. The members are earnest Christian men, and are deserving of national support. Gifts should be marked, "Headquarters Branch," the Secretary, A.T.A., 47, Victoria-street, S.W.

King Khama, in spite of the rinderpest and the famine, sticks to it that there is no plague like liquor to destroy a nation. "Here in our country," he writes to Mr. Grant Mills, of the Native Races and Liquor Traffic United Committee, "there are Europeans who like liquor exceedingly, and they are not people who like to save a nation, but to seek that a nation may be destroyed by liquor." Khama hopes that the Englishmen at home will save this nation of his, but he sees "the path of the train" with apprehension as well as joy, because of "the little houses which will be in the path to sell liquor." "Help me in this matter," he cries appealingly, "for it is a thing which will kill the nation."

The London United Temperance Council celebrated its second anniversary on Wednesday evening at the Chelsea Town Hall. Canon Fleming was in the chair, supported by Mr. J. H. Raper and Mr. Conrad Dillon. The council is a union of existing temperance organisations, the representatives of which meet periodically to consult as to the best means of advancing the cause generally by carrying out any united action that may be agreed upon. Whilst keeping steadily in view this main principle, the council does not interfere with the rules of any existing organisation, except by stipulating that for the purposes of united action the principles of total abstinence shall be adopted. The objects of the council were fully dealt with by the chairman and other speakers, and a resolution in support of the movement was adopted. The annual meetings of the National British Women's Temperance Association are arranged to be held on the week beginning Sunday, May 30; the council and business meetings on June 1, 2, and 3, in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross

N.E. London Gospel Mission.

The trustees of this Mission, seeing that the funds for its due maintenance have for some time given cause for grave anxiety, have issued a letter, in which they say :—

Distinctly evangelistic in character, its operations are carried on at various centres in N.E. London under well-qualified missionaries and visitors, and embrace a wide variety of agencies, the primary aim being to bring the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour to the poorer classes by whom they are surrounded; and secondly to afford such well-considered temporal help and succour as the vicissitudes of the suffering and destitute so constantly present. It would not be easy to measure the spiritual results of these thirty years of continuous Gospel ministry. Suffice it to say, that some of the converts are now preaching the Gospel, both in home and foreign mission fields, while of the one hundred or more voluntary workers in the London work, most of them are the direct fruit of the labourers themselves.

It is painful to contemplate the disaster to the poor the closing of such ministrations would mean. The mission-halls with their bright services; institutes for workroom and match factory girls; ragged-school classes for gutter lads; Sunday-schools of 1500 children; widows' sewing classes; clubs for the encouragement of thrift; soup kitchens; free dinners for hungry children; meals for starving men, and all the other activities usually found in what are known as mission centres, not omitting the important Seaside Convalescent Homes at Lancing, near Worthing, for enfeebled men, women, and children.

It is not contemplated to ask the friends of the work to do more than help to remove the present strain upon the director, Mr. Chorley, and his co-workers. The immediate claims could be overcome by something like £500, but there are other special needs that cannot be deferred much longer, such as certain structural repairs and alterations at the Lancing Homes, and the balance of the purchase-money to secure the Bow Common Mission premises; to meet these quite £500 more is required. Hence about £1000 would meet all extra requirements.

Communications may be made to Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury; or to Mrs. F. A. Bevan, 59, Prince's-gate, South Kensington, S.W.

British Troops in India.

A trustworthy correspondent writes :—"The strength of the European garrison may be taken at 2000 for 1896, but this is rather under the full strength. Of these 800 were admitted to the Military Hospital during 1896 for specific diseases. One outside private practitioner reports, on inquiry, at least 500 cases for 1896 cured, and thus unrecognised in the military statistics. As, however, there are a good many other private medicos, both English-speaking and native, the 500 above is, most likely, a good deal below the actual facts.

"There are about 3000 or more native troops. These are nearly all married, and v. diseases are practically unknown—not 5 per cent. The facts for one station in India stand thus :—

"Total European strength		2000
„ received in Military Hospitals for v. diseases ...	800
„ one private practitioner...	500
		1300
„ native troops		3000
„ v. diseases cases		150

"In view of these facts can there be any room for doubt where the real remedy for present evils in the English Army lies?"

The Free Church Council.—An interviewer has been questioning Rev. T. Law on the work and aims of this council. It is, Mr. Law declares, a spiritual movement, an evangelical revival, a great organised effort to lay hold of the vast masses outside all churches and lead them to Christ. Everywhere united missions are being held, and the greatest success is attending them. At one of these missions conducted in Birmingham last year and taken part in by all the Evangelical Free Churches, over fourteen hundred persons went into the inquiry-room.

South China.—Rev. Ll. Lloyd states that the Native Church C.M.S. in Fuh-kien increased in numbers twenty-five per cent. during 1896, and that the native subscriptions were nearly double those of the previous year. The native Church has suffered a heavy loss through the death of Rev. Ting Sing Ki, the senior ordained Native in the C.M.S. Mission. Archdeacon Wolfe refers in the warmest terms to his saintly life and his longing over the souls of his fellow-countrymen, and the Missionary Conference adopted a resolution recording their thankfulness for "his kindly tact, his unwearied labours, his whole-hearted devotion, and his deep knowledge of Scripture."

Personalia.

Rev. Donald Fraser, who has lately made an evangelistic tour among the South African colleges, expected to reach Bandawè about Christmas on his way to Livingstonia.

Mr. Douglas Russell, while in Devonshire on Gospel service, fell in the dark, on Monday evening, January 25, and has since been laid up with broken ribs. He hopes, however, shortly to be able to resume his work.

Rev. Edward Clarke, whose recent accident in Glasgow we recorded, has returned to Spezia. He was receiving treatment at a hydro in Scotland, but the pressing calls of the work of the Spezia Mission obliged him to return to Italy.

Dr. T. E. S. Scholes, formerly superintendent of the Alfred Jones Institute, New Calabar, after a short stay in England, has proceeded to Jamaica on a visit to his friends. He hopes shortly to return to the West Coast of Africa, and resume mission work.

Lady Henry Somerset has had a slight relapse since her carriage accident, and a surgical operation was considered necessary. She is progressing as favourably as possible, but prolonged rest is imperative, and all her engagements are for the present cancelled.

Rev. Dr. G. S. Barrett, of Prince's-street Church, Norwich, has completed the thirtieth year of his pastorate. During this period 1700 members have been received into the church, and the voluntary offerings, in addition to the stipend of the pastor, have amounted to £71,450.

Canon J. Taylor Smith, who became last year so widely known as an effective and eloquent advocate of missions, and who also took profitable part at Keswick, has been appointed Bishop of Sierra Leone. It is stated that he was offered preferment at home, but declined, feeling that his place was in the mission field.

Mr. J. Wells Thatcher.—A portrait and an appreciative sketch of the career of Mr. Thatcher, secretary of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools, are given in a recent number of The Commercial Traveller. When Mr. Thatcher was appointed to the office there were 162 children in the schools and an average income of £8000; now there are about 280 children in the institution, and the annual income has increased to £11,000.

The Late Mr. Joseph Fry.—A committee is being formed with the object of perpetuating the memory of the late Mr. Joseph Fry, the son of Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, and co-founder of the Metropolitan Hospital and Metropolitan Drinking Fountain Association. The Lord Mayor has consented to act as president, and the Duke of Westminster vice-president. It is proposed to endow a bed or beds in the Metropolitan Hospital and erect a memorial drinking fountain. Lord Hillingdon has kindly consented to act as treasurer.

Mildmay Helpers' Union.

The annual letter of this Union gives the following facts as to the work:—We agreed early in the year to adopt a little girl in the Mildmay Orphanage, that is to say, to pay £20 a year for her support and education there. Mary P. was a forlorn wee child indeed when she was first received at Mildmay! You may grasp some idea of her former life when I tell you that one day when she was asked why she did not eat her dinner, she cried and said, "I can't eat it without pickles and beer!" Those that saw her then would hardly recognise her now, she is so much improved. Have you joined with us in praying for her? Truly, we may unite to give thanks to God. Little Mary has won for herself an excellent character, both in the Home and in the School. It was quite delightful to see her happy little face at the Christmas fête when the prizes were distributed, and she could claim one for herself. Let us continue in prayer for her, that she may grow up to be a true child of God. Then we have paid £50 to the "Founder's Fund," in memory of Rev. William and Mrs. Pennefather, to enable one of God's children, whose heart yearns to give time and talents to the Master's service, and yet is not possessed of the means to support herself, to be taken in free for training.

The sale of work which was held at Mildmay in December had much help. £22 19s. 6d. was the sum realised by our stall, and afterwards divided between the Mission Hospital in Bethnal Green and the Memorial Cottage Hospital at Mildmay. A small sum of £1 15s. has been expended on the school-room used by the children of the Mildmay Orphanage. After doing this we still had a balance, and as the Memorial Cottage Hospital in the Mildmay Compound had need of help, we paid our £10 10s. to this good object. F. Wood.

Obituary.

MRS. ELIZABETH P. NICHOL.

Through the death of Mrs. Nichol last week, in the ninety-first year of her age, Edinburgh has lost an eminent citizen who for more than a generation has taken the deepest interest in everything affecting its welfare. Her father, Mr. Joseph Pease, of Feethams, Darlington, was a leader in most of the liberal and philanthropic movements in the early half of the century. In all these questions Mr. Pease took a most prominent position, and his daughter Elizabeth was his devoted secretary and fellow-labourer. Both of them gave, perhaps, the best of their thought and work to the great group of questions affecting British India. In 1853 she married the late Professor Nichol, the astronomer, and came to live at the Observatory in Glasgow. Their kindred tastes and the strength of their common sympathies made the few years she spent in Glasgow the most memorable of her life. On her husband's death in 1859, Mrs. Nichol removed to Edinburgh, where she has since resided. Since that time her name has been associated, along with those of her friends Mrs. M'Laren and Miss Wigham, with many of our public movements. During the last few years advanced age and increasing physical weakness made it difficult for her to take public part in the movements she supported; but her judgment was as clear, her sympathies as warm and strong, her help as ready and as prompt as ever till the end came.

Sailors' Welcome Home.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather on Tuesday last, there was a goodly muster of sailors, of various nationalities, as well as friends, at the monthly muster of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew."

Miss Child, who led the meeting, said that the text for the last month (God's "I will" from Isa. xli. 10) had been a great help to her and the workers, specially as it had been a trying time in many ways. The destitution, which is now so prevalent among seamen, has been met with free meals and shelter to as many as possible, but she asks for continued prayer that the Lord may touch the hearts of his stewards to supply funds for this needy branch.

Prayer was also asked on behalf of one of the crew, who, on his way to London in his own boat, had caught a chill after rescuing a man from a watery grave. Miss Child incidentally mentioned that this brave man had been the means in God's hands of saving eighty lives singlehanded, in addition to helping to save several hundreds in connection with the lifeboat crew at Lowestoft.

The text for this month (Isa. xxviii. 29) was in a most spirited way dwelt upon by several of the crew. During the meeting a letter was read from one who is now working for the Lord, with great acceptance, among the nobility as well as among the working classes in Estonia, one who had been drawn from a low public-house in Ratcliff-highway, and led into the fo'castle, where he learnt to love and serve Jesus. In his letter he tells how the Lord has opened a wide door for the Gospel, and how services were held every night. In the midst of all this he adds: "I think of the times when I came to the Welcome from the dirty public-house."

Bible Circulation.—During the past year the colporteurs of the National Bible Society of Scotland sold no fewer than 82,836 Bibles, New Testaments, and Scripture portions, in more than a dozen languages for about £1,036.

Korea.—The Korean Repository says of the King of Korea: "He is a merciful ruler, and sincerely desirous of the welfare and advancement of the country. There can be no doubt that he is universally beloved by the people. Toleration in religious matters has marked his reign."

South India.—A house in Sindhapandurai, a suburb of Tinnevelly, bequeathed by Rev. W. T. Satthianadhan to the C.M.S., has now been converted into an evangelical hall, and meetings are regularly attended, the Christian Patriot of Madras states, by some sixty students of the Hindu College, which is in the same neighbourhood.

Armenian Relief.—The munificent gift of £500 by a Scottish lady to the Armenian Massacre Relief (special fund of the Bible Lands, or Turkish, Missions' Aid Society) has enabled the treasurer, Lord Kinnaird, to send additional grants to six mission stations in Asia Minor for new orphanage work, thus providing for all the wants of over 200 of these little ones for a whole year. The needs of the orphans left by the massacres are still unspeakably urgent. To gather these martyrs' orphans at once into Christian homes is a golden opportunity for promoting the evangelisation of Turkey.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Bishop Hornby is to be instituted to the charge of Chollerton, in Northumberland, on February 27.

Bishop Tucker will address a meeting in Kensington Town-hall on Monday afternoon, March 22.

The successful C.M.S. Meeting for children at Exeter Hall in November last is to be repeated in April next.

Rev. Alford Webb, curate in charge of Christ Church, Old Ford, E., is doing a good work in a poor and populous corner.

All who are interested in Evangelical work will hear with sincere regret of the serious illness of Mr. W. D. Cruddas, M.P. for Newcastle.

Rev. F. W. A. Wilkinson, the Evangelical vicar of St. John's, Chelsea, has been appointed to the chaplaincy of the Cancer Hospital, Brompton.

The Bishop of Derby opened, on Tuesday, a new Church Army Mission Hall, at Ilkeston, which has been generously given to the Society by the Stanton Ironworks Company.

A well-attended meeting has been held in Christ Church Hall, North Brixton, when Rev. Thomas Davis, of St. John's, Harborne, delivered a lecture on "Guarding the Protestant Outposts."

Rev. Alfred Pearson, who succeeds the late Archdeacon Favell at St. Mark's, Sheffield, entered upon his duties last week, and was inducted by the Archbishop of York on Sunday morning.

It is announced in the Yorkshire Post that Professor F. B. Jevons, lecturer at the University of Durham, has been appointed Principal of Hatfield Hall, in place of Dr. Robertson, who has accepted the Mastership of King's College.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather and the heavy fall of snow, a large audience gathered at the concluding lecture of the series given in Christ Church Hall, Forest Gate, when Rev. Alex. Roger, lectured upon "Romanism: a Great Apostasy," with limelight lantern views.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield, vicar of St. Silas', Bristol, whose Evangelical and Protestant opinions are well known, has been elected a member of the Bristol School Board, in the place of Rev. James Ormiston, rector of St. Mary-le-Port, who, after five years' service on the Board, lately retired.

An interesting discussion took place at the Clergy Home Mission Union Meeting on Monday week, when Archdeacon Sinclair dealt with the position and prospects of curates in a paper, which, if revolutionary in some of its aspects, at least offers a solution of some present difficulties.

The Mitre, Gloucester (opposite the Guildhall), formerly a well-known skittle alley, has just been generously placed in the hands of the Church Army, by an anonymous friend, for a period of three years, rent, rates, and taxes free, for the purpose of opening out the Social Work of the Society in Gloucester.

During the season of Lent a series of 'midday addresses will be delivered in the historic church of St. Bride's, Fleet-street, under the auspices of a band of workers known as the Church Pastoral Aid Volunteers, on Tuesdays and Thursdays from March 9 to April 15. This effort has for its object the quickening of public interest in the home missions of the Church of England.

Congregational.

Mr. H. Gideon Jeffries commenced his ministry at Luton on Sunday.

Rev. Clement F. Bryer, of Nottingham, has been inducted to his new charge at Hitchin.

Rev. Thomas Morgan has received a warm welcome at his new pastorate, Greenwich-road, Blackheath.

Rev. G. T. Allpress has been recognised as pastor at South Ockendon. The rector of the parish was among the speakers.

Dr. Horton has sufficiently recovered from his illness to leave home for change of air. He hopes to resume his ministry on Sunday next.

Mr. J. A. Yonge, son of Rev. J. Yonge, Warrington, has been appointed head master of the Northern Congregational School, Silcoates, near Wakefield.

Richmond Hill Church, Bournemouth (Rev. J. Ossian Davies), reports seventy-seven admitted to the church during the past year; the membership is now 526.

Rev. John Lawson Forster, D.D., of Hare Court Chapel, has accepted the call to succeed at Harrow-road Rev. Dr. Leach, who on Sunday entered on the charge of Cavendish Chapel, Manchester.

By a decision of the Court of Appeals in Annapolis, U.S.A., the Congregational Chapel Building Society of New York comes into possession, under the will of the late Joseph H. Stickney, of £60,000.

The Self-Help Emigration Society, which is an offshoot of the London Congregational Union's philanthropic work, and of which Lord Aberdeen is the president, is busy making preparations for the coming season. Already about a hundred intending emigrants have been booked for its first party to Canada on April 15.

The financial position of the London Missionary Society for the current year is indicated by the following figures:—Up to the end of December £41,032 had been received for general purposes, and £6656 from legacies. The expenditure up to the same date had been £89,533. The financial year closes at the end of March.

Calls.—Rev. J. A. Davies, of New Barnet, to Leytonstone; Rev. A. McLennan to Dunfermline; Rev. G. Warren, of Okehampton, to Lavington; Rev. J. M. Edwards, of Sardis, to Sarney (Mont.); Rev. W. S. Todd to New City-road, Glasgow; Rev. W. M. Jones to Barksay, Royston, Herts (all accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. J. Lawson Forster, D.D., of Harecourt, Canonbury; Rev. G. Field, of Abbey-hill, Kenilworth; Rev. George Moon, of Ruardean.

Baptist.

A new chapel has been opened at Purfleet.

Mr. Joseph Fox has been welcomed to the pastorate at Haslingden.

Rev. Ralph Home has been recognised as pastor at Walsworth-road, Hitchin.

Devonshire-square reports 799 members, and quite a network of energetic work.

Penge Tabernacle added seventy-three members last year, and now reports 610 on the roll.

Pastor A. G. Brown's son, Rev. A. Brown of Herne Bay, has broken down, and has been ordered a sea voyage.

Rev. C. C. Gange, of Regent's Park Chapel, announced on Sunday that he had declined the invitation to St. Andrew's-street, Cambridge.

Pastor Joseph Clark (Nottingham Tabernacle) will sail next month for New Zealand, where he is to take up the pastorate of Auckland Tabernacle, vacated a few years since by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who was its founder.

The Duke of Sutherland has made a gift to the Baptists of the chapel, burial ground, etc., at Donnington Wood, Shropshire, formerly rented by the local association.

Pastor Thomas Maycock has issued a very urgent plea for help in building at Kensal Rise. According to the terms of the lease the friends are compelled to put up speedily a new Tabernacle.

Nine persons were baptized at Belvoir-street Chapel, Leicester, last Wednesday evening, by Rev. A. H. Tolhurst, minister of Carey Hall. Rev. Jas. Thew gave an address on baptism.

Prof. Barakat, late of the Assyoot College, on the Nile, a native of Damascus, has been on a visit to Prof. T. Witton Davies, and on Sunday last preached in the morning, in the evening giving an account of Eastern Christians, and of the persecution through which they have passed.

The thirty-second anniversary of the Chalk Farm Chapel was celebrated on Sunday, Jan. 31. On Monday a tea and public meeting was held, at which Rev. E. Pitcairn Wright, of the Pastor's College, formally accepted the pastorate. Pastor James Stephens (of Highgate-road), Pastor G. D. Hooper, and others spoke.

At the first annual gathering of the Alcester P.S.A. men's class, held at the Baptist chapel (Rev. E. J. Croft's), the founder of the movement, Mr. Blackham, gave a stirring address to the men. The following Sunday eighty-five first-class prizes were given away, as well as second-class. These meetings for men only are well attended by many who hitherto have been strangers to any place of worship, and they are conducted on strictly religious lines.

Calls.—Mr. F. G. Benskin, to West End Chapel, Hammersmith; Rev. S. Pilling, of Peckham, to Swansea; Rev. C. E. Shipley, of Shipley, to Gorse-lane, Swansea; Rev. J. S. Somers, to Appledore.

Resignations.—Rev. John Tuckwell, of Westbourne Chapel, W.; Rev. W. C. Miniſie, of Lansdowne, Bournemouth.

Methodist.

Mr. Wm. Sampson has held a ten days' mission at Oxford-place, Doncaster.

Miss Costin's mission at Lake, Isle of Wight, has been one of great blessing.

In connection with Miss Caskick's mission at Millom, many professed to find peace.

Rev. G. A. Bennetts has concluded an eight days' mission at Falmouth, with good results.

Mr. George Wilkinson has been conducting special services at Tamworth, which have resulted in great blessing.

The Handsworth College Missionary Anniversary has been held with much enthusiasm. It is delightful to see how missionary interest is taking hold of the students.

The students at Didsbury College have held their annual foreign missionary meetings in the Central Hall, Manchester. Vigorous and stirring addresses were delivered, and much interest evinced.

Mr. William Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, has been preaching at Ripon for ten days. Much good has been done, numerous conversions have been recorded, and professing Christians have been moved to more earnest zeal.

In connection with the twenty-first anniversary of the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission, a supplementary meeting was held in the Myrtle-street Baptist Chapel, at which Rev. Dr. Maclaren expressed his joy over the fact that the Nonconformist churches were drawing closer together, and establishing a solidarity not seen in past days. One of the most interesting features of the meetings was the very earnest and able speech in support of Mr. Garrett's work delivered by Dr. William Carter, J.P., one of the foremost physicians in Liverpool, and a Churchman.

At the annual meeting of the Huddersfield Wesleyan Methodist Council Rev. A. Clayton was re-elected president for the year. The report showed that the most important matter under consideration had been the proposal to commence running the trams on Sunday within the borough. This proposal the Council vigorously opposed, and, acting in conjunction with other religious organisations in the town, a thorough canvass of the ratepayers was made, with the result that at a poll taken on July 11, 1896, the proposal was defeated by a large majority.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Robert Stewart, of Gateshead, has accepted the call to Benwell.

Jesmond Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne (Rev. Hugh Falconer), reports 587 members.

The McGill Memorial Mission, Bournemouth, reports that the past year has been the most successful in the history of the mission.

The report of the work at Upper Norwood is most encouraging. The past year has been very successful. The membership is now 333.

Another £1500 has been received for the China Mission from the residue of the estate of the late Mr. Sturge, making up to the present time £18,000.

It has been decided to change the name of Tulse-hill Church to West Norwood Church. Rev. R. Armstrong, late of Felixstowe, was welcomed at a social gathering of the church last week.

The generous gift of £1000 which Mr. Stephen Williamson, of Liverpool, has presented to the Foreign Mission Fund of the English Presbyterian Church, has been met by an increased income from other sources of £1216. This will help to remove the fears as to a deficiency of £4000. The proceeds of the "Self-denial Week" reached £530.

Salvation Army.

A home for inebriates has been inaugurated in Cape Town, also a maternity hospital in connection with the rescue operations.

Mr. Bramwell Booth is engaged in a ten days' special campaign in the Holloway I. Barracks, Ronald's-road, Holloway, closing Monday, Feb. 16.

General Booth last week addressed the leading men of Stockholm on his social scheme. Herr Tamm, a member of the Upper House of the Swedish Parliament, presided.

General Booth's visit to Copenhagen was made the occasion of the opening of a new and commodious barracks for the city, when fifty persons came forward for salvation. Crowds were turned from the doors. The General is visiting the principal cities in Sweden and Norway.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth has just issued her annual report of the rescue work, under the title of "The Hand of Love." She reports a total of 1553 women as dealt with during the year with encouraging results. The work of police-court and prison visitation has been a feature of special development.

The army has sustained a severe loss in the death of Major Osborne, of South Africa, from fever. This officer commenced to work amongst the Zulus some few years back, living in their midst, and making himself entirely as one of them, living a living of devotion and self-sacrifice. He was afterwards transferred to the command of the Western Province, South Africa.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In this issue we give the first part of an article on foreign prisons by Mr. Charles Cook. We commend it to the sympathetic attention of such as feel for those who are bound, a class in more senses than one downcast and hopeless. Mr. Cook intends shortly to take another tour, for the purpose of distributing copies of the Scriptures and preaching the Gospel in the houses of detention and convict establishments of several countries.

At length it appears that the young are to be filled with the husks of human criticism under the guise of instructing them in Divine truth. This at least is the view and counsel of the contributors to a little book issued by Messrs. James Clarke and Co., with the title "The Bible and the Child." These pages contain eight short essays by clergymen, ministers, and professors, English and American, and give a manifold answer to the question, "What is the Right Way of Presenting the Bible to the Young in the Light of the Higher Criticism?"

It appears that the way is one of limitations combined with doubt; of explanations which, being mutually destructive, are utterly worthless; and of comparisons with other literature, so as to allow no inspiration that is specific and real, and so as to leave no Scripture at once demanding reverence and enjoying pre-eminence as God's Holy Word. While in details the writers differ, on one or two points they show a grievous and fallacious agreement. They confuse with essential and ascertained truth the opinions which they have newly come to hold, but which in a short time they will throw aside for a more "up-to-date" fashion; and they proceed on the assumption that the chaff and the wheat are of equal value, and therefore criticism and Bible should share alike in the religious education of the young.

We heartily thank one of the writers for referring to the assertion (originated in Germany) that what the Bible as it is offers to the simple and true-hearted reader is everywhere of far greater value than anything that historical science, with all its uncertainties, can discover behind the book; and that the search for the less is a positive hindrance to the finding of the greater.

When it is admitted, as it is here, that the main conclusions of the critical school rest, not on matters of philological or archæological detail, but upon considerations that appeal to the common reason of men, enough has been said to assure the least erudite that criticism affords large opportunity for the use of the imagination, and may yet find its answer in the greater exercise of caution and sound common-sense. It will be high time for our children to consider criticism when they come to years, and are able to distinguish between Scripture and its expositions, between God's abiding Word and man's everchanging speculations about it.

Some months ago The Methodist Times offered three prizes to bonâ fide working-men, for the best essay on the subject, "Why do not the Working Classes go to Church?" Mr. Henry Broadhurst, one of the most trusted officials of the working men, being appointed adjudicator. The result is now published, and forms instructive reading. Over 100 essays were sent in, many of them of very high merit, and several of these are before us in the form of a supplement to the Methodist Times. It would be well if these brief but pointed articles were carefully read and pondered by church officers and ministers all through the country. For they contain many home truths that need to be remembered, and some suggestions that need to be carried out.

The author of the first prize essay is very clear, as are some of the others, on the fact that working men are not universally opposed to Christianity, and "have no fault to find in Jesus Christ." He is also convinced that when all the due blame is laid to the charge of ministers and laymen of the church, "the working classes themselves must take their own proper share of responsibility. Their own wickedness, their own frivolity, their own materialism goes far to answer the question, 'Why they do not go to church.'" But he is sure that one of the chief obstacles is the striking contrast between the "brotherhood" preached on Sundays and the hard unbrotherliness of many church members towards their employés during the week. As to the minister, the main objection is that they see too little of him during the week; as to the layman, "they see too much of him." The cold-heartedness of the church, pew-rents, the appropriation of sittings, the lack of free equal intercourse and fellowship—all these facts go to swell the indictment.

How, then, is the gap between the churches and the masses to be bridged? If the blatant unbelief of a generation ago is dead among working men, a great initial difficulty is removed. By freer methods, a more brotherly spirit, a more consistent life among professing Christians, much of the remaining prejudice ought to be removed. On the other hand, there must be no surrender as to the spiritual character of the church. To turn it into a working man's institute for the propagation of Socialist views, as is the ambition of certain prominent labour leaders, would be as fatal as the occasional tendency that has been shown to identify it with the class interests of its members. It is the place where rich and poor, wise and simple, men of all classes and opinions, should feel at home to meet on the broad basis of worship, salvation through Christ, and of service for their fellow men. Any wavering on this matter would end in worse divisions and more utter failure than ever history could show.

The "Modern Dearth of Conversions" was discussed at a recent quarterly of the Birmingham Evangelical Nonconformist Ministers' Association, and led to an interesting discussion. Emphasis was laid on the fact that preachers do not lay sufficient stress on the appeal to fear as a motive towards repentance, and on the unsettled state of mind of many ministers respecting the great doctrines of Christianity. They have been living, as one speaker said, too much in the "suburbs of truth." The acknowledgment of this fact by ministers themselves is an encouraging sign of the times, and suggests a hope that the period of eclipse in Christian doctrine is over, and a more vigorous era of preaching is about to begin.

Rev. Simpson Johnson, in a paper read at Manchester on "Methodist Services in Relation to Outsiders," touched upon a vital point when he said that Manchester was a Sunday-school city, that the outside masses have been to our schools, and that there is in them "a wealth of holy memories, a wonderful capacity for being helped by a manly, unstereotyped religion." How to reach those who have slipped away is really the problem, for, excepting London, perhaps every city and town is strong in Sunday-schools, and those who have known the truth have a witness in themselves. A more direct and urgent appeal to those latent feelings might take effect.

A keen observer of our times, Rev. T. G. Selby, has said with great truth:—

The public temper is singularly credulous towards everything but orthodox Christianity; and the pressmen and the novelists are accepted with the implicit confidence accorded to priests and bishops in the Middle Ages.

Why is this? The root of it we believe to be man's evil heart of unbelief, which is enmity against God; unwilling to believe truth, ready to believe falsehood; impatient of the yoke of God, meekly submissive to the yoke of men. An analysis of the actual conditions of thought and life amongst us make us start back from such ignorance, credulity, and superstition as everywhere abound, and that under a fair exterior of culture and education. The training of the conscience, of the judgment, of the heart, lags behind.

Rev. J. M. Gibbon struck a bold and altogether true note when, in a sermon on "Betting and Gambling," he asked whether the Diamond Jubilee could be celebrated in a better way than by those who love the Queen, who stand near her, who are to succeed her, making one great act of self-sacrifice, and cutting at a stroke the connection between the royalty of this country and that great organisation of betting and gambling which Lord Beaconsfield accurately described as "The great engine of national demoralisation." No doubt the evil would be greatly abated if those of royal and noble name were to frown upon it, and not much progress, openly at any rate, will be made till they do so.

Recent elections have evoked some plain speaking about the power of the purse in matters political. Thus, a writer in The Times teaches that knocking down constituencies to the candidate who will pay the highest blackmail is not good electioneering business.

And The Times itself denounces the practice as blackmail, bribery, and corruption in another form. The Methodist Recorder calls attention to the levying of blackmail upon members of Parliament, and especially upon candidates, which has become a regular system among church organisations.

It rightly stigmatises the practice as a tyranny, an evasion of the law, a means of corrupting the moral sense of the community, and of creating among members of the House of Commons and candidates for parliamentary representation a contempt for religion. These truths, if acted upon in the comparatively quiet times of bye-elections, might have a chance of being operative also at a general election.

An article which appeared in the January number of The Contemporary Review, entitled "The Soldier and his Masters," has been published as a pamphlet (British, etc., Federation, 1, King-street, Westminster); it was worthy of a permanent form. It is a strong and eloquent plea for treating the soldier as a man, and by so doing saving him from not a few of the temptations to which he is exposed. A great change for the better would, no doubt, take place if it were impressed on every cadet that

It will touch his honour to keep his men not only out of hospital, but out of the ways that lead to it, and that his personal influence and example must be brought to bear upon this point.

If common testimony be true, this would amount to a reformation, root and branch.

Sir Harry Johnston, who is Administrator of British Central Africa, admits that the protests of the Aborigines Protection Society are, as a rule, well founded, and that in the old days the extermination of natives was treated as a joke. Lord Loch confirms these remarks, and says that if fair treatment be not meted out to the natives of Africa they will rise. Now, while we are glad to think that our country has had two such representatives as these in Africa, we fear that the treatment of the old days has not altogether passed away. We may, as Lord Loch thinks, be destined to rule at least a large portion of Africa; but we cannot, or ought not, to destroy the natives to make place for ourselves. Be it in East, or West, or South, or North Africa—for now we are planted in them all—our rule ought to be humane and just.

Olive Schreiner has just published a book, Trooper Peter Halket of Mashonaland (6s. T. Fisher Unwin), which ought to make Englishmen pause and ponder on the course of affairs in Rhodesia. The book is in allegorical form, and purports to give the views of Jesus Christ on recent South African colonisation. Making allowance for vagueness and mysticism of statement, we think most Christian readers will agree that the gifted author frames an indictment of British treatment of the natives, which those concerned will find it difficult to answer or explain away.

"Waste Paper!" "Waste Paper!" Such was the reply received from two of the chief dealers in London in new and second-hand theological works, by a customer who wished to ascertain the value of a fine old volume on Martyrology. To anyone of strong Protestant convictions the book would be a treasure, containing as it does a complete collection (profusely illustrated) of the various "Books of Martyrs," published about one hundred years ago, having been edited by Paul Wright, D.D. The incident points a moral. Is Protestant literature really of so little value to the reading public of this generation that so interesting a volume has no marketable value? If so, we are sorry for the generation; we fear it will have reason to be sorry for itself by-and-by.

Some of the characteristics of thought in our day show singular reversion to former fashions of thought, but with a difference. For example, the science of to-day has revived determinism and original depravity and heredity, but has given them without the accompanying moral safeguards with which our fathers were familiar. When men lose sight of God as the present Ruler of the world they find themselves under an iron system of law, from which there is no escape. The old conception of a just and absolute King, who does according to his will in heaven above and on earth beneath, is supplanted by the conception of a materialistic fate. There is the absolutism without the personal justice and grace to which the poorest sinner might appeal with confidence, which were indeed the hope of men. This modern conception is also the root of much of the immoral lawlessness of our times, the tendency, as seen in fiction, to justify men in living in sin. Are they not, it is asked, heirs of an evil nature which they cannot change, and victims of a system which they simply obey?

Is there at bottom any real difference between Christians who say that "it is not the supreme mission of the Church to deliver men from suffering, but by preaching the Gospel of Christ to save them from sin," and those who say that it is her business to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, and to visit the widow and fatherless in their affliction? In point of fact, the former class do both kinds of work, the spiritual and the temporal, and the latter do the same. Perhaps the crucial words are "the supreme mission," but "supreme" may be dispensed with, for in saving the body you often save the soul also, and vice versâ. Man is a unit, and it really does not matter whether you get hold of him by the body or by the soul, so long as you get hold of him.

The restless military spirit is to the fore once more, and we hear of Government proposals for the increase of the army by 7,385 men, while the increase in the year's estimates amounts to £98,400. We are glad to find distinct signs of alarm expressed on all hands at this further menace to peace and economy, but have small hopes that it will find due expression in Parliamentary votes. It is universally acknowledged "that overloaded armaments account for the present deadlock in European politics. We, in England, have so far mainly contributed towards this by the supremacy of our fleet. In reality our power of defence against attack depends more on our commercial supremacy, and our inter-dependence with the whole world, and our future safety will be furthered tenfold by increasing our industrial and commercial importance, than by keeping a huge army and navy in idleness. The best fortification for London is the knowledge that its destruction would mean world-wide panic and ruin, because it is the centre of the world's business. When will our leaders act on this principle?

Meanwhile it is so far reassuring to learn that the alarm at the strides made by Germany in ousting us from the world's markets is unfounded. A Board of Trade inquiry establishes the fact that our commerce is still going ahead by leaps and bounds, and that our lead is maintained on the whole by the excellence of our workmanship. A healthy competition among the nations in this direction can breed nothing but good. How much more sensible is the patriotism that strains every nerve to be in the front of other peoples through the quality of our productions, than that which would take shape in overpowering armaments and weight of cannon on sea and land! The ploughshare and the pruning-hook are the weapons of peace, and they will in the end banish the sword and the spear into the museum to which in these days they rightly belong.

The Birth-Fire of Prayer.

At the birth of a child into a Christian home, a new force connected with his existence, his power, his future, should immediately be set at work, a force which until then was not in being. This new force in the world is his parents' prayers.

There is an Indian practice among the Pueblos, which may be the shadow of a great truth for Christian people. "After the birth of a child among the Pueblos, the father for eight days must see that the sacred birth-fire in the fogon, or adobe fireplace, goes not out day or night, and as it can be kindled only in the sacred way, so only can it be re-kindled if it does go out. The father must smuggle a live coal, it may be in his own bare hand, under his blanket from the Cacique's own hearth, otherwise the fire of the child's life goes out within the year."

The birth-fire which should begin to burn and glow when a child is born to Christian parents is the fire of prayer, kindled only at the great hearth-fire of God's love. Should it go out, the blazing coal must be brought again, it may be with pain and suffering, from the ever-burning source.

Prayer is a labour that cometh with a child, and can never be intermitted nor superseded till the life of either parent or child ends.

Are the parents of the present day addressing themselves to this work? Is there not something more than the shadow of a truth in the tradition of the Indian, if we apply it to the spiritual life of the child? If the birth-fire goes out the child's life goes out within the year. If the father's and mother's prayers cease, what becomes of the soul-life of the child? They may not see the spirit expiring as the Indian expected to see his little one die; but surely, if prayer is necessary to the well-being of the child, if in any degree it maintains and nourishes the vital force of the child's inner being, then its suspension or surcease must withdraw a certain amount of support which is needed for the best condition of the child.

Is there not something moving in the thought that the poor, untaught Indian keeps the birth-fire going day and night? There must be no vacation in the prayer-life of parents. In the morning, fresh fuel, and in the evening a re-fanning of the flames. At morning—light, strength, support, and instruction, and the guidance of the Holy Spirit: these things we crave for our children, God's blessing on their day. In the evening, like Job, we offer sacrifices and pray, lest our children may have sinned. We become not only priests to pray for grace for them, but intercessors to plead for the forgiveness and the washing away of their sins.

Papers on Missions.—8.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE.—I.

By Rev. HENRY ROBINS, D.D., Rochester, N.Y.

We have received a small pamphlet, evidently containing an address at a missionary convention, by Dr. Robins,* Professor of Christian Ethics in Rochester Theological Seminary, N.Y. It expresses so well, and with the influence of a pastor and a tutor addressing his brother pastors, one of the most important and pressing subjects in connection with Missions, that we gladly include extracts from it in this series.

HOW can the Church as a body be brought to a sense of its obligation under the Great Commission? "Like priest, like people." The proverb tells in a word

THE RELATION OF THE PASTOR TO THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT OF HIS CHURCH.

If a pastor is possessed by the missionary spirit, his people will also be. Because,

1. The pastor is a mediate source, under God, of the spiritual life of his people.

2. The pastor, in his function as teacher, is an interpreter to his people of the spiritual life.

3. The pastor, in his character as "an ensample to the flock," is an interpreter to his people of the spiritual life.

First, then, the pastor is, under God, a mediate source of spiritual life to his people.

It is necessary to inquire now for the deepest secret of the spiritual life of which those who are in living union with Jesus Christ by faith are partakers. Of this life John says: "The life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father and was manifested unto us." "I am the Life," said our Lord. In Jesus Christ, then, in his character and in his work, in what He was and in what He did, the spiritual life, whose deepest secret we are seeking, was disclosed. Now this life, this love and holiness, this holy love, which our Lord personally was, were exhibited not only in his character, but in his saving work. That work showed what the eternal life is in action. The very name given to Him by the Father—Jesus—affirms it, and He himself expressly reaffirms it in such utterances as this: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." This was the distinctive mission of the Son of God in this world.

It is evident thus that

is its saving purpose and efficacy. The spiritual life and the missionary spirit are inseparable.

This relation of the pastor to the spiritual life, and, as involved in this, to the missionary spirit of his people, makes clear at once his high privilege and his weighty responsibility. Life begets life. A feeble life begets a feeble life; an abounding life begets an abounding life. When our Lord had finished his work in the flesh and ascended up where He was before, in order to continue his life on earth, he poured its saving current through chosen men: "He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering unto the edifying of the body of Christ" (Eph. iv. 11, 12).

Here was a method as old as human history. Think of Abraham, in so profound a sense the fountain-head of the current of Divine life among men, that God himself designates his servant as the father of believers of every age. Think of Carey and Fuller and Judson, our fathers in the great enterprise which engages our attention here. Does not the ardent soul of our lamented and beloved Dr. Gordon kindle within us anew the sacred fire of spiritual zeal which consumed him? Are not many among us, receiving life from him, asking if they too, according to their opportunity and the measure of their gifts, may not be life-bearers to their flocks as he was to his, and so attain more nearly to the height of their privilege and meet more fully their great responsibility?

2. The pastor, in his function as teacher, is an interpreter of the spiritual life to his people.

It is the pastor's function as teacher to bring the Divine life of his people into their self-consciousness, to instruct them in its meaning. The child of a king has royal blood in his veins, and may feel within the stirrings of a royal destiny, but he must be trained to a realisation of his lofty station, the privileges which it affords, and the obligations which it imposes.

"IT IS A GREAT THING TO BE A CHRISTIAN!"

Great! What loftiest flight of human thought has reached the summit of that conception! Why is it that many seem to think, or act as if they thought, that the highest, the most important, life of all may be suffered to take care of itself? Your vine has life; but what will its development be if you do not lift it up into the sunlight, if you do not prune it and diligently cultivate it? If a Christian does not know that the life within him is the very life of Christ, and so, unless misconceived and suppressed, a missionary life, must we not say that his pastor is at fault? His pastor certainly has failed to impress him with the nobility of the Christian calling and with the imperativeness of his duty in this respect.

Impulse, uninstructed, however strong and sincere, is blind, vagrant, and intermittent. Did the mere impulse of the great pianist Paderewski toward music make him the master of his art that he became? Not so; the impulse was guided and instructed by one of the most accomplished drill-masters of his time, until at last a word was hushed to listening silence while the pupil played. Alas! if the genius of the pupil had not been matched by the genius of the teacher; if the teacher had not possessed the insight to perceive the marvellous capacity of the pupil! So in every believer the pastor is to see a richer gift than artist ever knew, the possibility in each, according to his consecration and the measure of his endowments, of a new manifestation of the life of Christ, waiting to go forth to bless the world. Every one of the members of Christ's body should be able to say with Paul, "I fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake." The One Eternal Life of Christ must have congruous expression; there must be in every Christian, however undeveloped, the disposition and purpose to save man in the entirety of his being, in all his interests, for time and eternity.

Let the pastor, then, know himself to be—must we not say it?—an artist in the Life of Christ, and so, inspired by an ideal of such beauty as neither painter nor sculptor ever saw, let him hold up before his people a vision of the Redeeming King, until they, "beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory as from the Lord the Spirit."

(To be concluded.)

Glasgow's Sins and Sorrows.

LAST week, in St. Andrew's Hall, the twenty-third annual meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association was held. There was a large attendance. Lord Overtoun presided.

Mr. J. W. ARTHUR, the hon. secretary, gave a report of the society's operations. He grouped the work of the Association round the different centres. In the Christian Institute were held the daily prayer meeting and the weekly fellowship meeting. Awaiting the completion of the new buildings in Bothwell-street, the Bible Training Institute had conducted its classes for its fifty-four students mainly in Blythswood-square, and its popular classes in the Institute, with an enrolment of 530 members. From that centre, too, had been organised the work of the Evangelistic Association and Rev. John M'Neill's missions in England. Around the Tent Hall in Saltmarket they grouped the many agencies for the very poor—the free breakfast and children's dinner, and the prosecution of Gospel and temperance work. The large and successful work in the Bethany Hall was a powerful influence in the Bridgeton district; while the Mizpah Band, with its seven branches, worked for righteousness and temperance all over the city. A Mission to the Jews, a Girls' Home, a Rest for Weary Workers, and the well-known Fresh-Air Fortnight scheme for children, with a house at Saltcoats for destitute children, were also mentioned as part of the society's wide operations.

Mr. MACKEITH, hon. treasurer, said that for the ordinary work of the Association for 1897 he calculated that a sum of £13,500 would be required, and for the completion of the Bible Training Institute a further sum of £16,000.

Lord OVERTOUN said they gave God the glory that they had been allowed to work for twenty-two years now in this blessed work. Glasgow, with its 800,000 people—while there was much to be thankful for, and much to praise God for—as other great cities, had its sins and its sorrows. Their work lay chiefly among the poor, but they had to remember that the poor had souls as well as the rich. And sometimes the poor were far easier to get at than the rich, for they had many rich poor, and a great many poor rich. They were supremely thankful that those who ruled in the city gave them the most hearty support. They not only gave them facilities, but every encouragement. It was a joint work of all the churches. Nobody asked to what denomination the workers belonged. They were all working for Jesus. But in the directorate and in the committee meetings they always sought to have a proportion from all the different churches. They might have minor differences, but they sank them, and joined as one man in trying to save those who required the Saviour. A specially grand work they undertook was that amongst the bairns and the old. The Bible Training Institute required £40 to train each student. They paid £20, and they looked for the public to pay the other £20. They were having an Institute built, and the stone and the lime required to be paid for, and, while they asked for sympathy and prayer, they asked the people to give. They were also doing work amongst the godless and the drunkards. When they looked back during these twenty two years they saw that the work had been of God, and they also remembered that the beginning of their Evangelistic Association was owing to the impulse they had received from Messrs. Moody and Sankey. They followed with the deepest interest Mr. Moody's good work in his own land. Many of them had been trying to get up a fund here, as well as in America, to gladden the heart of that servant of the Lord by providing a church for the great institute at Mount Hermon. He took the liberty, in the name of the citizens of Glasgow, in wiring to Mr. Moody on February 5, wishing him godspeed in his great and glorious work. From their applause, he took it that he had done right. He trusted that they would continue to go into the highways and hedges and compel the people to come in, that God's house might be filled.

Dr. J. Marshall Lang also spoke, and the Mizpah Band sang hymns.—N.B. Daily Mail.

The Need of the Church.

ATTENTION has been called during the past year through various sources to the low state of spiritual life in our churches. Rev. Morlais Jones said in his able address as chairman of the Congregational Union: "The denominations rival one another in zeal, hard work, and liberality; we are proud of our societies, hysterically busy in organising guilds, devising new names for old forms of work, and starting fresh crusades. But the tone of religious life is low; God and the fellowship with God are ceasing to be pathetic needs; the prayer-meeting, which used to be the thermometer by which we measured the temperature of the Church, is fast becoming a tradition, and the ideal Sunday service is getting to be that in which the music and æsthetics of worship are perfect and the sermon is not too long." Some have spoken in even stronger language, but so far as I have seen, no leading man in any denomination has called in question the general correctness of these statements.

This state of things has given rise to much correspondence upon the great need of the Church. It is acknowledged on all sides that this need is a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit, so that we shall have a revival throughout the land. We are not justified, however, in expecting this outpouring until those who feel its need, earnestly and consistently supplicate our Heavenly Father for it. In Ezek. xxxvi. 22-38 there is a long account given in the most emphatic language of the spiritual blessings that God will pour out upon his people, but it ends with the announcement, "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them."

This year, as others, commenced well with its week of universal prayer, but there is always the danger of relapsing into the old state of things after the special services are over; and this needs to be guarded against. It is not the perfunctory prayer, however earnest, but steady, persistent, importunate prayer, that brings down the blessing. Those who have studied the subject of general revivals (as distinguished from local revivals) can scarcely have failed to notice two things: first, that they have been immediately preceded by a specially low state of spiritual life in the churches; and secondly, that prayer of the above character has been poured out by those —generally but few in number—who mourned over the desolation of Zion.

Now that it is pretty generally acknowledged that the Lord might say of the Church as a whole, as He said of the church in Sardis, "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead," there is more hope that those who have the well-being of God's heritage at heart will awaken to their responsibility, and continually beseech the Lord to awaken the sleepers, and break down the barriers which prevent his kingdom from spreading. Surely in every church where conversions are unknown, or but seldom heard of, there must be at least two or three who feel that this is dishonouring to the Lord and must not be allowed to continue! Let such meet periodically—say once a week—in one of their own houses, to intercede with God for an outpouring of his Spirit, and let not the prayers be selfishly confined to "our church" but to all churches.

A small meeting of those who feel the apathy of the church a burden on their souls will have more power with God than a large meeting in which those present feel that things are going on "pretty well." I have known several such meetings which have been made a means of grace. One started last year has been privileged in seeing several striking answers to prayer, the most notable of which was the starting of two monthly prayer meetings in one church, although those who started them knew nothing about special prayer being offered for an outpouring of the spirit of prayer upon God's people. Cannot such meetings be organised everywhere? But let not those who lead forth in establishing them be disappointed if they meet with but few sympathisers, with various excuses from those invited, or even open opposition.

Such things—and they will be met with —show most clearly the great need there is that the few should be more zealous and persistent. Neither let them be satisfied with this. Let them daily, in private prayer, pour out their hearts' plea to God for this blessing, and, if possible, attend the stated prayer meetings of the church, where, without anyone being conscious of it, their influence may be felt and may be the immediate outward cause of the revival. The starting of the Fulton-street prayer-meeting on Wednesday, September 23, 1857, at the first half-hour of which only Mr. Lamphier, the founder, was present, and only six persons in all at its close, was the visible means used in God's hands of the greatest revival the world has ever witnessed, the good effects of which are visible even to the present day.

But how did that revival manifest itself? First of all by the spirit of prayer spreading from Fulton-street, throughout New York, the United States and in every country visited by the gracious influence. So it has been in other revivals—notably in that in Scotland commencing in Cambuslang in 1742, where in some towns young children started prayer-meetings—and so we may expect it again. Many have been the calls during the past year for more earnestness in prayer, and doubtless they have met with more response than we are aware of; but while we have not seen the consummation of our desires, let us continue without weariness, and in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Let those who take part in this holy duty depart from all iniquity, for if we are consciously encouraging that which tends to worldliness in the churches of which we are members—if our lives are not in conformity with the life of Christ, or if our actions bring a reproach on his name in the world, our prayers, at best, will only be partially answered. If we seek first, both for ourselves and others, the kingdom of God and his righteousness, a little one shall become a thousand, and the great work will have begun.

Mr. Moody's Birthday Fund.

Dear Sir,—It gives us much pleasure to announce that the £2500 which was wanted for the chapel at Mount Hermon has now been raised, and we have sent Mr. Moody a draft for the amount, accompanied by a list of the donors. Further gifts amounting to £130 have also been received and will be forwarded.

We take this opportunity of conveying to all who have kindly helped our best thanks for their generous contributions to the fund. We know how much Mr. Moody will appreciate this mark of remembrance from friends in this country.—Yours truly,

Kinnaird,

The Newsvendors' Benevolent Institution intends to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of the Queen's reign by placing the entire donations received during the year to the Royal Victoria Pension Fund, inaugurated by the Queen in 1887, for the benefit of the widows of newsvendors.

Mr. Varley and the Kanakas.

WE have just arrived from Australia purposing to visit several of the cities in the United States, in order to preach Christ. We have had a fairly good passage. My beloved wife accompanies me, and we are seeking the guiding hand of our Lord in this fresh visit to the great Western Republic. I rejoice to add that we are well, and anticipating much blessing in this vast sphere of service. We shall rejoice to be remembered in fervent prayer.

My immediate object in writing is to call attention to the slave traffic which is being carried on in the New Hebrides. I need scarcely remind your readers how strongly our esteemed brother Dr. J. G. Paton has protested against this abominable traffic, nor how industriously some of those who are interested in securing the labour of the natives of the New Hebrides for Queensland and other places have denied that slavery either has existed or does exist.

The following statement was published in the Melbourne Argus, the leading daily journal, on the 24th of November last. It speaks for itself, and shows how great the need is that the British Government should at once put down with a firm hand this organised iniquity. The article is headed, "Slavery in the New Hebrides," and reads thus:—"The traffic in human flesh at the New Hebrides is graphically described by a recent visitor to the group. He states that at present natives are now actually sold like sheep at £6 to £8 or £10 on some of the trading vessels, and that more are subjected to great cruelties. A dealer will board a vessel, and offer a lump sum for the natives aboard, afterwards retailing them out to his customers at an advance of from one to three sovereigns per head, according to the demand or the quality of the natives. At one of the stations he alleges that he saw natives in shackles, and with ankle-chains, which were affixed to a bar that was run from one end of the shanty to the other. They had been placed there because it was said that they had not done sufficient work."

The foregoing speaks for itself, and presents a striking comment upon the assertions made that slavery does not exist in the New Hebrides. The fact is there are English and Queensland traders, who, to all intents and purpose, are slave-dealers. They are slavers of the worst type, using deception, force, and the advantage of the English flag and ships to carry on their nefarious traffic. I need not press you to give such publicity to this communication as will direct the attention of your readers to this crying iniquity, and thus aid in bringing the matter to the attention of Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Minister. Surely it is only needful for the Imperial Government to know the facts in order to put an end to this traffic in the bodies of our fellow men.

Now.

"To you is the word of this salvation sent."

"Now is the day of salvation";
For God does the tidings avow,
Not for yesterday nor for to-morrow,
But for this very moment—just now.

This salvation is unto the utmost,
A title and fitness for heaven;
Then you need not receive it in fragments,
But take it completely as given.

No other salvation would suit you;
It is great like the Great King above;
And you know not how much He can give you,
When He spared not the Son of his love.

You have not to make your God gracious,
You have not to make yourself whole;
You can never make God more forgiving,
You never can save your own soul.

Then, this moment on trust take the blessing,
Procured by the death of your Lord;
And be certain whatever may follow,
That God will be good as his Word.

Letters from North Africa.—5.

MEDICINE IN MISSIONS.

THE following is a sketch by my companion in travel, Mr. S. Trevor Francis, of a ministry-of-healing expedition to an Arab souk, or market:—

There can be no doubt that the practice of medicine is an essential preliminary and accompaniment to the spread of the Gospel. We were a small party going to open up work for the first time in an important village of considerable size, which might rather be called a town. It was market-day when we arrived, and every street was crowded. The central space was occupied by five or six hundred shouting, gesticulating, excitable Arabs all more or less bartering or engaged in buying or selling their various goods.

Being the month of Ramadan (when they fast by day and feast by night), we had not much difficulty in hiring a café. It was a square solidly-built hall, with a raised platform occupying about three-quarters of the whole space. In a corner was a kind of table of masonry, upon which were a few utensils for making coffee. Operations are commenced by sending out a crier, who summons the people in the name of "Allah" to bring their sick to have medicines free. It soon takes effect, and in about half an hour a crowd assembles at the door. We quickly finish the modest meal we had commenced, and as a preliminary one of the brethren begins playing a tune upon his concertina. We all join in singing. The effect is magical. They pour in, and the place is soon full, and a small crowd stands around the door. The moment seems favourable. We speak —some in Arabic, one by interpretation—about the claims of God and the sacrifice of Christ on the cross. It is interesting to watch the faces of the Arabs as they sit on the floor. How receptive they look. The whole scene is essentially Eastern. Here is a venerable old man who, in his turbaned dignity, seems intent upon the words of the speaker. He is telling a story, and they are fond of stories.

By and by there is a great shouting at the door, with much gesticulation. A man is seen pointing at us, his dark eyes flashing. We inquire what it means. He is saying, "Do not listen to the Kaffirs, they are speaking against our religion. The curse of the prophet will come upon you." It has little effect. We have already more sick than can be attended to in the time; so the preaching ceases and the doctor commences. The patients are not over clean, so it is not desirable to let them get over close to you. When the doctor has given them the medicine suitable to the case, a brother missionary has to explain over and over again how it has to be taken, used, which internally and which externally. It is very difficult to make them understand. Possibly they dissolve the pills in water for lotion, and the lotion they will drink.

Here is one man back again. He says, "Why, you have given me medicine for my stomach, that is no use. I want some for my teeth, they are in pain." The doctor had given him quinine for neuralgia. Most of the cases were the result of sinful ways and habits.

The afternoon soon passes. Many cases remain, but they must be left for another occasion. Horses are put into the carriage, and we drive back thirty miles. The soil is hard, but the seed has been sown. Some will take root. We leave results to God. At least the Arabs will see we wish to do them good. They will ultimately believe in us. The next step will be they will believe in Him.

There are more young men learning medicine and surgery than are likely to find scope for their energies at home. There is much need for them abroad. Missions cannot succeed without them. They open the hearts of the people, and the doors of nations cannot be shut against them. It is to be hoped that many qualified young Christian men and women will give themselves to the Lord as medical missionaries. There ought to be one at every mission station.

THE FRENCH IN NORTH AFRICA.

It is said that the French are determined to put down the selling or free distribution of the Scriptures, and, indeed, evangelistic work of every kind, in their Algerian possession and their Tunisian protectorate. But our Lord Jesus Christ's great commission was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." And as the Heavens do rule; as the Most High ruleth among the children of men in the days of the French Republic no less than in those of Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon; and as to Jesus is given all authority in heaven and earth, we may be assured that that Government will not be able to close these regions to the Prince of the kings of the earth.

There were two great lessons which Thomas learned of Jesus—(1) Not to be afraid to die for Jesus' sake, and (2) to say to the risen Saviour, "My Lord and my God" (John xi. 16; xx. 28). These are the Jachin and Boaz of a missionary's equipment. Not to fear them which kill the body, but to be ready to depart and be with Christ, which is far better; and to say, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" made the apostle Paul a mighty man in Christ.

Does any Christian doubt that as prayer in the house of Mary, the mother of John Mark, sufficed to deliver Peter from the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews, so it will avail to deliver God's servants now from the hand of the Republican Government, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jesuits? But the saints of the New Testament must be like their elder brethren, who overcame the accuser because of the blood of the Lamb, and because of the word of their testimony, and loved not their lives, even unto death.

Our first and natural thought (for that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural) when we hear of endeavours, silent or blatant, to put down the messengers of the Cross, is to appeal to our own Government, and to get members of Parliament to ask questions in the House of Commons. But is not the spiritual way to apply to Him who ordains the powers that be? It is of less consequence even that the Gospel should have free course than that it should be made free in a way that gives God the glory, as it was of more consequence that the Egyptian magicians should be brought to say, "This is the finger of God," than that their rods should be swallowed up by Aaron's rod.

At the same time, it behoves us all as loyal British citizens to inform ourselves and to urge upon our Government the facts of the case, leaving the results with the King of kings.

We seem to have given everything away in Siam, yet it is said that then our Government agreed to come to some understanding with the French about the Niger, and to reconsider the existing treaty as to Tunisia. It is earnestly to be hoped that in any new treaty our Government will take care to protect the rights of traders, tourists, journalists, and, last though not least, of Christians and missionaries; so that Englishmen may not be subject to the caprice of any French Ministry, newborn or dying, goaded on by some deputy who, like M. St. Germain, has a proverbial axe of his own to grind or an anti-English interpellation to draw across the track in order to distract attention from some Semitic interest of his own.

Conciliation is very good sometimes—not always. There are circumstances in which the only effective and effectual way is to put your foot down hard, and to let it be understood that you mean to take your stand. We seem to have reached a point in our relations with France when this would be England's true policy.

But for the Church of Christ there is one motto: "For my love they are my adversaries; but I give myself unto prayer." R. Coie Morgan.

The Atlantic in Winter.

s.s. Majestic, Feb. 3.

IN many respects, this voyage has been a very remarkable one, and though one cannot convey to others all those profound convictions which it has stirred, it may not be amiss to tell something.

It began with a spell of lovely sunshine. As we anchored at Queenstown for five or six hours, the sun shone with the brilliance of June, the air was soft and balmy, and it seemed not unlikely that the entire voyage would be equally calm and salubrious. A telegram there necessitated my wife's return to a house of sickness, a mysterious Providence for which, perplexing though it was at the time, I have been devoutly thankful many times since. What blessed rest is that for the heart, which recognises the Father's hand in every event, and how certainly the issue must always vindicate God's arrangements for us.

On Thursday and Friday the sea was fairly calm, though the wind was against us: but on Saturday we were in the midst of a heavy gale, and the waves were tossing in their angriest mood. The whole surface of the sea was in commotion, covered with foam, and broken into mountains and valleys of water. We were meeting the violence of the storm and wave after wave smote the prow with a boom of thunder which made the great vessel tremble, and then poured over the decks in tons of water. Every aperture was carefully shut to keep the deluging waves out of the ship, and to prevent the possibility of their reaching the furnace and machinery. The main fear was lest some more violent wave than ordinary might tear away th bridge or some other part of the vessel which opposed its might.

So Saturday night settled down, most of the passengers ill, and those of us who had not succumbed to sickness, thoughtful and quiet. A the request of the captain, I preached in the saloon on Sunday morning, on Paul's serenity amid the storm, which induced a similar serenity on the part of his fellow-voyagers, arising as it did from the consciousness that he was something to God, "Whose I am," and from the blessedness of worship in his holy and tranquillizing presence, "Whom I serve." The sermon was listened to with much attention. Many men not given to religion have been brought more than ever before to consider whether they are wise in meeting life's storms without a living union with the Father of spirits.

On Sunday night I could not sleep. My soul was possessed of a deep awe and impression of danger. At last the day broke, and I was glad to realise how many, in their morning prayers in Great Britain, were remembering us. On Monday morning it was evident that my impressions had not been baseless. The captain's comment in the log was, "A high and dangerous sea," a most unusual admission. Men who had crossed thirty or fifty times said they had never seen such a sea in any previous trip. Then we exchanged pitching for rolling, and the ship seemed to make an angle of 45 deg., as she turned from side to side; but my heart was fixed trusting in the Lord. Towards evening the storm moderated, and Monday night was quieter; so it has continued, except that within 400 miles of Sandy Hook, there is again a rising of the sea. The ship will have broken her record, as this will be the longest passage she has ever made, and we shall not reach New York till Thursday night, instead of Wednesday morning, or Tuesday night.

It is interesting to find men more prepared than ever to talk about religion. One said to me just now, "This voyage has done me more good than if I had been to church every day for a year." How wonderfully God works. There has been no opportunity for steerage services, or direct Gospel ministry; but the Almighty has turned preacher, in voice of the booming wave. "The floods, O Lord, have lifted up their voice, the floods have lifted up their voice; the Lord on high is mightier than the waves of the sea." F. B. Meyer.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, February 21.

"But Thou art the same."—Psa. cii. 27.

THIS Psalm is by an anonymous singer. All we know of him is that he was overwhelmed, and poured out his complaint before God. But that lonely, sorrowful heart caught glimpses of God, which it has transmitted to all the world, enriching it for evermore. Sometimes we are led to wander alone in desolate places to catch new visions of the Eternal, hidden from ordinary souls; thus ardent artists are indifferent to peril and privation if they can catch a mountain from some fresh point of vision, and transfer a passing glimpse to their immortal canvas.

This Psalm is despairful enough in its earlier passages. The smoke-wreath dissipated in the breeze, the withered grass of the desert, the declining shadow, the chirrup of a lonely sparrow—such are the images that occur naturally enough. But as he sings the man's vision clears. He looks away from the earth-mists to the Eternal God. Here, at least, is the permanent and unchanging. Did He make all things? Then He can unmake them, and be Himself evermore the same. Let the earth vanish like a dream, let the time-sphere be ended, let the very heavens wear out like a moth-eaten garment, let the nearest and dearest pass from our embrace. Thou art the same; Thou art left; Thou remainest. "All that is transitory forsaketh us, but Christ's seal of recognition forsaketh us not even in death, but bringeth us to the joyful heavenly host, unto our eternal fatherland."

MONDAY, February 22.

"But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting."—Psa. ciii. 17.

Note the contrast. Man's frailty against the everlastingness of God's mercy. We are frail as the flower of the field. Each generation of man comes forth like the grass and flowers which clothe the meadows in spring, only to meet the remorseless scythe. But frail as is our physical life, our resolutions and intentions are still more so. One day our soul is covered by the laughing beauty of hope, and faith, and love, kindly thoughts, heavenly aspirations, gracious deeds—the next the whole crop lies smitten and withered.

But God's love does not alter with our alterings or change with our changes. Does the mother's love fluctuate with the moods of her sick babe? God loves on and on, with an ardent, intense affection, which delivers from dross the heart that is yielded to Him, and secures at last its transformation into his own likeness. If you will let Him, God will yet love you right. Love will make even your tough nature a miracle of beauty. But the friction of the lapidary's wheel and the diamond dust may hurt you a little. Never mind, love is behind it all.

When at last you have found your centre in God's love, a joy will arise within you, which will pour itself forth in blessing, and you will find yourself but one chorister among myriads in heaven and earth. But thou, a redeemed sinner, shalt sing loudest.

"Who maketh the clouds his chariot."—Ps. civ. 3.

As I write these words on the bosom of the broad Atlantic there is little for the eye to rest on but the heaving waters through which we are swiftly cutting our path, and the expanse of sky through which float the great piles of cloud. It is pleasant to think of them as the chariots of God; the heavens beyond are the curtains of his tent, this wind is his swift-stepping messenger, this exquisite light glancing on sky and sea is his garment, hardly dense enough to veil his form. O Nature, how can we do other than love thee, since the Being of our God is so closely mingled with thy hues and forms!

How often God visits us in a chariot of cloud. We look upand see the looming darkness, and forebode evil. If we could look down, as from our seat in the heavenlies, we should behold our God sitting within, radiant with golden glory, and hastening to bless.

> "Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take;
> The clouds ye so much dread
> Are big with mercy, and shall break
> In blessings on your head."

When the soul, says one, is born again into the divine light, she becometh a humble, loving, winning creature, that beareth every cross and reproach, that regardeth no insult, either from man or devil, that placeth her love and confidence in the heart of God, full of joy, fed by the Word of God, bathed in a smile of heavenly triumph.

WEDNESDAY, February 24.

"He was laid in chains of iron,"—Ps. cv. 18.

The margin of the R.V. suggests another rendering. "His soul entered into the iron." May we not yet again turn the sentence round, and say that the iron entered into his soul? When we first meet him, Joseph is a tender, yielding lad, with dreams of rule, but no conspicuous power. Yet he emerges from his captivity well qualified to take the helm of Egypt, just then sore driven and tossed by tempest. How can this striking transformation be accounted for, save that he had taken iron into his moral nature through his painful experiences?

The physician often prescribes an iron tonic for anæmic patients; and what iron is to the outer man that also the captivity of circumstances, deferred hope, and anguish of soul are to the inner. You have been fickle and uncertain of late, dreaming of power but powerless, yearning for the only food, but greedy of trifles; you must have a course of iron. God wants Iron Dukes, and Iron souls. And there is a process also by which He can turn Iron to Steel. It means high temperature, and blasts of heavenly air. Are you able to be baptized with that baptism? If you are, you shall be.

THURSDAY, February 25.

"He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul."—Psa. cvi. 15.

Israel insisted on being fed, not with manna only, but with flesh. The people complained of their heaven-sent food as too light and unsatisfying. Their gross appetite demanded some heavier diet. So the wind brought down quails, flying a few feet from the ground, within easy reach of club or stick. These they ate ravenously, voraciously, greedily. Their pampered bodies were gorged with food. They had their desire, but their souls were starved. They were buried in the graves of lust.

Generally speaking, the soul and body fare inversely. When the body is pampered with every luxury, the soul starves. The soul thrives best when the body cries out. We must bring the body into subjection, lest, having preached to others, we become castaways.

It seems as though the shadow of the eternal were perpetually hiding from us the eternal itself. those that snatch at the shadow miss the eternal; those who refuse to be satisfied with the shadow, reach the satisfying vision of God; and to find God is to find all in and with Him. Oh, do not seek to impose your will on God; do not insist on anything with too great vehemence; let God choose. Nero's mother importuned for the recovery of her babe, and he lived to murder her.

FRIDAY, February 26.

"Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord."—Ps. cvii. 43.

"The Harvest of a Quiet Eye" is the fascinating title of a fascinating book. When the heart is quiet in God, the eye looks out on all the scenes of nature and life around it, and detects everywhere, even where to ordinary men every appearance seems in the contrary direction, the lovingkindness of the Lord.

Consider the successive vignettes of this psalm Love broods over the weary caravan that faints in the desert; visits the prison-house with its captives watches by our beds of pain; notices each lurch of the tempest-driven vessel; brings his people from the wilderness into the fruitful soil. Everywhere there is love; but it needs the wise and observant heart to detect and understand.

Love is quick to appreciate love. It is natural to a loving heart to find love everywhere. We view all things in lines borrowed from the heart. "He that loveth knoweth God, for God is love; he that loveth not hath not seen Him, neither known Him." Dare to believe in the supremacy of love. There are malign forces at work, evil spirits, wicked men; but the Ascension of our blessed Lord has proved for evermore that the love which can give itself in death is Lord of All.

SATURDAY, February 27.

"Through God we shall do valiantly: for He it is that shall tread down our adversaries."—Ps. cviii. 13.

This is the best way to fight. Keep quietly in fellowship with God, and when the enemy draws nigh look up to thine ever-present Friend, and say, "Now, Lord, now tread down this adversary." When we are observing the conditions which the Psalmist enumerates in this psalm it is easy to do this. Notice what they are.

The heart must be fixed in an attitude of consecration and devotion. We must be awake right early for fellowship with God, putting on the armour before entering into the battle. We must exalt God in our life and by our lips. Then God will speak in his holiness on our behalf; and when He is for us who can be against us? Hark to the exultation of the saint. Shechem, Gilead, Manasseh are famous for their luxuriant fertility, and stand for the heavenly graces appropriated by faith. Moab, Edom, Philistia are synonyms for fierce hostility, and recall our besetting sins, our virulent foes, which fall before us when we are in alliance with the Almighty. We go from victory to victory when God goes before us. A little lad I have heard of played happily in the back parlour when the street was in uproar, because he knew that his strong eldest brother was keeping the door. F. B. M.

Manchester City Mission.

THE fifty-ninth anniversary of this Mission was held Feb. 12. The evening meeting in the Free Trade Hall was attended by several thousand persons, most of them connected with one or other of the mission halls.

Mr. MacGill, the superintendent, said that since the Mission was founded in 1836 the missionaries have made over sixteen million visits. There are now sixty-six paid agents at work, and over 1000 volunteer helpers. The expenses of the twenty-four mission-halls are met by the congregations, though almost all poor people. During the past year about 38,000 sick have been visited. Even small-pox patients are ministered to, as one missionary devotes himself entirely to this dangerous duty. Services are held at fairs and wakes for miles round the city, and the worst neighbourhoods are patrolled every Saturday and Sunday nights, when much rescue and preventive work is done.

The treasurer, Mr. E. Crewdson, had the unpleasant statement to offer of a balance in hand, but as there is due to legacies the need for subscri[illegible]s remains.

Sir W. H. Houldsworth, M.P., president of the Mission, suggested that the society's sixtieth year should be marked by doubling the subscriptions, and promised to set the example. Rev. W. Young, Presbyterian minister, said the churches need the City Mission, whose work is a necessary help to them all. As it also needs the churches, why not have a "City Mission Sunday," as well as "Hospital Sunday." The missionaries ought hardly to be called "paid workers." Their work cannot be paid for. Other clergy and leading Christians took part in the meeting.

Foreign Prisons.

BY MR. CHAS. COOK, F.R.G.S.

THERE are prisoners in many lands where the light of God's love never shines, and the bread of life is never broken. May we who enjoy the one, and feed upon the other, sympathise with such, and feel it a privilege to carry to them the story of His love, who says, "I was in prison, and ye visited Me."

Overy twenty years ago I first had the wish to carry the Gospel to the prisoners of those lands where the Governments do not provide any of their prisoners with the Word of God. Many thought my scheme was utopian, but God gave me open doors, and I rejoice to-day to know that in every country I have visited, save one, I have been permitted to distribute the New Testament. I have visited nearly all the countries of Europe; to some I have gone several times; I have paid two visits to the Russian gaols, twice gone over the prisons of the North American Continent, and three times been to Africa, and am more than delighted with the acceptance I have found at the hands of the authorities, and the delight shown by the prisoners when they were offered a copy of the New Testament.

When I began this work my only object was to leave in the hands of the prisoners a copy of the Word of God in their own language, but I soon found that there were hundreds unlawfully detained, others were actually starving, whilst many were dying through gaol fever.

In the first case, I was bound to speak of the injustice I had discovered; and in the second, as I could not tell of the Saviour's love to starving men, like our Divine Master I was obliged to feed them first, and preach to them afterwards; whilst in the last case, through calling the attention of the authorities to the unsanitary and filthy state of their gaols, many of the worst prisons have been pulled down.

In one country I found 1300 men in prison, who were awaiting trial, some of whom had thus been waiting six years and nine months, and whose maximum punishment could only be six months! We thank God that in three days from our writing to the ruler of that country and others were to follow.

In Greece the prisons were the filthiest I had ever seen in any civilised land, and I wrote to the Government official describing how I had found things, the result being that soon afterwards the prisons of Athens were pulled down. That city to-day boasts a model up-to-date gaol, as clean as those in England.

The old gaol of Genoa has also recently been pulled down. I was there a few years ago, and called attention to the dirty state it was in, and was glad to receive intimation four months afterwards that the authorities had determined to rebuild it.

After visiting some of the dungeons of Morocco, I came home through Spain; and as the Government had commissioned me to report to them on the state of their prisons, I took occasion to inform them that there was hardly a clean or healthy prison in all their country. The best proof I had was, that when I reached home I suffered for three months from the effect of gaol fever contracted in Spain!

But this is not my object in prison visitation, neither did I aim at holding special services in the prison chapels, but this last was the outcome in my more recent journeys. In Sweden, Denmark, Finland, and Russia, I have been enabled to preach to the inmates the simple, full, and free Gospel of the grace of God, and have seen its mighty power exerted in the hearts of the most hardened of criminals, in some cases the church has resounded with sobs, as head after head dropped. They had possibly heard of the love of Jesus for the first time.

"Did you mean what you said," one man cried, "that the only difference between you and me was owing to the grace of God?" "Yes."

"Then I can stay here through my life sentence more contentedly now I know that I HAVE A BROTHER IN THE OUTSIDE WORLD."

Sometimes I run across a fellow-countryman in a foreign prison. I remember one in particular at Graz, in Styria, who was thankful to get a Testament in English. It must be very awful for such to have no one to whom to speak, never to hear one's own language; and to speak a word of comfort and cheer to such, may help to open the heart for the reception of the Gospel.

There are to-day tens of thousands of prisoners who languish in foreign gaols who have never heard the Gospel and never seen the New Testament, and apart from the command of our Lord to carry the Gospel to every creature, shall we not be specially commended if we visit those who sit in darkness in prison—nay, is it not reckoned as "Ye have done it unto Me?" On visiting an American convict in an English prison, he said to me, "You are the only man that has ever visited me, and this is the first visit I have had for sixteen years." He was the brother of a clergyman, and was eventually released through my intercession after serving eighteen years of a life sentence.

The object for which I labour is to carry the New Testament to those who LITERALLY HAVE NO HOPE.

In Belgium I found sixty men in one room, imprisoned for life; they had never seen a copy of the Word. After inquiring in all the prisons of France which I visited, whether they had any Bibles, I found one copy in one library. Paris alone, a few years ago, had ten huge prisons, containing 10,000 prisoners, and no Bibles. In Vienna no such thing as a New Testament was to be found in any of the gaols, and it would be a criminal act to give away a Testament in the streets. On my showing my credentials, including a letter from our English Government, the authorities permitted me to distribute New Testaments to the Protestant and Roman Catholic prisoners, and the Hebrew Bible to the Jews.

When visiting a second time a certain city in Europe I found 4000 men in one gaol, and 7000 in the six other prisons; and except where I had supplied them the previous year, they had no copies of the Word of God. I did my best, and spent all the money I had in copies of the Book, but I should have needed over £200 to have supplied each man with a Testament. "Oh if there had been one more I should have had it," said a man, as the last book was handed out.

(To be concluded.)

Opium Smoking in India.—Mr. W. S. Caine, who is at present on a visit to the temperance societies throughout India and Burmah, writes from Gwalior, under date Dec. 14, to the Alliance News:—"I was glad to find that in the slums of Bombay and other large cities in India, where four or five years ago a hundred debased wretches could be counted in single opium dens, helplessly drunk on poisonous drugs prepared for them by a Christian Government, this horrid vice has now completely disappeared. For the first time, in the annual statement of the moral progress and condition of India, the Government is able to state that during last year 'no shops were licensed for the sale of chandu and madak, or of opium prepared for smoking.' Licences are now only issued for ordinary opium."

Old Ford and its Needs.

OLD Ford is a very populous district of East London, a colony of working people, most of them poor, many of them suffering from chronic destitution. It is a region in which "one room" life is sadly prevalent, where many homes are kept together by sweated labour, and multitudes of people are engaged in a terrific conflict to "keep the wolf from the door." The "necessaries of life" are dearly bought by those who have to make a gross of match-boxes for 2d. or 2½d.; those who "finish" trousers at 2¼d. and 2½d. per pair; or those who "finish" shirts at 5d. per dozen! Among these distressful people devoted workers preach the Gospel and practise Christian love.

A notable agency of sympathy and evangelism is the Inner Mission work carried on by Rev. David Roe, an earnest and able minister of the Wesleyan Church. Assisted by three "Sisters of the People" he goes in and out among the thousands who crowd the dreary streets and courts; and Bow is happier, in the ranks of young and old alike, for his loving energy and unremitting toils. This happiness arises from spiritual enlightenment as well as temporal help; and we trust that the aggressive work which the Methodists have so far sent forward with much encouragement and success, will go on and prosper, and make a still deeper impression upon the social wretchedness and religious indifference of the district.

One of the most interesting departments of the work is that by the Sisters, who perform scores of duties in the kindliest of ways—visiting the sick, caring for the poor, instructing the young, and helping the mothers. Invaluable service has been rendered by these devoted ladies, whose names have become a household word, and whose praise is in every home—as well among those who make no response to invitations to Divine service as among those who allow themselves to come under loving persuasion and gentle control. Last week the second anniversary of the Sisters' work was celebrated. On the Tuesday two Bible-readings on "Holiness" were given by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, greatly to the profit of thoughtful audiences of workers and friends. On Wednesday there were gatherings in the afternoon and evening, with a tea and drift children's meeting between. About a thousand juveniles were got together by Mr. Boyer and his helpers.

The evening gathering was presided over by Mr. A. E. Booth, and addresses were delivered by Rev. M. Hare (rector of Bow), Mr. Bewley Weaver, Rev. D. Roe, and others. Solos were rendered by Mr. Frank Weaver and Madame Annie Ryall. From the addresses we gathered that a great deal of work is carried on with a very small expenditure of money. The remarks of Sisters Jennie, Nellie, and Hettie showed very clearly that there is constant need of outside help in order that the social efforts of the Mission may be sustained. It is impossible to go into the details of widespread misery resulting from the drink evil; of despondency and distress through want of work and loss of health; and of the stolid indifference engendered by the diffusion of atheistical ideas, whether in books or by workshop talk. But the Gospel does its work in all situations and surroundings, and love has pressed the claims of God upon many, with very encouraging results. Some of the Lord's own poor, aged and infirm, are numbered among the pilgrims of Old Ford, and these receive the careful attention of the Mission. Communications may be addressed to Rev. D. Roe, at 14, Mornington-road, Bow, E.

War Expenditure.—Something approaching seventy millions sterling will be spent by this Christian land during the present year for the purpose of promoting, not the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven, but the reign of hell upon the earth. It is impossible to conceive of anything more wanton and wicked. Yet in the House of Commons only twenty-three men mustered up courage enough to protest against it; and in the House of Lords not one was found faithful among the faithless. What is the use of talking about arbitration when we are every year adding enormously to our armaments, and thereby telling all the nations of the world that we do not trust them and that we ourselves want to be feared and not trusted? No wonder that other countries regard us as a nation of hypocrites. We make great professions of Christianity, and we waste our resources in pursuit of the policy which Christ hated. —The New Age

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER FIFTH.

THE DIFFERENT METHODS OF LEARNING A FOREIGN LANGUAGE, AND SUGGESTIONS AS TO THE BEST.

I WISH in this letter to continue the subject begun in the last, and to give some further suggestions as to the best way of learning a foreign language for the purpose of speaking it.

8. The acquisition of a wrong pronunciation ought to be avoided. Do not attempt to give the pronunciation of a word or phrase till your ear has become to some extent familiar with the correct one. If you do, you will be likely to give a wrong pronunciation. Each time you give a wrong pronunciation you impress that pronunciation on your mind, and make it more difficult to acquire the right one.

9. Having once caught the correct pronunciation, let the tongue exercise itself in giving it.

I say "exercise itself in giving it." The less effort you make in doing it, the more naturally it is likely to be done. The more the tongue is thus allowed to repeat new sounds, the more will it acquire a sort of automatic power in giving them; and the more naturally and easily will it carry out the desires of the mind in expressing its thoughts without the thoughts being occupied with how it is expressing them. Do not make a burden of this. Let it be as far as possible a pleasure.

10. Do not attempt too much at first. Lay more stress on the quality of your work than on the quantity, especially in the beginning.

This applies to the acquisition of a vocabulary, as well as to the acquisition of a correct pronunciation. He who masters one sentence perfectly does more than he who masters a dozen imperfectly. This is the principle on which one of the best known systems for the acquisition of languages is founded. The results it has produced prove the soundness of the principle on which it is based. Most people would learn a language twice as quickly if they did not attempt more than half as much, but did that half twice as well.

11. Mix as much as possible with the people who speak the language you desire to learn.

As far as the practical mastery of a language, for the purpose you have in view, is concerned, intercourse with those who speak it will often be of more use than twice the time spent in the study of books. By such intercourse, words and even phrases and sentences with their pronunciation, become impressed upon the mind naturally, and with greater ease than in any other way.

Psychologists tell us that each word and each sound we hear becomes, by the act of hearing, impressed upon the mind. Some may be disposed to ask, Is this really the case?

If it be not so, then many of the suggestions in these lessons lose their force. If it be so, then those suggestions may not merely have greater force, but also a wider application than at first sight appears.

A few minutes' consideration of this question will be well spent.

Facts seem to prove it; the opinions of those best able to form an opinion on the subject confirm it.

Most people are familiar with the case related by Coleridge of the young woman, who, in her illness, quoted long passages from Hebrew, Greek, and Latin authors, which she had only heard her master read, and of which, when in health, she was not aware that she knew a word.

The case seems incredible. It appears, however, to be too well authenticated to admit of doubt.

A case is recorded of a text suddenly coming to the mind of a sailor in mid-ocean. He could not tell where he had heard it: for a long time it seemed to him as if he had never heard it before. It proved however to be the text of a sermon he had heard years before, as he one day carelessly strolled through St. Paul's Cathedral. It seemed to have been forgotten for years, yet it eventually came back, and led him to the Christ of whom it spoke.

Mr. D. Kay—than whom hardly anyone has paid more attention to the subject of memory, or written more reliably on it—says: "Persons in the delirium of a fever have been known to speak in a language which they had known in their childhood, but which for many years had passed from their memory; or to repeat, with apparent accuracy, discourses to which they had listened many years previously, but of which before the fever they had no recollection. They have even been known to repeat accurately long passages from books in foreign tongues, of which they had never had any understanding, and had no recollection of in health, but which they had casually heard recited years before."

Dr. Abercrombie mentions a large number of striking and well-authenticated cases as illustrations and proofs of the same thing.

The fact of our not being conscious of retaining a thing, or even of its having made an impression on our mind, is no proof that it has not made such impression, and that we do not retain it. The servant girl referred to above was not aware that her mind had retained a single sentence of the Hebrew, Greek, or Latin she had heard; yet it had. Dr. Granville probably does not go one step further than facts justify him in going, when he says: "Whatever we hear, or see, or think, produces an impression wholly irrespective of any consciousness on our part. .....The brain receives impressions of thoughts and of ideas presented to it, even without our knowledge."

It is only while the receiving cylinder of the phonograph revolves that sound impresses it, so to say, legibly, and it is only while the brain is in action that impressions of thoughts are received consciously; but all sounds and all perceptions are recorded by the phonograph and the brain respectively.

"Scientists tell us that nothing ever perishes, that nothing is ever lost, in the natural world. It is equally true that nothing is ever lost, or ever ceases to exert its influence, in the mental world."

"Traces once impressed upon the memory," says De Quincey, "are indestructible."

These things being so, how important are the foregoing rules for the purposes intended.

The suggestions given in this letter and the last may be somewhat more general than some expected. No one who seeks to carry them out will be likely to be disappointed in the results to which they lead. Whilst drawn from some of the best systems on languages recently published, they are in full accord with the principles laid down in Letter Second, see Principles No. 25, 20, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 2. There must be retention before there can be recollection. The more complete the retention the easier will be the recollection.

The next letter will deal with the best way of learning the words and phrases of a foreign language.

Waiting for Christ.

By Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER.*

THE hope of our calling is the return of our precious, ascended, glorified Lord Jesus Christ. The delay may be somewhat long, but however long it is for blessing. This is for our comfort. What God has been pleased to do since 1857, when the revival began in the United States, then spread to Ireland, later to England, and to Scotland, and all over Europe, India, and indeed, the whole world! Hundreds of thousands, yea millions, have been brought to Jesus. If it should please Him to delay yet a season, what we have to do is to wait patiently, and to ask that, by the mighty power of his Holy Spirit God may yet cause hundreds of precious jewels to be gathered for the crown of our Lord Jesus Christ; and this He will do.

But we should never grow weary in waiting, for it is always for the glory of his name and for the good of the Church at large. In July, 1829, God showed me the truth of the return of the Lord Jesus; for sixty-seven years and a-half I have been waiting for his return. I have found time to wait. His return is certain. It is not a matter of doubt; it will take place in God's appointed time, and our business is to glorify God by waiting patiently. We must go on praying that while He tarries it may please Him to bring vast multitudes to the knowledge of our Lord Jesus. When He does come, all believers who have fallen asleep will be partakers of the first resurrection, raised from the dead to obtain the glorified body. All the believers on earth at that time will be changed in a moment, and will not pass through death, but will obtain in a moment the glorified body. The risen and changed saints will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air and to triumph with Him.

Let us ask, What is meant by the glorified body? Such a one as the Lord Jesus Christ has had since his resurrection. Sight, hearing, speech—perfect. The human frame perfect. All mental powers perfect; no infirmity to be found. Beloved brethren who have difficulties of sight, hearing, speech—you may say, "When my Lord shall come all this will be gone." Those who have infirmities in memory, etc., may say, "All this will be gone; my memory will be good." All this is exceedingly little in comparison with the spiritual infirmities. Oh, how precious! Every brother and sister, whatever his or her spiritual infirmities, will be extremely lovely in that day. No pride, no vanity, no rashness, will be found in any one of us; all will be gentleness, sweetness, patience, long-suffering. Most lovely beings we shall be when once the Lord has taken us home.

Our business in anticipation of what will take place hereafter is, that we should be kind when we are tempted to impatience. We should say, "My brother will be in heaven with me. How lovely he will be there; all infirmities taken away, unloveliness will be gone, and nothing but Christ-likeness will be seen." I, a poor erring, failing one, shall live to do the will of God. There will not be a moment's hesitation, but as fast as the will of God is presented to me in my inmost soul, I shall be ready to do it with alacrity. What glorious prospects—physical, mental, and spiritual; all the results of the curse gone! We shall serve God, serve Him throughout eternity with perfect service. How bright and glorious this prospect. Now we seek to glorify God, and may do it in a little measure; but again and again we find defect—something wanting. We have to mourn and weep that our best service is lacking in a variety of ways; but this is before us—that we shall be with Jesus. A little more patience and hope; and, before we are aware, Jesus will come and take us to Himself, that He may have his bride where He is. Let us seek more exercise of faith and patience.

* Notes of an address on "The High Calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iii. 14).

Mr. Yi Cha Yun,

KOREAN CHRISTIAN AND STATESMAN.

DURING recent years Korea has been much before the public, and considerable interest has been evinced in the welfare of the "Hermit Nation." Our American brethren have carried on a vigorous campaign, evangelistic and educational, in the city of Seoul and other populous centres, and the gentleman whose portrait accompanies these lines lends great hope to their labours. It is to Rev. D. C. Rankin (Nashville, Tenn.), editor of the missionary periodicals of the Presbyterian Church in the Southern States, that we are indebted for particulars of Mr. Yun's career.

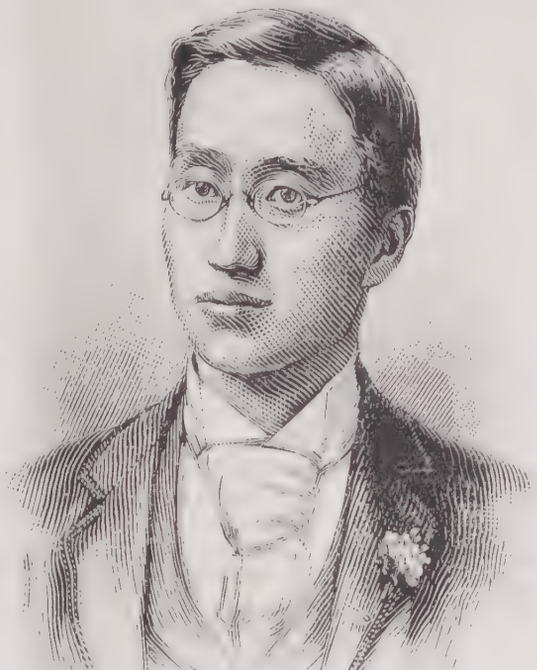
In 1889, when a student at Vanderbilt University, Mr. Yun made the acquaintance of Mr. Rankin, who afterwards, in the columns of the New York Independent, thus told the following remarkable story :—

"We learned that he was a political exile. The son of a nobleman and high officer in the Korean army, he had been reared in Seoul. In 1884, just after the opening of the 'Hermit Nation,' this young man, Yun Tchi Ho, became interpreter and native secretary to General Foote, United States minister to Korea. In the late autumn of that year a banquet was given by Prince Min Yong Ik to celebrate the establishment of the Post Office Department. Suddenly on that evening occurred the riot, incited by the anti-foreign element, which was so disastrous to Korean progress. Young Mr. Yun and his father were suspected of sympathy with the progressive and now overthrown faction, and were both declared political outlaws, and banished.

"At first General Foote purposed bringing his attractive young interpreter to America to be educated, but on reaching Japan changed his plans and sent him to the Anglo-Chinese college in Shanghai. This institution is under the care of the Methodist Mission (Southern) in China, and thus Mr. Yun's subsequent history has been connected with that Church. At this school, which he entered in January, 1885, his career was remarkable. Coming gradually to the light, he accepted Christ in 1887, and entered the communion of the Methodist Church. In his studies he far outstripped his Japanese and Chinese fellow-students; and in regard to moral character his American preceptor testified that 'in refinement and delicacy of feeling, simply marvellous in one who had breathed so long the atmosphere of heathen sensuality, he showed himself far superior to most of his fellow-converts, both Chinese and Japanese; while in purity of life, integrity of character, modesty and humility, blended with earnestness and active fidelity to the cause so lately espoused, his example was, and is, worthy of imitation even by those who have centuries of Christian training behind them.'

"Completing the course of study in Shanghai, Mr. Yun came to America and entered Vanderbilt University. It was here that the present writer learned to know, esteem, and love him. During two years spent there, he made rapid progress both in Biblical and secular studies, and took very high rank in every way. His vacations and one year after leaving Vanderbilt were chiefly spent in lecturing in various Southern States on Korea and missions in that kingdom. The proceeds of these lectures he deposited with one of his instructors, to be used by the Southern Methodist Church in opening a mission in Korea whenever the way shall be clear. In the autumn of 1893 Mr. Yun returned to Shanghai, where, for two years, he taught in the Mission College in which he had received the greater part of his own education. In 1894 he was married to Miss Mo Sien Tsung, who had also been educated in a Shanghai mission school, and of whom Bishop E. R. Hendrix says: 'She is a beautiful Christian woman, who would grace any drawing-room in Europe or America.'

"At the close of the Japan-China War last year, Mr. Yun was recalled by the King of Korea, and was first appointed Secretary to the Prime Minister, then successively promoted as Vice-Minister of Education and Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs. On Feb. 11, 1896, occurred the last of those political revolutions which have been the bane of the peninsular kingdom. In the subsequent reorganisation of the Cabinet, Mr. Yun was promoted to the position of a full Cabinet officer; and, in accordance with his own marked preference, given the portfolio of Education, which he now holds. It augurs well for Korea that this enlightened young statesman, himself a devout Christian, should now have the opportunity to inaugurate educational reforms in his native land.



"A few months since Bishop Hendrix was in Seoul, having gone there from China at the earnest request of Mr. Yun. During his sojourn there the young Cabinet Minister, in full official dress, several times stood beside the bishop as interpreter while he preached Christ and Him crucified. That gifted, consecrated woman, Miss Laura Haygood, of the Methodist Girls' School in Shanghai, had been Mrs. Yun's beloved preceptress; and a touching scene occurred when, in the presence of a large company in Seoul, Bishop Hendrix baptized the firstborn of this young couple who hold such high place in the Korean capital. When the bishop asked, 'What name do you give this child?' the father, in the robes of a Cabinet Minister of the kingdom, and with all the insignia of high office about him, replied, in a strong clear voice: 'Laura Haygood Yun.'

"But this does not end the more than romantic story of this young statesman's life. When, recently, the King of Korea appointed two high officials to represent him at the coronation of the Czar of Russia, his choice fell upon Prince Min and the Hon. T. H. Yun. Mr. Yun is also mayor and governor of Seoul. He is a lay preacher in the Methodist Church, and often preaches to the people of Seoul. There is reason to hope for much good from this modern Daniel at an Eastern court."

Conference at Hastings.

REMEMBERING with gratitude a conference held at Hastings ten years ago, Rev. Charles New and his brethren in the ministry decided to hold another this year. It took place last week, and was attended by ministers from London, Brighton, Folkestone, Dorking, Southampton, Reigate, and most of the places in Sussex. The opening prayer-meeting on Monday was a time of such holy joy that it seemed to be gone almost before it had begun.

On Tuesday morning Rev. PHILIP COLBORNE read a paper on Heaven as a theme too often absent from the modern pulpit. We have got into a way of speaking so much of heaven as a state that we forget to say that it is also a place. Hence there is a lack of comforting and uplifting power. There was a general consensus of opinion that the powers of that higher state and life are not sufficiently set forth; whilst, at the same time, it was maintained that the claims of the present life, the necessity of bringing heaven down to earth, must never be overlooked.

The need also of preaching retribution for sin was dwelt upon, one minister pointing out that it was logically a blunder and Scripturally an error to say that the punishment of sin lies only in the constitution of man. God made the constitution, and it is written, "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." God will personally judge each man. To place punishment in the action only of constitutional law does not relieve the Divine government of any burden, but it does exclude God as much as the materialist's reign of law.

Rev. J. F. B. TINLING dwelt upon the difficulty there is in always remembering and living under the influence of spiritual things. The chief difficulty felt and expressed was that of "continuity" in the higher things. There seemed to be some want of a clear distinction between trusting Christ at all times and having comfort within. Rev. ROBERT DAWSON (London City Mission) spoke on the baptism of the Holy Spirit, pointing out the difference between the baptism with water and the baptism with fire. Rev. F. HALL, of Wimbledon, spoke on the need of a high spiritual life in all ministers if they are to be powers for good. One of the ministers described the Conference as brother finding brother, so thoroughly were all things merged in fellowship in Christ. Every word spoken was in the atmosphere of love and devotion.

A public meeting, presided over by Alderman Evan Spicer, was held in Robertson-street Chapel on the Tuesday evening, and was attended by a large congregation. The sense of need of blessing, the possibility of attaining it, and the responsibility of having it and using it, were earnestly set forth by Revs. W. J. Woods, J. P. Gledstone, H. J. Perkins, and A. J. Palmer. The young were specially remembered at this meeting. The communion of the Lord's Supper on Wednesday night was peculiarly impressive. Mr. New said that "now we part to give what we have got."

Theatrical Women and Girls.—Upwards of 100 accepted the invitation of Mr. William Forbes, on Thursday last, in Islington Presbyterian Lecture Hall. After tea, hymns and solos were sung, and brief addresses were given by Rev. A. C. Alexander, Mrs. Norwell, and Mr. Forbes.

Street Flower-Sellers.—In a trying time such as they have lately been experiencing, through the spell of frost, these girls are often actually saved from perishing of cold and want by the agents of the Flower Girls' Mission, which Mr. John A. Groom (8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.) has superintended over thirty years. To those who are unacquainted with the privation of the poor of this class the scene in the early morning breakfast-room which the Mission provides at Covent Garden is a phase of London life such as many easy-going people might hardly suppose to exist. The aim of the Mission must ever be to remove these young creatures from the street, to find them more suitable employment. More than a thousand have been trained and started in the world, and that progress is ever going on.

The Indian Famine.

In a communication on this subject, Rev. E. Storrow, of Brighton (for many years an Indian missionary), expresses the view that the famine is not directly due to any neglect on the part of the Government or to the action of the people themselves. It is the result of natural causes. The poverty and ignorance of the people, which prevent them from coping with the calamity, of course are subsidiary causes. Mr. Storrow urges that private beneficence must liberally second Government effort, and adds :—

"It is a stupendous task to cover an empire fourteen times the size of Great Britain, and containing one-sixth of the earth's population, with roads, irrigation canals, schools, and all the conditions of civilisation. Thank God it is being done. Regretfully it must be admitted that good as is our general Indian policy, it is not perfect. The greatest of our errors is in maintaining an army far too large and expensive, and so far beyond the necessities of the empire that it is the only great danger to peace and prosperity and British supremacy. To meet its wasteful expenditure, education, and all public works of utility, as roads, railways, and irrigation canals are starved."

In reporting on the relief work under Mr. Cain in the Koi district, Major-General Haig, of Redhill, says :—

"Some £200 have been received, and the greater part of it has already been sent out to Mr. Cain. I have received pretty regular reports from him on the state of things in the distressed districts. The rain which fell in other parts of India in December and January did not extend to the Koi country. The rice crop was totally lost, and a great part of the cholam. The next crop, and that not the one on which they chiefly depend, will not be reaped before August or September next, so that there are eight months during which they will be dependent upon such supplies as the Government and private charity may provide. Unfortunately, there is a famine of water as well as of food.

"Mr. Cain is inclined to think that the £400 originally estimated may be sufficient, but I do not think that the extent of the distress has been fully gauged as yet. I would therefore still invite further help."

The directors of the London Missionary Society call the attention of their friends to the needs of the starving people of India, especially in the district under the care of its missionaries. The distress in the Benares and Mirzapur district, and in country places connected with the Almora station, is very great. An appeal has come from the Benares District Committee asking for help for the starving and naked children who are flocking to the Orphanage and Schools; also for the Christian workers, and for the large number of suffering poor who throng to the doors of the missionaries begging for relief. The missionaries point out that Benares and Mirzapur, in addition to their present population, are becoming the refuge of thousands of destitute villagers from the outlying districts. In the Telugu country in the Madras Presidency also there is great distress, and in connection with the Society's Telugu Mission there are about 11,000 native Christians. The great majority of these Christians are very poor, depending at the best of times upon a scanty daily wage for daily food. They have been without work for many weeks, except such as have been able to earn a scanty pittance at the Government relief works, nor have they any chance of getting work until the next rains come. Consequently, they are in sore straits. It is estimated that an expenditure of £50 a day for the next three months will be required to provide adequately for the needs of those who thus have a special claim on the Society's help.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Rev. Arthur N. Johnson, Home Secretary, 14, Blomfield-street, London-wall, E.C.

CHRISTIAN SUCCOUR TO INDIA.

Dear Sir,—The appalling calamity in India is developing rapidly. Nearly a million more sufferers have sought Government relief since last week. This awful figure does not represent the worst. It is to be feared that for every one who seeks relief on the works there are as many who, from being too far from relief works, or too old, or too reduced by famine, cannot leave their villages, and there they die, except so far as house-to-house visitation has been organised. Owing to the immense area of distress this is in many cases impossible.

Awful as this state of things is, it must get worse and worse, week by week, for two months, and in many places for eight months, as the slender stores of food become more and more exhausted. According to the lowest estimate and Famine Commissioners' report, there will soon be 5,000,000 on relief works, with a corresponding increase of infirm, aged, and sick, left to lingering starvation in their homes.

People in England have not yet awoke to the portentous character of the disaster going on. Meanwhile, the groans, the cries of the tens of thousands of famishing ones go up before God. As the corpses of the parents are burned or buried, the helpless orphans are beginning to come by hundreds to the followers of Christ to be saved and cared for.

At the lowest estimate there will be 25 per cent. of the 5,000,000 who will be on relief works, sick, aged, infirm, who need the help which they cannot get on relief works—who will feed and care for these? If out of the 80,000,000 in the "famine" and "scarcity" area, only 1 per cent. are left orphans there will be 800,000 orphans. Who is going to feed them and train them up for Christ? At a low estimate 1,000,000 will have lost their cattle or industrial implements. Who is going to supply their need and give them a chance after all their bereavement?—Yours for Christ's sake, Radstock.

42, Eccleston-place, London, S.W.

P.S.—It is perhaps well to remind friends, that Mansion House funds will be sent to the General Committee in Calcutta, which includes among its members Hindus and Mohammedans. Those who wish that their offerings should go as a witness for Christ, will do well to select some Christian agency, through which their gifts may be administered. Surely they would like that orphans should only be entrusted to Christian care.

The President of the National Temperance League will preside on Friday, May 21, over a great demonstration in celebration of the progress of teetotalism during Her Majesty's reign, to be held in the Queen's Hall.

Drunkenness is not only the cause of crime, but it is crime, and that if any encourage drunkenness for the sake of the profit derived from the sale of drink, they are guilty of a form of moral assassination as criminal as any that has ever been practised by the bravos of any country or of any age.—John Ruskin.

Second Advent Conference.

A conference on the Second Advent of our Lord was held in Glasgow on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week, February 9, 10, 11. Three meetings were held each day, the Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas, of Douglas Support, presiding. On Tuesday the subject under consideration was "The Word of God." Addresses were delivered by Pastor Fuller Gooch, Rev. John Wilkinson, Rev. John Sloan, and others, showing the absolute necessity of adherence on the part of believers to the doctrine of plenary inspiration, and the way in which the Bible maintains its position despite all criticism from within and without the Church.

On Wednesday attention was specially directed to Israel, more particularly to the prospect in the near future of the restoration of the Jews and the fulfilment of the glorious prophecies regarding them. The closing day (Thursday) was devoted to addresses on "Christ, the King," which, the chairman said, included much more than the great mass of Christians seem to suppose. The last words were spoken by Dr. Elder Cumming on the kinliness of Christ's words to Peter about John, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" He solemnly pointed out the likelihood of some present being privileged to tarry till the King comes, calling earnestly for a more watchful, waiting spirit, and more earnest doing of the Word—if they would be ready.

Rev. W. H. Aitken at Leyton.

A very encouraging mission conducted by this well-known preacher has recently been brought to its close in this Eastern suburb of the great city. The mission had to contend with more than one adverse influence, for the weather was extremely cold the first week, and in the second there was not a single night without rain. Besides this, the minds of the people were greatly distracted by a contested election which was going on all through the first week, and the first four days of the second.

That in these circumstances large congregations should have assembled day by day to listen to the mission-preacher's message, spoke volumes for the interest that his visit excited. Considering that this is not now, as it once was, at all a leisured neighbourhood, the population being almost entirely composed of busy people, the numbers attending the morning addresses on the spiritual life were most satisfactory; there is every reason to hope that many believers were led on by these to a fuller consecration of themselves to God, and to a higher plane of Christian experience. Every night there was encouraging work amongst the awakened, and as far as man can judge, there has been a very blessed ingathering of souls.

Between five and six hundred memorial cards were distributed to those who had derived some sort of definite blessing from the mission; and a large number of the recipients affirmed that it had been with them a time of decision for Christ. Mr. Stephens' work amongst the young was most remarkable, numbers of young people in their teens professing to yield themselves to God. There has been much prayer for this mission, and it would seem to have been abundantly answered in showers of blessing, filling our hearts with praise and thanksgiving.

The Rontgen Rays are now in general use in almost all the hospitals. At Guy's a special room has been fitted up with all the latest appliances for their application, and a Brook-street photographer is in charge of the establishment. Almost every day some patient is subjected to the process, and students declare that since the employment of X rays they have learnt more about the human frame in a day than they learnt in six months before.—Manchester Courier.

Japanese Sailors in London.—With reference to a recent paragraph in our columns on this subject, Miss M. McLean, 46, Pyrland-road, N., writes that she has at length secured a suitable reading-room close to Victoria Dock, for the use of the many Japanese seamen visiting the port of London. Some seven hundred of these, including crews of American and Australian vessels, have touched our shores within the last three months. Miss McLean would be grateful for some wall decorations for the room, for a small organ, and for a good supply of Japanese Testaments and books.

Starving Millions.

MY DEAR NEPHEWS AND NIECES,—I want this week to tell you something of the fearful famine in India, of which you have all no doubt heard. I wonder whether any of you have tried to understand what it really means. We have to thank God that in England we may feel ourselves secure from such fearful trouble, but in some of the lands over which our Government rules there is often fear of starvation, not for families only, but for millions, for thousands of thousands of men and women and children.

You will remember how that in Joseph's time there was famine—starvation—in Egypt, when in seven "lean" years the people ate up all they had been able to store in seven "fat" years. That terrible famine came because of lack of water in the Nile; enough rain did not fall in Uganda and the Soudan and all those countries, to flow down the Nile and water the crops in sandy, rainless Egypt. It is the same in our Indian Empire to-day. Enough rain has not fallen in the mountains and on the plains of most of the countries in India to enable the rice and the wheat and the peas and the lentils to grow, so the people are starving.

These famishing countries are many times bigger than England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales put together, and they are crowded with people. I have travelled through them all myself, and have seen their towns and villages, in many of which are to be found not only idol worshippers, but brothers and sisters in Christ; and hundreds of brave missionaries live among them, teaching them the way to God. These faithful workers are writing home to tell us of the awful need and suffering just now, and asking us to send them money to bring food from afar.

But they do not tell us what I am sure is true, that in face of this trouble they will be depriving themselves of many good things this year, that they may share what they have with others for whom Christ died. And I am sure that if you and I were there we would do the same. We would be so moved by the sight of the starving children, to say nothing of the older folk, that we would gladly give up the jam from our bread, the sugar from our tea, the cake and the sweets from our tables, that those who have not even bread to eat may at least have that. Do you not think that we could do something of this sort even in England? I am sure your fathers and mothers would gladly help you if you asked them. I was visiting some friends the other day, and found that they had given up eating meat that they might send what they saved to India, and were living on equally nourishing, though far cheaper, lentils and peas and beans. By doing something of this sort we can feed the hungry without giving one penny less for missions and home work.

When you send in your answers next week, will you say in a word or two at the bottom what any of you think you can do without this summer? Perhaps you thought to ask for a new hat before you really needed it, or some new plaything, or you would like to take a holiday by train when you might walk somewhere else, or to go in a cab without real need. If you will send me anything saved in this way, I will send it on to India, telling you where, and acknowledging all amounts over a shilling—not under your own names, but under the names of what you have done without. Remember Who has said "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." UNCLE TED.

WHAT THE FAMINE IN INDIA MEANS.

DEAR FRIENDS AT HOME,—We are having a terrible famine here. Multitudes are perishing for lack of food. There are hundreds of orphan children homeless, dying in the streets. Here is God's open door for his church, an opportunity to gather in many sheaves for Him.

Hundreds, yea thousands, of these dear children can be gathered by missionaries, for there is no one to claim them. They can be taught of Jesus, and many will become Christians, the future members of a strong Christian Church. These in turn will bring others to Christ. I have been in India for eleven years, and no such opportunity has come. Shall we not embrace it? Although times are hard and finances are low, yet God will show us how we can help if we are willing.

The famine is too terrible to describe. It is enough for us to know that parents sell their children for food, or push them into wells, destroying them in order that they may not see them suffer.

In Poona Collectorate alone 5355 children, and in Bombay Presidency 30,000 children under seven years of age, and the women in charge, are being supported by the Government, which cannot reach them all.

A few months ago the Lord laid the burden of these children upon my heart. I saw it to be a God-given opportunity, but felt powerless, as I had no money for their support. The burden became unbearable, and after hesitation and much prayer I felt that the Lord would have me begin the work of taking in children. It seemed to me that He would not give such an opportunity, and so lay it upon my heart, if He did not purpose providing for them; so, realising that the promises were sufficient, I took twenty, and then another twenty, until now 103 boys and girls have been taken in. They were terrible to look at, but after a few weeks of feeding, they have picked up wonderfully. They are all very bright, being from the better classes.

INDIAN CHILDREN PHOTOGRAPHED IN TIME OF PLENTY.

The Lord has graciously provided for these children thus far. The support for one child for one year is only £3 6s. 8d. They will need support for ten years, and will then, we hope, become self-supporting. We hope that many of them will be called to devote all their time to the Lord's work, and that all will become useful Christians.

I will undertake to provide for children as I may receive support for them. Friends, invest your money in this, and lay up treasure in the bank of heaven. Money may be sent direct direct to me by cheque, draft, or money order.

(Mrs.) CARRIE P. BRUERE, Missionary,
Methodist Episcopal Church, Poona, India.

MR. ROBERT P. WILDER writes:—I take great pleasure in seconding Mrs. Bruere's call; she is doing a good work, and funds placed with her will be wisely used. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bruere are near neighbours of ours, and we know them as very earnest Christian workers.

The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN will be glad to forward any contributions of £3 6s. 8d. to Mrs. Bruere with which he may be entrusted by his readers, as well as promises for future years. He would suggest that where possible the exact sum or its multiple should be either contributed or collected.

INDIAN CHILDREN PHOTOGRAPHED IN TIME OF SCARCITY.

This photograph will give you some idea of the dreadful sufferings of the starving peoples of India to-day. I read the other day of girls of five who weighed only 10lb., and of grown-up men and women weighing only 4st.!* And this terrible famine is certain to last for six or eight months, over an area 1300 miles long and 400 broad, from Rawal Pindi to Bellary.

A Good Example.

"DEAR UNCLE TOM,—Yesterday morning during family worship, the poor famine-stricken people in India were specially remembered, and immediately after prayer was over my daughter (whose "Bible Searcher" I enclose) went up to her father and whispered a request that she might have a week of self-denial from jam, cakes, sugar, etc., and that the money should go to India. Of course, her father consented, and he also suggested that perhaps some of Uncle Tom's nephews and nieces might like to do the same. So I just write to you, to tell you, in case you should think the children would care to fall in with it.

"I thank you most sincerely for ever proposing the "Bible Searcher," and all the trouble you take over it. I think some of the elders appreciate it quite as much as the young people." A MOTHER.

The Bible Searcher.

The Measure of Love.

Merry and clear rang the children's shouts,
As they laughed in joyous glee,
While baby went over an oft-done act,
They never seemed tired to see.

"How much does Bessie love Tom ?" they cried
(A shy glance at the stranger's face) ;
And then, say about six inches apart,
The little hands measured a space.

"How much does Bessie love Jane ?" came next,
The hands opened wider then ;
But came almost close, with a mischievous smile,
At "How much does Bessie love Ben ?"

Then the question came—always the last to be put,
"How much does Bessie love mother ?"
When the dear little hands flew as wide apart
As one could be stretched from the other.

And I thought of a love so strong and wide,
Its measure we never can know ;
The love of our God when He sent his Son,
Because He loved us so. (John iii. 16)

The Disciples Dispersed.—Acts viii. 1-17.

Golden Text.—Verse 4.

THE teaching of this lesson may gather particularly around two things—the revival at Samaria, and Simon Magus.

I. The Revival (5—8).—Recall the commission given to the Church (i. 8). Jerusalem was to be the centre from which "all Judea, Samaria, and the uttermost parts of the earth" were to be evangelised. Probably about seven years have elapsed since Pentecost, and from all we can learn the Jerusalem Church has made no effort to fulfil that commission. It is interesting to see by what means the carrying out of that mission was effected.

Of course, it is God who calls, and qualifies, and sends forth every true labourer (see Matt. ix. 38), while Satan, as the adversary, is always working to defeat Him. Yet in this instance it may be said that Satan in some sense called out the labourer. For Philip was one of the seven (vi. 5) chosen by the Church to aid the apostles. Of his previous history we know nothing. He held an obscure position in the Church, and his great gifts for evangelistic work were comparatively unused. And how came the Church to choose these seven? Satan stirred up a spirit of envy and discontent in the Church (vi. 1) ; and the necessity thus created led to the calling out of Stephen and of Philip. What the adversary meant for evil, God overruled for good.

Satan was also used in sending forth the evangelist. The great persecution (1, 3) was not stirred up against the Church with this intention. On the contrary, its design was to destroy the Church, by terrifying the witnesses for Christ into silence. It was sanctioned by the authorities (xxvi. 10), and was carried on with greatest rigour and cruelty. With what result? The apostles did not flee (1), but tarried in Jerusalem to encourage the disciples there, whilst others, whose zealous service had aroused bitter opposition, were "scattered abroad," and found other fields in which to labour (4). God had need of Philip in Samaria ; this persecution stirred up by Satan was the means of sending him there. So must all enemies of God be confounded and their evil purposes frustrated.

Concerning this revival two things are worthy of note. The first refers to the preacher. His theme was Christ (5)—the person, character, history, atonement, resurrection, and glorious appearing of Christ. And this theme was enforced by miraculous signs (6, 7). These were the witnesses to the fact that Christ is the living one, and was giving power to his servant. We have the same theme ; are we sufficiently concerned to possess the same spiritual power?

The second concerns the people (6). They were arrested by the miracles ; but no revival comes from merely witnessing miraculous displays. They "with one accord gave heed." Heedless hearing is responsible for much of the failure we mourn to-day. "Take heed how ye hear" ; for it is possible to have ears, and not to use them. We may be getting hardened into a hopeless condition through hearing without thoughtfulness the solemn message which God sends us. Let one of the scholars read Heb. ii. 1-3. That is one lesson the Samaritan teach us, and another lesson is in verse 12. Their hearing led to believing ; and when they believed they had the courage of their convictions, and were baptized. This was the outward expression of their entire separation from the former life of sin, and of their committal to the service of Jesus Christ. Urge others to imitate this example.

II. Simon Magus (9-17) is a somewhat mysterious character. As his name intimates he practised magic. It has been suggested that he used mesmerism, hypnotism, spiritualism ; and so obtained considerable power over the people (9-11). They owned him as their leader. They knew of no better deliverer, and so accepted him.

He "believed also" (13), and even confessed his faith. Evidently his faith was of no value. Possibly he accepted the facts of the Gospel as true, but did not accept of Jesus Himself as his Saviour. If spurious faith was possible then, it is much more possible now.

His faith was not connected with repentance (21). There was no change in his affections and desires. True contact with Christ always leads to change of life.

Even when unmasked the apostle he dreaded, not the sin, but the doom threatened (24). And for this he would not pray himself, but asked Peter to pray for it on his behalf. Not by profession, but by practice, a man is known.

Temperance Notes.

An eight days' mission in Glossop and district has had a successful termination with a great meeting in the Town Hall.

Dr. Norman Kerr has received an intimation from Lord Salisbury that the Government intend to introduce a bill dealing with habitual drunkards.

In connection with the Woolwich Division of the London United Temperance Council, a successful eight days' mission has been held at the Baptist Tabernacle, by Mr. Thomas Baker.

Speaking last week, at the annual meeting of the Liverpool Women's Union and Temperance Home, the Bishop of Liverpool said that temperance among men was increasing, but women were going backward. The grand cause of this, he believed, lay in the facilities for obtaining drink which were not given in the days of our forefathers. He believed that the Grocers' Licence Bill had done immense harm to this country, and especially to women.

Mrs. Temple, wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury, speaking at Ealing, on the Ellison Lodge Homes for Inebriates, Dulwich, said that some of the women received in the Home had apparently been permanently reclaimed, but there were failures, for drink destroyed the moral fibre of many of its victims, so that they seemed incapable of resisting temptation. There was, however, sufficient encouragement to the promoters of the Home to persevere.

The first of a series of eight lectures on the chemical and physiological aspect of the Temperance Question was delivered by Mr. Walter N. Edwards, F.C.S., at the office of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, 4, Ludgate Hill, E.C., on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Brooks, Hon. Sec., introduced the lecturer, who spoke on Intoxicating Drinks : Their Constituents and Properties, comparing them with good foods, such as bread and milk, &c., illustrated by chemical experiments. The lecture was well attended.

The Royal Commission at its last two sittings, has heard important and very serious evidence with regard to drinking clubs, in many cases mere unlicensed drink shops. The evidence of the chief constable and police officials of Wolverhampton, Swindon, Leeds, Cardiff, Dublin, and Wakefield, flung a lurid light on the demoralisation of the people by means of these uncontrolled drinking haunts. The impression grows that drastic measures must be taken to mitigate the intolerable evils connected with these clubs.

In his fifty-seventh annual Temperance sermon Dr. Dawson Burns dwelt upon the progress of the movement during the sixty years of the Queen's reign. In 1837 its adherents probably did not exceed 100,000, its societies could not outnumber a few hundreds ; it appeared insignificant amidst party strifes ; it was confronted by a prescriptive liquor traffic and popular prejudice ; it made but little impression on public opinion or drinking customs ; it had taken little hold upon the Christian churches of the land or they of it. In 1897 there were seventy leading national or provincial societies, not including district and county unions ; the membership was counted by millions ; the Temperance reform was high in public opinion, and was exerting a marked influence on social life. The change in the juvenile Temperance movement from a few societies to many thousands was most remarkable.

Dr. Pitcairn, speaking before the Society for the Study of Inebriety, on the treatment of habitual drunkards, gave special attention to female drunkenness. It was notorious that the most troublesome of all female prisoners were the drunkards. Committed to prison in a condition of latent alcoholism, if not one of actual delirium tremens, they were perforce treated as invalids, and if the sentence was a short one had scarcely recovered before they were discharged, and came out craving for further excess, to be in its turn followed by a committal to prison. This cycle of events was neither exceptional nor imaginary. It was repeated daily throughout the kingdom, unnoticed except when the recital of some hundreds of previous convictions revived the public interest in what was simply a public scandal. The case of Jane Cakebread called forth as much comment as if she had been the rarest production of the century, but, in truth, she belonged to a type the most common. There were hundreds, nay thousands of Jane Cakebreads in existence, who only differed from the original in the absence of an eccentricity which led to disorderly behaviour when drunk.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany was present on Tuesday last in the Village Hall, Esher, at an illustrated lecture given by Rev. W. J. Mayers on "Child Life in Slum Land." Some of the boys from the homes played a varied selection of music during the evening. At the close H.R.H. expressed to Mr. Mayers her great pleasure with all she had seen and heard, and her interest in Dr. Barnardo's work of child-rescue.

A Jubilee at Reading.

THE fiftieth anniversary of the Reading Church of England Y.M.C.A. has been held with much enthusiasm. A conversazione was given in the Town Hall on Monday week by Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Sutton, followed on the next evening by a public meeting, at which the honoured Mr. Martin Hope Sutton presided. An illuminated address was presented to the chairman, in which thanks were returned to God for the grace which has so long sustained him in his devoted labours for the spread of the Gospel, and particularly in the founding and guidance of this society.

Mr. MARTIN HOPE SUTTON, who had a hearty reception, said, in acknowledging the address, that all glory must be rendered to God for any good that had been done. After a review of the past and of the appalling state of things in certain districts before the ragged school was established in connection with the Association, Mr. Sutton concluded by trusting that those who in future carry on work of the C. of E. Y.M.C.A. in Reading, would carry it on on the same lines of Christian, Evangelical and Biblical truth which has been so much blessed in the past.

Addresses followed by Mr. A. MASLEN, Rev. F. T. COLSON, and Archdeacon SINCLAIR, who rejoiced to see that the venerable founder was still able to be amongst them, and that even at his advanced age he was in full command of all his faculties, and, thank God, in fairly good health, and able to give them a most useful and encouraging word of congratulation and advice. It appeared to him that Mr. Martin Sutton and his brother and the other members of his family had been doing for Reading very much what Sir George Williams and his family had been doing for London in the foundation of the Y.M.C.A. After dwelling on the special work and distinct value of this great movement, the Archdeacon said that it was for the maintenance and the spread of the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ, especially among young men; the godly, righteous, and sober life was what they desired to find exemplified amongst themselves, and so far as they could influence others throughout this great town. They desired in these days of doubt and difficulty, to preserve intact those great and glorious principles of that blessed Reformation which had brought freedom and liberty, political, religious, and social, to this great nation, and which they believed, under the guiding hand of God and through the blessing of his providence, had raised them as a people to that pitch of greatness at which they found themselves to-day, for which they thanked God in this sixtieth year of the Queen's reign.

Mr. MARTIN JOHN SUTTON, Mr. S. PRESTON, Col. SHERRARD, and others, spoke on the great importance of the work being done by the Association.

Police Seaside Home, Hove.

THIS Convalescent Home was commenced in 1890, and since then over 3000 policemen from all parts of England (chiefly from the Metropolitan Force) have visited it after sickness or injuries incurred on duty.

A short time since I had the pleasure of paying a visit to the Home, which is commended by its brightness, spaciousness, and general completeness of arrangement as admirably calculated to promote its design of restoring health to those who have lost it. Of course, such a building, which provides accommodation for fifty convalescents, requires a larger income to keep it in working order than the 8s. a week which is paid by the policemen themselves, and just now several hundred pounds are required to repaint, paper, and do some absolutely necessary sanitary repairs.

The main interest to me was the intensely practical and powerful character of the influence pervading the Home. The atmosphere of the place seemed of the most happy Christian character; an unconstrained, unconventional freedom and enjoyment growing out of the realisation of the love of God in Christ.

Communications should be made to Miss M. Griffin, Hon. Sec. and Lady Superintendent, Police Seaside Home, Hove, Brighton.

J. N. WORSFOLD.

Haddlesey Rectory, near Selby, Yorkshire, February 8, 1897.

Mission in Edinburgh.

FROM February 1 to February 10 a general mission was held in the various Free churches in Edinburgh; services were conducted in over fifty churches in all parts of the city. The workers in many of the churches toiled hard to make the meetings a success. Many of the districts were well visited, open-air meetings were held, and thousands of printed invitations distributed, though it was found that personal invitations were more effectual than any number of notices.

The attendances varied. In some districts it was good, and the meetings hearty. In others comparatively little interest was manifested. As regards results, it was found that in some cases the smaller meetings were the most fruitful. There have been tokens of blessing, and a manifest quickening among some of the congregations. The effort has been an interesting one as showing what may be done in a united mission. Help was given by the best men that could be found.

The meetings closed with a united meeting of Home mission and Christian workers. Dr. WILSON, of the Barclay Church, presided. Dr. WELLS, of Glasgow, said that Christ's methods must be our methods. He pointed out Christ's reverence for men, his treatment of them, his compassion, and his undying hope for even the worst. We must reach individuals if we are to win communities. Begin with the youngest and the worst—the masses within to reach the masses without.

Rev. WM. MUIR said this was a soldiers' battle, and the great need is individual effort. Unlike a military battle, the soldiers should be consulted as to the methods employed. Enthusiasm is necessary. Indifference is most to be feared. He would rather have the worker all zeal than all discretion and no zeal. He laid emphasis on the drink traffic as the greatest hindrance to the progress of the Gospel.

Rev. W. Ross (Glasgow) said that an ideal was necessary. Joshua was a type of a worker—a soul-winner was reproductive. The soul-winner does the best for himself, most for his church, and in Christ's name he may claim the houses and the districts in which he labours for his Master.

The conference was most helpful, practical, and inspiring, and good will doubtless be the outcome.

14, Livingstone-place, Edinburgh. R. CRAIG.

"Thus Saith the Lord."

'MID earth's many sounding voices,
Hear I only one sure word;
At the sound my soul rejoices,
This it is, "Thus saith the Lord!"

I believe the heavenly message
God has chosen to record;
With divine, eternal presage
Comes to me, "Thus saith the Lord!"

Sweet and certain through the babel,
Like a high, angelic cord,
Still to hear it I am able,
Strong and clear, "Thus saith the Lord!"

"He that on the Son believeth,
Trusting only in his Word,
From the dead new life receiveth."
I believe! "Thus saith the Lord."

"Watch ye for the coming glory!
Wield the Spirit's two-edged sword;
Tell lost men their Saviour's story";
I obey. "Thus saith the Lord!"

Amherst, Mass. (MRS.) MERRILL E. GATES.

Portsmouth.—Last week the committee of the Midnight Meeting Movement assisted Mr. Geo. H. Fison and other local friends in holding a series of meetings in this important borough. The expenses of the mission were equally shared by the parent society and the local Rescue Home, which is sadly in need of financial help. The gatherings of the women were convened in known centres of immorality—Landport and Portsea, but the attendance was greatly marred by the torrents of rain which fell at the time of the meetings. The most encouraging aspect of the mission was that it was ascertained those who had been rescued at former efforts were still in the Home and doing well. Mr. McCree, secretary of the London society, attended as a deputation.

Mr. George Clarke at Finsbury Park.

WITH a steadily deepening interest and no lack of encouraging result the visit of this evangelist to the Congregational Church, Seven Sisters-road, completed its third week on Sunday last. The two meetings held daily (Saturdays excepted) have been very largely attended, not only by residents in the immediate neighbourhood, but by many from outlying districts.

The quiet solemnity pervading the audiences has been a marked feature of the mission, and there can be no reasonable doubt that the "still small voice" has been heard in many hearts, and not only heard, but obeyed. Some four hundred cards have been filled up by anxious ones who have entered the inquiry room for spiritual guidance, of whom certainly a large number made a great decision to serve the Lord.

Last Sunday was verily "a high day." The forenoon service from eleven to twelve was packed with eager listeners, to whom—and especially to the young converts present—in a brief address of twenty-five minutes Mr. Clarke gave practical exhortation and encouragement from the promise of God to Joshua (1-5) and the fellowship of Christ as illustrated by Luke xxiv. 15. Then followed, perhaps, the most interesting service of the whole series, when some eight or nine hundred persons remained to a second meeting to unite in the observance of the Lord's Supper. To many present this was a new experience. Pretty well every evangelical denomination was represented; Churchman and "Dissenter" sat side by side, and the service may be regarded as a practical illustration of that unity for which our Lord prayed—"that they all may be one."

The Sabbath evening service was not less remarkable, both as regards numbers and evident power felt by the audience. The mission was brought to a fitting conclusion on Monday with two thanksgiving gatherings, afternoon and evening, when a large number followed the evangelist's suggestion to bring with them a written note of praise to God for blessing received, accompanied where possible with some material offering. These gifts were publicly dedicated to the Lord and his work.

As to after-results, it is encouraging to know that the pastor (Rev. Llewellyn Parsons), with the co-operation of his deacons, has made arrangements for a series of special addresses calculated to help beginners in the Christian life. The addresses will deal with "How I may avoid backsliding?" "Worldliness," and similar subjects. These addresses will be given on successive Wednesday evenings, the Sabbath evenings being also devoted to special addresses on "Apostolic Biographies," commencing next Sunday with "Andrew, the Home Missionary."

Mr. Clarke is at Portishead this week for a short mission, after which he begins at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road (Rev. F. B. Meyer, pastor).

Itinerating in North Africa.

Mr. W. G. Pope, of the North Africa Mission, writing to Mrs. Macrae, 45, Moray-place, Edinburgh, reports work among various classes at Susa, in Tunisia. He hopes soon to hire a hall, and to open a shop for the sale (or distribution to the very poor) of the Holy Scriptures. Susa has a population of 20,000, while within an easy distance there are 250,000 people. Mr. Pope writes:—"We have a little cart that has been lent to us for visiting neighbouring towns and villages, but the horse we have had to hire at 5s. a day. We hope the Master will send us the £8 necessary to purchase a horse, so that three or four days a week may be given to itineration."

Soldiers' and Seamen's Institute, Chatham.—The report of this Home shows that an average of 160 men sleep at "the Welcome" nightly, while a thousand persons use the place day by day, and thus large numbers are brought within range of the Christian efforts going on. The new branch at Gravesend is doing well, while at Sheerness useful work is also being done. Extracts are given from the journal of the various mission agents, showing that God has blessed this work greatly The superintendent is Rev. James Fletcher, 8, Albany-terrace, Chatham.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. John McNeill is now in the second week of his mission at York. There have been great gatherings in the Festival Concert Room, and much power has accompanied the preaching of the Gospel. Next week we hope to give a report of the whole mission, specially prepared.

Rev. John Telfer, late of Lyon-street Free Church, Glasgow, who returned last December from a year's work in Boksburg, Transvaal, has held a two weeks' mission in the Shiloh Hall, Ardrishaig. There was great heartiness among believers all through, and the Bible readings were a means of much blessing. Although not privileged to see definite results among the unsaved, we believe that fruit will yet appear from such faithful preaching of the Word. J. McN.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been in Winnipeg, Manitoba, for over a week holding united services under the Y.M.C.A. auspices. Nearly all the churches are co-operating. The meetings opened out in the First Baptist Church, and by the end of the first week the building was filled to the doors. The second week the meetings were in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, seating about 1600. The remaining two weeks will probably be in Grace Methodist Church, which is the largest in the town. A large number have made a full surrender, and many anxious ones have found salvation. The work is deepening with each meeting. Mr. Inglis will go from Winnipeg to Portland, Oregon, and Salt Lake City.

In pursuance of his engagements with the Y.M.C.A. Mr. W. R. Lane is holding this week a mission to men in the Association Rooms, North-end, Croydon. The opening meetings on Sunday were full of promise.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith are holding a mission this week in Camden Chapel, Holloway.

The united and simultaneous mission in about sixteen Bradford chapels has been, in spite of the trying weather, a marked success. Eastbrook Chapel, which holds 1500, has been crowded to the doors, Gipsy Smith being the evangelist. Revs. Thomas Cook, Thomas Waugh, and J. G. Bennett have been labouring successfully at Great Horton, Kirkgate and Manningham. Large numbers of enquirers have been dealt with.

A series of Gospel meetings have been conducted in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, by Rev. C. H. Yatman, of New York. The attendances were very large, some 3000 persons being present on various occasions. A large number professed to have decided for Christ. Mr. Yatman has also concluded missions in Rathmines and Drogheda Methodist churches.

The Cockington People's Mission, Torquay, is holding evangelistic services in the Chelston Assembly Rooms, conducted by Mr. Levi Powell, who has been missioner for more than nine years. His earnest Gospel addresses are attracting large congregations, and are being much blessed.

Mr. John Elliott has been conducting Gospel services in the Gospel Hall, Dartmouth. The congregations have been very good, and several anxious souls have professed to be saved.

Mr. Newton Jones, S.S. Union evangelist, has conducted an encouraging mission, February 6 to 11, at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, W.C. The Lord was with us and blessed his own Word. God's people were quickened. Many children were helped to see the way of salvation. On Sunday afternoon, Mr. Jones spoke to about 1200 children, Vernon uniting with Bethel and Clarendon Sunday-schools. The Word was blessed to the unsaved, and a number sought Jesus as their Saviour. D. H. Moore.

Mr. F. L. Smith, who has been labouring in Belfast for six weeks, conducted his last service, in Macrory Memorial Church, on Friday evening. In Bethany Church many were born again under his preaching of the Gospel. Some cases were particularly interesting, especially one man, old in sin and years, who now rejoices in peace and liberty. The attendances in the Macrory Memorial Church were large. Never in the history of the congregation has there been such a work of grace; many who never dared to confess Christ have done so and found Jesus as the Saviour. Mr. Smith intends to conduct another short mission in Aberdeen, where he had recently been preaching for six weeks. Efforts have been made to induce him to remain longer in Ireland, but he cannot see his way to do so, hoping in a few weeks to be back again in America.

Mr. Summers has concluded a successful mission at Walbottle, Northumberland. The whole village has been moved. Crowds attending the services and a large number of young men and women believed, to the saving of their souls.

A successful Evangelistic Mission has been carried out in Highbury Vale Mission Hall, Blackstock-road, N., by Mr. Henry Thorne. It extended from January 30 to February 8, and in spite of continuous rain good audiences were gathered, the hall being sometimes crowded. A spirit of earnest prayer and expectation of blessing had been aroused before the commencement of the Mission, and the immediate neighbourhood had been carefully canvassed. The addresses delivered by Mr. Thorne were characterised by much power and feeling, and were illustrated by incidents largely drawn from his experience as a missioner. The afternoon Bible readings were of value to Christians, whose spiritual life has been quickened and deepened. Anxious ones flocked into the inquiry room each evening, and many have intelligently accepted Jesus as their personal Saviour. A large number of young people have been savingly impressed by the Spirit of God, and a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour is being formed. Mrs. Thorne also held several meetings for women only, which were greatly appreciated. John J. Olding.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has held a fortnight's mission in Forfar, in the Congregational and Baptist Chapels. Large gatherings of people night after night were attracted, to whom the evangelist preached the Gospel with great power. On the two Saturday nights he gave interesting lectures on Palestine and Jerusalem, illustrated with panoramic views. The Christians have been quickened, and some have professed faith in Jesus.

Mr. W. Hall, of Annan, has concluded a fortnight's Gospel services at Longhorsley Mission, Northumberland. Nearly every night anxious souls were seeking the Saviour. The most cheering result is the number of youths who profess to have found Christ.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins have been cheered by the interest awakened during their visit to Greenock, which closes to-morrow. On Sunday they commence at Dumfries, where great preparations are being made for the coming mission. Mr. Stebbins has been laid aside with a cold, but is now recovered.

Colportage in China.

Mr. James Murray, a Glasgow gentleman, who has for eight years been in the service of the National Bible Society of Scotland as one of its superintendents of Colportage in China, left Scotland recently to return to his work. Mr. Murray has travelled over 30,000 miles of Chinese territory, having been sometimes for weeks without seeing a single European. At a valedictory meeting in Sandyford Parish Church, Glasgow, Dr. Elder Cumming said:—

"I want you to realise just in a word what it is to have a Glasgow merchant, in the vigour of youth, with the love of Christ in his heart, saying, 'I will devote my life to China, to circulate the Word of God there, and commend it to the people.' And lest any in this audience should be led to say, 'Yes, but of course he would be well paid for it,' I would add again and emphasise the fact that during these eight years this Glasgow merchant has taken no salary whatever, thinking it worth while to spend his life and his means for the Lord. I do not know what you think, but I feel it to be an object lesson for every Christian man and woman here to-night, a thought worth thinking, a memory worth cherishing, and a suggestion of the question, 'Did I ever do one-tenth of that for Christ?' . . . May they be upheld in China by a praying Church at home, and by the abiding presence of Christ in their own hearts!"

Christian Endeavour.

On Wednesday, 10th inst., the first convention of the Cheltenham C.E. Societies was held at Cambray and Salem Chapels. Addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Foster, Knight Chaplin, W. E. Rice, and Mr. S. Kemp. The convention closed with a consecration meeting, in which seven societies responded in various ways to the roll call. Samuel Thomas.

The committee who are making arrangements for the Whitsuntide Convention of the Christian Endeavour Society have engaged five of the largest buildings in Liverpool for the meetings. Hengler's Circus, with over 5000 seats; St. George's Hall, 3000; Philharmonic Hall, 2600; Myrtle-street Chapel, 1800; and George-street Chapel, 800. The gathering at Bristol was attended by 8000 persons, and the lowest estimate for Liverpool is 12,000.

The second annual meeting of the Dalston Junction Baptist C.E.S. was held on Thursday, Feb. 11, the speakers being Revs. R. O. Johns, Knight Chaplin, and G. P. McKay (president of the North-east London C.E. Union). During the early part of the meeting the treasurer, Mr. Edward Tee, presented to the society a banner, bearing the words, "Dalston Junction Baptist Church Y.P.S.C.E." "For Christ and the Church." The consecration service was very impressive, and the responses to the roll call were beautifully appropriate. Representatives from eighteen societies were present. The secretary reported a membership of 127, consisting of ninety-nine active, thirteen associate, and fifteen honorary members. In the junior society, only inaugurated in October last, a membership of fifty-three. Arthur Nelson.

Sunday Railway Traffic.

At the half-yearly meeting of the Great Western Railway Company, on February 11, Mr. H. C. Nisbet presented a memorial signed by 803 proprietors of that company, urging that in their opinion the traffic in the Sunday carriage of goods, and the facilities offered to various bodies and parties for travel on the Lord's day, call for remonstrance. They believe this traffic to be indefensible, and prayed that steps may be taken for the diminution and final abolition of the Sunday light and heavy goods traffic (without referring to perishables), and for the abandonment of the system of Sunday excursions and special Sunday trains.

Mr. Nisbet addressed the directors and proprietors in support of the memorial, and pointed out that between five and seven hundred goods trains and special trains were running every Sunday on the Great Western line and branches. This excessive and unnecessary Sunday traffic is a violation of the Divine appointment of a day of rest; an injustice and discouragement to the company's servants, who are obliged to accept as a condition of employment this Sunday labour; and an injury to the consciences of the directors and managers, as well as to the very fabric, and rolling stock, and machinery of the railway itself. He reminded them that the late Captain Huish, the able traffic manager of the London and North-Western Railway, whose maxims and opinions still have great weight with railway managers, used to affirm that a great railway line needs a weekly day of rest.

An attentive hearing was given by the proprietors present at this meeting, and Lord Emlyn, the chairman, while dissenting from some of the statements and criticisms of Mr. Nisbet, admitted that it was the duty of railway directors to compress the Sunday goods traffic within the smallest possible dimensions.

A similar memorial is to be presented by Major Mackinlay at the half-yearly meeting of the London and North-Western Railway on February 16.

Women's Protestant Union.—On Thursday February 11, this union held a social gathering in the drawing-room of Exeter Hall. About seventy secretaries and members assembled. Short addresses and reports of progress were given during the afternoon.

Wesleyans and the Queen.—In honour and in commemoration of the sixtieth year of Her Majesty's reign, it has been decided by the Wesleyan authorities to augment the resources of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes established and maintained by the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

The Insane Poor.—The annual meeting of the After Care Association for Poor Persons Discharged or Recovered from Asylums for the Insane, was recently held at 5, Hyde Park-square, W. The Archdeacon of London presided. The meeting was addressed by Revs. Canon Elwyn and M. R. Miligan, Dr. Nicholson, Dr. Rayner, Dr. R. Jones, Dr. Alexander, and others. Help is needed to extend the work.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LACK OF CONVERSIONS.—WHY?

Dear Sir,—This is a question which weighs very heavily upon the hearts of many Christians. Why is it that in many congregations receiving Evangelical teaching there is hardly such a thing as a conversion? What is lacking?

I think all who engage in Christian work must increasingly find that all their power is in God, and that their only strength and hope of success lies in continually laying hold, by prayer, of the omnipotence that is for us. This is lacking. One can hardly call it a lack of prayer. There is much prayer; but how much of it is a definite claiming of God's strength for a definite end?

Why do we not band ourselves together, by twos and threes, to pray for the unconverted in our midst, each praying group taking one unsaved soul, and resting not, day or night, until that soul is saved, realising that the issues of all eternity hang in the balance? Could not each church furnish at least sixty who will pray for thirty dying souls? Out of our memberships of two, three, four, and five hundreds, is it too many to ask? What an advance it would be if this year from every congregation in the land there were thirty won for Christ! It would mean thousands upon thousands. Is God's power not sufficient for this? Has He not promised that if two of us shall agree as touching anything we shall ask, we shall have it? Has he not commanded us to "give Him no rest" until He makes Jerusalem a praise in the earth? We know He has the power, we know He is willing. Are we?

My brothers and sisters all over the kingdom, let me plead with you by all that can persuade you, by the love you bear our Saviour, by his suffering and death for you and for these dying ones, by the shortness of the time we have here, to bring Him thanks, to rise and give yourselves to this work of earnest, definite prayer; to make such an attack upon the stronghold of the enemy as will bring joy to our Saviour's heart, that this year may be a year of mighty turning to God, the first of many years when the Kingdom of God shall triumph gloriously.—Yours sincerely, I. C. Anderson.

"THE SONG OF THE SHIRT."

Dear Sir,—Referring to a letter, "The Song of a Shirt," in The Christian of February 11, and other communications of a similar nature, one is constrained to ask why women should choose such a life when there is such a crying need in many good homes for servants, who would be well fed and well cared for in every way, bodily and spiritually? The writer of this lately applied to a well-known orphanage for a girl to train in her house, thinking it would be one way of helping to do good, but in answer to a letter written in a spirit of kindness and sympathy, she only received a formal card saying they had nothing suitable; and she knows of other Christian ladies who have applied to similar institutions, and received a like reply. It would be satisfactory, at any rate to those who contribute to help such good objects, to know what explanation can be given in such a case. Many ladies have been glad to take situations as cooks (especially), as the wages are infinitely superior in many cases to the miserable pittances earned by governesses.—Yours, etc.,

An Eastbourne Inquirer.

Dear Sir,—I notice in your issue of February 11 a letter on this subject, in which the writer says: "It seems cruel to purchase cheap bargains, and our shops (even our good ones) are stocked with handmade articles, that tell their own tale of cruelty and injustice to the workers." I think we must find the cause in a direction rarely referred to. I have inquired at many large shops, and find that almost all of the hand-made work is done in the convents, which have other means of support, so can afford to work for less than the poor women who have themselves and families to keep.

I believe there are at present about 60,000 of these idle women, mostly foreigners, who have been imported into this country, and who help in this way the income of the convents, and keep down the remuneration for work done by others. Complaints are even made in France, as they are competing unfairly with manufacturers there by working their inmates early and late; even children are employed half the night. This is why efforts made in Ireland to encourage industries amongst the peasantry do not succeed, the priests being opposed to everything which would interfere with their sources of income.

If ladies could only be induced not to buy convent-made things! But I fear there will always be plenty of people who do not ask or care where things are procured, if only they are cheap. Rome knows how to pander to the weaknesses of human nature.—Yours truly, E. M.

Liverpool.

"EFFECTUAL PRAYER FOR LONDON."

Dear Sir,—I am so disappointed at not seeing a quick response to Mr. Tinling's proposal for "Effectual Prayer for London." I hope it is not want of sympathy with the scheme, but just being held over for a fuller list of those who will participate. I had thought there would be so many representative Christians that I need not send my name, but should it be otherwise, put down my name for Tuesday mornings at 8 o'clock until further notice.

It is the great need of London, surely everyone is feeling it so; so please do your part and do not let the matter drop through. Besides, as suggested, the scheme need not be burdensome, only intensely in earnest, and the reflex blessing will reach all.—Yours sincerely, Alice E. Leader.

FREQUENT "CELEBRATIONS."

Dear Sir,—I think your correspondent (Jan. 21) would have done better if he had headed his letter, "Are Frequent 'Celebrations' Unscriptural?" Granted that we cannot give chapter and verse authorising the frequent celebration of the Lord's Supper, can your correspondent quote any verse which forbids it? St. Paul says, "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come." Surely we cannot too often show forth that death! Members of the Church of England believe that God has given "his Son our Saviour Jesus Christ, not only to die for us, but also to be our spiritual food and sustenance in that holy sacrament" (1st exhortation). Your correspondent refers to the frequent celebrations in the first week of the New Year. May I point out, from a purely practical point of view, the necessity for these frequent celebrations? Obviously it is impossible for all Christians to observe the Lord's Supper on the same day, at the same time. We have to provide for the spiritual needs of servants as well as masters. Often the busy mistress of a large house cannot stop to Communion on Sunday, when children are home from school and the ordinary domestic cares are increased. I need not multiply examples. The difficulty is to provide opportunities for all sorts and conditions of people, and I think if your correspondent considers this, he will agree that frequent celebrations are necessary, and certainly not unscriptural.—I am, Sir, yours truly, E. S. S.

Scottish Notes.

At the Free Presbytery of Dundee a conference took place on the question of temperance. It was decided to act with other religious organisations to secure the retention of the clauses in the New Corporation Bill dealing with the closing of shops on Sunday.

The Free Church at Balmartin, in Tiree, was totally destroyed by the terrible storm of December 21, 1894. The congregation is mostly composed of poor cottars and fishermen; they promise £50, so it is necessary that Christian friends should assist. The new church will cost over £500.

An Edinburgh citizen has left by will £4000 worth of securities, the proceeds of which are to be divided between the ministers and kirk sessions of the Established and Free Churches in his native town for lending on easy terms to necessitous persons, especially poor widows with young children. The fund is to be called, "The Golden Rule Loan Fund."

Dr. Marshall Lang, of the Barony Parish, has been writing to a Glasgow paper about the recent Church census there. He says the figures for his church are not correct, and that he has practically three congregations every Sabbath. But the most interesting thing in his communication is his outspokenness about late hours on Saturday evening for shopkeepers, and the conditions of labour growing harder every day. And worst of all is the fact that women and mothers in working-class districts hardly ever attend church.

Rev. George Jackson continued his series of sermons on the Commandments in the Synod Hall, Castle terrace, Edinburgh, on Sunday week. His subject was "The Eighth Commandment," and he spoke very plainly regarding present day commercialism. He stated that it was not necessary to be in business to see the trickery which existed. The books might be passed by all the chartered accountants in the town, but the audit of Christ would show a different result. It was impossible, he said, for a man to go through a business life nowadays and act up to the teachings of Christ, and a young man with scruples could not follow such a vocation. It would be easier to keep the Eighth Commandment if they kept from going into debt; in that case all the dishonesties of life would be reduced by one-half.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

OXFORD.

Meetings have been held at the Hannington Hall in connection with the three years' enterprise of the C.M.S. Miss Storr addressed a meeting of ladies, and Rev. W. J. L. Sheppard spoke at a general meeting.

MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

Canon Christopher's missionary breakfast in February is one of the great events of Oxford. It has now taken place annually for twenty-one years, and is a remarkable and indeed unique gathering. The Canon invites those of all shades of opinion, and there may be seen seated together Evangelical clergy, High Church clergy, and Nonconformist ministers. The meeting has been the means of drawing closer to one another "all those who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

The day fixed for this year was Saturday, Feb. 13. After breakfast Rev. T. R. Wade, a C.M.S. missionary in the Punjab for thirty-three years, spoke of work in that land. Efforts are made to reach all classes, even down to the lepers, and many methods are adopted. The progress is very encouraging, and the work of ladies is being much blessed. Mr. Wade appealed for interest, for prayer, and for helpers.

The attendance was well up to the average, and representative in its character.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Monday evening, last week, a lecture, illustrated by lime-light views, was given in the Guildhall by Rev. H. F. S. Adams, late of Ridley Hall, on "London over the Border." It described the work in the parish of St. Paul's, Stratford. The lecture was probably of interest chiefly to persons unfamiliar with London, as the slides were typical of almost any poor parish in London. Perhaps the most striking feature in the work of the parish is the schools, in which there are from eighteen hundred to two thousand children.

The C.I.C.C.U. address on Sunday morning was delivered by Rev. F. O. Murray, Dean of Emmanuel College, in the Henry Martyn Hall. In the evening Professor Ryle, President of Queen's, spoke a few helpful words to a small congregation in the Guildhall. He spoke of the general reproach of University men—"Why stand ye here all the day idle?" and of their universal glory—"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ."

Work among Students.

The British College Christian Union, formed at the first Students' Conference, convened under the auspices of the S.V.M.U., at Keswick, July, 1893, represents the reflex action of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union upon the colleges of Great Britain.

During the past three years, by conferences and the work of the travelling secretaries, more than forty new Unions have been formed; three years ago there were less than twenty. Of the Unions twenty-nine now have a daily prayer-meeting; three years ago less than ten had such meetings. The number of Bible study circles is now seventy-five; three years age it was less than forty. A new cohesion is being established between the various classes of colleges, and, best of all, a new enthusiasm is springing up for Christian work.

Such a movement is significant in view of the immense influence which the class that it aims to reach may be expected in after days to exercise; it becomes the more significant when seen in relation to the fact that during the last twenty years similar student Christian movements have been organised in twenty different countries on national bases, and that the World's Student Christian Federation now links together Universities and colleges throughout the world in a Student Brotherhood whose object is to "make Jesus King." The secretary of the Union is Mr. J. H. Oldham, Trinity College, Oxford.

British Columbia.—The Aiyansh Mission to the Nishga Indians on the Naas River, was founded in 1883 by Rev. J. B. McCullagh, of the C.M.S., who has laboured there with much success ever since. Among the pioneer operations may be mentioned reducing the language to writing, planning a water supply, and erecting buildings for residence and worship. The Gospel has been preached, and education has been sent forward, alongside printing, press-work, and medical care for the sick and wounded. Now Mr. McCullagh desires to engage a printer, that he may be free to attend to the other departments of the Mission. Further details of the undertaking will be gladly furnished by Mrs. Foquett, 5, Portland-street, Ilfracombe.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. W. R. LANE AT DERBY.

A week's mission to young men, held in Derby by Mr. Lane, has been a time of much interest. Mr. Yapp, the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., in reporting to us on the course of the mission, says that the attendances were somewhat small at the opening meetings, but increased largely towards the close. All the meetings were held in the Association Hall. As to manifest results, Mr. Yapp says:—

About fifty men stood up at one time or another to testify that they were willing to accept Christ, whilst a large number were personally dealt with in the inquiry-room. Perhaps one of the most tangible results has been, and will be, seen in the Y.M.C.A. workers themselves. Many have been led to reconsecration and to renewed efforts in behalf of their fellows. Praise and thanksgiving services were held on Saturday and Sunday, after Mr. Lane's departure for Croydon, when scores of men rose to testify to blessing received during the mission.

BRIEF NOTES.

On Feb. 2, Rev. E. G. Gange, of London, visited Trowbridge, preaching and lecturing on behalf of the local Association.

Mr. Basil Hewer, the present secretary of the Association at Stafford Rooms, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Robert Burn at Aldersgate-street.

Mr. W. T. Full, of the Central Association staff, has been appointed general secretary of the Lincoln Association, in succession to Mr. G. W. Rankin, who has taken up the work at Nottingham.

The Winnipeg, Man., Association has closed a successful year. Accounts have all been paid for the first time in several years. The hope is that 1897 will see a building canvas pushed through. Mr. E. D. Martin is the new President.

The property in Sackville-street acquired by the Dublin Y.M.C.A., and formerly occupied by the Irish National Land League, has been transferred to trustees representing the Association, and the necessary alterations are being rapidly proceeded with.

The Islington and Highbury Association—one of the oldest local Y.M.C. Associations—is endeavouring to mark its jubilee by raising a fund to clear off financial burdens and to carry out certain renovations which have become imperative. New annual subscriptions are much needed.

The Bulletin issued by the Finsbury Park Association deals with the notion current amongst a certain class of young men that Y.M.C.A.'s are characterised by namby-pambyism and mere sentimentality. The best cure, says the editor, for such mistaken ideas, is to come and see if it be so.

On Thursday, 4th inst., a missionary conference was held at the Croydon Rooms, when Mr. J. H. Greene, of the C.S.S.M., who has laboured in South India, gave a paper on that part of the mission field; the paper was followed with close attention, and questions put to Mr. Greene at the close, which he was able to answer

Mr. and Mrs. John Townsend gave a reception to the members of the Wimbledon Association, at which there was a large attendance of young men. After half an hour's talk on the elementary study of electricity, with illustrations, by Mr. Walter Townsend, an address was given by Mr. W. Hind Smith, representing the National Council.

The East-End work among foreign artisans and unemployed in London, carried on by the German Y.M.C.A. is (according to the latest report) full of activity and usefulness. Much is done for the unemployed in the way of feeding and clothing, while the Gospel is earnestly set before them. The address of the Home is 88, Leman-street, E.

The Keswick Association held its delegates' meeting on Wednesday evening, 10th inst., when a large number of members and friends attended. The chair was taken by Mr. J. Postlethwaite. Addresses were delivered by Mr. John Fleming, president of the Ambleside Association; Mr. J. C. Moore, travelling secretary, and Rev. Mr. Harford Battersby.

The work of Mr. R. D. Thomas, travelling secretary for Wales, is already bearing considerable fruit north and south of the Principality, in the formation of new associations and the appointment at various centres of correspondents who undertake to help and further the interests of young men. At Llangollen and Barmouth promising new movements are on foot.

A branch Association has been formed in Salop-street by the Wolverhampton Y.M.C.A. for the purpose of reaching young men and lads in the poorer districts of the town. It starts with a paid membership (threepence per month) of over seventy, and bids fair most usefully to supplement the work which is being so successfully carried on at the Central Institution.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Y.M.C.A. was held on Feb. 12, in the Examination Schools, and was attended by a large audience. The Mayor of Oxford presided, and was supported by Mr. Quintin Hogg, Rev. E. J. Kennedy, The Rector of Exeter College, and several ministers of the city, whose addresses were listened to with great attention, the interest of the meeting being maintained throughout.

The annual business meeting of the Arbroath Y.M.C.A. was held last week. Bailie Melvin, president of the Association, occupied the chair, and there was a very large attendance. The annual report stated that the Sabbath morning meetings were largely attended by young men, and the Sunday afternoon young men's class had had a large influx of new members. One hundred new members and associates had joined during the year.

The Y.W.C.A.

A junior branch is about to be started at Park Chapel, Chelsea.

Miss Entrican, Travelling Secretary for the North of England, gave an address recently at Penrith.

At the Finsbury Preparation Home, early in March, Miss Reynolds will give a Bible reading on "The Bible Use of Clouds."

The monthly social meeting of the Southport branch took place on the 1st inst., and was well attended. Rev. F. Sinker gave a short address.

A series of sick-nursing lectures are being delivered on six consecutive Tuesday afternoons in the Dundee Y.W.C.A. by Miss Burford, who is at present in charge of the Cottage Hospital at St. Andrew's.

Lady Kinnaird acted as hostess of the monthly social held at the Finsbury Institute. Over 100 members were present, and a most enjoyable time was spent. An address by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., closed the proceedings.

The work at the Testing and Training Home, Chelsea, still continues to prosper. Since the house was opened four years ago, fifty-eight young women have been received into it, and of this number, fifteen are working abroad, and ten are engaged in home work.

From the report of the South of England and Wales division, it appears that the number of members in the Division is as follows; P. U. members, 12,735; Associates 15,055; working members, 1805; Hon. Associates, 1847; junior members, 3850; making a total of 35,838; of these nearly 9000 are total abstainers. These are under the exact number, many returns not having been sent in.

The first annual report of St. Phillip's branch, Kennington-road, S.E. (Mrs. Horne, hon. sec.), states that the number of members has steadily increased, and is now fifty-four. The Bible-class has an average attendance of twenty-five. The Monday evening meetings have been much appreciated, and short stirring addresses have been delivered by clergymen and others. The future is looked forward to with every hope of winning souls to Christ.

There was a large attendance at the second "coin collection" social held at George-street, Hanover-square. After the premises had been inspected, Mrs. H. Arbuthnot presided at the meeting, and addresses were given by the Hon. E. Kinnaird and Mr. H. Kidner. The amount received from members and their friends for the purchase fund up to the present is £728, but it is hoped that four figures will be reached before the collection closes.

The twelfth annual report of the Hackney and Clapton Y.W.C.A. is very encouraging. All the Bible classes, prayer and other meetings have been well maintained. Special evangelistic services have been held with good spiritual results. The interest in foreign missions has made steady progress and working parties have been held. The temperance work is in a healthy condition and the meetings of the junior branch have been well attended. There are various classes at the institute which require lady teachers, and any willing to help will be heartily welcomed.

In India, through the efforts of Mr. James Stokes, recently arrived in Madras, a national Y.W.C.A. has been successfully organised. The national committee, so formed, held its first meeting on December 31 last and suitable rooms have been secured at No. 23, Chowringee-road, Calcutta. Miss A. G. Hill has been elected secretary. This union of all the scattered associations, numbering over sixty, is looked forward to as a means of strengthening and uniting the general work and aim of the Y.W.C.A. throughout India. The annual meeting of the Calcutta branch of the Y.W.C.A. was held on January 9, when about 200 members were present. Lady Mackenzie, the president, addressed the meeting. The Bengali branch shows a steady increase in the number of members.

The Croydon Coroner, speaking at an inquest, remarked that teetotalers got a healthier appetite than people who drank, and there would be less need of doctors if there were more Temperance people.

Personalia.

Rev. J. Manton Smith closes in May next his connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He hopes to labour as evangelist as the Lord may lead, and later on (in the autumn) to visit the United States and Canada.

Rev. G. A. Johnstone Ross, of Bridge of Allan, who is coming to Westbourne-grove, is a brilliant preacher, and would make his mark anywhere. He combines the freshness of the modern spirit with the evangelical fervour of the ancient days so characteristic in Scotland. He has refused twenty-five calls in six years.

Nurse Harvey, long connected with the work at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, passed away on Thursday, 11th inst., widely lamented among her poor people. A funeral service was conducted in the Hall on Monday evening, which was largely attended, and indicated the high estimation in which she was held by the poor of the East End.

Bishop Tucker was to have met the British and Foreign Anti-slavery Society at breakfast on Thursday morning at the Westminster Palace Hotel, the special object being to hear the Bishop's views on slavery in and around Zanzibar. An intimation, however, was received to the effect that Bishop Tucker had suddenly been attacked by fever, and was unable to leave his room.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey, with his wife, son, and daughter-in-law, left Brooklyn on Feb. 1 for a three months' visit to South California. Mrs. Sankey is in fairly good health, but she is unable to stand the cold of the Eastern States at this season of the year. Mr. Sankey, who has been actively assisting Mr. Moody in New York for the past four months, will hold services in many of the large towns en route to California and back.

Dr. John Hall, of New York, will have the deep sympathy of many friends in the sorrows he has had to pass through this winter. His son, Richard J. Hall, M.D., died in Santa Barbara, California, after an operation for appendicitis, while another son, Rev. Thomas C. Hall, D.D., of Chicago, seemed at the same time at the point of death from typhoid fever, and the wife and mother was seriously ill in New York. Both Mrs. Hall and Dr. Thomas Hall are, according to the latest information, recovering.

Mr. Emilio Olsson, who has been labouring many years in South America, having travelled from Patagonia to Chili, and from Argentina, viâ Bolivia, to Antofagasta, Chili, is now in London, pleading the cause of the neglected continent, and seeking help for the work of the International Missionary Alliance in these lands. A brief address delivered by him at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting on Monday revealed him a vigorous and animated speaker, terribly in earnest about the appalling need of vast regions where the Gospel is wholly unknown. Mr. Olsson is anxious to address meetings on the subject while here. His present address is the East London Training Institute, Bow-road, E.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown will preach at the East London Tabernacle, Burdett-road, on Sunday next, morning and evening. He has also consented to a request from the deacons to be there all the following day (Monday) to receive the thank-offerings of those who have reason to thank God for any part of the thirty years' of blessing vouchsafed. This has always been a unique time in the history of the church, and will be none the less prized this year because of the crisis through which she is passing. This will be Mr. A. G. Brown's last service prior to his sailing for America. In a circular letter to "helpers," Mr. Brown expresses a hope that the mission and other "outside" work will not be forgotten by those who have supported it in the past. The Tabernacle Church is hopeful that after a month's labour in America the pastor will withdraw his resignation, take a season of rest, and come back and resume the work with which his heart has so long been bound up.

Requests for Prayer.—For a mission to men being held this week at the Y.M.C.A., North End, Croydon, by Mr. W. R. Lane.—For evangelistic services being conducted in the Methodist Church, Roscrea.—On behalf of an eight days' mission at Bilston, Staffordshire, to be conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Chaplin.—For blessing on a proposed mission of ten days at Lansdowne-place Ragged School and Mission, Feb. 20 to 28.—On behalf of a mission at Penge Tabernacle, by J. Burnham, from Feb. 14 to 24.—For special services at Wellington by John Elliott, commencing Sunday, Feb. 21.—For blessing on pastor and people at Burley-road Baptist Chapel, Leeds, that many souls may be saved.—For a conference on "The Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ," at Shaftesbury House, Margate, Feb. 25 and 26.—For the Divine blessing upon the London Convention for the Advancement of the Spiritual Life, in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, April 6 to 10.

THE BOOK WORLD.

The Truant Prophet. Messrs. Walter G. Wheeler & Co. have issued a cheap edition (6d.) of this study of the Prophet Jonah, by Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Alys of Lutterworth. By Kate T. Sizer. (2s. C. H. Kelly.) A very sweetly-told historical tale of the times of good Wyclif, giving pleasant glimpses of the English social life of that memorable period.

Tales of Black Country Life. By David Hobbs. (Elliot Stock.) These sketches of humble life in a Scottish mining district, while they bear on their face the stamp of truth, are not distinguished by special literary or analytical excellence.

Friends' Foreign Missions. (6d. net. West, Newman & Co.). This report of the recent Conference of Friends at Darlington on Foreign Missions is a most valuable repertory of facts and views of the various aspects of missionary work; nearly 300 pages of inspiring reading for sixpence.

Digging Ditches; and Other Sermons for Boys and Girls. By Rev. Frederick B. Cowl. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) Short and terse, these addresses, twenty-eight in number, are good reading for the young. As they abound in illustrative material, they will be of service to those who are in the habit of addressing children.

The Principles of Wealth Distribution. By C. Y. C. Dawbarn. (1s. Walmsley, 50, Lord-street, Liverpool.) In this thoughtful excursus into the thorny region of socialistic ethics the author advances views that will command general acceptance, at any rate in theory. The great desideratum is to see them put in practice.

Fragrant Memories is a little book telling the life-story of Constance Jane Blunden, of Shoreham, Sussex, a Christian of many graces and deep experience. Mr. George Mockford, of Heathfield, supplies an introduction. The memories are largely made up of correspondence and extracts from journals. (E. Wilmshurst, 10, Paternoster-row.)

The Little Colonel. By Annie Fellows-Johnston. (1s. 6d. Jarrold.) The first of a proposed "Bairnie" series of prettily bound and admirably illustrated books for children. The story of a winsome, though wilful child, who brought together hearts long severed, is well written and full of power. It should win many eager readers.

Christ and His People, a daily text book for the young and busy, gives a brief portion for every day of the year. The texts deal with various aspects of Christ's relationship to his people, and they are so short that they may be read in a moment, and easily remembered. (Paper 6d., leatherette 9d. Messrs. Partridge, Paternoster-row; Mrs. Meredith, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.)

A Young Congo Missionary. By Rev. Wm. Brock. (1s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.) From the same well-informed and sympathetic pen that briefly sketched in our columns the career of Dr. Sidney Roberts Webb there comes this deeply interesting and stimulating biography. It is eminently a book to place in the hands of earnest young people. There is a good portrait.

A Book for Every Woman, part II. By Jane H. Walker (2s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co.) An experimental and practical treatise on "Woman in Health and Out of Health." We are not inclined to agree with the able author in all her obiter dicta, especially as to the value or otherwise of alcoholic liquors, but the book contains an immense body of valuable medical instruction.

Jerusalem and Its People, by G. Robinson Lees, B.A., F.R.G.S., for six years a resident in Jerusalem, is an illustrated booklet full of interesting facts. Mr. Lees supplies in these pages answers to many of the questions that arise in the minds of thoughtful people regarding the Holy City and its present inhabitants. (3d., post free 4d. James Townsend, 2 and 3, Stonecutter-street, E.C.)

Scenes from the Wonderful Life. By W. J. Forster. (1s. C. H. Kelly.) A fresh endeavour to bring before young people the marvellous sweetness and grace contained in the story of our Lord's life upon earth. It is, as the title indicates, not a history, but rather a simple study of certain incidents and parables, intended to lead the young to seek a fuller acquaintance with the Gospel narratives.

Clog Shop Chronicles. By John Ackworth. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) Mr. Ackworth seeks in this book to do for the Lancashire toilers what Ian Maclaren and Barrie have done for the more northern country folk, and with almost equal success. A deeply earnest religious tone pervades the cleverly written sketches, and those who can master the dialect will gain both profit and entertainment.

Dayspring: A Story of the Time of William Tyndale. By Emma Marshall. We welcome a new illustrated edition of this attractive book, which should be diligently circulated among the young in these days, when it is necessary to remember the endeavours of Rome to suppress the Holy Scriptures, or hinder by all possible means their free circulation among the people. (5s. "Home Words" Office.)

Grace Abounding in the Forgiveness of Sins. By Dr. G. F. Pentecost. (2s. 6d. T. F. Downie, 14, Paternoster-square, E.C.) These five discourses, delivered at Marylebone Presbyterian Church, embody a clear and cogent statement of the Gospel of God's grace as viewed from the Divine side. The truth seems to us to be put in an extreme form here and there, but the preacher takes care to guard himself by explanations.

Holy Scripture: The Sole Authoritative Expositor of Divine Truth. By the late Dean Goode. A fourth edition of this sterling pamphlet has been issued, edited by Rev. Dr. Bullinger. It is in the form of a sermon on Acts xvii. 11, 12, with illustrative notes. The pages show very forcibly that the substitution of Church authority for the authority of Scripture is the pathway to the Church of Rome. (6d. Nisbet & Co.)

Across Greenland's Ice Fields. By M. Douglas. (2s. T. Nelson & Sons.) This capitally-told account of Dr. Nansen's adventurous journey across Greenland in 1888 will prove an excellent appetiser for the more elaborate story of his latest Polar experiences, which the intrepid explorer has just given to the world. Miss Douglas' interesting book also contains a narrative of the successful American Polar expedition under Lieut. Peary.

A Handbook of Christian Doctrine, by W. J. Townsend, D.D., is a remarkably comprehensive little book, prepared by request of the Methodist New Connexion Conference. It is designed for the education of young people, but it is none the less suitable for the instruction of persons of riper years. The statement that the author is a highly esteemed Methodist should afford sufficient indication of the positions taken upon questions that are controverted among Evangelicals. (6d. nett. Burroughs, 30, Furnival-street, E.C.)

The Old World and the New Faith. By W. F. Moulton. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) The series of "Books for Bible Students," edited by Rev. A. E. Gregory, includes a number of useful works at moderate prices. In these pages Rev. W. F. Moulton deals with the missionary journeys of the Apostle Paul, tracing the varied reception given to the Gospel by the men of the times, the relations of the early Church with Jew, Roman, and Gentile, and the stamp of men whom the great apostle had to meet. Teachers and preachers will find much in the book that is suggestive and helpful.

The Quiet Thoughts of a Quiet Thinker is a volume of extracts from the diaries of the late Rev. Robert Smith, D.D., Corsock. (3s. 6d. nett. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) The author of the many "thoughts" that have been gathered in these pages was a deeply interesting personality, and the reader is constantly reminded of the breadth and depth of his thinking. Friends of work among the Jews will recall his labours, over fifty years ago, in Austria and Holland. The topics discussed in this book are various, and whether or not we always agree with the sentiments expressed, we are uniformly compelled to allow that they come from a man of sound culture and genuine piety.

Wearied With the Burden: Daily Readings for Lent. By Arthur H. Browne, LL.D., Rector of St. John's, Newfoundland. (4s. 6d. Longmans, Green, & Co.). These addresses have three admirable qualities—brevity, point, and spirituality. The very titles are full of suggestion. For one week these headings are Thoughtlessness, Unwillingness to Help, and Neglect of Opportunity. In the sentence, "intolerance is a form of irreverence," there is a depth of meaning. In dealing with such topics as blindness of heart, compromise, incompleteness, the writer combines much penetration with that humility and tenderness which is only to be obtained by close fellowship with the Divine Master. We wish the book a wide circulation.

Reflections on the Origin, History, and Destiny of the Earth and Satan; and on the New Heavens and the New Earth. By Rev. D. Round. (2s. S. W. Partridge & Co.) The author of this little book holds that the primitive earth was the abode of angels; that through sin on their part it was reduced to chaos; and that a lapsed creation underwent reconstruction in the six days' work outlined in Genesis. This statement will have the assent of many Evangelical Christians; but when, in later pages, the author speculates upon the conditions of life on the new earth of Rev. xxi.-xxii., he occupies less certain ground. Though indisposed at times to follow Mr. Round, we always find him thoughtful and reverent in his exposition of God's Word.

First International Convention of the Reformed Presbyterian Churches, Scotland, June 27—July 3, 1896. (Glasgow: Alex. Malcolm & Co.; Edinburgh: R. W. Hunter.) This volume records proceedings which members and friends of the Reformed Presbyterian Churches are justified in regarding as highly significant. Many addresses are given, some of the best being devoted to the exposition and enforcement of distinctive principles. A deep interest attaches to the memorial services held at historic places. Coming from many lands, the delegates all asserted the dominion of Christ in the Church and over the nations, some of them exposing with great power Romish error and tyranny. This book, which is well arranged and illustrated, has been published under the oversight of Rev. Dr. Kerr, of Glasgow, who was chairman of the Executive Committee of the Convention.

The Theology of Modern Fiction. By T. G. Selby. (3s. C. H. Kelly.) In this "Fernley Lecture" Mr. Selby has chosen a theme that is certainly up to date. At first sight it seems hopeless to expect that writers of popular modern fiction should pay much regard to the deeper aspects of religious truth. Mr. Selby is able to show, however, that there is not a little "theology in solution" in "the higher literature of fiction." In these lectures we find him an extremely able, thorough, and conscientious student of his theme, while no fault can be found with him on the score of fairmindedness. The writers whose works he examines are chiefly George Eliot, Hawthorne, Hardy, Macdonald, and Mark Rutherford. We commend this weighty and well-considered deliverance to all who may feel perplexed by the crude religious views of professional novelists.

The Spirit of Power. By Rev. Thomas Adamson, B.D. (1s. nett. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.) To the important subject of this little treatise so much attention has of late years been directed that to say anything strikingly fresh about it would not be easy. Nor do we know that new views of the Holy Spirit's work are to be desired; we need rather to draw, in a practical way, upon what we have already learnt, and there is surely no part of the Bible more calculated to help and stimulate us in this direction than the Acts of the Apostles, the book upon which the author of these chapters has concentrated his attention. He lays much stress upon the fact that the baptism of the Holy Spirit is so often spoken of in connection with testimony, and there is a timely warning against seeking Divine power merely in the spirit of Simon Magus. The little volume strikes us as being, perhaps, at once elementary and a little involved, but we wish it success in its ministry.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE is a capital sermon by Rev. Isaac W. Tapper, vicar of St. Andrew's, Battersea. It contains a good portrait of the preacher. (3d. W. Baldwin, Printer, High-street, Clapham, S.W.)

Two wonderful pennyworths, are THE POPULAR HISTORY OF METHODISM, by John Telford, B.A., and SOCIAL PROGRESS DURING THE SIXTY YEARS' REIGN OF QUEEN VICTORIA, by Henry T. Smart. (C. H. Kelly.)

Messrs. Saxon & Co. have added to their "Everybody's" series EVERYBODY'S GUIDE TO PHOTOGRAPHY, by "Operator;" and EVERYBODY'S BOOK OF ENGLISH SONGS (with melodies), by "Basso." (Cloth 6d., leather 1s.)

THE KING'S HERALD. Under this title a little monthly has been started in connection with the Lansdowne Hall and its Y.M.C.A., West Norwood. The first issue has a portrait of Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, with a variety of useful missionary and other matter.

Those who knew the late Francis Covell, minister of Providence Chapel, Croydon, will be glad to possess a booklet issued by E. Wilmshurst, giving an ADDRESS AND SERMON delivered by Mr. Covell on December 8, 1878, on completing his seventieth year.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. are issuing in sixpenny weekly parts their well-known work, OLD AND NEW LONDON. The series of fifty parts will include the companion work, "Greater London." With Part I. a supplement is given in the form of a large map of the metropolis. The work has undergone revision for the purposes of the present re-issue.

Two more booklets have been added to the excellent series of "Brief Sketches of C.M.S. Workers," by Emily Headland. They outline the lives of DR. JOHN LUDWIG KRAPF, missionary in East Africa from 1837 to 1856; and ADMIRAL PREVOST, vice-president of the C.M.S. from 1882 to 1891. This is a series of great interest to students of missions. (2d. each. Nisbet & Co.)

Mr. Cheyne Brady's well-known tracts are now issued in foreign languages, as follows:—GOSPEL LEAVES, Nos. 1 to 96, in French, German, Italian, Dutch, and Swedish; Nos. 1 to 80, in Spanish, Danish, and Norwegian; Nos. 1 to 16 in Portuguese. Booklets—SALVATION: FINISHED, IMMEDIATE, AND ETERNAL, in French and Portuguese; THE SECOND COMING OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, in French, Spanish, Portuguese, Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian. These are all issued from Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

A general Church Mission is being held at Oldham.

Rev. S. Bradbrook, of the C.P.A., has accepted the charge of Misterton, Lutterworth.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence is holding a mission at St. John's, Meads, Eastbourne.

Rev. W. Duthie has resigned his charge at Eastwood for work at Durban, South Africa.

St. Stephen's, Lewisham, vacated by Canon Rhodes Bristow, has been offered to Canon Brameld.

Rev. E. Carr Glyn was formally elected Bishop of Peterborough in the Chapter House of the Cathedral.

The Duke of Westminster and Mr. Charles Morrison have each contributed £500 to the East London Fund.

A collection taken at St. Paul's, Onslow-square, on Sunday week, for the Indian Famine Fund, reached the sum of £605 3s. 7d.

A missionary mission was held last week in Holy Trinity, Marylebone, by Revs. H. E. Fox and H. Newton, and Mr. Eugene Stock.

The annual report of Rev. Henry Sharpe's work at Holy Trinity, West Hampstead, affords ample evidence of spirituality and devoted service.

The Queen has been pleased to approve the appointment of Canon Owen, Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, to the bishopric of St. David's.

A mission for the deepening of the spiritual life will be held in St. Mary's Church, Crumpsall, Manchester, April 5-9, by Revs. F. J. Chavasse and A. Pearson.

Another Church Army evangelist sails for Brisbane next week, in response to an urgent request from Canon Stone Wigg. Pressing calls from Victoria, Western Australia, New Guinea, Texas, and the West Indies for young evangelists have also been received, but the Society are at present unable to find a sufficient number of men to meet the calls from the clergy at home for trained and experienced working-men evangelists.

At a meeting in connection with the Bishop of London's Fund, the chair was occupied by the Bishop of London, who said that since coming to London he had been much impressed by seeing how much of the work of the Church in the metropolis hinged upon this fund, and he assured the Board that he would do all in his power to promote its interests. The report showed that the past year's receipts amounted to £23,558, an increase of £1,315 on the sum raised in the previous year.

Congregational.

Rev. Clement F. Bryer has been recognised as pastor at Hitchin.

Mr. Matthew Charles, of Bala College, has been ordained pastor at Madeley.

Ashford Church reports fifty-six members admitted during the past year.

Rev. S. Stroud has conducted a twelve days' evangelistic mission at Moretonhampstead.

A new school-chapel has been opened in the rapidly-increasing mining village of Abram, near Wigan.

Handsworth Church, Birmingham, reports that the P.S.A. has 227 members, and the Sunday-school 492 children.

Rev. T. Dixon Rutherford has resumed his ministry at Abney Church, Stoke Newington, after an absence of four weeks through illness.

New Court Church, Tollington-park, in the pastorate of which Rev. G. C. Morgan is about to succeed Rev. W. Pierce, reports 741 members.

Chapel-street Church, Southport (Rev. A. Scott), reports sixty-seven admissions to membership, bringing the total up to 420, a net increase of forty.

Rev. H. W. Smith has commenced the fourteenth year of his pastorate of Centenary Church, Lancaster, and the twenty-sixth year of his ministry.

At the annual Church Conference of Latimer Chapel, E., Rev. J. W. Atkinson presided. The annual reports showed that the various institutions are in a flourishing condition.

East-hill Church, Wandsworth (Rev. John Park), reports 588 members, of whom 59 were admitted during the past year. In the four Sunday-schools there are about 1,600 scholars. Mission work is carried on at High-street Memorial Hall, at Eltringham-street, and in Garratt-lane.

The year book of Mount Pleasant Chapel, Tunbridge Wells, shows a large amount of consecrated activity, the Sunday-school, the C.E. Society, and the Down Lane Mission being specially fruitful. The church membership is 392. The minister, Rev. G. W. Cowper-Smith, issues a rousing call to fresh devotion.

Calls.—Rev. J. N. Knight, of Birmingham, to Ryde, I. of W.; Mr. G. Moon, of Ruardean, to St. Briavels; Rev. James John to Bethlehem, Cardiff; Rev. A. E. Abel, of Hull, to Rectory Road, Woolwich.

Resignations.—Rev. G. Thompson, of Pevensey-road, Eastbourne; Rev. F. W. Baker Weeks, of Upperton, Eastbourne; Rev. J. A. Jones, of Cadishead; Rev. J. M. Morgan, of Stourbridge.

Baptist.

Rev. R. A. Boothman has been welcomed to Tetley-street Bradford.

Mr. James Smith, of the Pastors' College, has entered on the pastorate of Cottage-green Chapel.

Rev. George Wright has resumed his ministry at Kingston-on-Thames, after ten weeks' illness.

The Old Church, Newton Abbot, is to be renovated in commemoration of its bicentenary. The building was given in 1697 by Elizabeth Solman.

At Bow-road, E., the annual meeting was held on Wednesday, Rev. Fred H. King presiding. Encouraging reports of progress were given, twenty-five having been added to the church since the pastor's settlement last June.

On Thursday last recognition services were held at St. George's, Canterbury, in connection with the settlement as pastor of Rev. H. Knowles Kempton, of the Pastors' College. Rev. Thomas Spurgeon preached in the afternoon to a very large congregation, and in the evening the former pastor, Rev. W. Townsend, presided at the ordination.

Rev. W. Williams has nearly completed his twentieth year as pastor at Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road. At the annual meeting cheering reports were given of the various organisations. The secretary said the ordinary income was larger than in previous years, while the attendance at the last communion service, when fourteen new members were received, was probably the largest on record.

The Educational Board of one of the American (Baptist) colleges has decided to make a new departure by the endowment of a missionary professorship, whose duties will not, however, be confined to one college. One of the chief aims of his lectures will be a thorough study of race history, including a systematic and, as far as possible, detailed study of comparative religion and philosophy, so that young missionaries may, when they enter on their fields of labour, be better prepared for their peculiar duties.

"Our Sunday Morning Schools—Shall we give them up?" was the theme of a paper read before the Bury Sunday-school Union by Rev. F. A. Rees, who urged that the morning school should not be given up, but the method of conducting it should be changed. Instead of meeting in classes as at present, the school should be taken as a united class, and definite doctrinal and denominational teaching be given on a systematic plan.

At the annual meeting of St. George's-street Church, Macclesfield, the pastor, Rev. E. A. Hobby, gave an encouraging report of all branches of the work, which were in a very flourishing condition. The spiritual outlook was also bright and promising. Two very influential Bible-classes had been formed, with a total average attendance of sixty men and women, and weekly results were seen in the quickening of the spiritual life of the members and the conversion of souls.

Successful anniversary services were held last week at Wood Green, the special preachers being Revs. G. P. McKay and Charles Spurgeon. The secretary and treasurer, Mr. W. Lester, gave an encouraging statement of the various societies, all of which were in a healthy condition. Forty-five new members had been received during the year, making a total of 704 additions during the present ministry; the number now on the roll being 346. Addresses were given by Revs. Chas. Brown, E. H. Heward, A. G. Blenkin, T. Smith, D. Macrae, and J. J. Hayman.

Calls.—Rev. J. H. Davies, of Wrexham, to the Tabernacle, Coedpoeth; Rev. B. A. Evans, of Ashton-on-Ribble, to Barmouth; Rev. W. Evans, of Preston, to Barmouth.

Resignation.—Rev. J. Glaskin, of Tenterden.

Methodist.

Rev. Joseph Shepherd, superintendent of the Sileby Circuit, has broken down in health.

A public meeting in aid of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes was held on Monday in Wesley's Chapel.

Mr. James Leverton, district evangelist, conducted at Ponsanooth, Cornwall, an eighteen days' mission.

The Blenheim Mission, in Newcastle, has boldly taken the Art Gallery Theatre for Sunday evening services.

Two useful District Conventions have been held at Bolton for class leaders and for Sunday-school teachers.

The Shorter Catechism, which, by direction of the Wesleyan Conference is in course of preparation, is expected to be ready for use shortly.

Mr. Hyde has presented an advantageous site to the Primitive Methodists at Badsholt Lea for the erection of a new chapel in connection with Aldershot Mission.

Successful missions are reported from Sacriston (co. Durham), Driffield, Winterton, and Ripley. At Louth the Primitives, Wesleyans, and Free Methodists have happily united for mission work.

At the meeting, on Monday, of the London Wesleyan Council, which was held in the Centenary Hall, a paper was read by Rev. Robert Culley on "Sunday-school Arrangement and Discipline, with Suggestions for Improvement."

Mission services have been conducted in Penzance during the past fortnight at Wesley Rock by Rev. H. Wostenholm, at Tregasara by Mr. J. Beare, and at Trezalah by Mr. J. Wallis. The services have been well attended, and souls saved and believers quickened.

Presbyterian.

The work at Brondesbury is reported as singularly successful.

Rev. Johnstone Ross will be inducted at Westbourne-grove on March 19.

The London Presbytery, North, had, last week, to deal with the case of Dr. Pentecost. As Yonkers held him to his promise, the Presbytery had to accept his resignation. He will preach his farewell sermons at Marylebone on March 14.

Rev. W. R. Colville, who for two years has been Dr. Watson's assistant at Sefton Park, has accepted the call to Earle-road Church—a young congregation founded in consequence of the local missionary activity of Dr. Watson's large congregation.

The Church Aid Committee of the London Presbytery, North, renders financial and other assistance to a dozen congregations in working-class neighbourhoods. A seamen's missionary had been secured for the docks, and some congregations were provided with the services of Bible-women and city missionaries.

Dr. Monro Gibson's congregation raised last year £9579, an increase of over £3000 on the previous total. This included over £800 for foreign missions, and, in addition, a sufficient sum was raised to support a mission station in the Canadian North-west. The Kilburn Mission was well supported, and nearly £1000 was contributed towards the erection of a building for the newly-formed preaching station at West Kilburn. The membership at the parent church, Marlborough-place, is 858, and at the Kilburn Mission 303.

Calls.—Rev. T. S. Morris, of Coedway, to Runcorn; Rev. A. F. Marshall, of Linlithgow, to Toward; Rev. D. J. Martin, of Stornoway, to Oban (Argyll-square), Rev. W. J. McCaughan, of Mount Pottinger, Belfast, to St. Andrews, Toronto.

Society of Friends.

An observatory has been opened at "The Mount" Girls' School, York, which will be much appreciated.

Notwithstanding the manifold difficulties of the situation, the Friends' district in Madagascar has "no fewer than 16,000 scholars" in the schools; many of them are liberated slaves. "At one place there are more than 300."

Joseph Taylor, writing from Central India, describes the opening of "three children's refuges" there. Their orphanages are full, and they cannot see the children starving and homeless, and are thus providing for them. Surely such work is Christlike, and will claim liberal support.

Great activity prevails among a number of quarterly meetings. In consequence of the presence of yearly meeting committees, Yorkshire, with its 4000 members and 10,000 adult scholars, is aiming at extension, and trying to keep up with the growth of the population. Sussex, Surrey, and Hampshire, too, is aiming at reaching the masses more than it has done in recent years, and London and Middlesex quarterly meeting is trying to consolidate and unify its progressive forces, in order more effectually to embrace those its present influence.

Fallen Asleep.

At Waddington, on the 10th inst., Archdeacon Perry, aged seventy-seven, a well-known writer on Biblical and church history.—At Liverpool, on 4th inst., Mr. S. B. Jackson, aged eighty-eight, in former days a co-worker with Rev. H. Stowell Brown.—At Chudleigh, Rev. W. R. Johns, the faithful pastor of the Congregational Chapel in the place.—At Reigate, Mrs. G. C. Davies, an earnest helper of Christian work.—At Hitchin, suddenly on 4th inst., Mr. G. Howard, member and worker at Kneesworth-street.—At Harpole, aged sixty-two, Mr. John Spokes, J.P., a leader in local work.—At Shooter's Hill, Rev. John Smalman Masters, aged ninety-eight, vicar of the parish for thirty-two years.—At Appleby, aged seventy-six, Rev. James Faulkner, a Wesleyan minister for fifty-two years.—At Sandhurst, aged ninety-seven, Mr. D. Cox, a quiet but earnest worker.—At Chorley, Rev. Benjamin Dain, Primitive Methodist superintendent and earnest minister of Christ.—At Chesterfield, Mr. J. Gibbons, aged sixty-six, an earnest Sunday-school superintendent.—At Littleborough, Mr. Halliwell, a leading local man in Christian and social affairs.—At Sheffield, Mrs. Andrews, aged eighty, for many years a devoted teacher of the Young Women's Bible-class.—At Queenstown, Rev. Wm. Simpson, minister of the Queenstown Presbyterian Church for about forty-six years, and an able and devoted labourer.—At Dublin, Baron Fitzgerald, brother of the late Bishop of Killaloe, a Christian judge who occupied the highest position in the legal profession, and rendered many valuable services to the cause of religion and charity.—At Queenstown, Ireland, on Feb. 8, Elizabeth Stopford, widow of the late Rev. Joseph Stopford, of Ferney, Blackrock, Cork, aged seventy-five. "Her children rise up and call her blessed." A devoted Christian from her youth.—At the age of seventy-five, Mr. James Okey, for thirty years a deacon and for thirteen treasurer of the old Congregational Church, Stroud.—At Port Glasgow, Rev. William Bell, M.A., of Hamilton Free Church, very suddenly at his residence on Sunday forenoon. His first charge was in Edinburgh. He has ministered in Port Glasgow with great acceptance for upwards of thirty-five years.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, February 15, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE have received a long communication from Rev. Dr. Baxter, of Cameron, N.B., calling in question several statements by the Editor of The Expository Times, in his letter a fortnight ago, on our article, "A Critic at the Stake." We cannot find space for the particulars, nor do we suppose that many of our readers would care for them. Dr. Baxter's important work, "Sanctuary and Sacrifice: A Reply to Wellhausen" (Eyre & Spottiswoode), must not be allowed to suffer eclipse through personal controversy or misunderstanding.

The good wishes of all right-minded Englishmen will go with Mr. Bayard on his return to the United States; for he has not only represented his country, but also the great principles of righteousness and international good-will. His words at the banquet given in his honour by the Royal Societies' Club were true and worthy of the occasion—

I have sought but for one thing—a fair, clear, reasonable, good understanding between right-minded and well-meaning men on both sides of the Atlantic.

We can only hope that his successor may be animated with the same purpose.

It is clear that all hope must be given up of seeing the Arbitration Treaty between this country and the United States pass into law during this session. The American Senate has as yet failed to approve of it. In so doing it is quite clear, as Dr. Amory Bradford has shown in The Outlook, that it is out of touch with the real sentiment of the nation it represents. It would be a lasting disgrace to the American people if they permitted this eminently Christian movement to fall through in obedience to the intrigues of party politicians. Nor is it likely that this lamentable result to the negotiations of the past fifteen months will come to pass. Senator Sherman has well-nigh pledged the incoming party to see it through next year, and it is to be hoped that all possible friendly pressure may be brought to bear on the American Government on both sides of the Atlantic to this end.

Whatever may be thought of the "political expediency" of Greece in attempting to settle the Cretan difficulty by force, her splendid audacity and courage must materially affect the course of events in the East. That the smallest Power in Europe should dare the consequences of interfering with the impotent compact which goes by the name of the "European Concert" appeals to the deepest instincts of our own people, and ought to precipitate some common action in aid of the oppressed throughout the East. At the same time, there is much need for increased self-restraint on the part of all true lovers of peace. The air is electric with complicated and dangerous emotions, and a little mistake or misunderstanding might bring about the conflict which the world is trying to avoid. It is an hour when we should wait on the Only Ruler of princes with redoubled prayer, that He may control the passions of men to his own glory and the good of all nations.

The question of discipline in Sunday-schools, which was discussed at a recent meeting of the London Methodist Council, is one that should receive a more earnest consideration than is often the case, both among superintendents and teachers. The difficulty is of course as to the means to be employed. In day-schools, there is always the ultimatum of compulsion to be appealed to, when milder means have failed. This method cannot be adopted in the Sunday-school; but there are many ways in which far better results than are usual may be obtained. It is of imperative importance that a mood of reverence and respect should be inspired in those who are being taught the things of God; and a course of training in the elements of discipline should be a sine quâ non in the equipment of teachers. So important a qualification ought not to be left to the chapter of accidents, or to native endowment.

Those philanthropists who are more concerned with the "prevention" rather than the "cure" of social evils would do well to turn their thoughts to the question of furnishing better facilities for unmarried women to live in decent homes in our great cities. There are in London alone about half a million such women, who earn their own living for the most part away from their friends. Something has been done for young girls coming up in search of work from the country, but no one can feel that this meets the needs of the case. The thousands who have no friends, and no decent lodgings at reasonable rates, where they can have some of the comforts of home, are exposed to terrible temptations simply for this fact. There is here a great opportunity, and one specially fitted for tender-hearted women of wealth and leisure to befriend their less fortunate sisters.

It is a matter of concern to the authorities in Germany that there is a marked falling-off in the number of students presenting themselves for study in the theological faculty. When the figures are examined, however, a remarkable result appears. The falling-off is altogether in those Universities associated with the sceptical school of thought. In the "orthodox" centres, instead of a decrease, there is a considerable and striking increase in the number of students. The explanation that has been suggested—that the rewards of theological study are not sufficiently great, compared with other branches of study—cannot, therefore, be relied upon. The facts point to the barren results of German theology rather than to its earthly reward. We can see a sure indication that the negative school has had its day even in Germany, and that the future is with those who are on the side of positive faith.

Cardinal Vaughan affirms that between 1870 and 1895 the Roman Catholics of England had increased the places in their public elementary schools from 101,556 to 367,344 —more than threefold. He affirms also that the average attendance in Wesleyan and British schools has declined; in Church schools it has slightly increased; but in Roman Catholic schools it went up last year by 7557. He regards this as an indisputable evidence that Roman Catholics "are far more in earnest, far more interested in the vital question of Christian education, than any other body of Englishmen." Supposing the statistics to be correct, they certainly prove a great deal of sectarian zeal. The last words we quoted imply an admission, however, that even in Protestant schools a "Christian education" is given.

The nurse's uniform has become a feature of our modern life, and is to be seen everywhere. It represents, or ought to represent, purity of character, kindness of heart, and trained skill in nursing the sick. It ought to be worn by none but women of good reputation; its degradation, either by pretenders assuming it for purposes of their own, or by the unworthy wearing it, will not only be a heavy blow at an honourable calling, but a social disaster. An immoral doctor is a danger, but an immoral nurse is a plague. That uniform must somehow be made the symbol of moral worth, if not of religious character. Mrs. Bedford Fenwick recommends, in the pages of The Nineteenth Century, the formation of a Nursing Council with disciplinary powers to remove any nurse who proved herself to be unworthy of trust. This is doubtless good, and if carried out will have to be accompanied with power to preserve the honour of the uniform.

Familiar as we are with the old but false saying, "It's what a man is, not what a man believes," there is a chronic discontent on the part of many with the Decalogue, and with the precepts of the New Testament. There is a revolt against the morality of the Word of God quite as much as against its doctrines or against the creeds of Christendom. We are told in varying phrase, but with monotonous uniformity of meaning, that we require a code of morality to meet the complete requirements of modern life. Now, one of the beauties of the Word of God as a moral instructor is that it does not give itself to complexities, but to simplicities; its authority cuts through these meshes of artificialties with which we surround ourselves; it insists on simplicity, and gives one law for all. An examination of the suggested substitutes for the old and simple words that first touched our consciences, shows nothing worth the accepting.

It is when the teachers of a new "rational," "subtle," and "elastic" code of morals come to the question of motive power, that they are sorely at a loss what to do. One of them speaks of "efficiently organising the forces of moral suggestion" to make the code operative! What a contrast between the old authoritative command, "Thou shalt," "Thou shalt not," and the new "forces of moral suggestion"! We have come to this, that we may only "suggest" to a man that he shall not kill! Our Lord and Master said, "I say unto you—swear not at all. Love your enemies"; we are to find some gentle "suggestion." We are informed that "a definite stress of effort to determine the development of public ideals is wanting." Say rather that we want the fear and love of God, and then we shall know what we are talking about; besides which, we shall be on the way to higher things when once these have touched our souls.

Is there a place for fear in religion? Is it a right motive to appeal to? There seems to be only one answer possible, if we take Scripture as our guide. Fear has a large place as a moral motive both in the Old and New Testaments. It is not there to the exclusion of other motives, but it is there. Its influence has often arrested the careless, and made the hardened consider, when, apparently, nothing else would have been effectual. Jesus Himself said: "Fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Paul says that God will render unto the disobedient "wrath and indignation, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that worketh evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile." Is there anything to fear? If there is—and even science, or our own observation of nature, teaches us as much—then fear is a reasonable, not a craven thing; it is altogether wise and manly to flee from "the wrath to come." The preacher or teacher who does not conceal the reasons for fear is rendering a gracious service to those souls who, by wilful sin, are "treasuring up wrath in the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God."

A little book by Dr. B. Warfield on "The Right of Systematic Theology" (T. & T. Clark) deals in a trenchant manner with the question, "Does theology tend to kill religion?" It shows the dangerous nature of Ritschlianism, and other isms, which are being found out none too soon. The pages show the importance of theological teaching, spiritual ideas as well as religious facts. The prevalent taste is supposed to be against dogma and creed, and everything savouring of doctrinal definiteness in the pulpit. To this fallacy must be attributed much of the shallowness, the coldness, the unstable equilibrium of present-day religion. Great truths alone can be the inspiration of great character; and the Gospel is a storehouse of the greatest truths in the universe; it is the armoury of the "deep things of God." The mistake is to imagine that these cannot be expounded in vital relation with practical life.

We have but to read the New Testament to see how the greatest truths of theology may be used in the exposition of every-day duties. In all our Lord's discourses we are in the presence of mysteries so deep that no human mind can ever fathom them: and yet they are made the basis of the most practical duties. It is difficult to say whether the Epistles of Paul and Peter and John are most fruitful as text-books of doctrine or as charts for spiritual direction in daily life. And yet there is no artificial severance between these two aspects of the Gospel. The art of Christian conduct and the science of Christian thought are presented in one rich reality. What Christ and his Apostles did is the pattern for all preachers. Truth and duty must be presented together; truth as the basis of all noble conduct; conduct as the flower of truth in the Christian life.

As an evidence of "the swing of the pendulum from scepticism to faith," The Homiletic Review mentions the fact that at the beginning of this century there was scarcely a Christian student at Yale or Harvard; but to-day the great mass of the thousands of students at these seats of learning are believers, and the majority of the students in the higher institutions of learning in the United States are professing Christians. A fact like that is full of significance and hope. A comparison of the condition of Oxford and Cambridge now with what it was ninety years ago might not reveal such a wide difference as this, but we believe it would reveal a great change for the better. Every young man won for the Saviour is a pledge of holy service in coming days.

Mr. Moody and Bible Critics.

In an article in the New York Independent, Mr. Moody says:—

THERE is a false notion of authority associated with much that we hear in these days about the science of Biblical criticism, as it is called. A man may have great knowledge of the languages and literature of the Bible, but does that prove that he has great judgment, or great spiritual sense in drawing conclusions from his knowledge? I am willing to listen to the science of Biblical criticism on such questions as the correct translation or the historical accuracy of the text, because it can teach me there. But do I, or does any one of average common sense, need its help after that? Cannot we read our mother tongue, and are we not as well able to form a judgment as to the sense of our Saviour's words in such a case as the most learned man on earth? If we deny that, then we must go a step further, and take the Bible away from the common people altogether. I believe there are a good many scholars in these days, as there were when Paul lived, "who professing themselves to be wise, have become fools"; but I do not think they are those who hold to the inspiration and infallibility of the whole Bible.

I have said that ministers of the Gospel who are cutting up the Bible in this way, denying Moses to-day and Isaiah to-morrow, and Daniel the next day, and Jonah the next, are doing the devil's work; and I stand by what I have said. I do not say they are devils; I do not say they are bad men; they may be good men, but that makes the results of their work all the worse. Do they think they will recommend the Bible to the finite and fallen reason of men by taking the supernatural out of it? They are doing just the opposite to that. They are emptying the churches and driving the young men of this generation into infidelity. Here is an extract from the letter of a pastor that I received yesterday; it is only one of scores, and even hundreds, of the same kind that I am receiving, and it tells what this treatment of God's Word is doing for our land:—

Dear Mr. Moody,—This is one of the most wicked cities I know of, and we have the coldest, most worldly churches I have ever seen. I have laboured and prayed for a revival and for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, and it seems to do but little good. Cannot you come and help us, provided our ministers and churches will unite?..This is a Macedonian call, if ever you had one.

The cause of this state of things is in neglecting and apologising to the natural man for the Word of God. Hear Jehovah as He Himself testifies of the work of such prophets, in Jeremiah xxiii. 22.

But if they had stood in My counsel, and had caused My people to hear My words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

I pray God we may end controversy and go to work in earnest for souls. All over this country there are seekers after Christ, and we cannot afford to lose time and strength in disputing about the sword of the Spirit. What we want to do is to thrust it into men in such a way that by the power of God it may slay the old and give life to the new nature in Christ Jesus.

World-wide Evangelisation.

IN MEMORIAM, REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

IN the January number of Regions Beyond for 1897, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness thus concludes a loving article upon the RECOLLECTIONS OF REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

"His last recorded words embraced the uttermost parts of the earth. 'I want,' he said, 'I want—I want—the Christians to go all over the world spreading the glad news.' May the desire of his great heart be realised."

So we invite you, beloved brothers and sisters in Christ, to unite in a Prayer Union of God's children round the world, and for the whole world. May this Union become a chain surrounding the globe, and by faith—a living faith—link hearts together in fellowship with Jesus Christ our Lord, and be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing, and hasten the coming, of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is suggested that this request may specially be remembered early each Lord's Day, socially or individually.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."—Mark xvi. 15. "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."—Matt. ix. 38. "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."—Matt. vi. 10.

The idea of this Union is to enlarge the hearts of God's scattered children to long and pray for the fulfilment of the Saviour's parting command. May this burden of their Lord be laid on the heart of many disciples.

Those Christians whose hearts God has enlarged to pray for World-wide Evangelisation would be welcomed to this Union, if they would kindly send their addresses to

Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe,
Inglewood, Waterloo, Liverpool,
England.

A meeting for this object has already been started from 3 to 5 o'clock on Fridays, at the Strangers' Rest, 24, Park Lane, Liverpool, and many bags containing Bibles, books, and tracts, in different languages, are sent forth by the hands of sailors and foreigners to far-off parts of the world.

The following friends have signified their approval of the above proposal, and desire their names to be added to it:—

GEORGE MÜLLER, Orphan Houses, Ashley Down, Bristol.
PETER TERRY, Hornsey Rise, London, N.
R. COPE MORGAN, Office of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.
JAMES E. MATHIESON, 58, Ladbroke-grove, London, W.
MARTIN HOPE SUTTON, Reading.
J. HUDSON TAYLOR, China Inland Mission.

Bible Stand, Crystal Palace.

THIRTY-FOUR years have now rolled away since the work of the Crystal Palace Committee was commenced at the International Exhibition of 1862. Of late years, the activity of Satan in persistently repeating (through his emissaries) the lie with which he beguiled Eve into sin seems to increase. It hence becomes the privilege and responsibility of all Christians, loyal to God and to his Word, to meet Satan's lie with God's truth.

With this object, the Committee desire to continue this Scripture distribution with increased vigour and they cordially invite the co-operation of God's stewards in carrying out this work. Our work has been carried on as usual at home and in Europe, with an additional distribution by book-post of 25,000 Gospels of St. John in French in Montreal, 15,000 in Quebec, and 20,000 in Manitoba (in English), while 15,000 to Paris have also been sent by book-post, in French. Increased aid is greatly needed. William Hawke, Secretary.

The Bible in the Home.

SOLOMON said: "In the house of the righteous is much treasure." What is greater treasure than the Word of God? The Bible—the book, it should be reckoned among our choicest possessions. When the Bible has its right place in the house, God is not far from the heart. Those long letters that you delight to read and re-read in solitude are precious because they are the written voice of one who, though far distant, still lives in your heart—the letter is perfumed because the brow of the writer was crowned with love's white roses. I sometimes think that God especially delights to read to his children out of the family Bible.

The family Bible should never need dusting: it should be used morning and evening. There is to me something very beautiful in the simple picture of family worship: the silent grouping of the little ones, the subdued yet fervent voice of the father, the gentle "Amen" of the mother—such scenes remain as life-memories. There are some Scriptures which fall like music from the lips of the aged—music which was learned when the house was darkened—music which was learned when the harp was hung upon the willows in a strange land. It almost needs a broken heart to read: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." The personal testimony of one who has walked with God for three-score years is needed to give expression to the words of David: "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." The failing voice and long farewell breathe life into the oft repeated words: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me."

The family altar has been thrown down, but it must be rebuilt if our social life is to be purified. The family is the heart of the nation. How impure is the life that flows through the dark veins of our city! how feeble the heart-throb and pulse-beat in our homes! England—our loved England—will become a loathsome corpse if the poisoned blade enter the family! No; we are not ruined, for I have heard our children sing:—

> We are coming to the rescue,
> We are coming in our youth,
> And the homes we build to-morrow
> Shall be guarded by the truth.

The entrance of God's Word giveth light; it is the Scriptures which are able to make wise unto salvation. Therefore God has commanded: "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." This early teaching is necessary, for we can only learn by "comparing spiritual things with spiritual," we must "lay up his words in our hearts"; one passage of Scripture can only be seen in the light of some other passage, as Peter explains to us: "No prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation"—there is no such thing as an isolated passage.

We are babes, milk fed; but we desire to become men, meat fed, and this is only possible through growth: "Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." Parents should make the Scriptures familiar and desirable to their children. The Scripture lesson should never be set as a punishment, but should always be made a delight. The Word of God must first have its place in our hearts, then in our homes, then in our business; but it should not be confined to heart, to home, to business, it should be written upon the door-posts, and upon the gates of the city.

In quoting the Bible, let us aim to render plain to the most inattentive the exact meaning of the words. How often do we hear the text: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." This is true in a limited sense, but it is not Scripture. The passage occurs in Ezekiel. embodied in a statement of the law of heredity, and should be read thus: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "Be sure your sin will find you out" is not equivalent with "Be sure your sin will be found out." This may be true in the sense of the proverb "Murder will out"; but the stress here is laid on the word you. "Be sure your sin will find you out." God said to Cain; "If thou doest not well, sin coucheth at the door." Sin is a wild beast that you feed whenever you do evil. You believe it to be chained, but it coucheth at the door, it will rend your soul. "Be sure your sin will find you out." "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." This is not always true; the pivot word is in the next verse. "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

The standard for the mind should be breadth of vision and accuracy; but the heart-cry must be spirituality! The soul must be in health, if the appetite is to be keen. Faith is the gastric juice of the soul—we read of certain, "The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Faith is the gift of God: we must have faith: it is to be had only in answer to prayer, therefore pray—pray often—pray always.

Read the Bible in secret. Allow time for meditation upon what you have read. Do not be in a hurry to speak to God; wait in silence, if perhaps He will speak to you. "Carefully hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God." You will find it better to vary your methods of study. Sometimes it will be well to read in two separate passages daily. Say, in the morning, to read the Bible progressively, and in the evening to make a minute study of one special book. At another time you will find particular pleasure in piecing together the narratives of the Gospels. Others will find the study of character more congenial. I should advise them to take their first heroes from the New Testament, as they will be the more readily understood. Some will seek for the promises of God as for hid treasure. To them I would say, Look to the condition of fulfilment. Others will read the Epistles. Read from commencement to conclusion at a sitting. It only takes an hour to read through Hebrews.

Use the references given in your Bibles, or, better still, a good concordance. Thus aided, you may trace a word or a topic with comparative ease. The most important point in our discussion is self-application. The Bible is a light, to be flashed in upon the soul. It is no good getting anything out of the Bible unless you get it into the heart. "And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified."

Famine in Transvaal.

DEAR SIR,—Having seen no mention in any English paper of the terrible famine now raging in the north of the Transvaal, through a visitation of locusts and a continued drought, I send translations of fragments of letters from Swiss missionaries belonging to the "Mission Romande." Mr. Grandjean, Chemin des Cèdres, Lausanne, secretary to the Mission, would thankfully forward any gifts that might be sent to the stricken districts.—Truly yours,

A. S. Tweedie.

Lausanne.

Monsieur Creux writes:—"Elim, Nov. 12.—Through what a terrible year we are passing! It will be marked in the annals of S. Africa as the most fertile in scourges of all kinds that this century has seen. The drought of this year has exhausted streams that have never been seen dry before, coming, as it does, after two years of insufficient rain. One does not know where to take one's cattle to feed—everywhere the ground is bare and the grass dead.

A plague of locusts has followed the drought. Our palms are bleached. All our beautiful orange trees are white. The locusts, after eating the leaves, have gnawed the bark. At first they came in flights, always increasing in numbers, until the air was darkened by clouds of them. For fifteen consecutive days this terrible army ravaged our gardens and plantations. To chase them was lost labour; they only left one tree to settle on another. They gnawed the bananas, leaves and roots, the pumpkins, beetroot, cabbages, turnips, and carrots. All was covered by a swarming, hopping mass. A sack of maize is now £5, or 6d. a cupful. The Government has had thousands of sacks over from America, which are sold for £1 the sack at Pretoria, but the transport here costs £4, so the price has not lowered. One hears on all sides of natives found dead from hunger. Every day starving people pass by, looking for work and food. Besides all this, the cattle plague is at our door. It has arrived at a neighbouring farm, and as the natives carry about with them portions of the flesh of the diseased animals to eat, we cannot, humanly speaking, escape."

A month later Monsieur Berthoud writes from Valdézia:—"The famine has become terrible. The native women pick up the grains of maize that fall from the mouths of the post mules. A sack of maize, usually costing from eight to twelve shillings, can only now be obtained for £8! The village is in great distress, some only cooking their food once in two days, others have nothing to cook but wild herbs. Children have become so thin that it gives one the nightmare to see them. Many heathen girls are being sold at a low price for food."

Dr. Liengme, missionary at Shilouvâne, writes at the same date:—"The blacks are dying by hundreds; whole villages are deserted. Starving bands of people wander about the country looking and asking for food. One finds some dead by the roadside. Those who have little girls sell them for almost nothing; even women sell themselves to obtain food. One poor woman drowned her child, having nothing more to give it to eat. I have every day to attend cases of illness brought on through eating nothing but locusts and wild herbs. Pray for us."

The Surrey Docks.—Mr. G. R. Hood, missionary of the South London branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, working the Surrey Commercial Docks and riverside, reports great blessing in the small temporary Sailors' Rest, originally opened by Mr. Plimsoll, the sailors' friend. The old premises are, however, altogether unsuitable, and prayer is asked that a suitable Rest may be provided for carrying on the work of God in this great, important, but very poor centre. A Christian friend much interested in the work has just presented a new mission boat for reaching the ships moored to the buoys.

Papers on Missions.—8.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE.—II.

By Rev. Henry E. Robins,* D.D., Rochester, N.Y.

(Concluded from last week.)

3. The pastor, in his character as an ensample to the flock, is an interpreter of the spiritual life to his people.

It is not enough that the pastor should be a mediate source of spiritual life to his people, although this is evidently the prime necessity in the case. Truth cannot nourish a dead soul. Nor is it enough that he shall in his function as teacher interpret the spiritual life to them. He must, thirdly,

INSPIRE THEM WITH THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT,

being an ensample to the flock. There was truth enough in the world to save men before the Advent, but the Holy Spirit had not his supreme weapon for his conquests over human souls until truth was incarnate in Jesus Christ. Then the truth flashed out of the darkness of the ages with sun-like radiance and power. In order to its greatest efficiency it was necessary that the Eternal Life should be manifested, that men might see it with their eyes and handle it with their hands. In vain shall we seek to make conquests in the name of Christ if we rely upon the original Incarnation alone. That introduced not, as has already been said, a new method, but gave rather a new emphasis and augmentation of power to the one method of God for human salvation.

We must proceed along the line laid out for us by our great Leader.

THE WORLD IS WEARY OF PREACHMENTS

without living demonstrations of the truth. It is an age of science. It demands the verification of experiment. Let it be so. Truth demonstrated in life was the secret of the success of the apostolic churches. It was the secret of the amazing conquests of Christianity during the first three centuries. It has been the secret of her success in every great onward movement of all the Christian centuries. The One Eternal Life is ever seeking manifestation, that men may see it with their eyes and handle it with their hands.

For this reason the pastor must not be a mere doctrinaire, theorising about missions. He must be a John G. Paton, whom the Great Captain has not commissioned to go to the cannibals of the South Seas, but has detailed for recruiting service at home. For this he cannot merely say, "Go!" into any path of duty. The example of his Master must here be his guide. He must say, "Follow me." He cannot lay burdens on men's shoulders which he himself will not touch with one of his fingers.

During the Civil War a pastor in one of our cities was so conspicuous for his sympathy, manifested on all occasions and in countless ways, with the Union cause, that he was as efficient in the service of his country as if he had been a general in the field. He kept himself informed of the movements of our armies, he rejoiced in their successes, he mourned in their defeats, his voice rang out in clarion notes of courage and hope in hours of crisis when the fate of the nation seemed trembling in the balance; it was impossible that those around him should not catch from his example the spirit of patriotism. Such men as he were the vital bond between the people at home and the embattled armies in the field. Such men as he furnished the moral sinews of the war, more essential to its successful issue than the sinews of war furnished by the treasury.

Precisely this relation should the pastor hold to our missionary force in foreign lands. He should know what they are doing, and stimulate his people by contagious personal example to study missionary problems, to search for missionary intelligence, to pray and give—as one whom the Great Captain has taken into his secret of love for all mankind; who repudiates the notion that the missionary spirit is something to be cultivated

EXCLUSIVELY FOR EXPORT.

Does any pastor think that by reason of the obscurity of his position or the narrowness of his resources he may be exempt from the obligations of this holy war? Let him consider that in this war there is no discharge. "Those members which seem to be more feeble are necessary" (1 Cor. xii. 22). Yes, necessary, indispensable, is the word. Let no Christian undervalue himself. In whomsoever the One Eternal Life resides, that one is singled out and set apart as necessary to its full expression, its highest efficiency. Comparing ourselves among ourselves we are not wise. It quenches ardour of consecration; it stifles aspiration; it blinds to privilege; it palsies effort.

Let those who can bring their large gifts; the need is urgent, let the number be multiplied; but let us remember what we sing:

> Vainly we offer each ample oblation,
> Vainly with gifts would his favour secure;
> Richer by far is the heart's adoration,
> Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor.

Let us be assured that it is vain to hope that the Church, saved by the supreme sacrifice of the Son of God, can be led to the conquest of the world until all her leaders, from the least to the greatest, shall bear in their bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus, being ensamples to the flock.

* Author of Great Questions of the Day (Is. Morgan and Scott). The questions considered are, "Is there probation after death?" "Is there hope for the heathen?" and "Can infants be saved?"

Mr. Meyer in America.

It is surely due to the many dear friends who have been praying for me during my American trip to tell what great things God has done. The voyage was stormy, but the weather has been clear and beautiful since landing. I began by addressing 6000 Christian Endeavourers in Boston, and then spoke seven times in the great Tremont Temple there, holding 3000 people, to crowded audiences. I also spoke twice for Mr. Francis Murphy, who was holding a very successful temperance mission, and three times in churches. God's power was manifestly present, and about 300 ministers met me in a separate meeting at the close of the mission to express their gratitude for the new impulse received.

It was very delightful to be entertained at the home of the late beloved Dr. A. J. Gordon, and to preach in his church on the second anniversary of his death. Heaven came very near to us all that night.

Then I came to Carnegie Rooms, New York, holding 3000 people, but a most delightful auditorium. We have had marvellous audiences, with about 500 ministers on each occasion, and the deepest attention. Dr. A. C. Dixon has presided, and Mr. J. H. Burke has led the singing. Throughout the city there is a widespread attention to the best things, and an expectation of coming revival. Two meetings at the church formerly ministered to by Dr. Cuyler, and one for ministers, complete a fairly good record for the week. But none, save God, can ever tabulate the results. That a New York audience should gather at 10.30 and 3 each day for five days to hear the simplest expositions of the deep things of God is matter for thanksgiving.

Philadelphia is my next location, for four days with Dr. Chapman; then on Feb. 17 in the Germanic for home.

Mr. Moody was very pleased with the £2600 which I brought him with the love of the Christians in Great Britain, and is giving me a letter of thanks. Of all these matters I may write more when time permits.

Letters from North Africa.—6.

MISSIONARY PROGRESS.

Missionary progress along the coast of North Africa seems insignificant, yet it is beneficent and full of promise. It reaches men, women, and children, the last in the greatest degree.

One day we went on an expedition of a few hours into

A KABYLE VILLAGE IN THE HILLS.

We quickly gathered a company of men. One, the patriarch of the place, seemed at first quite indisposed to stop and listen, but after a little persuasion from the ladies of our party he remained, and before long became deeply interested, tears filling his eyes. At the end he rose with much emotion, kissed our hands, and thanked us warmly. Another man said cynically, "Yes; of course we believe the Bible, and Sidna Aissa (the Lord Jesus), and the Apostles." But the other shook his head and said mournfully, "We don't believe; we don't believe." The will to believe was evidently present in this dear old man, and it is promised that if any man willeth to do his will he shall know of the teaching whether it is of God. Surely God will save every one that can be saved, and where there is a willing mind He deals with us according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not.

At another village further away in the hills under the shadow of the snow-topped Jura-jura mountains, we had on another day two meetings, one of women, addressed by the sisters, and the other of men, addressed by ourselves. They were much interested by the story of Abraham, which gave occasion for allusions to their own traditions, habits, and experiences, with illustrations from other sources. The offering of his son by the friend of God explained that of God's only-begotten and beloved Son by the Father in heaven, and the substitution of the ram for Isaac showed that the Lamb of God, who is the Son of God, must die to bear away the sin of men. Here also one of men was unwilling to listen, but as the discourse proceeded he listened earnestly, and at the close brought some dates for our refreshment.

THE TWO CHIEF STUMBING-BLOCKS

to a Moslem, so far as doctrine is concerned, are the deity of the Messiah and the death of the Son of God. Their sins, however, are a far greater stumbling-block than anything else, and it seems of little use to insist that Mahomet is a false prophet and Jesus the true Messiah, while their social life is honeycombed with what the Prayer-book stigmatises as deadly sin, and more than every other man who comes to the medical mission is suffering from the worst of all diseases. It is as true for Mohammedans as for nominal Christians "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." The darkness could not comprehend the light until it had comprehended its own darkness. All men must through John believe in Jesus. In order that He might be made manifest to Israel and to all men John came baptising in water, which baptism meant confession and repentance of sin. Unless a Mohammedan is convinced of sin he will never believe in Jesus Christ as his Lord. Mr. Summers, a N.A. missionary in Alexandria, says in a recent letter, "What a glad day it would be if they showed real sorrow and repentance because of their sin against God. 'Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned.'"

THE CHILDREN, JEWISH, KABYLE OR ARABIC, are of necessity the most hopeful. Arab errand boys and shoeblacks from the streets of the city, Kabyle girls and boys out of their villages, Arab children of the town or country, are taught to sing hymns, the words and tunes of which will, on Mr. Kilburn's principle of association, recall each other through these children's lives, and assuredly lead

o the salvation at least of some of them. The children become missionaries to their parents and friends, for they sing their hymns at home, and tell what they have heard; and as through all the ages, so still, God, through the mouths of babes and sucklings perfects his praise.

MISS COX IN TENT, MISS SMITH OUTSIDE, SI SHEREEF BEHIND, KABYLE VILLAGERS SITTING ROUND.

In this connection I may mention the well-organised and successful

SCHOOLS FOR JEWISH BOYS AND GIRLS

at Tunis, under the excellent superintendence of Mr. Flad (son of the late Abyssinian missionary of that name). These schools are connected with the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. There are about 300 children and young people from six to fourteen under tuition, by a carefully selected staff of Christian teachers. The schools are in every way worthy of support and extension. Numbers of children have to be refused admission for want of accommodation.

DR. CHURCHER AT SUSA.

It was a great pleasure to meet again at Susa (French Sousse), Dr. Churcher, whom I had known nine years ago at Tangier, where the medical mission of the N. A. M. was begun. He was the doctor in our visit to the Arab village mentioned in my last. The friends of the Pastors' College, by whom he is supported, have every reason to be atisfied with their representative and his capable and devoted wife; for, to put it briefly in his own words, "the doctor married the nurse," and, I may add, not only a qualified nurse, but a true missionary and a gifted evangelist.

In the earthly ministry of the Lord Jesus, occupy a very important and pathetic place. I have already touched upon the children; let me say a word as to healing the sick. When Jesus (i.e., Jehovah the Saviour) had concluded his great exposition of the principles of the kingdom of heaven, He came down from the mountain, and his first-recorded acts were the healing of a leper and of the servant of a Roman centurion. Even before the Sermon on the Mount the evangelist Matthew says, "He went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease, among the people. So also when He sent out the twelve and the seventy, He gave them authority to cast out demons, to heal the sick, and to preach the reign of God.

THE CHILDREN AND THE SICK

It is not needful here to discuss the question whether miracles were intended to become the normal method, or whether they are to be regarded like those of Moses and Aaron, but as signs essential to the inauguration of a new dispensation. Perhaps the truth lies between these two positions. But one of the first impressions of an observer of medical mission work must be that the contact of the physician with the patient is a powerful element in winning his attention to the Gospel. The touch of sympathy, the inquiry into the symptoms, the repeated visit, the confidential intercourse, the gratitude not only of the sick one, but of his family and friends, all indicate that there is no more direct way to the soul than through the body, no more open avenue to the spirit than through the ministry of healing. The medical missionary is the pioneer missionary, for

> Kindness can woo the lion from his den,
> A moral lesson to the sons of men.

We all remember the story of the fugitive who took refuge in a cave which proved to be a lion's lair. The lion came to him and held out his paw, and the man took out the thorn which lamed him. Long after they met again in the arena, to make one of the scenes in a Roman holiday. But the lion, instead of tearing him in pieces, fawned upon his friend, who had performed the surgical operation in his forest home. And if a lion, surely a man, Mohammedan or heathen, civilised or savage, will remember the hand that healed him. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin."

MISSION HOUSE AT DJEMAA SAHRIDJ.

There are too many medical men (as there seem too many of every other profession or occupation) to find adequately remunerative employment at home; but Christian young men, having knowledge of medicine, and skill in surgery, would find a career on the mission field second to none in present interest and eternal profit. Even elder men, pushed aside by juniors more highly and scientifically taught and trained, might find a new departure and a new enjoyment among the suffering multitudes of other lands. And though a little knowledge was declared by the wisdom of our fathers to be a dangerous thing, and notwithstanding that it may sound like a heresy to the faculty, it seems desirable that every missionary should have some knowledge of simple remedies in ordinary sickness, and of first treatment of sores and wounds, and accidental injuries.

As we were returning from one of the mountain expeditions noted above, we met, riding a donkey, a man whose foot had just been crushed in a collision on the road. He would not return with us, but came the following day. As Miss Smith was bathing, cleansing, and dressing the wounds, he asked why she showed all this care and kindness—was it to make sure of heaven? This gave the opportunity of expounding the faith in Christ which justifies the believer, and the works which justify the faith.

Missionaries have their peculiar sorrows, and also their peculiar joys. There is need of a medical missionary in every city and country district of North Africa. Who will send one? and who will go?

OLD ROMAN BATH.

Texts in Omnibuses.—The London Tramcar and Omnibus Scripture Text Mission reports advance, but as there are estimated to be 1500 omnibuses and 896 tramcars, with say annually 244,000,000 and 175,000,000 travellers respectively, in London alone, there is much yet to do. Hitherto omnibuses have scarcely been touched, and as they circulate mainly through the better-class districts they must not be overlooked. It is calculated that to place a transparent text in each of these cars and omnibuses would cost, on an average, 15s. each for twelve months, £1797 for the year.

Working Girls in London.—It is proposed by the conductors of the Homes for Working Girls in London to commemorate the "Diamond Jubilee" of the Queen by raising £1000, so that the extension of Garfield House, 8, Fitzroy-square, W., may be effected. Garfield House has accommodation for only forty-nine girls; although in the rear of the house, and belonging to it, there are some old and unused buildings, which at a cost of about £1000 could be rebuilt, and provision thus made for an additional fifty beds, with no increase of rent or taxes. The director of the Home is Mr. John Shearton, 3 Victoria-street, Westminster S.W.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, February 28.

"Let them curse, but bless thou."—Psa. cix. 28.

THIS is the Iscariotic psalm. The Apostle Peter quoted it, as applying to Judas, on the occasion of electing a successor to the traitor; but the Church had no desire to appropriate against him or any of her foes the awful anathemas of the Psalmist. In reading them we must remember—first, that they may be treated as predictions rather than imprecations, not let, but shall; secondly, that those earlier days had much of the thunder of Sinai and little enough of the tender accents of Calvary; thirdly, that it seemed to the lovers of God all important that wickedness should be punished in this life, as they had very dim conceptions of the next, and it might seem, otherwise, that God was indifferent to moral distinctions.

Men still curse us. This is one of the badges that we belong to the Lord's household, that they call us Beelzebub. The offence of the cross has not ceased, and if none curse us we may seriously question whether we are following in the footsteps of the Crucified. We must be baptized into our Saviour's death, and die with Him to all fear of man. Until we are willing to be counted the offscouring of all things, we have not entered into the true significance of baptism into his death, and participation in his risen life. But when we are willing to forfeit our character, to die to our reputation, to be fools for Christ's sake, then God begins to bless. When all men revile, and persecute, and say all manner of evil against us falsely for Christ's sake, God whispers in our heart, "Great is your reward in heaven."

MONDAY, March 1.

"Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power."—Psa. cx. 3.

The literal rendering of the Hebrew is preferable: "Thy people shall be free-will offerings in the day of thy power." When we consider the quotations of the first verse of this psalm in the New Testament, we have no difficulty in understanding what is meant by the day of his power. It is beyond doubt the day of his ascension, of his enthronement at the right hand of the Father, and of the advent of the Holy Spirit.

Whensoever the Holy Spirit is supreme in a church there will be a free-will offering of young hearts and lives. Clad in the priestly garb of stainless purity, pouring forth from the womb of life's young morning, they will scatter themselves over the weary earth like myriads of dewdrops on withered vegetation. The Priest-King has a wonderful fascination for youthful volunteers, and as He is so are they.

Have you become a free-will offering? There is every claim for your entire and devoted service. You have been already included in the Father's gift to the Son, but you must come to Him for yourself. The world has yet to learn what God can do with a soul that is entirely given up to Him. Let Him have your life to shape and mould it, to inspire and infill, to send forth on his errands, to commission for his service. There are no pressed men in our Master's army, all are volunteers. Offer your will to God; say you are willing to be made willing; He can make you willing in this day of his power, as iron is bent in the fierce flame.

"The works of the Lord are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein."—Psa. cxi. 2.

The merchant goes forth to seek goodly pearls. Go forth, O Christian heart, to discover fresh jewels in thy Saviour's character. You will find them in meditation, in converse with other souls, but mainly in the reverent investigation of Scripture.

The theme of the Bible, as of this psalm, is the works of the Lord. Its constant affirmation is that they are great, that his work is honour and majesty, that He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered, that He shows his people the power of his works, and that the works of his hands are truth and judgment. Where better could we study or seek them out?

Consider God's works in Creation as scene after scene is unfolded in the first chapter of Genesis; in destruction, as when the Deluge swept the earth; in redemption, when He led his people out of Egypt; in judgment, when He handed his people over to their enemies; in the holy Incarnation, the Passion, the Resurrection of Jesus, and in the coming of the Paraclete. Seek out these great and wonderful works, trace the references made to them in every part of Scripture, find a holy pleasure in reviewing them in all their wealth of significance.

Kepler, when he first turned his telescope to clustered worlds, exclaimed, "I am thinking over again the first thoughts of God." Would that the ecstasy of the ardent student of nature might fill our hearts as we direct our thought to the great works of our Saviour God.

WEDNESDAY, March 3.

"He shall not be afraid of evil tidings; his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord."—Psa. cxii. 7.

There cannot be evil tidings to the soul which has fixed its trust in the Lord. Every messenger that comes post-haste into its presence with despatches brings tidings of what the Father has permitted or done, and nothing which is of his ordering or permitting can really injure us. Tidings! tidings! they are always pouring in, by letter, postcard, and telegram. They are presented in the contents bills of every newspaper, and cried by the newsboys in the streets. But the child of God opens each buff-coloured envelope with untrembling hands, and scans the newspaper columns with unblenching eyes. No tidings can be evil to him; his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord.

But does not the Christian suffer anguish and pain, as others do? Is he stoical and unimpassioned, dull in his emotions, unsympathetic in his affections? Not so, but he refuses to judge things by their appearances. He knows that all things must be working for good on his behalf: in the hieroglyphics he detects his Father's handwriting, in the mysterious figure standing on the shore, veiled in morning mist, he beholds the Lord who died for him. If tidings were to come to you to-day of disease, loss, bereavement, death, they could not be evil if your heart would maintain a fixed trust in God, for that trust robs death of its sting, and the grave of its victory. Like the fabled philosopher's stone, it turns all metals to gold.

THURSDAY, March 4.

"He maketh the barren woman to keep house and to be a joyful mother of children."—Ps. cxiii. 9.

This is an evident reference to Hannah's psalm of thanksgiving, when she had borne Samuel, and God had taken away her reproach. Her story, and these words, should be a great comfort to those who have never been used in soul-winning. God can make barren souls authors of life to thousands. Remember, too, how Sarah received strength by faith to bear a child, because she counted Him faithful that promised. These are the conditions:—

Be content, like Hannah, to cherish a sorrowful spirit. Weep before the Lord. Let your request be poured out before God at Shiloh, with the moving life, though the voice be inaudible. Ask of God with strong cryings and tears, that He would still the taunts of your adversary. Souls are only born to those who cannot live without them.

Next, look away from all creature help to God's faithful promise, and believe that He can make you to become spiritually productive. Claim this of Him. Hold Him to his own word.

Lastly, promise that the children, when born, shall be his. So Hannah promised; and Samuel, when old enough, was brought to the Temple in pursuance of her vow. We are too apt to take the glory and credit of soul-winning, instead of acknowledging that, as we could not bear them apart from God, so we may not keep them when they are given.

FRIDAY, March 5.

"Which turned the flint into a fountain of waters."—Psa. cxiv. 8.

This is a miracle which we all need to have wrought in our experience. Our heart is flint, our eyes our dry, our souls fail to respond with tears and regrets to the Love of the Pierced One, and to the indictment that charges us with his death. There is little brokenness of heart among God's children; and it is notorious that conviction of sin is a comparatively rare experience among the ungodly. We have read of whole communities being swept with paroxysms of grief and compunction under the preaching of a Finney. His look on one occasion at a scoffing girl smote her to the soul, and led to so deep a work of grace that a whole factory, and then a village, were filled with mourning.

Moses struck the rock of flint at the commencement of the wanderings; and was to speak to it, at their close. But in either case the effect was identical: the water gushed from its heart of rock. Use thy cross, O Son of God, Lord of the House in which Moses was but a servant, and smite these hard hearts, that tears may flow freely forth; or speak the word. It is said that each structure has a chord, to strike which makes it tremble to its base. Surely there is a chord, a note, a tone, before which our hearts would rend, and give Thee tears for Thy sorrow, anguish for Thy pain!

SATURDAY, March 6.

"They that make them shall be like unto them, yea, every one that trusteth in them."—Psa. cxv. 8.

That men become like their ideals is a commonplace; and that the heathen resemble their deities is notorious. First men impute to their deities their own vices, as the Greeks and Romans to the gods and goddesses of their Pantheon; and then endeavour to honour them by imitation.

But, in another sense, this is gloriously true of our relation to the Lord Jesus. If we make Him our ideal, and trust Him with all our hearts, his beauty shall dawn upon our face, and we shall be changed into his image, from glory to glory. We know that when He shall be manifested finally we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is; and, in a measure, this process of transformation is taking place in those who see Him by the eye of faith, and are becoming like Him.

We are doing more by our life than by our words. We cannot always speak for Jesus, but we may always live for Him. Of a young girl, lately gone forth as a missionary, who cannot speak a word of the language of the foreign land to which she has gone, I was told the other day that her life, or rather the life of Jesus in her, was exciting a far wider influence than she knew. This is the Divine method: look and live; trust and be transfigured; abide in Him, and He shall abide in you.

Birmingham Medical Mission.—The annual tea meeting of the United Adult Classes, held on Tuesday, 16th, was made the occasion for a spontaneous demonstration of hearty appreciation of Dr. Crabbe, the senior physician, who has lately returned from his holiday. A crowded audience listened to his account of his tour in "The Midnight Sun" from Marseilles to Naples, viâ the Corinthian Canal to Athens, Smyrna, Ephesus, Constantinople, then to Palestine, lastly to Egypt. Mr. Nickson expressed his high appreciation of the work. Dr. Crabbe hoped that, with the assistance of his colleague, Mr. Bagster Wilson, he would long continue his loved work in all its varied departments.

THE EVANGELIST.

Switched at Lydney Junction.

HOW many a young man started life with fair promise, and actuated by right principles, has exchanged the real for the imaginary, the glittering of the real diamond for the show and appearance of the paste, the inward rest and secret peace for "the pleasures of sin for a season"! Such has been the painful experience of the writer of these few lines.

My life beginning, like that of many others, in a Christian home, with pious influences, each member of my family being an active worker for God, encouraged me at an early age to engage myself in Christian work. Stepping from one department to another, at the age of nineteen I became desirous of changing my position from one section of the Christian Church to another, the result of which was that I became laden with work, and finally my services were accepted as a local preacher. In this way I was engaged for four years.

All this time my life consisted merely of a routine of Christian work carried on under a certain degree of religious excitement; but there was

NO COMMUNION WITH GOD.

An event relative to my business changed the tide of prosperity which had hitherto attended my commercial life; the props of Christian work and service were not strong enough to bear me up, and I plunged into the world for satisfaction; thus showing that the bright, happy, mirthful disposition could, when controlled by the Evil One, be made an agent for gross iniquity. So much for the relation of the down-grade experience of my life. Now, friend, allow me to show you the occasion of my

STARTING ON THE UP-GRADE.

As a commercial man my journey took me into the West of England. I arrived at Lydney Junction, and finding myself a day in advance of my town, I knew not which way to bend my steps so as to fill up the spare night. I stood on the platform of the station and tossed up for the decision. The town of C—— won the toss. I arrived at the hotel where I had spent several lively evenings; and my first inquiry was as to who were my companions for the night. Hearing that only one commercial beside myself was staying there, I was eager to see him, to take stock of him.

Upon entering the room conversation ensued, and turned on how and where to spend the Sunday. This did not meet with a ready response from me at first, but my friend's candour and earnestness—saying he cared not what I called myself, was I born again? was I saved?—led eventually to such friendship and sympathy that, though unable to retail my difficulties to anyone else, I ended by telling him my moral, temporal, and spiritual condition—how I had engaged in Christian work, and how, though knowing and preaching the plan of salvation, I had never myself realised a true change of conversion.

Drawing from his pocket a book bound in morocco, with red edges, and "Day-Book" embossed on its cover, he informed me it was and—which I could not deny—was his day-book.

At his request I then read John xvii. 3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent."

An interesting conversation followed on the knowledge of Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour, together with an account of his conversion.

Like myself, he had met with trouble upon trouble, and, feeling the last straw had been placed upon his bruised and breaking back, determined to make an end of his life. He started for this purpose, and reached a point six miles from the town of B——. Overcome with fatigue and hunger, he sought refreshment in some coffee tavern, and whilst waiting the arrival of his meal

HE FELL ASLEEP AND DREAMED.

He dreamed he was running a race, first on a green meadow, then on a shingle path, then on hard macadamised road; then on either side walls arose, higher and higher, closer and closer, till he became hedged in on all sides, and the light above obscured from view. Looking back, he saw the devil pursuing him eagerly; looking forward, a yawning chasm; but on reaching its edge, and being about to plunge, he looked upwards and cried for help, when Christ, putting his hand down and lifting him to the top of the wall, said:

"SAVED IN TIME!

You began life on the green meadow of prosperity, but you dabbled with sin till, increasing rapidly in your downward course, it became, like the road, hard to your feet, and, like the walls, hemming you in and shutting light out from above. The end would have been certain destruction had I not come to your rescue and lifted you up above it all. I saved you in time."

Where sin reigned He desires to reign, and to produce that secret peace and joy which the world cannot offer. Though tempests may rage without, yet He who calmed the waves on the Galilean lake will command the waves of doubt and fear to be still; and though the tempter shall level his darts at our heads, He has provided for our protection the armour of salvation, and placed in our hands the sword of the Spirit.

May we ever use his armour, knowing that his patience will conquer when ours fails, and his grace will be enough under all circumstances. Ever combat our foes with the "It is written" of the Word of God. Ever be on the watch-tower of expectancy, waiting the approach of the enemy, that, knowing Christ to be within deepening and carrying on his work, we may be willing to fight for Him and with Him, and, if needs be, to stand alone for Him. C. G.

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

By his own blood He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh;

How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?

Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus,

Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience.

Evangelistic Notes.

A FORTNIGHT'S mission, under the auspices of Saltcoats Y.M.C.A., has been held, Jan. 31-Feb. 15, by Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society. Professions of conversion have not been numerous, but some of them have been very striking cases indeed. A pleasing feature of the mission was the manner in which the evangelist sought to lead Christians to higher life and nobler service.

J. M.

Mr. J. A. Smith, of Aberdeen, has concluded a fortnight of special meetings in the Free Church in Rothes. In spite of the very stormy state of the weather, the meetings were very well attended. The Lord blessed the work of his earnest servant in a very marked way. Many of God's own people were greatly revived and quickened, and not a few, specially of young men and women, were led to decide for Christ. Truly the Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. C. C. C.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has brought to a close a very successful mission in Forfar Baptist Chapel. The meetings were largely attended throughout the week, and full on Sunday evenings. The meetings have been blessed to Christians and sinners.

Mr. Hugh C. Wallace, of the Evangelisation Society, has finished a fortnight's united mission at Pewsey, Wilts. The attendance was good throughout, notwithstanding very inclement weather; and at the last meeting the spacious Wesleyan Chapel, lent for the mission, was filled to overflowing.

Mr. C. H. Judd (C.I.M.) has concluded a mission at Broxburn, near Edinburgh. There was a considerable amount of prayer and expectancy amongst the workers prior to the mission, and the Lord has not disappointed them. God's own people have been greatly blessed, and a goodly number of the unconverted have been saved. Another servant of the Lord is expected to visit the village shortly. Will God's people pray that the good work may go on? Mr. Judd has gone to Wishaw for a fortnight's mission.

Mr. John Coates has completed a very successful eight days' mission in Mitcheldean, Glos. The earnest addresses were accompanied with great power and blessing. The people heard the Word gladly, and many were not only impressed but led to the Saviour.

Rev. John Elder, of Ebenezer Baptist Chapel, Glasgow, has completed a ten days' Gospel mission at Tue Brook Baptist Chapel, Liverpool. The services have been exceptionally well attended, and the mission throughout has been one of the most helpful ever held in connection with the church.

J. K. TIPPING, Sec.

Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has held (Jan. 24 to Feb. 15) a very successful mission in Fritwell, Oxon. There was good attendance during the whole of the mission, people coming for some distance to hear Mr. Harris, who preached the Gospel so plainly and earnestly that all could understand. God greatly blessed his labours in the salvation of souls and restoring backsliders to the Church of God.

An evangelistic mission has been held, Jan. 31 to Feb. 17, in the Gospel Hall, Snow-hill, Bath, by Mr. J. J. Sims. In spite of continuous rain, good audiences were gathered, the hall being sometimes crowded. The addresses were characterised by much power and feeling. His afternoon Bible readings in the Y.M.C.A. Hall on the Book of Revelation, illustrated by a large prophetic chart, were of great value to Christians, whose spiritual life has been quickened and deepened. Anxious ones have been spoken to each evening, and many have accepted Christ. H. R.

Mr. Charles Lazenby, of the Evangelisation Society, began on 24th ult. a fifteen days' mission in the Town Hall, Corsham, Wilts. During the second week the weather was very wet and the roads extremely muddy. The audiences were large at the start, and day by day increased. So great was the interest taken in Mr. Lazenby's soul-stirring addresses that a third week was universally asked for, and the interest continued unabated to the end. It was acknowledged on all sides that the way of salvation could scarcely have been made clearer. Many hearers expressed their thankfulness to God for the remarkable success attending Mr. Lazenby's efforts to extend the Master's kingdom. L. Y.

Mr. B. H. Angel closed an encouraging mission last week at Crockhamhill, Kent. The Word proved a blessing to God's children and to the salvation of souls. Mr. Angel is labouring this week at Hurstpierpoint, near Brighton.

Rev. C. H. Yatman's Mission in Belfast has been continued with growing success, the meetings last week being marked by remarkable interest. On Sunday Grosvenor Hall was filled by immense crowds, morning, afternoon (for young women), and evening, while in Ginnett's Circus a vast men's meeting was held. At each of these gatherings there were many anxious inquirers. One who was present says: "The preacher never forgot that he must probe the conscience of his audience to the quick in order to produce lasting good, and in the hush of silence at the close of the service he appealed to the men and women who thronged the great auditorium to give up sin and make a good confession before men by walking out, before the big crowd, to the minor hall for counsel and prayer. Hundreds responded at each service."

Self-Help Emigration Society.—The report of this Society for helping able-bodied labouring men to emigrate shows 251 persons assisted in this way last year; mainly to Canada, but some to South Africa and the Antipodes. Interesting testimonies are given from men already sent out. Copies of the report may be had of the secretary, Mr. E. Wilson Gates, 39, Memorial Hall, E.C.

Prayer for Ireland. — The Dublin branch of the Evangelical Alliance call for the setting apart of Wednesday, March 17 (St. Patrick's Day), as a day of special and united prayer for Ireland. They say: — "We have much to encourage us. Since this Day of Prayer for Ireland was first established, the improvement in almost every department of our national life has been very great. Religious life and activity have increased in all our churches, and at the same time there has been a satisfactory growth of the spirit of tolerance and friendly co-operation. Our country is almost wholly free from the infidelity which has made shipwreck of the faith in other lands. And even in holding what we must regard in great part as deadly error the people of Ireland have not lost the spirit of reverence and devotion."

Rev. J. McNeill in York.

[By our Special Correspondent.]

ON Friday evening last there closed a two weeks' mission by Mr. McNeill in the ancient and historic city of York. It is no mean city from any point of view. It competes with Chester in the antiquated interest attaching to its encircling walls, whose stones, if they could speak, might describe many a stirring chapter in the troublous civil history of this empire. As the seat of an archbishopric it fills a somewhat unique place in ecclesiastical reckoning; while its massive Minster connects it, at least externally, with the development of English religious history.

These things denote a certain sort of privilege and possession; but experience shows that they do not of necessity create an atmosphere which does away with the need for an occasional troubling of the spiritual waters of the community. Indeed the contrary may be the case. The constant familiarity with religious forms and ceremonies in a cathedral city may only create a substitute for real spiritual life and activity, instead of helping to foster it. At his closing service Mr. McNeill caused some excitement in his audience by telling how, in the course of his Manchester mission, a friend had prayed for a blessing on his coming visit to "that dark city York." Whether such a pessimistic epithet was deserved or not, there is no possible doubt that the prayer itself has been heard. Into the most earnest and evangelistically-disposed communities the chill of spiritual torpor and the paralysis of formality are apt to creep. A fresh breath of God's Spirit is needed to clear away these mists, and to supply the spiritual oxygen needed for a fuller, richer, more fruitful life.

The meetings were held in the Festival Concert Room, a square auditorium into which some 2000 people could be packed. During the last two weeks, at the evening time, it has seen many full gatherings of all sorts and conditions of people, who have literally hung for a solid hour on the lips of the preacher as he unfolded those wondrous stores of Gospel exposition and appeal which he has at command. The mission was arranged for by a united committee, and if some of the city ecclesiastics have not contributed much to the fraternity of the gatherings by their presence, many others have been constant and warm in their support. The people, at any rate, of all the reformed churches, have swelled the congregations, as well as those with no church connection at all.

Mr. McNeill was confessedly weary in body when the mission began, after the prolonged and unusual strain of his Manchester work. But when once he was on his legs, dilating on some Scripture narrative, and applying its lessons to the conditions of our modern life, he showed no symptoms of weariness. And such a thing as lassitude on the part of the hearers was out of the question. No more interesting or encouraging sight could surely be imagined than the view from the platform of a great crowd of men and women, of all ages and ranks in life, drinking into ear and eye and heart the evangel messages and the saving truths which the speaker day by day brought forth from the sacred treasure-house of revelation.

Perhaps one of the most noteworthy of the meetings was the great gathering of men only, on the second Sunday evening of the mission. Mr. McNeill's manly, fresh, and vigorous way of presenting the claims of Jesus Christ on heart and life, specially commends itself to a male audience, and at that men's meeting there were all the indications that good and lasting spiritual work was being done. Another season of somewhat special interest was the service in the Presbyterian church on the morning of the same Sunday, when, besides the usual congregation, some 600 men and officers of the "Black Watch" regiment were present. The preacher's subject—the healing of Naaman, the Syrian general—was handled in a method calculated at once to arrest the interested attention of these military brethren, and to press home on them the necessity of that simple faith and unquestioning obedience that are characteristic of the true Christian life. To hear these soldiers singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers" was enough to stir the most sluggish imagination. The Scottish preacher, with his brusque, homely ways, his dramatic power of illustration, and his keen soul-thrusts, will no doubt be the theme of many a discussion in York mess and barrack rooms during months to come.

The afternoon meetings were, of course, smaller than those of the evening, but for these also large congregations assembled, and enjoyed to the full the things new and old which were put before them. The words of earnest and heartfelt thanksgiving uttered by those brethren on the platform who led the prayers of the assemblies, showed how deeply all felt the value of the spiritual impetus that had been imparted and received, and the higher levels of consecrated zeal that had been gained through the ministrations of the evangelist. An admirable choir, admirably led, sang the Gospel day by day.

The closing meeting on Friday evening was in many respects memorable. The house was not only crowded, but many stood in the spaces around the doors. The discourse on working out God's gift of salvation—a favourite farewell word with Mr. McNeill—was delivered with great unction and tremendous dynamic force. As a mere matter of genuine enjoyment, in the best sense, we know of nothing better than such a sermon from Mr. McNeill's lips, with all its varied wealth of allusion, illustration, and exposition. When to these are added the uplift of soul and the vision of the grandeur of whole-hearted Christian discipleship, one does not wonder at the attractive power of Mr. McNeill's work among the masses of the people. At the close of the sermon numbers of those present indicated soul-decision; as had also been the case on preceding evenings. As his custom now is, the evangelist gave to all the opportunity of stating on a specially-prepared card whether, and in what respect, they had got a distinct blessing through the mission. The responses were many and most encouraging.

Mr. McNeill takes a much-needed fortnight's rest before entering on his Liverpool mission; it begins in Hengler's Circus on Sunday, March 7, and goes on to the end of the month.

Seven Gifts.

O Jesu, mercy! my unrest
Because of sin doth never cease.
"Come, lay thy head upon my breast,
And I will give to thee My Peace."

Unworthy, Lord, of such a place
Am I, who 'gainst Thy Spirit strove.
"Keep now My Word, My Truth embrace, Abide henceforward in My Love."

But, Lord, my heart is sad and sore,
That I Thy gifts so ill employ.
"Go, seek lost sinners to restore,
Fulfilled in thee shall be My Joy."

Both weak and erring is my heart,
How can I view the heavenly race?
"I know thee, even as thou art,
Sufficient unto thee, My Grace."

Oft by the foe am I o'erthrown,
My fears forebode the journey's length.
"Thou shalt not walk it all alone,
Perfect in weakness is My Strength."

Weary and baffled, Lord, am I,
And by the cares of life opprest.
"On Me, and on My Word rely,
Soon shalt thou share with Me, My Rest."

O Christ! I cling to Thee alone,
And love Thee for Thy wondrous story.
"My sufferings for thy sins atone,
And thou shalt see, in heaven, My Glory."

Aggressive Work.

I ENTERED a railway carriage on the L. and Y. line, in which were five well-dressed men. The tickets had just been collected, and I then remarked, "I presume we shall not be admitted into heaven without a ticket or pass of some sort, and I suppose the pass will be 'Ye must be born again.' This is what the highest authority, the Saviour, said, and it has been my glorious privilege to possess that pass for over thirty years. I got it a free gift, without money or price, as a pauper takes a penny. Besides, all of us here now may have a pass upon the same terms, if we have not already got it, by the acceptance of Jesus as our personal Saviour and Lord," and so on.

One man appeared to consider the remarks rather an intrusion. He looked restless and angry, as though he would like to say something severe.

Another man sitting by his side looked so friendly that I felt at liberty to ask him how long he had had the pass, and he promptly replied, "Twenty years." I asked what means the Lord had used in bringing him into the fold, and he said, "By my falling into the dock here. Fortunately I was rescued, but the fright at being brought, as it were, face to face with death, caused me to give my heart to God."

I then turned to a man on my left, and asked him if he was saved, and he replied, "Yes, nineteen years ago." I wished him to tell us how the Lord brought him in, and he answered, "I was standing before a revolving circular saw, and lately I had heard of one of these saws flying into pieces, and killing a man close to it. The thought of the possibility of the saw before me being shattered in the same manner and killing me made me decide immediately, and turn to the Lord."

Another said the Lord used affliction in causing him to surrender, and the death of a relative was the moment of life from the dead to him, over thirty years ago.

All this appeared quite to interest the angry-looking man, and he became friendly. His expression changed. He gladly took one of my booklets, and began at once to read it. It was evident his attitude toward the Gospel had become thoroughly altered, but unfortunately we now reached our destination, and had all to separate, perhaps never to meet again on earth. Singularly enough I did not ask his address, as I usually do, for the purpose of sending a larger book, such as the "Blood of Jesus," or "Grace and Truth." However, the Lord can look after him, and so we leave him there.

Upon another occasion I was talking about the truth to twenty people in an overhead railway carriage here, when an elderly, square-set man objected to my addressing the entire company, remarking that he considered I was taking a liberty in doing so, as it was distasteful to some. I told him I merely wished to embrace an opportunity of trying to do good, as I had no other object in view. "Ah, yes," he said, "no doubt you are well paid for it." I replied he was perfectly right, I was well paid for it, and yet it cost me to do it likely more than it took to keep him. The people eagerly listened to what was going on, and some who knew me smiled at my opponent's amusing mistake.

He continued, however, to speak angrily, on account, as he said, of his feelings for others in the carriage, although none had expressed any feelings. When I was able to speak a word without interruption, I told him emphatically that I believed he was a Roman Catholic, and that Roman Catholics were the greatest opponents to the Gospel in Great Britain. This rather quieted him, but he said that was his business, and not mine.

Evidently I had hit the mark, and the people saw it, and quite sympathised with me, for when I left the carriage one of them followed me, and said he thought I had spotted my man.

Mr. Robert Burn,

OF THE CENTRAL LONDON Y.M.C.A.

MANY readers will have seen and regretted the announcement that Mr. Robert Burn is on the eve of relinquishing the offices of Y.M.C.A. Secretary at Aldersgate-street, and the conductorship of the daily noon prayer meeting held at the same place. This regret will be deep and widespread. Mr. Burn has been so long associated with these branches of Christian service in the heart of London, that in the estimation of all frequenting this historic Christian rendezvous he has become, so to speak, an integral and indispensable part of the institution. Those who have come to know, and have learned highly to esteem, him through fellowship with him at Aldersgate-street, are scattered over all parts of the globe; and to the workers who revisit our city the familiar rooms will not seem at all the same without his genial presence and loving speech.

Mr. Burn has spent more than eighteen years in the sphere of service which he now resigns. Those years have been the best and fullest of his life. As to the occasion of his leaving, it will be enough to say that the step is entirely voluntary, and is taken in the interests, as he deems it, of the Association he has so heartily and ably worked for. Passing years, if they add to one's experience, also bring of necessity a lessening of elasticity and adaptability, and Mr. Burn has persuaded himself that it would help on the scheme of consolidating, and making more efficient, the three central branches of the London Association, if he gave way to some younger man. Those who cannot fully agree with him in this, will, at any rate, respect the motive that prompts him.

Our friend has had a most active, honourable, and fruitful life-record in the past. Born in 1844, of Scotch ancestry, he received his education first in Brighton and afterwards at a famous old school at Leatherhead. From there he went to the classic city of St. Andrews and passed through a college course of study. About that time he had thoughts of entering the service of the East India Company, but these plans were shattered by the transference of the powers wielded by that Company into the hands of the Crown. Mr. Burn then began to study medicine, with the view of undertaking Army medical service, when the failure of his father's health again changed the prospect, and he went into business at Epsom. All these experiences had brought him into close contact with different sides and phases of life, and of course helped to prepare him for the important work which as yet lay in the unknown future. At this early period of his career he got into touch with railway matters; he designed and has patented a valuable electrical invention for facilitating the work of sure railway signalling in foggy weather. The merits of this device are at length being fully recognised by the railway authorities, and in the greater leisure he will now possess Mr. Burn hopes to see it brought into practical and regular use, with much benefit to the community—and we trust also to himself.

In his religious experience a great turning-point came through the death of a young son. The realities of things divine and eternal were definitely seen in their true proportions, and they began to fructify in his daily life. He got together some half-dozen young men, and formed them into a little society, whose numbers soon grew to between thirty and forty; and later on to over a hundred. At that juncture Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first mission in London was in progress. Mr. Burn found his way to Aldersgate-street, and became an attender at the noon meetings that were begun to be held there. He was shortly afterwards appointed to succeed Rev. Henry Dening in the secretaryship of the noon meeting and the evangelistic committee which then formed a part of its operations. By and by he became an official member of the staff of the Y.M.C.A., and when Mr. Hind Smith came from Manchester to succeed the late Mr. W. Shipton as general secretary of the Association Mr. Burn took the post of assistant-secretary. Subsequently Mr. Smith's headquarters were moved to Exeter Hall, and Mr. Burn was set in charge of the Aldersgate-street work, where he has remained till now.

(From photograph by Mr. Burt Sharp, West-street, Brighton.)

Being situated almost in the heart of the great business world of the City, Aldersgate-street has been and must continue to be a very important centre for reaching and influencing young men employed in the large commercial wholesale, and other City houses. In addition to this, the noon prayer meeting has long been a focus and rallying point for Christian workers, missionaries, and others coming from all parts of the world. Week after week, and year after year, the voices of these busy and devoted workers are heard in the familiar lecture hall, at the noon hour of prayer, telling out the wonderful works of God, as seen and experienced by them personally in every land under the sun. It sometimes happens that workers from all the four quarters of the globe are present on the same occasion.

Aldersgate-street has also been for many years regarded as a place where friendly Christian counsel and help could be received by those who had fallen into spiritual trouble. In all these departments of work Mr. Burn has rendered service which has been simply invaluable, and the extent and worth of which few outsiders have any idea of. His happy, loving manner, his large-heartedness, his fulness of sympathy, and his firm grip of revealed truth, combined with his wide and varied experience, have enabled him to become the channel of blessing and soul-cheer to many who stood sorely in need of them. Mr. Burn had a most valued and helpful unofficial colleague in the late Mr. Robert Paton, so well remembered as the secretary of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's two great London campaigns.

Practical interest in the work of foreign evangelization has been greatly fostered at Aldersgate-street during Mr. Burn's term of service. This was largely due to the occasional visits and burning advocacy of the late Reginald Radcliffe. Some of the results have been seen in the close connection which now exists between the Association and the Student Volunteer Movement, and in the sending forth of young men to carry the Gospel to those in heathen lands.

The work of the City Y.M.C.A. has developed considerably in different directions under Mr. Burn's régime. For one thing, it has secured a more practical meed of recognition and approval from the civic authorities, so that in recent years the Mansion House has been at its disposal for the annual meetings. Another service which our friend has been able to render to the work, for ten years past, has been the editorship of the monthly Association News, which has been very helpful as a faithful exponent of all that is calculated to advance the true well-being of young men. Its influence has by no means been confined to our own land.

Though the official tie that binds him to Association work is now to be snapped, we cannot doubt that Mr. Burn will still be able to serve the cause of young men in various ways. He has in past years been necessarily compelled to decline invitations to engage in general Gospel work, but for that he will now be open to some extent, and doubtless many opportunities will occur. It is his purpose to settle down in the City, entering into various avenues of a general business kind; these will leave him time for participation in such Christian work as will utilise the large treasures of experience that he has gathered in his public service. He has been for years a zealous worker in connection with Park Presbyterian Church, Highbury, in which he holds the office of elder.

We will only add that some of the friends who have intimately known Mr. Burn and his work for the past eighteen years are arranging to convey to him a practical expression of their high sense of the services he has rendered, in the shape of a money testimonial. Many who have been refreshed in spirit through fellowship with him will be glad, we are sure, to join in this token of esteem. Messrs. Morgan and Scott will gladly receive the contributions of readers to the testimonial fund. A farewell gathering at Aldersgate-street at noon on Monday next will mark the close of Mr. Burn's official connection with the daily prayer-meeting.

The Christian Community.—One interesting branch of the work of this excellent Institution is the regular visitation of the sick in London infirmaries. Helpers are needed for this; the times of visitation are from 10.30 to noon on Sundays. Friends who are able and qualified to aid in this Christian work are invited to communicate with the superintendent of the branch, Mr. J. Leaver, 13, Pemberton-terrace, Upper Holloway, N.

Christian Succour to India.

DEAR SIR,—The letters which you have been good enough to insert have produced very kind and touching responses, some evidently sent by those who stinted themselves to give to the famishing ones, but as they gave no address I can only thank them generally.

As a whole, however, English Christians do not seem to understand the need, and consequently are content to give on a most inadequate scale. Sir W. Hunter, the great authority on Indian statistics, in his appeal to Oxfordshire, says: "This is one of the greatest calamities that ever afflicted mankind. There are forty millions of men, women, and children suffering from famine. The diseases which come with famine—cholera, fever, and perhaps the plague—will bring desolation and death into hundreds of thousands of homes."

Many Christians seem to forget their wondrous privileges, and not a tenth of what is needed has been subscribed by all the donors put together.

For fifty years prayers and effort have been spent in sowing the Gospel seed in India. Now that the most wonderful harvest of souls that the world has seen seems ready to be reaped among those 300 millions, the Church of God seems not to have been awakened to its great opportunity. Caste and family ties have hitherto held back millions of Indians from coming forward. Bu this tremendous blow is setting free these millions, family ties and caste seem to lose their hold as famine and pestilence stalk through the land. Is subh a call as this to be met with a mere conventional answer? The Lord awaits our answer. May He enable us to give such an answer as will be pleasing to Him.—Yours, for Christ's sake,

Insane in the East.

THE great undertaking of Mr. Theophilus Waldmeier to provide a Home for the Insane on Mount Lebanon, has received the support of many friends in Scotland, where the veteran missionary has been staying for some weeks. In a new edition of his explanatory pamphlet (Headley Bros., Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.) he gives a list of donors and subscribers.

In a note to us Mr. Waldmeier says:—"Though we have a good amount in the hands of Sir R. Tangye, who is the honorary treasurer, we have not yet received half the needed sum. I would remind all those who are interested in the cause to keep it prayerfully before the Lord with me, and we shall wait faithfully and patiently until He will send us further help. Preliminary steps are being taken to secure the site for the buildings of the Home. Sir Richard Tangye, 35, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C., will continue to receive funds in Great Britain. I intend to go with my wife to the U.S.A. in April, in order to plead the cause there."

Deep Sea Fishermen.—The Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen purposes celebrating the record reign of Her Majesty by erecting "Queen's Memorial Buildings" at Gorleston, Great Yarmouth, to embrace a fisher lads' institute and gymnasium, fishermen's coffee tavern and reading rooms, etc., and also large workshops, stores, and offices for the efficient up-keep of the society's fine and unique mission fleet of hospital and other bethel ships. Towards the sum required Mr. and Mrs. Bertram F. Barton have made a donation of £500.

Request for Prayer.—For blessing on a Gospel mission at the Victoria Hall, New Brighton, by Henry Lakin, from Feb. 27 to March 7.—For blessing on a meeting for the deepening of spiritual life at Ipswich, March 4.—For blessing on eleven days' evangelistic services in the Barracks School-room, Newcastle, commencing Feb. 28.—For a revival of spiritual life in Rosemarkie, N.B.—For a Danish party of young missionaries who left Copenhagen last week for Syria.—For blessing on a mission at St. James's Church, Great Yarmouth, February 20 to March 5.—For blessing on Gospel services in the Gospel Hall, Upper Weston Bath, March 1 and 2, by Rev. A. T. Jones.

Health of Indian Troops.

A MEETING was held on Friday last, at the United Services Institution, Whitehall, to hear an address from Major-Gen. Dashwood in favour of the re-introduction of the C.D. Acts in India. There was a large audience, and a number of repealers were allowed a hearing in the course of a discussion that followed the address. Amongst these, Dr. Drysdale, the visiting surgeon of the Metropolitan Hospital, caused some sensation by declaring that the poor women who came under the Acts in India were of the very same human nature as the distinguished assembly present, and no more liked being brought under the regulation than their well-to-do sisters would.

Lieut.-Col. Fawkes referred to a letter on the subject, which he had received from Mr. Archibald, a Master in the Supreme Court, who remarked that—"People forget that, from the practical standpoint, the C. D. Acts mean increased immorality and incidentally extended disease, because young men have always imagined the protection greater than it really is, and have thought it no longer necessary to exert self-restraint. By this means, although you might point to a particular regiment, or the crew of a man-of-war, which benefited physically for the time, in the end the public suffer seriously, and the disease saved in the particular case is made up by its increase among the public generally."

Dr. Berdoe read the clause in Lord Roberts's Circular Memorandum, ordering the provision of a "sufficient number" of "sufficiently attractive" women for the troops. Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., gave an exhaustive criticism of General Dashwood's paper; and Rev. John Hunt Lynn showed the statistical folly of the system. Brigade-Surgeon Pringle, in a fervent speech, entreated his fellow officers to seek the moral elevation of the soldier. Several young officers boldly advocated the same policy, as the only remedy for the present state of things in India.

One of these referred to an imputation of hypocrisy that had been made in the meeting towards those that took his line; but what, he asked, did they call it when soldiers were marched to Divine service to hear a chaplain denounce these crimes, and then marched out to the places provided by the Government? Mr. Maurice Gregory, secretary of the Friends' Repeal Association, produced a chart of the figures for ten years of the most drastic application of the Acts to the European Army in India, showing a steady increase of disease. On the same chart were figures for the Native Army in India, in which the Acts were not in force. They showed one-tenth only of the disease of the European troops, and no increase. Another chart was also exhibited of the Army in England, showing a very great improvement in the health of the troops since repeal in 1886.

No resolutions were put to the meeting. An intended committee for securing the re-institution of the C.D. Acts was not formed; and several speakers held that it was evidently impossible to put the C.D. Acts into force again either in England or in India. The encouraging part taken in the proceedings by young officers is in harmony with the incidents of the controversy for some years past. The first subscription received (£100) by the National Association for the Repeal of the Acts was from "Three Christian Officers in India."

From Miss Annie Taylor.

IN a letter to friends and supporters of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, Miss Annie R. Taylor describes a feast she gave to Tibetans and Chinese on Christmas Day. The useful articles distributed on the occasion were highly appreciated, and the dolls were a great treat alike to old and young, the chiefs and other men being as pleased as the women and girls to possess them. Later on, lantern scenes were exhibited, and the story of salvation simply unfolded.

With reference to the Sikkim-Tibetan boundary, Miss Taylor writes:—"I believe that the Commission is to meet in May. Will friends join us in prayer that this may tend to the further opening up of the land without bloodshed? We had hoped that the way to the villages beyond here would have opened up before Christmas, but the Lord has answered our prayer by sending the people to us instead of us to them. We are here under the Government of Tibet, and the currency, with the exception of the rupee which passes all over Tibet, is Tibetan. The Tibetan chiefs continue most friendly, and have sent me several presents quite recently."

Mildmay in Jamaica.

IN connection with the Mildmay Deaconesses' Institute, London, N., there is a branch at Kingston, Jamaica. "Sisters," the workers are called out here, and both white and coloured people consider them this in the truest sense of the word. On board ship coming out, I was struck with the respectful way in which their labours were spoken of, even by those not altogether in sympathy with the religious part of Christian work.

I recently attended a most pleasant gathering in connection with their pretty little mission church of St. Michael's, at Rock Fort, some way out of Kingston. Sister Isabel kindly provided an open-air Christmas-tree and entertainment for those who attend the church, which mainly owes its foundation to her loving interest in those who were almost entirely without spiritual teaching before it was built. Some of the nurses from the Kingston "Home" sang hymns, which gave great pleasure to their hearers. Then followed the distribution of both useful and ornamental presents off the Christmas-tree, with the additional gift of a motto-card for 1897. Afterwards Mr. Sharp gave a simple, earnest Gospel address, speaking of the love of the Heavenly Father, who gave his only Son to die for each one of us.

We then had some more hymns, the last being that old favourite, "God be with you till we meet again." After loyally uniting in "God save the Queen," the beautiful moonlight guided us each to our respective homes. A debt of nearly £180 rests upon the little mission church; all connected with it will be most grateful if friends in the homeland will help to wipe it out. EMMELINE HOLT.

Count Campello's Work.

MONDAY, January 25 was the fourteenth anniversary of the first reform service held in Rome by Count Campello after his secession from the Papal hierarchy. Now there are thirteen stations in various parts of Italy where the Gospel is preached and taught by Italian Reformed pastors under Count Campello. The day was observed by a thanksgiving and prayer meeting at the house of Mrs. Petrie, 12, Gloucester-walk, Kensington, W. After a stirring address by Rev. Sydenham Dixon, Miss Ray gave an account of the work being carried on at the stations, and said that funds are much needed to carry on the work.

Mrs. Petrie, whose address is given above, will have a sale of useful articles including farm produce, etc., for the benefit of the association. All who are willing to contribute are desired to notify the same by letter.

Qua Iboe Mission.—Mr. S. A. Bill has suffered very much since his return to his West African post in July. A pretty sharp attack of the dreaded hæmaturia, followed by several fevers of a less serious nature, left him very weak for some months, but the latest reports are satisfactory, and he is being kept in much better health. Mr. E. Heaney also has suffered much from the fevers peculiar to the climate, while Mr. Kirk has not been entirely free from them.

Our Missionary Week.

TEXT FOR SUNDAY: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."—Mark xvi. 15.

HYMN: "Songs and Solos," No. 446.

MY DEAR NEPHEWS AND NIECES, I want you to look upon the last week of each month as a very important week, because our subject is how we can share with the children of heathen lands the glorious Gospel—Good News—of our loving Saviour. I am sure the true story told you to-day by a missionary far away in China will be very interesting, because it tells of an example set to you and me by a boy at whom I fear we might be inclined to laugh if he came in among us now. As I have been in his country, and seen many Chinese Christian boys and girls, I will tell you what he is like.

To begin with, his face is yellow, and his eyes have a quaint way of slanting upwards from their inner corners. His hair is black and straight, but closely shaven over the forehead and round by the ears, leaving only a good long queue, or plait, which reaches almost to the ground. This custom was introduced by conquerors hundreds of years ago, but now even many English missionaries have their hair done in that style, wearing also native dress, that they may be as Chinese to the Chinese.

The dresses of those boys and girls would look very strange here, perhaps a blue sort of wide-sleeved frock or tunic of blue cotton or silk, which in summer hang loosely, but in winter are so padded out with wadding that they look like little barrels. I saw one fall down once, and his clothes were so thick that he could not reach the ground except with toes and finger-tips, so could not possibly get up! The boys wear black silk caps with red silk knobs on top, and blue shoes with white soles an inch thick.

The little girls, however, have their feet bound up so tight that the four smaller toes are pressed quite under the sole, and only the big toes go into their tiny shoes, grown women wearing them not big enough for our smallest babies, so that they can hardly stand and seldom walk.

I saw one of those poor ill-treated feet unbound once, and it made me very sad, but it makes me sadder to think how bound down by sin and ignorance the people's hearts are, not only out in China, but here, too, in England, till God gives us new ones and sets us free.

When they keep their feet bound up for years they cannot leave them unbound without very great pain. So it is with the bonds of sin; the cords of to-day are the ropes of to-morrow. The occasional yielding to small temptations to-day is the vice of future years. Let us as children come to Jesus, that we may never know the weight of the Devil's chains.

There are bright children there as here, and it is a noble work to go and tell them of "Gentle Jesus," to bring them to the "Children's Friend." I am sure that if you were only old enough many of you would like to go, perhaps some day you may, but till then there is much that we all can do by prayer and study and self-denial, to help not only those starving in body in India, but also those starving in soul in China and all the World over.

UNCLE TED.

What a Chinese Boy Did.

AT the commencement of the last Chinese New Year, a lad of about ten years of age was entered on the books of one of our boys' schools, as Li Hua-Chang, which in English means "Transformed Prosperous." He was not a very bright laddie, and like all other heathen boys in China knew nothing of the True God, but had been trained all his life to worship the idols which are to be found in every house, as well as "on every high hill and under every green tree." He had never been to school before, and gave us some trouble at first, but soon took to his reading and writing, making good progress. The Scripture portions and hymns taught him were well committed to memory, and he showed great interest in all that was told him about them. We often spoke together of the way in which he laid hold of truth. During the early months of the year he had evidently, on his return home at night, repeated to his parents and friends what he had learnt through the day, and pressed upon them the truth of it all. His parents were more pleased with him because of his progress in his ordinary studies, and listened the more readily to what he told them of God and his Word.

After a time his grandmother commenced attending our Sunday services and classes. At first my wife found her very dense and difficult to get to understand anything, but the Holy Spirit had begun a work, and would finish it. She, too, very soon began to rejoice in the Saviour, and brought her brother-in-law. I was particularly struck with the simple, quiet earnestness of this man from the first time he came, and the Lord gently led him to his feet, too. After a while they all saw that to go forward meant severing all connection with idolatry, and one Saturday afternoon the little lad came with beaming face into my study, carrying under his arm his grandmother's idol, which she had had the courage to take down from its position in the home. It was brought to me to be destroyed.

It was my custom there to have a fixed day, viz., the first Sunday in each moon, for destroying these things, and to take the names of any who desired to know the way of God more perfectly. This was done before the whole congregation, and I have found it to be a great help to the candidate to make a stand in public from the very first. Before the day came round, the old lady's brother had followed her example and himself brought his idol. Never shall I forget the Sunday when we committed these idols to the flames while we sang "O, happy day!" Nor forget the joyful countenances of the members of that little country church, joyful because more from their midst had learned to worship their God. We were thus able at the close of the service to enter their names as candidates for baptism.

But the story does not end here. The old lady has brought another of about her own age with her, and the man has brought his own son, a young fellow of about twenty years of age. Then the boy's own father is coming now and showing interest. Thus, five of the child's immediate relations have been brought in all through the faithfulness of this one lad. Truly, "a little child shall lead them." Boys and girls, who are you and I going to lead to Christ?

C.I.M., Hankow, China. WALTER C. TAYLOR.

Facts About China.

THE Chinese Empire is twelve times as big as the British Isles, and contains more people than any other—400,000,000—nearly as many as the whole of Europe. Their chief religions are Ancestral Worship; the systems of Confucius (Kong Fu-tse) and other native philosophers; the system of Buddha, the son of an Indian Rájá, and Táoism, a sort of devil-worship.

HAN-KOW, from which this story has come, is one of three great cities of inland China, just where the river Yang-tse is joined by the river Han, and its name means Han-mouth. There are many European tea-men and merchants there. Opposite Han-kow is Wu-chang, the provincial capital, and between the two rivers—from which it gets its name—is Han-yang, where there are great iron and cotton works. They are 800 miles from Shanghai, and may be reached by steamer from London in summer. Between them they contain 2,000,000 inhabitants, or half as many as London. Though many missions have their inland centres in Hankow, all the foreigners together are so few in proportion to the people that I hardly ever saw one in the crowded streets. Yet God has raised up churches there with several hundreds of faithful members.

Subject for Prayer.—That God may strengthen the faith and zeal of the church of Han-kow and all the Chinese Christians, as well as of the missionaries in their land, and that He may teach and help each one of us to do our duty by those who still remain in ignorance that Christ died for them.

Personal.

I am very glad to hear from so many of my nephews and nieces that they belong to the SCRIPTURE READING UNION and the INTERNATIONAL BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION, or have decided to join now, but I am still more glad that so many make a point of reading their portions before breakfast. And I am sure that the few of you who tell me that you read it at night would do well to make the change. I remember when I was at school how I tried the evening system, but I was often too sleepy to think of what I read, and next morning all was forgotten. The time to seek God's face is on the very first moment after we are dressed, that his words and presence may be with us all the day. I wonder what sort of niece you are who write, "I don't read the portion in the morning, and seldom in the evening, but I belong to the C.S.U."! When do you read it? It is well worth the self-denial of asking to be waked a little earlier. As several of you say you would like to join and have cards of your own, in future I will either post cards direct or through the nearest local secretary on receipt of a penny stamp with the request.

I am sorry to say that all other answers must wait till next week.

Work at Rusholme, Manchester.

A SERIES of most refreshing and delightful united meetings has closed in this suburb of Manchester. First of all, came a week of prayer—the meetings being held nightly in rooms belonging respectively to the Church of England, the Wesleyans, the Congregationalists, and the Baptists. These meetings were numerously attended, and the spirit of intercession was abundantly poured out.

A second week was devoted to evangelistic work at the People's Institute. Night after night the place was filled, and sometimes packed. So manifestly did the blessing of God rest upon the work that it was decided to continue the services for another week. These, too, have been equally interesting and fruitful, and everybody concerned felt truly sorry when the last night had come. Many blessed testimonies were volunteered as to the happy effects of the Mission — believers have been quickened, sinners have been saved, pledges have been taken, and, best of all, the Christians of the place have been wonderfully welded together in real union and brotherly love. On the Sunday evenings the services were transferred to the Public Hall, and on each occasion the place was filled.

The ministers who have jointly organised and conducted this Mission are Revs. W. H. Finney (Church of England), J. E. Roberts (Baptist), J. K. Maconochie (Congregationalist), and E. A. Evans (Wesleyan). It is intended to foster this blessed spirit of harmony and work by holding, periodically, united prayer-meetings and by the adoption of any other measures which may suggest themselves to a representative committee which has been appointed to act in the matter.

Manchester.—The sixth annual "out-and-out" young men's convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held on Saturday, February 13, in the Religious Institute, Corporation-street. The speakers were Revs. C. Fenwick Ward, J. J. Ellis, and Dinsdale T. Young. The chairmen were Dr. Rodger, Mr. H. T. Birch, and Mr. Louis F. Robinson. Mr. G. R. Kirlew, founder of these conventions, reported six young men who had received spiritual impressions from for er gatherings are now out in the foreign mission field, and he read extracts of a letter recently received from one of them at Alaska. The addresses of both speakers and chairmen were full of earnestness and zeal for a more complete life of consecration and devoted service in the cause of Christ. The testimony meeting was a specially-blessed time, and will long be remembered as a glorious season.

Foreign Prisons.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK, F.R.G.S.

(Concluded.)

IT may interest the readers of The Christian to know that 40,000 prisoners pass annually through the forwarding prison of Moscow on their way to Siberia. Who thinks of them? Who cares for them? How often do we pray for them? When next we utter the words, "That it may please Thee to show thy pity upon all prisoners and captives," let us think of many a Russian captive exiled for no offence save his love of liberty and country. I have seen hundreds on the march, and heard the deep thud of their weary tramp, and my heart bleeds for them.

In Algeria, I once visited a prison containing fourteen men under sentence of death. I could not speak of Christ to them, for they were Kabyles and understood no European language; I could offer them no Testaments, as it had not been translated into their tongue, and we could but look the love we feel, and leaving a little money for any extra comfort, we left them. When the musketry shots next morning resounded in the ear it seemed to me to bear the refrain, "No man careth for our souls."

Harsh words and heavy chains neither reform nor convert men, mercy tempering justice is much better; but when, in loving words of grace, God's universal Gospel is proclaimed to the worst criminal, through that wondrous "WHOSOEVER," the effect is marvellous and miraculous. Softest words have broken hardest hearts, and I could tell of many cases which have puzzled the authorities, but in which a marked change has taken place in the lives of the desperadoes who have accepted Christ and believed God. I have known a prisoner of sympathy, for it led him to think that someone cared for him; then he read the Scriptures, and the Holy Spirit did the rest.

France continues to keep some of her criminals for ten years in solitary confinement, and thirty days in dark cells if refractory. No wonder the Governor of the Maison Centrale of Rouen told me that he had only known of "one case of reformation in thirty years."

How different things might have been, had all those under his charge heard the Gospel, or read the Written Word!

Some years ago, I visited many of the gaols of Italy, especially those of Rome, Naples, and Puzzuoli, and was surprised at two things, viz., that the convicts were all hard at work on the Sunday—they have to work seven days a week—and that a vast number of the men were undergoing life sentences.

I believe in England we have about 150 men imprisoned for life, but Italy had 5,965 under life-sentences. There is no capital punishment, and no ticket-of-leave system. This accounts for the large aggregate of life prisoners. Here they toil, year in and year out, seven days a week, without Christ and without hope, literally having neither "promise of this life," nor of

"THE LIFE THAT IS TO COME."

Italy has in ratio to her population the largest number of prisoners of any country in the world, and it is with the object of carrying the Gospel to these who have never heard it that I am writing these lines. Here is a vast untrodden field, not a very pleasant journey, nor the atmosphere of the places very pleasant, and with no hopes of good collections when the service is over; but it is a work that will pay when the unfortunate prisoner goes back to his cell to search the New Testament, like the Bereans, "to see if these things be so."

Possessing, as I do, the permission of the Government to visit these places, I am hoping very shortly to spend some time in this work in this particular country. I feel all the more free to do so, because our large Metropolitan Music Hall in the Edgware-road, in which I have preached for twenty-two years, is to be pulled down and rebuilt; and also, because I am suffering with throat trouble through overwork, after many years of preaching to large audiences. I shall be grateful for the fellowship and help of God's people who read this, and who, unable to do such work themselves, may have part in it with me.

If the Gospel ever reaches this class it must be from outside; if help comes to them it must come through God's people; and I am emboldened to voice the needs of tens of thousands who know not Christ, but need to hear of him.

I append one or two inscriptions found on prison walls that I have visited at home or abroad. They may help us to pray better, and think more of the sorrows of others:—

"O Jesu, thou art standing Outside this fast-closed door," was written on a prison cell door. Another scratched on the white-washed wall:—

"The Almighty for a Master, the devil for a servant. Amen."

"Domine, Dirige Nos,"

might have been a real prayer from a sorrowful heart. A female prisoner wrote on the wall—

"I wish to God my babe was born,
And smiling on its father's knee,
And I, poor girl, lay in my grave,
The green grass growing over me."

Another wrote, "21,000 times have I walked round this cell in a week; there are 3330 bricks in this cell." But for pathos I have seen nothing like

THE PRISONER'S SONG.

The roses bloom in the garden,
The bee comes wooing the flowers;
The song-bird pipes to his nest-mate,
Through all the golden hours.
The breeze is freighted with fragrance,
From forest, and field, and lea;
But youth has fled, and hope lies dead,
So what are they all to me?

The blue bird rocks in the tree-tops,
Free as the summer air,
Swings and sways, and warbles,
With never a flutter of care.
Memories never haunt him,
No thought of the morrow has he,
But the guarded wall like a sombre pall
O'ershadows it all for me.

I sit in the glowing twilight,
And gaze on the evening sky,
On the glorious sunset banners
That athwart the hill-tops fly,
Till the diamond eyes of heaven
Look down on the bond and the free;
But I see the stars through the prison bars,
So what are they all to me?

Ah! the flowers have lost the perfume,
The summer breeze is still;
The bees are naught but gluttons,
And harsh the song bird's thrill.
For the mighty voices of nature,
Of heaven, of earth, of sea,
Have naught of cheer for the prisoner's ear,
What! what are they all to me?

Oh, to be able to carry hope and cheer to such, that, having Christ in the heart, they may sing with another prisoner—

"Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage."

The Home of Industry.

THE monthly meeting, held at the Home of Industry, on Wednesday week, was largely devoted to the operations carried on in the Home itself. Mr. William Merry showed, in the early part of the evening, a fine series of dissolving views illustrative of Canada, its scenery, cities, homesteads, and pursuits, with by-way glimpses of "planted out" boys and girls, the kind of homes they find, and the life they live. The whole series was of great interest, and, inasmuch as the lecturer is willing to show them wherever likely to help the work he has at heart, many might do themselves and their congregations the pleasure of securing an illustrated evening.

Miss Macpherson (after a season of praise and prayer) spoke impressively of the difficulties and joys of the work, and of the splendid openings which Christian ladies might find in the East End to do real personal service among young or old by teaching or testifying, or in any way for which they may be gifted. Fresh workers are needed for the flower distribution, the evening and Bible classes, the visiting in the poor homes, and on Sunday mornings for Bird Fair. As to the emigration of children to Canada, Miss Macpherson maintained that it is an immense boon to the children and to the nation. Misunderstandings have sometimes arisen, but let it be clearly understood that the children are not white slaves, that good homes are sought for them, while their treatment and training are sedulously watched over. The seventy-second party is intended to start on March 18 from Liverpool. Already 6600 have been sent out.

Mrs. C. T. Studd followed with an account of her husband's present labours in the colleges of America. At the invitation of the international committee of the Y.M.C.A., he started last October for the States, hoping to visit colleges and universities for the revival of spiritual life and the winning of students to Christ. Already he has visited fifteen colleges in Illinois and Wisconsin, finding the hearts of the students largely prepared, and many ready to yield to the Saviour. The work is being done mainly by personal interviews—it is lovely but wearing work. A letter was read bearing witness to great blessing and many converts in certain Illinois colleges. Lately he has been visiting some of the cities of Wisconsin, and the interest awakened in missionary effort is worthy of note. His address in the Presbyterian Church, Madison, on Chinese Character and the transforming power of the Gospel was very striking, his ten years' residence in China having given him large experience in this respect.

Mr. A. V. Liley, late of Mostaganem, North Africa, spoke of work in Algiers, of the opposition of the priests, and of his own longing to return to his loved field of labour.

Mr. Joseph Merry added details as to Bird Fair services, while two young men gave testimony to the blessing they had received in this work.

Anti-Infidel Crusade in Bolton.

In consequence of scholars in the Sunday-school bringing to their teachers infidel objections, that had been given to them by sceptics working in the mills, it was decided to invite Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise, to deliver a course of Christian evidence lectures. These have been twelve in number, and eight of the parishes of Bolton and the immediate neighbourhood have been visited. Among the subjects dealt with were the following: "Creation or Evolution—Which?" "Who wrote the New Testament?" "Why am I a Christian?" "Moses and the prophets," "What will infidels give us in place of Christianity?" "Biblical difficulties and how to meet them," "What Christianity has done for working men," "Is God knowable," and "Infidelity, its cause and cure."

Infidels and others have attended these lectures, and have been allowed to put questions to the lecturer, which were dealt with in a satisfactory and helpful manner. The vicars of the respective parishes have presided over the meetings, and Christian workers and Sunday-school teachers have expressed in public their thankfulness for light thrown upon difficulties, and have stated that their faith has been much strengthened by these lectures.

Irish Evangelisation Society.

THE work of evangelisation in Ireland is far more interesting and is accompanied in some cases by much more success than most people suppose, and I venture to think that some of the facts coming under my own knowledge from week to week would, if known, raise the hearts of God's children in praise to Him who is opening the eyes of the blind, and calling many, both Protestants and Roman Catholics, out of darkness into God's marvellous light.

As the Irish Evangelisation Society does not come before your readers often, I am glad of an opportunity to describe one of our recent missions. The place is a country town, where the large majority of the people are Roman Catholics. We had a mission there a year before with marked results, and this mission was welcomed by both Roman Catholics and Protestants. Our evangelists preached the Gospel in an undenominational building, capable of seating comfortably about 350 people.

From the first the hall was fairly filled, and some Roman Catholics attended and listened quietly to the Gospel, the preacher generally giving the Douay version in his quotations. After a week's proclamation of a clear and simple Gospel, signs of the blessing were seen. The Roman Catholics were attentive and respectful, and increased in numbers; twenty of them staying after the meeting for singing.

At the end of four weeks the evangelist wrote:—"In every meeting the presence of the Holy Spirit is very manifest, Roman Catholics from many places attending regularly, and instead of taking back seats they come right up to the front and manifest great interest. The Roman Catholics remain after the first meeting for singing and I speak directly to them." The town Catholics at this time begun to join those from a distance and to attend regularly, chiefly men and lads.

A resident writes at this time: "The attendance is sometimes as many Roman Catholics as Protestants, and after the first meeting, the Evangelist further expounds the New Testament plainly and simply." The daughter of a clergyman writes:—"The Roman Catholics came in good numbers, and if faces say anything, many of them were really seeking peace. We are sowing for the future." All classes attended the meetings. An M.P., who was present, said: "If I were to live a thousand years, I would not forget what I have seen and heard at these meetings."

On the last Saturday, after two months' mission, a meeting was held for Roman Catholics only, and about 100 attended. They were quiet and earnest, drinking in the truth. At their request some two or three meetings were arranged for themselves alone after the mission had closed. As I write, we are closing our accounts for 1896, and I find that, notwithstanding all our efforts, we are considerably short, which means curtailment of our work if the Lord does not dispose his stewards to send it to us.

Liverpool Sheltering Homes.

Dear Sir,—We embarked in the quietest way possible from the Sheltering Home, and we are now getting our first day at sea—fine, mild, calm. All our young folk are running about on deck in the highest spirits.

This Numidian is a thoroughly good ship. We have convenient quarters for the children, and lots of room on deck for them to play about. Several are writing back, telling how happy they are. If I could but show you how much their prospects are improved by this transplanting to Canada, you would agree with me that it is a work which God can approve and bless. We see in the blessed results that He does so.

My daughter remains at the Home, with other helpers, to carry on the work in my absence.—Yours truly, Louisa Birt.

En route for Canada. Feb. 19.

"Welcome Mission," Portsmouth.—Monday and Tuesday last week were kept as days of special "waiting upon God." Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, of Brighton, gave helpful Bible readings. Revs. F. Baldey, J. H. Batt, Captain Riley, Mr. Hogben, and others took part. The attendance was large, and on the closing evening a number expressed their desire to live wholly for God. The next meetings will be on March 16 and 17.

Bible Dissection in Brooklyn.

RELIGIOUS circles in New York and vicinity have lately been greatly stirred up over a series of Sunday evening sermons delivered by the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, of Brooklyn, on the theme "The Bible as Literature." Dr. Abbott is Henry Ward Beecher's successor, and is himself a man of bright, inquisitive mind, possessed of subtle powers of analysis, but much too inclined immediately to accept as fully proven any chance hypothesis on almost any subject that happens to strike his intellectual fancy.

The views presented in the recent series of sermons were not characterised by any especial originality, but the ground taken with respect to various books of the Old Testament has been very radical. Much of the Bible was in effect treated as "parabolic fiction." The culmination was reached when the book of Jonah was taken up and presented in a fashion which excited frequent laughter during the discussion. The religious public generally has been greatly shocked by such handling of the sacred Book, and adverse comments on Dr. Abbott's course have been many.

In justice to Dr. Abbott, it should be said that he finally rebuked the audience for laughing, and disclaimed any intention of ridiculing the Bible. But such hilarity seems to have been the logical result of a light and unsympathetic presentation of critical theories which evaporate pretty much all the meaning out of the Old Testament records, and leave but the bare outlines of a history which is called fable, and of a law which is treated as though half a dream. The whole incident has been a regrettable diversion from the serious topics which have been before the public mind in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings. There is no doubt a legitimate criticism of the Bible, but such criticism always has humility and reverence for two of its guiding canons.

Messiah's Reign.

"In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious."—Isa. xi. 10.

What is the reign of Sixty Years,
Compared with what shall be,
When He whose right it is to reign
Shall rule in equity:
Shall banish want of every kind,
Distress, and care, and tears,
Throughout the glorious, golden reign
Of blest millennial years?

Oh, never has the earth as yet
Been worthy of its Lord,
Save just the little space of time
Bright Eden's joys record;
'Twill be so then; how fair the scene
In prophecy appears,
Which earth shall know when dawns at length
The blest millennial years!

When David's greater Son shall rule
In holiness divine,
The "Sun of Righteousness," whose beams
O'er every land shall shine.
He, once the Victim! how the thought
To us his name endears!
'Tis meet that He should know the joy
Of blest millennial years!

We hail our Monarch's lengthened reign
As praise ascends on high,
And pray that blessings, rich and large,
Our God shall yet supply.
Yet, oh! how far exceeds the joy
Foretold by heaven-sent seers,
When earth shall blossom as the rose
In blest millennial years!

Zenana Mission.—The committee of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society propose to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of Her Majesty's prosperous reign by sending this year sixty additional ladies to win souls for Christ from among the women of India and China and Ceylon.

Bala, North Wales.—Last March Mr. Charles Studd paid a visit to Bala to address the students of the Theological College and College School in order to stir up enthusiasm. One outcome of his visit was the formation of a branch of the Pentecostal League. This led to many conversions, and the branch has grown from one meeting to about half a-dozen weekly gatherings at different points.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE LACK OF CONVERSIONS—WHY?"

Dear Sir,—I would like to ask, Is conversion in all cases spasmodical? May there not be, in many instances, a gradual attainment of it, to whatever cause the lack of it may be attributed? Your correspondent J. C. A. would credit us with a want of faith in God's strength, a serious charge, applicable to the least or greatest amongst us. Your other article in the same number on "The Need of the Church" does not leave us without hope, for you point out that a deadness is often but the precursor of a revival. W. G. W.

Low Fell, Gateshead.

THREE REMARKS.

Dear Sir,—Would your correspondent who writes under the heading "The Lack of Conversions—Why?" inform us what is meant by "congregations receiving Evangelical teaching"? Is not Evangelical practising equally necessary? Surely what is wanted is the preaching and practising of the old Gospel found in God's Word, and which was glad tidings eighteen hundred years ago. When we are willing to put away the idols (Evangelical and others), and to work upon one Gospel platform, we shall begin to experience God's "power" and "His willingness."

Again, your correspondent upon "Frequent Celebrations" need not trouble himself to "arrange for the spiritual needs of servants as well as masters," etc. His quotation of St. Paul's saying may possibly be used as an excuse for his "celebrations," but neither that apostle, nor any other, has a word to say as to the necessity "of showing the Lord's death" specially in church or chapel, or the need of priestly assistance. So the families referred to could quite as faithfully provide opportunities in their own homes.

Again, in your "Scottish Notes," I notice that Rev. George Jackson asserts "it was impossible for a man to go through a business life nowadays and act up to the teaching of Christ," etc. What may be the case in Scotland I cannot say, but I protest against such an assertion being made as to business men in general. Excuse me troubling you with these remarks.—Yours truly,

A Constant Reader.

"EFFECTUAL PRAYER FOR LONDON."

Dear Sir,—I heartily endorse the letter signed "Alice Leader" in the current number of The Christian, in reference to the proposal for "Effectual Prayer for London." Like her, I marvel that there have not been many prompt responses to such an urgent appeal. I have brought it before each of my Bible-classes (men's, women's, ladies'), and have pledged them solemnly before God to "continue in prayer" daily for this definite object for at least two months to come. This means forty or fifty Christians covenanting. It has also been mentioned by our vicar at our weekly prayer meeting, and all whom I have told of it I have requested to ask other Christians to join in this continual intercession.

What blessings God would pour out upon us here if only his children would awake to the privilege of uniting in one concert of prayer to this end Oh! that thousands of them might be set on fire with a burning desire for such a Pentecostal wave of blessing to come all over this vast city, that, as a result, "rivers of living water" might flow out to all lands through our Christian sailors, soldiers, merchants, travellers, correspondence, etc., from this centre. I enclose my card, and subscribe myself as A Remembrancer.

CHILDREN'S ENTERTAINMENTS.

Dear Sir,—I should like the opinion of your readers with regard to the following. I have noticed that gatherings of poor children, organised by, and held under, the auspices of religious societies and individuals, have not always been used for the spiritual, or even moral and intellectual, benefit of the children. A tea, dinner, or Christmas tree, has been followed, e.g., by animated photographs perhaps vulgarly descriptive of the stage and tap-room, and entertainments which have had far more of the music-hall element in them than anything else.

To give a case in point. Quite recently a treat was given to some 200 or 300 poor children, gathered from many districts, by a religious institution which has had an honoured history, and is still doing noble work. Christian workers from many churches were asked to bring their quota of guests, which they did. Tea was followed by a "Punch and Judy" show, and many of the low street tunes, which were born and bred in the music-hall, were played. Throughout the evening there was neither hymn of praise, prayer, nor word of Christian counsel. There was no seasoning of Gospel salt.

I do not write to criticise or complain. I judge no man. But as a servant of Christ I ask, Is this right or wise? Is it Christian work in which Christian workers may safely engage? Is Jesus honoured? Are the children really helped?

Such questions are forcing themselves upon my own heart, and I want your readers to help me to answer them.—Yours truly,

A Worker for God.

Temperance Notes.

Good work has again this year been done among the showmen at the World's Fair, held annually in Islington.

The third of the series of lectures on The Bases of the Temperance Reform, arranged by the National Temperance League, was held in Sion College on Friday last.

The missionaries connected with the South London police-courts last year took 890 pledges and interviewed 9554 persons accused of crimes and misdemeanours connected with drink.

The General Election in the Isle of Man, which was mainly fought on the Temperance question, has resulted in a majority sufficient to re-enact the measure enabling boarding-houses to sell beer.

At the request of Mr. and Mrs. M'Kinley, no wine or other intoxicants will be provided at the entertainment which inaugurates Mr. M'Kinley's term of office as President of the United States.

Of the 662 new policies issued during the past year by the Sceptre Life Association 455 were on the lives of total abstainers, or upwards of 68 per cent. Of these latter 275, or 60 per cent., were life abstainers.

Mr. John Wilson called attention in the House of Commons to the small proportion of publicans prosecuted in Scotland for serving intoxicating persons, compared with the number of arrests for drunkenness.

The Bishop of London, inviting his clergy to observe Temperance Sunday (May 9), writes: "I am sure that you will feel the importance of urging on all Christian people the paramount obligation of Temperance."

The Lincoln Temperance Society will this year celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of its existence, and also the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. An effort will be made to raise a Jubilee Memorial Hall for the work of the Society.

The loving cup, long an institution in City banquets, is threatened. This year, says the City Press, the Master of one of the City companies, being a teetotaler, his régime has been marked by the temporary banishment of the loving-cup.

The occupiers of some 500 tied houses in the Chatham district complain of the manner in which they are being ruined by the brewers hawking and pushing the sale of beer from door to door, thus taking the trade out of the publicans' hands.

"The Medical Side of the Drink Question," by the late Sir B. W. Richardson, has been issued as No. 1 of the Penny Temperance Classics (19, Memorial Hall, E.C.). In this form those telling facts and figures ought to win the wide circulation they deserve.

Mr. E. Vaslet gives in Le Bien Social a ghastly account of the outrageous drunkenness permitted and practised in Belgium on "Lost Monday." According to his account the most deplorable license prevails, and men and women abandon themselves for the day to unrestrained drinking and excess.

Rev. Isaac W. Tapper, Vicar of St. Andrew's, Battersea, proposes that the Government should provide in every parish or populous district "Workman's Halls," where any and every working man might have free membership, and where he would find comfortable accommodation, a library with newspapers and periodicals, non-alcoholic drinks and refreshments.

Worthing Tabernacle.—The first anniversary of the work carried on here by Pastor C. Douglas Crouch was lately celebrated by special services, at which the speakers were Dr. Bullinger and Pastor W. Fuller Gooch. A large gathering assembled for the public meeting in the evening. The pastor presided, and reported concerning the goodness and mercy which had followed them during the year. Pastor Gooch and Dr. Bullinger spoke at the meeting, and local ministers were present to wish God-speed to the work.

The Ethiopian Convert.—Acts viii. 26-40.

Golden Text.—Verse 35.

PROBABLY we shall best get at the practical teaching of this interesting story by proposing the Eunuch as an example for our imitation. He is one of those to whom our Lord referred in Matt. viii. 11, 12, and who will reprove others for the neglect of greater privileges. The incident presents him to us as an earnest seeker, a willing learner, and an obedient believer.

I. For many reasons it is remarkable that such a man should be earnestly seeking to know God. He came from a great distance. Ethiopia (27) is now identified with Meroe, which "lay on the right bank of the Nile from its junction with the Atbara, as far as Khartoum, and thence to the east of the Blue Nile to the Abyssinian Mountains"—Tristram. At the time of Augustus, and even later, the kingdom was governed by queens. The name Candace represented, not an individual, but a dynasty. So far away from Jerusalem this man had abandoned his idolatry, and had accepted the God of the Hebrews as his God. But what he had learned made him long for more, hence his long journey to Jerusalem. There was no merit in coming so great a distance, but there was proof of sincerity and earnestness. The knowledge he sought is close at hand for us; do we value it as highly?

He occupied a high position. He had "great authority," and had charge of all the queen's treasures (27). Such positions render a life of selfish indulgence easy. But it is well to remember that in spite of his honour and his wealth he was yet a seeker. He could not be satisfied with anything short of God. That is true of every man. Over all the pleasures and gains and honours of the world we may write, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again." Christ is the supreme need of every man. Do we know it? And are we seeking Him?

He sought most diligently. In his own country he used the synagogue; at Jerusalem he went to the temple; and returning home he employed himself in reading the prophecies of Isaiah (28). So that he left no means untried, and allowed no moment to be wasted. Literature for travellers is plentiful today. Unhappily there are not many who would appreciate the book the Eunuch read. They would if they were as earnest in their search as he was. How does that statement affect us? Test our earnestness by it.

II. From an earnest seeker he became a willing learner. Note how God provided him a teacher. Angelic ministry (26) was employed, not to instruct this inquirer, but to send Philip to meet him. Only a saved sinner can tell the way of salvation. What prompt unquestioning obedience Philip manifested! The command to leave a city, where a great revival was going on, and to go to that particular road to Gaza, which was desert, seemed very unusual. Yet "he arose and went" (27)—an example for all servants of God. God's commands may be difficult for us to understand, but they are always wise.

God also gave the teacher his text. Tell the story of Philip hearing the Eunuch read and being invited into the chariot. In the Inquiry Room the chapter used perhaps more than any other is Isaiah liii. Surely the Spirit of God had led the Eunuch to this. Philip could not wish for a better text (32-35). The coming of Jesus, the lowly outward appearance of Jesus; the rejection by his people; his sufferings and death; his ultimate triumph—all are there. The chapter is meaningless until Jesus is seen in it.

Willingly the Eunuch listened and learned. The truth is needed by us, too. Are we as willing to know it?

III. When we call this man an obedient believer, what do we mean? (1) That he believed in Jesus as his own Saviour. It is possible to accept all the facts of our Lord's history, yet stop short of this. When a young missionary was dying on the Congo, one of his friends quoted to him the words of Isa. liii. 5. With a smile lighting up his face the young man repeated the text, substituting "my" for "our," and "I" for "we." Can you do the same? We mean (2) That he confessed his faith. It is to be observed that in preaching "Jesus" (35) Philip must have preached the ordinance of Baptism, for it is the Eunuch who suggests it. He would not be a secret disciple. In his country he will be needed as a witness; and he is not afraid to commit himself to a life of witness-bearing. It required courage to do that. So it does now when young people come out from a life of indifference and formalism, and give themselves wholeheartedly to Christ. Are you prepared to do that? Or, are you ashamed to say of Jesus, "He is my Lord"? See Rom. x. 9, 10; Mark viii. 38.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE International Y.M.C.A. Committee of America has succeeded in clearing off a large deficit on the funds for 1896.

The San Francisco Association thankfully reviews the past year, during which time 100,000 dollars has been subscribed for clearing its building of debt, 98,000 dollars of which has been received and paid.

Mr. Henry Armstrong, General Secretary of the Newcastle Association, has conducted a successful mission at Plymouth. Many young men are believed to have been blessed, and the work of the Association has been much revived.

The annual meetings of the Exmouth Association, held on Wednesday, were presided over by Mr. W. Tucker Pain. Afternoon and evening there was a good attendance. The principal speakers were Mr. J. E. Wakefield and Canon Edmonds.

The work being done by the Anglo-American Association, 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, is giving encouragement. The workers are very much in earnest. A scheme for extension is under consideration of the board. The want of room has been much felt during this winter.

The annual meeting of the Fulham Association was very successful. The report, presented by Mr. F. C. Wood, honorary secretary, contained many features of interest and showed a small balance in hand. The work of the Association boarding home has been of the utmost benefit to a large number of young men.

Sir George and Lady Williams held a reception of the members and friends of the local branches of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations at the Manor Hall, Sidmouth, on Thursday evening. Five hundred persons attended the tea, and Sir George and Mr. W. Hind Smith delivered addresses at the public meeting which followed.

At the annual meeting of the Birkenhead Y.M.C.A. the president, Mr. C. J. Proctor, occupied the chair. Encouraging reports were given by representatives of the different sections, and an address was delivered by Mr. Alex. Guthrie, of Liverpool. During the past year much good work has been accomplished. The membership has increased by fifty-five, and there is no debt on the current account.

In the North-East Metropolitan District Union a series of great gatherings for men is being organised between Feb. 22 and March 19 by Mr. F. L. Porter at Walthamstow, Stratford, Shoreditch, and Hackney. Special addresses on Intemperance, Impurity, and Gambling will be given by the Hon. and Rev. E. Lyttelton, Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. E. Welldon, Canon Fleming, Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Harry Guinness, and others; and Mr. Lane will bring the series to a close with a mission to men in the rooms of the Hackney Association.

The second "At Home" of the Coventry Association, held on Thursday evening, was attended by upwards of 150 persons. The guests were received by the Secretary, in the absence of the President. Mr. G. H. Hayward presided until the arrival of the President. During the evening the Secretary stated that the membership was now over 200, the increase having been at the rate of 50 per month. The Sunday evening mission was doing good work and well attended. Mr. Starley congratulated the Association on its progress.

The Y.W.C.A.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

VERY encouraging reports have reached us from the various institutes of special meetings held during the week of prayer for young women (Feb. 14—21), resulting in a deepening of the spiritual life, in a growing sense of nearness to God, and, as the result of waiting upon Him in prayer, in a corresponding deeper earnestness of purpose in the work of winning souls.

At the Central Institute, Revs. W. H. Griffith Thomas and F. T. Snow gave addresses full of spiritual power. These were the means of leading many to decision. At St. James', Hatcham, Rev. E. J. Kennedy spoke on Monday evening, and the meetings were continued during the week, much interest being shown throughout. Special meetings were held at the Belgravian Institute, conducted by Mrs. E. Streatfeild, Miss Maunsell, and others. A service was held in Eaton Chapel on Wednesday in connection with the Institute, when Rev. Evan H. Hopkins preached.

At the Percy Institute, Mrs. F. T. Snow commenced the week with an address, and each night there have been large numbers and much blessing. Mr. and Mrs. Small also delivered helpful addresses, and the Lord's presence has been manifested in much power.

The members of the Clapham branch met each evening for prayer and reading, the subject being "The Fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. v. 22, 23), followed by special requests remembered in prayer. Great interest was shown throughout the week. At Aberdeen House, Stockwell-road, special meetings have been held, and Colonel Oldham conducted one on Saturday evening for Christian workers. A three days' mission for children was also led by Messrs. Todd and Kestin.

The prayer meetings have been well attended at Wimbledon, and special prayer was offered for the forthcoming mission to be conducted by Miss Hull, from February 28 to March 5.

Mrs. Baker, of the Kilburn Institute, writes that two special meetings were held, on Tuesday and Thursday, for prayer and praise. On Tuesday Rev. W. H. Stone gave a very helpful address on "The Fruit of the Spirit is Peace"; on Thursday a happy hour was spent over Isaiah xii., "A Psalm of Thanksgiving," given by Miss Wane, of Hampstead.

Encouraging meetings have been held at the Putney Institute, and on Thursday the annual meeting was held in the Assembly Rooms, the Countess of Chichester presiding. The Hon. Emily Kinnaird gave a detailed account of the Association. A proposal was made to open the Institute every Sunday evening, as a means of drawing many of the young women to a service in lieu of wandering in the streets.

Meetings for prayer and praise have also been held, with definite spiritual results, at Sydenham, Finsbury-square, St. John's Wood, Hampstead, Princess House (108, Brompton-road), and other branches. C. W. D.

BRIEF NOTES.

A local branch has been formed in Bridlington.

The Glasgow Y.W.C.A. hope soon to have a large house at Rothesay, to be used as a summer boarding house.

The reading room in connection with the Maidstone Institute was opened recently, in the presence of a good number of friends.

The annual social gathering of the Leicester branch was held on Feb. 1. The Institute and Home are reported as doing well.

The annual report of the Bournemouth Y.W.C.A. has been issued. In the county of Hants there were altogether 2500 members in the twenty-eight branches, the central branch owning 422. A sum of £8000 still remains on mortgage on the Digby Institute.

The annual meeting of the Birmingham Central Branch of the Y.W.C.A. was held on Feb. 12. The Bishop of Coventry presided. The position of the Institute is not a very favourable one, being in a part of the town where the residential population is gradually decreasing.

Christian Endeavour.

THE next London Convention will be held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Good Friday afternoon and evening.

The British National Council are holding meetings this week in Ipswich, and in connection an Eastern Counties Convention.

Great meetings have been held in Wolverhampton by the extension committee of the National C.E. Union, with a view to spread and deepen the interest in the C.E. movement.

Two hundred Italians are employed on a city contract two miles from York, Pa. These men were destitute of religious privileges, and one of the C.E. societies of the town organised Gospel services for them with good results.

Endeavourers at Agra, India, have been greatly cheered and encouraged by a two days' visit from Dr. Clark. Notices having been sent to stations round about, delegates were present from Meerut, Fatehgarh, Manipuri, Mussoorie, and Landour.

The seventh British National Convention of Christian Endeavour, to be held in Liverpool next Whitsuntide, June 5 to 8, promises to be the largest which has yet been held in Great Britain. It is anticipated that the delegates, visitors, friends, and members of local societies will make an attendance of fully 15,000. The largest Liverpool buildings have been secured, including the St. George's Hall and Concert Room, Philharmonic Hall, Hengler's Circus, and various prominent and historic chapels. Dr. F. E. and Mrs. Clark will take part.

Of the thousands of celebrations of Christian Endeavour Day held this year throughout the world, one of the most important was that arranged by the Boston C.E. Union, on February 4. The afternoon service was addressed by four prominent speakers on Endeavour themes. The greatest interest, however, centred in the evening meeting in Mechanics' Hall, the immense auditorium that was used during the Boston Convention two years ago. Here more than 5000 persons gathered to listen to Mr. Moody and Rev. F. B. Meyer. Mr. Moody's address was characteristic. Touching reference was made by the evangelist to the fact that he was completing that night his sixtieth year, and with unusual pathos and tenderness he pleaded with the Endeavourers to pray for him, that he might as never before preach the Gospel. The vast audience was visibly affected. Within ten minutes after leaving the express that had whirled him from New York, where he had landed a few hours previously, Rev. F. B. Meyer was before the assembled Endeavourers receiving a hearty welcome.

Scottish Notes.

AT a recent meeting of the congregation of the Barclay Free Church, Edinburgh, a resolution was passed to take the necessary steps to call a colleague-assistant to Dr. J. Hood Wilson.

The annual social meeting of the Invergordon Y.M. and Y.W.C. Associations was lately held. Rev. Colin Sinclair presided. The report of the Y.W.C.A. showed that in numbers they are far ahead of the Y.M.C.A. In foreign mission work great interest had been shown.

The Aberdeen Sabbath School Union in conjunction with the Evangelical Association has arranged for a series of evangelistic services this week for Sabbath-school scholars. The services will be conducted by Mr. William Thomson, jun., Glasgow, and will be illustrated by limelight views. Every effort has been made to enlist the sympathy and active co-operation of teachers.

The late Mr. James Gordon Oswald, of Scotstoun, Renfrew, besides large private bequests, leaves to William Quarrier, or his successor in the management of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, Bridge of Weir, an annuity of £300, payable half-yearly, "as long as the Homes are conducted on sound Christian principles and to my son's satisfaction, and so long as he chooses to pay the same, with permission to him to cease the further payment of the said annuity, and in lieu thereof to pay to William Quarrier, or his successor in the management of the said Homes, £8000, which shall be in full of all claims competent to him or them under this my settlement." He also leaves the sum of £1000 for the immediate needs of the various evangelists supported by him.

The sixty-fourth annual meeting of the Scottish Monthly Visitor Tract Society was held recently in Queen-street Hall, Edinburgh, and was well attended. Professor A. R. Simpson, who occupied the chair, paid a high tribute to the society for the good work it had done in distributing during sixty-four years nearly 223 million tracts, all containing a clear statement of Gospel truth. The report, submitted by the secretary, Mr. R. Henderson Smith, stated the year's circulation as 4,764,918, the increase being 7000 monthly. Forty-five thousand tracts are distributed monthly in Edinburgh by 900 distributors. Rev. Thos. Martin, St. Mary's Parish Church, Edinburgh; Rev. R. Small, U.P. Church, Leith, and Rev. D. Paterson, Restalrigg Free Church, also spoke.

Irish Notes.

LECTURES on "The Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by lime-light views, have been given at Ballinasloe by Mr. T. M. Carleton, of the I.E. Society. The meetings have been blessed to many.

Miss McWilliams, of Holywood, co. Down, has joined the Irish Presbyterian Mission, and is about to be sent out to China. There are twenty-three lady volunteers waiting to go out under the auspices of this Mission.

Strong feeling has been shown in Ireland against the proposal to divide the endowments of the Erasmus Smith's schools between Protestants and Roman Catholics. It is an undisputed fact that the testator endowed these schools more than 200 years ago in the interests of Protestantism. To employ the money, therefore, for any other purpose would be to divert it from its original object, and be a species of endowment for Roman Catholicism.

Home for Feeble-minded Girls. — Mrs. Boyd-Carpenter, whose interest and help in every noble work can always be counted upon, explained to a meeting in Leeds on Wednesday week the working and aims of the Home just established at Shibden, near Halifax, for the reception of feeble-minded girls. No one can read Mrs. Boyd-Carpenter's graceful and touching speech without being convinced both of the urgent necessity of such a charity and of the great value of such a form of philanthropic work as that carried on in the institution lately founded at Shibden. Careful training of young people whose mental and moral powers give signs of being deficient has been attended by the happiest results in other places; and there is no reason why the experiment being made in Yorkshire should not be signally successful, and be the means of unspeakable blessing to those whose physical and mental endowment would otherwise handicap them greatly in the race of life.—Leeds Mercury.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

OXFORD.

Sermons in connection with the Church Missionary Society were preached in seven of the Oxford churches on Feb. 14, and the annual meetings took place on the Monday. There was an afternoon meeting at the Hannington Hall, when Rev. F. J. Chavasse took the chair, and an evening meeting, when Canon Ince presided. Rev. T. R. Wade, of Amritsar, who has been a missionary for 33 years, and Rev. T. Bomford, of Multan, were the speakers at both meetings. Mr. Wade paid a high tribute to the character of the Sikhs who have been employed as soldiers on many occasions by the Government. Mr. Bomford told of the difficulty of the work at Multan and the need of more helpers. You can travel about 180 miles in one direction, and over 200 miles in another, without passing a mission station. Who can wonder, then, that progress is slow? The work in Multan is specially difficult, Christians from other parts of the Punjab cannot stand the climate, and those who live at Multan generally leave the place when they become Christians, owing to persecution; hence it is hard to get native catechists. The school work is hopeful; it may be slow, but those who are converted in connection with it generally turn out to be most earnest and consistent men.

The Oxfordshire Band of Hope and Temperance Union arranged a conversazione at the Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday week, when an address was given by Mr. Frederic Smith, of the Band of Hope Union, on the subject of the National Jubilee Celebration of the Band of Hope.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel have held meetings throughout the town in the past week. On Monday week there was a special service in Selwyn College Chapel, followed by a breakfast in the hall of the college, at which the Bishop of Rockhampton delivered a short address.

Cambridge men are highly privileged in being able to hear such sermons on the Christian life as the C.U.C.G. provides. The address in this series last Sunday was preached by Dr. Welldon, Headmaster of Harrow. His text was, "What sayest thou of thyself?" and his sermon contained lessons which cannot fail to be of great assistance in the spiritual life of all who heard him.

The election of Dr. Welldon as Hulsean lecturer to succeed Professor Cheetham has been announced. This great schoolmaster's affectionate manner and earnestness of style have already made him one of the most popular preaching visitors to Cambridge. Hulsean lectures will possess a new charm to the undergraduate members of the congregation.

Dupree-road Mission, Charlton, S.E.—For the last eleven years mission work has been carried on in this densely-populated neighbourhood by Mr. Richard Tyndall, city missionary, with the aid of a band of workers, several of them being the fruit of his labours. Sunday schools, Bands of Hope, Bible classes, men's guild, Gospel services, and open-air meetings, are among the agencies for the advancement of the spiritual and moral needs of the people. The work has now outgrown the premises in which it has been carried on, and for some years past the need has been felt for a mission hall adapted to the purpose of continuing and extending the operations of the Mission. For this purpose a local committee has been formed with the view of raising the necessary funds to build a new mission hall near to the present premises. It is estimated that the cost of building, including furniture, will be about £500. The hon. treasurer is Mr. J. Simms, Westbourne Lodge, Charlton, S.E.

Slade Mission Hall, Plumstead.—The sixteenth annual report of this work records an increased adult attendance on Sunday evenings, with acceptable service on the part of earnest Christian preachers. The new class-room, being a separate building, has afforded an opportunity for holding morning adult meetings, and, although the number of worshippers has not been numerous, yet much enjoyment has been reaped from them. The prayer-meetings, too, with their twofold character of praise and Bible instruction as heretofore, have been a source of much help. The B.W.T.A., under Mrs. Whale's leadership, has made excellent progress; the fortnightly meetings, alternately at the Mission and cottages, have produced, we trust, a lasting effect in the homes of the district. The Sunday-school has an average attendance of about 120 in the morning and 320 in the afternoon, with a staff of twenty-five earnest teachers. An excellent addition has been made in the form of a young men's Bible-class. The general secretary of the Mission is Mr. A. W. Brodie, 1, Gossage-road, Plumstead.

Personalia.

Pastor D. M. Stearns, of Germantown, Pa., writes: "It looks as if our blessed Lord was about to send me on a missionary tour to some of the places where He has already given me over two hundred missionaries. I expect to start in May, but it is not yet clear whether I am to start east or west—beginning at Rome and Jerusalem or at Japan."

Mr. Herbert R. Francis writes: "After four years of happy and abundant seed-sowing in India, we expect to arrive in England about the middle of April. I shall be glad to revisit scenes of labour, and old friends in the service of the Lord. Possibly we may only remain long enough to recover strength and fully to recruit. Letters may be sent to me, care of Mr. S. Trevor Francis, Alvaleigh, Rodway-road, Bromley, Kent."

Father Chiniqqy is still ill, and has been advised by his physician during the remaining cold weather to pass the time in a warmer climate. Under these circumstances it will be impossible for him to go to the various meetings that he intended to address, and the Protestant Alliance is therefore compelled to cancel Pastor Chiniquy's engagements for the present. Where meetings are desired, the Protestant Alliance will be prepared to send gentlemen who can give an account of the pastor's life and of the wonderful incidents connected therewith. Address, Mr. A. H. Guinness, secretary, 430, Strand, W.C.

Obituary.

MR. WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

The death is announced of Mr. Wallace J. Gladwin, widely known for his journalistic work in India. The February issue of The Harvest Field (Mysore) says:—"Mr. Gladwin was born in Corning, New York, U.S.A., in 1842. He served in the civil war, and entered the Methodist ministry in 1866, and in response to Bishop Taylor's appeal came to India in 1871. He laboured at Agra, Nagpore, Secunderabad, and Bombay. He joined the Salvation Army in 1882, but after three years he left them and engaged in purity work. For many years Mr. Gladwin has carried on in Bombay a vigorous crusade against opium, drink, impurity, popery, and other evils. He was editor of The Indian Watchman, Banner of Asia, and other publications. His words were of no uncertain sound, and his methods were not likely to win certain types of character. He spared not himself, neither did he spare others when he thought they were going astray. He established a home for workers in Bombay, which was administered on ascetic principles. He was tireless in his devotion, and was ever ready to do battle against his foes. For some time Mr. Gladwin has been in failing health, and he passed away in St. George's Hospital, Bombay, on January 11, in the fifty-fifth year of of his age."

Soldiers at Dover.

In the three separate barracks on Western Heights are about 2,500 soldiers, most of whom are very young men. They are sent here to fill up the places of time-expired men in regiments returning from abroad. There is no room or house on the Heights outside their own barracks to which these youths can go and feel the humanising and elevating influence of what is a soldier's greatest want—home. Is it then to be wondered at that many young men fall into the man-traps always yawning to betray victims, and which are legion in every garrison town?

To save these youths, and to rescue those far gone into ways of wickedness, it is now contemplated to erect a sort of temperance institute on the Heights themselves, quite away from the town. A splendid site has been selected centrally between the three barracks, and permission has been given to make the building commemorative of Her Majesty's long reign. Many of your readers must feel interest in the moral well-being of our soldiers. To these I appeal to lend a helping hand in what is most truly a work for God. The sum required is about £1000, towards which one donor has promised £50 when the remaining £950 has been definitely promised. I shall be glad to send a booklet free to any applicant.—Yours faithfully,

HARWOOD LITTLE,
Dover. Chaplain to the Forces.

Quiet Prayer.—Before all conventions nearness to God is the way to get ready for the coming of the Lord. Many find it difficult to have a quiet prayer at home. Let us open all mission rooms, chapels, churches, conference halls, etc., for certain hours daily for those who desire to pray either separately or together. S. M.

The Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

The new report describes the leadings of the Lord in connection with the work among sailors and natives, and the settling of Mr. and Mrs. Knapman into their new work. In regard to the regular operations, it is stated that a most important feature of the Mission is visiting the vessels that come into the harbour. This has been undertaken by Mr. Knapman, who distributes tracts and magazines, inviting all the men to visit "The Rest"; when opportunity occurs he conducts services on board.

The services held at the Rest have been continued regularly, and the workers have been much encouraged by the large attendances of sailors, as well as by the "signs following." The Rest requiring to be thoroughly repaired and whitewashed, the missionaries moved into an adjoining house for a few weeks, where the services were continued. The alterations have greatly improved the building. In the French Hospital, where British sailors are nursed in times of sickness, the missionaries are always welcome, and Mrs. Knapman has visited regularly the men who have been laid aside.

NATIVE MEETINGS.

On Sunday mornings the sailors do not usually come on shore, so our friends use this opportunity of gathering in the native Swahili. The lower room is generally crowded, people often standing round the open windows. In this work they are greatly assisted by Mrs. Agnew, formerly a worker in Zanzibar, and who now has returned there with her husband Capt. Agnew, who is Port Officer, and who also helps in many ways. They both speak Swahili fluently. Mrs. Knapman writes:—"The Sunday morning services for the Swahili are always well attended, and there seems to be such a spirit of inquiry amongst them, for which we praise God. How we long to see them coming out for Jesus. Zanzibar is such a wicked place!"

Communications should be made to J. Theodore Isaac, hon. sec., 163, St. George's-street,

A Theatre Mission.

The new report recalls the origin of the Barnwell Mission in 1875, and tells the story of its triumphs. Passing on to the present occasion, it is stated that for several years a missionary has been engaged in connection with the work. His labours have been most indefatigable and helpful to the work. During the past year numerous week-evening services have been held, including those of a very successful Christian Endeavour Society, meetings for Bible study and prayer. The Sunday services are well sustained, and since the commencement of the Mission very many have been led to the Lord. Barnwell, in which the theatre is situated, is now far more respectable than some other parts of the town.

A few years ago three cottages adjoining the theatre were purchased for a very small sum. These require rebuilding, and when finished it is to be hoped that they may be utilised as residences for the missionary and custodian, and for this object the reserve fund account has been opened. Much blessing has been received in the past, but still there is more to be done, for there are yet many in the town who attend no place of worship.

Cambridge. W. K. Vawser, Hon. Sup.

Barcelona Protestant Cottage Hospital.

The annual report, just to hand, deals with financial difficulties and changes of the past year, and adds:—Our hospital has been a boon and a means of grace to many. Forty-one cases have been received, of which twenty-eight were Spaniards, and thirteen foreigners; of the latter, three were French, four Swiss, three English, and three Germans. The doctor's register shows that twenty-three were discharged as cured, eight relieved, and five showing but slight improvement.

The spiritual aspect of the work has been satisfactory. The Spanish patients have been, almost without exception, members of Christian churches, and have received help in their spiritual life during their stay with us. With the foreigners, mostly strangers, our work has been one of patient sowing; several of these on leaving professed to have received religious impressions, which we trust will remain with them, and deepen as time goes on. More satisfactory have been several cases of foreigners resident in Barcelona, who have received our ministrations with evident pleasure and profit; one of these who died after prolonged suffering, we believed to have experienced a change of heart, and trust he is now with the Lord.

Copies of the report may be obtained from Miss A. von Mielęcka, Ridgemead, Englefield Green, Surrey.

THE BOOK WORLD.

"NEW TESTAMENT HOURS."

At length Dr. Cunningham Geikie has opened up and illustrated the whole of the sacred Scriptures. His "Life and Words of Christ" has a world-wide reputation, as also has the series of "Hours with the Bible," in which the entire Old Testament was covered in six volumes. Now he has completed the New Testament "Hours," a work in four volumes—the first entitled "The Gospels," and being a companion to the Life of Christ; the second and third being devoted to the "Life and Epistles of St. Paul"; and the fourth, which has just appeared, bearing the title St. Peter to Revelation. Like the Old Testament series, these books on the New Testament aim at setting forth, without needless discussion, the historical surroundings of the various portions of the Word, presenting the results of wide reading and much personal research. Following the model of its predecessors, this latest volume gives the Epistles and the Apocalypse in the form of paraphrases, which will interest the profoundest scholar, as well as materially assist those of more limited acquirements. In such a work as this there must be positions assumed which some authorities will challenge, and which individual readers will disapprove or question. But the object of the work is not to foster controversy, but to instruct, and to supply materials for the intelligent examination of God's Word. With regard to the Epistle to the Hebrews, which has been attributed to so many different writers, we note that Dr. Geikie leans somewhat to the view that Apollos was the author. As to the Apocalypse, he holds that it was written before the fall of Jerusalem, but that there is no ground for identifying John the Divine (or the Theologian) with the Apostle John. In his exposition Dr. Geikie gives the prophecy an immediate and practical application, holding that the book is "a vision of the steps in God's purposes, by which Christ will triumph over all his foes, and reign with his people, in a regenerated world, for ever and ever; visions fitted supremely to support the Christians under their trials." The two series of "Hours" are a Biblical library, in the production of which Dr. Geikie has performed an important service to the Church at large. (6s. each volume. Longmans & Co.)

"THE LAST THINGS."

A remarkable work on eschatological subjects is Life after Death; and the Future of the Kingdom of God, by Bishop Lars Nielsen Dahle, translated from the Norse by Rev. John Beveridge, M.A., B.D. (10s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) The author of this volume has done important mission service in Madagascar, and now directs all the missionary work of the Norwegian Church. During the great Missionary Conference in London, in 1888, he made many friends in England. This substantial book shows Bishop Dahle to be a theologian of much erudition, combining a ready attention to all phases of thought with a wholesome caution in accepting the latest fashions in doctrinal speculation. The ground covered is thus defined in the introduction:—(1) The future of the individual, from and including death, and Christ's final advent. (2) The future of God's kingdom on earth until Christ's final advent. (3) The Lord's final advent and its results to the individual, to the Church universal, and to the whole creation. Holy Scripture is rightly regarded as the only trustworthy source of knowledge in these matters. The author holds that Scripture assumes man's immortality; but this natural heritage is not to be confused with "everlasting life," the pledge of which is fellowship with Christ. The intermediate state between death and judgment is such in condition as well as time, and is described as the kingdom of death. Though believing that those who have not heard the Gospel in this life will there receive a gracious call, Bishop Dahle maintains most positively that it will afford no opportunity of blessing to those who have neglected the present day of salvation. Considering the many questions associated with the intermediate state, the Bishop gives us various opinions and conjectures as well as Scriptural deductions, and where some speak emphatically he is very properly reserved. His view of Baptism is ecclesiastical rather than Biblical; and concluding a discussion on "Unbaptized Children and Salvation," he writes: "We may entertain a hope of salvation and bliss for our unbaptized children immediately after death, yet not more than a hope. If this hope should be unfounded, the little ones will at some time receive God's gracious call." Few of our readers will, we think, endorse this view. The second part of the book deals with the future of God's Kingdom, and the third with things relating to the End. Our author says nothing on times and seasons; he surveys the prophetic plan rather than opening up its details. He is always reverent, and sometimes disposed to hesitate without sufficient reason. The entire work is thoughtful, but the first part is the most suggestive. Notes are not numerous, but where they are given they condense a vast amount of information, curious and valuable.

The Queen's Resolve. By Rev. C. Bullock B.D. ("Home Words" Office. 1s. 6d.) A new and revised edition of a book which gained much acceptance in the Jubilee year, and which many will welcome in view of this year's celebration.

My Aunt Verbena. By M. S. Haycraft. (C. H. Kelly.) A well-written girls' story, with a good moral. Hester, ambitious and literary, is led to surrender her will to follow God's leading, and in the end what seemed strangely contrary is found to work for good and for happiness.

Seven Strong Towers: The Refuge for Weak and Suffering Friends. By Lady Alicia Blackwood. (Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine House, Bodney-road, Hackney Downs, N.E.) Many have meditated on the names of Jehovah, but there is room for this treatment, essentially spiritual in tone and scriptural in substance.

God's House-Building, and other Bible Readings. By Rev. Henry J. Foster. There is real substance in these addresses, all of them dealing with phases of Christian life and fellowship with Christ. Mr. Foster is a helpful teacher, and many will treasure the portrait which is given as a frontispiece. (1s. Thomas Champness, "Joyful News" Book Depôt, Rochdale, and 152, Fleet-street, London, E.C.)

"The Upward Life" series of booklets (1s. each. Marshall Bros.) has been enriched by the publication of Patience and Comfort, a number of addresses by Dr. Handley Moule; and Steps Upward, or Instructions on the Spiritual Life, by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins. The former includes three of Dr. Moule's rich and strong utterances at the Keswick Convention last year; the latter presents much helpful teaching in a simple and direct style.

Object Lessons for Children. By Rev. E. H. Tyndall. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 3s. 6d.) The use of the blackboard in Bible teaching is not so general here as on the other side the Atlantic. Such a handbook as this should, however, do much to stimulate its use. The author believes that "the eye is the first avenue to the soul," and sets himself to show how best to convey and impress spiritual lessons by means of the blackboard. Many teachers will find real help in these pointed lessons.

Loving Service: A Record of the Life of Martha Braithwaite. By her daughter, Elizabeth B. Emmott. (3s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) Widely known as the wife of the esteemed Joseph Bevan Braithwaite, the subject of this charming sketch, during a long period of years, shared his anxieties in Gospel ministry, and set an excellent example in loving service in the name of Christ. The pages exhibit a life of reliance on God which should teach some the secret of true peace, and a thankfulness of disposition which amounted to a spiritual passion. A life-like portrait and interesting family details make this a book of many attractions to Friends, while the lessons of the life should impress all thoughtful readers.

"Better Things": A series of Bible Readings on the Epistle to the Hebrews. By J. Gregory Mantle. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) All who are familiar with the argument of the Epistle to the Hebrews, will allow that Mr. Gregory's title is remarkably expressive of the entire contents. Dividing the treatment into nine chapters, our author dwells upon the "Better"—Rest, High Priest, Covenant, Sacrifice, Entrance, Country, Discipline, Fellowship, and Service. A forcible expositor and a practical teacher, Mr. Gregory has produced a book which deserves many readers; and those who come to the pages with spiritual hunger, will find therein rich stores of nourishment for the Divine life.

Enlisted; or, My Story. By Elsie Sanders. Edited by her co-worker, M. T. Schofield. (Partridge. 1s. 6d.) Many of our readers know something of the good work of the Soldiers' Homes in Ireland associated with the name of Miss Sanders. Here their story is told fully and well by the lady who has been so greatly used of God in this department of Christian service. An autobiographical sketch—showing how she was prepared for and led into work among soldiers—adds much interest to the book. Many telling instances are given showing how God has blessed these efforts among the Redcoats. The reader will discover that the work which began humbly in Cork has now spread over Ireland and out to India—to Rawal Pindi and the Maree hills.

A Brief History of the Indian Peoples. By Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I., C.I.E. (3s. 6d. Henry Frowde.) This work, which is now in its twenty-first edition, will have a special interest at the present time, when India is so largely occupying public attention. In a succinct and perspicuous manner, the learned author sets forth the results of many years of research, and the outcome is a manual of great value, showing the part the Indian peoples have played in the world's progress, and what sufferings they have endured at the hands of various nations. The religious and other customs are described with care, and the period of British rule outlined in such a way as admirably to meet the requirements of students. A full index makes this a good book for purposes of reference.

Studies of the Man, Christ Jesus. By Robert E. Speer. (1s. 6d. Partridge.) A series of studies fully worthy the attention of Christian teachers. They answer the terms of the title by delineating our Lord's humanity. The picture excites admiration, and compels the conviction that such a man must have been more than a man. Mr. Speer dwells first upon Christ's early life, and then deals at length with his plans and methods of work, passing on to notice traits of character and extraordinary characteristics. No man can apprehend or teach all about Christ. Hoping to impress great lessons upon believers, Mr. Speer has confined himself to one aspect. In the course of his studies, he quotes many standard works, so that his little volume is rich in thought, and sure to prove suggestive to students of the Life of lives.

The Tabernacle in the Wilderness. By Rev. Marcus Rainsford, B.A. (Hodder & Stoughton. 4s. 6d.) Many will welcome gladly these notes on the typical teaching of the Tabernacle, its vessels and offerings, as setting forth God's way of approach and fellowship, his provision in grace to meet the sinner's need. The author does not develop his theme; he is content to give notes, and leave others who may use the book to work out for themselves the wondrous teachings of these "heavenly picture-shadows." While the whole book is valuable and singularly suggestive for the Bible-class teacher, we have pondered with special profit the chapters devoted to the offerings, and peculiarly those dealing with the approach offerings and their sevenfold lesson as to the way of access to and fellowship with God. Such deep and vitally important truths are too little studied in these days of haste, and in many cases, of somewhat superficial reading.

ROCHESTER DIOCESAN DIRECTORY.—Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. (1s. 6d.) This guide to the clergy and Church organisations of South London supplies very complete and well-arranged information on ecclesiastical affairs.

OF INTERCOURSE WITH GOD, from the French of J. B. Saint-Jure. Rev. Andrew Murray writes an introduction to this little book on prayer, made up of extracts from a work over two hundred years old. (2d. and 4d. Christian Literature Co. 108, Lothian-road, Edinburgh.)

W. R. MONCUR, senior minister of Liff Free Church, near Dundee, a Pre-disruption minister who took an active part in the historic movement.

The Salvation Army.—In connection with certain financial re-arrangements, it has been considered advisable to alter the annual self-denial effort to the spring, so that the Salvation Army week of self-denial will this year take place at the end of March.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

A large and stirring meeting has been held in Hull by the National Protestant Church Union.

An adult was baptized by immersion in St. Peter's Church, Ipswich, a wooden bath being used.

Canon Brameld, vicar of Wortley, near Leeds, has accepted the charge of St. Stephen's, Lewisham.

A course of special sermons at All Saints', Derby, arranged by the N.P.C.U., has proved a great success.

On Sunday morning and afternoon the offertories at Westminster Abbey were given to the Indian Famine Fund.

An anonymous donor at Tunbridge Wells has sent a cheque for £500 to Rev. H. S. Iredell, the vicar of St. Barnabas, for parochial purposes.

A missionary mission is being held by Revs. W. J. L. Shepherd and C. D. Snell in Nottingham this week. The bishop of the diocese has given his approval and sanction, and twenty-five churches are joining in the mission.

Many regret the resignation, through ill-health, of Holy Trinity, Darlington, by Rev. A. H. Hughes, who for thirty-two years has laboured with marked success and much acceptance, and has been a staunch upholder of Evangelical views.

Apropos of Bishop Tucker's breakdown, The Record remarks admirably that "Too often the stress of work at home makes a missionary's visit to England complete the physical injury received abroad. We ought to guard the rest of our missionaries better."

At the Pan-Anglican Conference to be held at Lambeth in July there will be seventy-six British bishops, nine Indian, eleven Canadian, nine Australian, three New Zealand, eight South African, seven West Indian, nineteen missionary bishops, and forty-three bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America.

The forty-fifth annual meeting of the Liverpool Scripture Readers' Society has been held. The Lord Mayor of Liverpool presided, supported by the Bishop of Liverpool, the Dean of Norwich, and others. The annual report stated that the past year had been one of prosperity, both by reason of the work done and the financial support accorded. During the year 168,429 visits had been made, 3740 meetings held, the attendances being 477,112.

Congregational.

Lancaster-road Chapel, Preston, reports 214 members.

Gallowtree-gate Chapel, Leicester, reports a membership of 240.

Trinity Chapel, Peterborough, reports vigorous and successful work.

Earlsfield Chapel reports thirty-seven members added during the past year.

Hawkshead-street, Southport, reports a membership of 157, twenty-seven of whom joined in 1896.

Godalming Chapel reports 252 members in the town church and village stations and 771 Sunday scholars.

Extensive alterations are contemplated at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, in the way of improvement and enlargement.

A large audience was attracted on Sunday week to Markham-square Chapel by the announcement that Rev. Morlais Jones would preach.

Rev. D. Picton Jones, Welsh missionary at Kambole, Central Africa, has, owing to failing health, been compelled to relinquish his missionary work on the shores of Tanganyika and return to Wales.

Masborough Chapel, Rotherham, reports 534 members, of whom sixty-three were admitted during the past year. In the Sunday-school are 562 scholars. The "People's Own" has 325 members; the Christian Endeavour Society fifty.

Bromley Chapel reports progress. The church has 464 members; in the Sunday-school there are 471 scholars. A Bible-class for servants is held, and a class for working men on Sunday afternoon. Vigorous missions are carried on at Shortlands and West Wickham.

Norwood Chapel, Liverpool, reports ninety-one members added during the past year; twenty-two of these were from the Boaler-street mission. The total of church members and mission communicants is 59C. During the present pastorate, which commenced in 1882, 940 have been added.

Wycliffe Chapel, London, for so long time the scene of the labours of Dr. Andrew Reed, celebrated its anniversary on Thursday last, when Dr. Parker preached, and a public meeting was addressed by Rev. Thomas Sissons, the pastor, and Rev. W. J. Woods. Judging by appearances during the last few months, this historic sanctuary seems likely to enjoy much of its former prosperity.

The Congregational ministers of North London spent on Tuesday week a "quiet day" at Union Chapel, Islington. After a religious service, led by Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, Dr. Lawson Forster presided over a conference on "The Responsibility of the Free Churches to Non-Churchgoing Populations." At the evening session, at which deacons and delegates were also present, an address was given by Rev. Joseph Woodhouse on "The Christian Conscience in Relation to Social Life." Rev. J. Johnston spoke on "The Christian Conscience in Relation to Church Fellowship."

Rev. George Campbell Morgan entered upon the pastorate of New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N., on Sunday morning, when he preached to a full congregation from the words, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." Mr. Morgan is a young man, full of mental and physical vigour, and, like his predecessor at New Court (Rev. William Pierce, now of West Hampstead), comes from Birmingham, where he has done a remarkable work during his three and a-half years' ministry. He is a very thoughtful and earnest and effective preacher, and will be welcomed as a distinct accession to the Evangelical pulpit-power of London.

Calls.—Rev. T. G. Taylor, of Exmouth, to Kendal; Mr. A. G. Marler, to Ottery St. Mary; Rev. J. Blackburn, of Wednesbury, to Bere Regis; Rev. J. P. Southwell, of Porthcawl, to St. Ives (all accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. W. A. Stark, of Leek; Rev. G. Ball, of Maiden Bradley; Rev. T. Pearson, of Ferguson Memorial, Springburn, Glasgow.

Baptist.

Rev. A. Harris has been recognised as pastor at Modbury, Devon.

Rev. James Smith, of Tunbridge Wells Tabernacle, is lying seriously ill.

Rev. John Bailey has been recognised as pastor at Trinity, Maryport.

Rev. F. C. Watts has been recognised as pastor at Payton-street, Stratford-on-Avon.

Rev. F. W. Walter, late of Bildeston, has commenced his ministry at Burley-road, Leeds.

A new chapel was opened last week at East Greenwich, to take the place of a temporary structure used since 1892, by Rev. W. E. Wells and his congregation.

Rev. C. E. Wilson, B.A., of Serampore College, whose state of health has for some time occasioned much anxiety, is decidedly better, and is resuming his labours.

The annual missionary services were held at Rochester Chapel on Sunday week, when Rev. W. J. Price, from India, preached. A public meeting was held on the following Monday.

Dr. Dowen's Church, Wynne-road, Brixton, reports thirty-nine additions to the membership during the year; the number at present on the roll is 316. There is a large circle of earnest and fruitful work.

Last week the pastor of the church at Ilfracombe (Rev. S. Philpot) conducted a series of well-attended meetings (midday and evening) of an evangelistic character. There was a spiritual awakening with most encouraging results.

The ninth anniversary of the Northcote-road Chapel, Wandsworth Common, has been observed. Revs. E. Henderson, M. Cummings, E. Roberts, and the pastor took part in the meetings. During the past year 114 members have joined the church.

On Thursday, February 11, a public service was held at Payton-street Chapel, Stratford-on-Avon, in connection with the settlement of Rev. F. C. Watts. There was a very good attendance. Mr. T. T. Allen (President of Worcestershire Association) presided. Encouraging addresses were given by Rev. J. Butler, H. B. Case, E. Edgington, J. Mark, F. J. Fry, R. B. Saul, and the pastor.

Rev. R. Walker, having resigned the pastorate at Hill-street Chapel, Poole, after sixteen years' ministry, a farewell meeting was held, at which letters expressing regret at inability to attend were read from Rev. W. O. Parish, rural dean, Rev. J. A. Lawson, rector of St. James's, and Rev. C. F. de Jersey, vicar of St. Paul's. Two hundred and twenty-nine have been received into the church during his pastorate.

Rev. John Spence has celebrated his third anniversary at Chelsea. The report showed that the work had been one long success all through the year. The increase in membership had been 205, against a loss of 85, leaving a clear gain of 120. The different branches of the work were full of activity. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour was flourishing, and the Gospel Temperance meetings continued to draw large numbers of people, often as many as 300 being present.

Successful meetings have been held in the Woolwich Tabernacle in connection with an effort now being made by the congregation to raise the last £500 due to the builders, and thus obviate the necessity for borrowing further sums. At the afternoon meeting, Rev. D. Davies, of Brighton, preached; and in the evening a large public meeting was held. The pastor (Rev. J. Wilson) presided, and addresses were given by Rev. D. Davies and Mr. W. Olney. The secretary of the building fund gave a very cheerful account of the progress of the building from its inception. The total cost of the Tabernacle, including £2000 for the site, is expected to amount to a little over £14,000. Towards this sum nearly £6500 has been raised, of which £2000 has come in during the last six months. As the result of these meetings over £200 was added to the fund.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, successor to the late Dr. Dale at Carr's-lane, Birmingham, preached anniversary sermons at Ferme Park Chapel, Hornsey. At the annual meeting on Thursday a cheering report was given of the year's work. The members on the roll are now 438, and a variety of work is going forward in all directions, notably among the young people, who have not only their Sunday-school but many auxiliary helps. The pastor (Rev. Charles Brown) was referred to as one of the best exponents of the Divine Word. His ministry has been very much blessed during the seven years he has laboured at Ferme Park, having been called to the pastorate within a year of the building of the chapel. The erection of a handsome mission chapel at Campsbourne, near Hornsey Station, has been accomplished within the past two years, and has become a centre of active work for the church.

Calls.—Rev. Theodore Rickett to Bildeston; Rev. R. C. Lemin, of Bradninch, to South Parade, Leeds; Rev. W. C. Minifie, of Bournemouth, to Sion, Bradford.

Methodist.

Rev. E. Jones, of Tredegar, is laid aside from active duty through illness.

A series of stirring mission services have been held in and around Masham.

Most successful missionary services have been held at Bristol-road, Brighton.

Great missionary demonstrations have been held at Newcastle-on-Tyne and at Hull.

Mrs. Mackenzie, widow of the famous Rev. Peter Mackenzie, died on Friday week.

Mr. H. Cross has just conducted a successful fourteen days' mission at Walton-on-the-Naze.

Much blessing and many conversions have resulted in a mission held in Doncaster by Mr. W. Sampson.

The evangelistic services conducted by Mr. T. Buttle, at Holsworthy, were of a most successful character.

Bradford P.M. Council has held a successful conference on "Our Service of Praise, and How to Improve It."

Rev. Marshall Hartley is to visit stations in China, Ceylon, and India, in the coming autumn or winter.

A successful conversazione of the London Primitive Methodist Council has been held. New members were received, officers elected, and a strong programme adopted for the ensuing year. This council is steadily growing in influence.

Mr. Kennedy, of Southport, has concluded a ten days' mission, at the Independent Methodist Chapel, Pensnett, South Staffs. The mission has been a source of great spiritual blessing, and a considerable number of sinners decided to follow Jesus.

The Primitive Methodist Jubilee Fund hardly seems likely to reach the £50,000 which the promoters set before themselves as the goal. The jubilee movement should close at the end of next month. Meanwhile meetings are being widely held to bring the fund to a successful issue. So far £30,000 has not yet been received.

The anniversary of the Leeds Central Mission has been held with great enthusiasm. The report tells of continued success. The adult Bible-class has a growing membership. Sunday after Sunday the chapel is filled. Sunday-schools, children's services, women's work bureau, band of hope, and temperance societies are all flourishing. Visitation by mission bands and voluntary workers is carried on.

Mr. and Mrs. Farmer-Atkinson have presented a bust of John Wesley to the Book-room, which is of much interest and value, being one of those originally produced from Enoch Wood's famous cast of the face. It was formerly the property of Mr. Thomas Farmer, of Gunnersbury, and has been in his family for, perhaps, more than a hundred years. It is a fine work of art, and is probably as good a likeness of Wesley as can be found.

Presbyterian.

The Stratford congregation reports a membership of over 400, and an income of £1001.

Special services, full of spirit, have been held by Rev. Dr. McGaw in Wolverhampton Church.

Rev. W. Rigby Murray states that Presbyterian members in Manchester have increased nearly 50 per cent. in thirty years, the income having more than doubled.

The health of Rev. Dr. Miller, the Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, which has been so seriously impaired, is reported, from Madras, to be decidedly better. Dr. Miller has been invited to preside, in May, at the annual meeting in the Queen's Hall of the London Missionary Society.

There is a proposal that the old college in Queen's-square should be retained, when the college is removed to Cambridge, to serve as a Presbyterian Church House, providing accommodation for the secretarial staff, and to serve as a place of meeting for the Synodical Committee and the London Presbytery.

Calls.—Rev. E. B. Speirs, of Glevon, to Morningside; Rev. L. M. Watt, of Edinburgh, to Turiff.

Society of Friends.

George Wood, late of England, has been in New York helping in mission work there.

A new meeting-house has been opened this week at Coventry, and quite a number of ministers and other Friends are rendering help during the week's mission.

Nailsworth, a very old centre of Friends in Gloucestershire, had a ten days' mission, which ended on the 21st inst., and proved to be a time of blessing alike in the Bible readings and in the Gospel gatherings, all of which were well attended. The Lord's power was felt and prevailed. Wm. Hobson, London, was the missioner.

The statistics recently issued by the American Board of Foreign Missions give an encouraging outlook. Our Friends across the water have thirteen principal foreign mission stations in Mexico, Jamaica, Alaska, Syria, India, China, and Japan, with forty-eight subordinate stations. At these forty-one missionaries are engaged, and ninety-one native helpers.

A Gospel mission that was well attended has been held at Willesden, London, and not a little interest was excited on one of the evenings by a lecture on "George Fox: his Times and his Missions," given by William Hobson. Acton took advantage of the work, and shared in its advantages by having some evening meetings in addition to those held in Willesden. William H. Alexander, of Holloway, as well as Henry Dell and Thomas Lindsay, helped during part of the mission.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE doubt not that our readers will give a close perusal to the important contribution on Chinese Missions by Dr. Griffith John, which appears on page 12. No more encouraging review of progress in a great mission field has been published in recent years.

To The Contemporary Review for March, Rev. John Mackenzie contributes an article on the Chartered Company in South Africa, which ought materially to influence public opinion and public action, at this crisis in our colonial history. No man is better fitted by experience, by knowledge, and by the possession of high principle, than Mr. Mackenzie, to weigh in the balance, and to pronounce judgment on the past course of the Company's career. He expresses his convictions with the utmost frankness, and without fear or favour. His verdict is that "the influence of the Chartered Company in the Cape Colony, through its manager, the late Premier, has been neither healthy nor beneficial."

Mr. Mackenzie's indictment is very far reaching. He strongly condemns the attitude of the Company towards the people of Mashonaland. He declares it to involve "incredible disgrace to Great Britain." As to the notorious Jameson raid, he remarks that "the invasion of the Transvaal was founded on the idea that money can do everything." He adds—and every lover of righteousness will agree—"Thank God, money cannot do everything, either in Great Britain or South Africa."

The following lines were prefixed to the Annual Letter to the Open-air Preachers :—

Watchmen of God, Ambassadors for Christ,
As you go forth to witness, warn, and plead,
Receive your message clearly from above,
So shall you meet each individual need ;
To Jew and Gentile, rich and poor, proclaim
God's wrath towards sin, his grace through Jesus's name. E.R.V.

We think we recognise the initials as those of our dear blind sister, Miss E. R. Vining, the author of the beautiful hymn—

The Master stood in his garden
Among the lilies so fair.

Among the innumerable schemes that are already on foot for celebrating the Queen's "diamond" jubilee, the claims of old-established societies that depend on the good-will of the public should not be forgotten. Some of them are already beginning to feel the drain made in other directions on the resources of their subscribers. Those who give to this, that, and the other laudable channel of beneficence, should bear in mind that it is no kindness to do this by subtracting from their gifts to recognised agencies for good. It is a time for extra and not a divided kindness. Otherwise what was meant to swell the stream of human good-will must end in simply diverting it from its accustomed channel, and in causing difficulty and trouble where the opposite result is intended. It will be noticed that a correspondent emphasises the same point.

The attempt of Bishop Barry to cope with the giant social evil of the West End of London must command universal sympathy. Whilst taking steps, through the vestry, the police, and the Home Office, of a very practical kind, he has added an emphatic witness against organised vice, by getting some of his brethren to preach to men at midnight in St. James' Church, Piccadilly. The two points in this new effort which chiefly attract us are the employment of the power of the law, and the appeal to men. There are large powers in the law for crippling the social evil, but they are seldom and only fitfully used, instead of being constantly and uniformly applied. If Bishop Barry can keep the law always vigilant and active, his parish at least may be greatly purified. It is also a good thing that he is getting the men addressed rather than the women. The only fear we have is that he may not gain the ear of those who need the instruction most.

Cannot some permanent result be brought out of these sporadic endeavours to rid society of this evil? We are convinced that until a healthier sentiment, a more chivalrous spirit, among the men, be fostered, and a public opinion which dispenses equally the social judgment on vice on both sexes, every endeavour to better matters will be largely in vain. The Christian law of purity is as incumbent on men as on women. Society has so far endorsed this law as to visit those of the weaker sex who sin against it with ostracism and shame. Till it treats the sterner sex with like punishment, the main source of the evil will be unchecked, and no real reformation will ensue. The efforts of all those who have the good of their fellow-creatures at heart in this matter, should be steadily directed to that end.

If any one desires evidence of the unspeakable consequences of the social evil, let him read Mr. Sherwell's recent book, "Life in West London," where a description of the condition of Soho is given that sadly contrasts with the worst that can be said of even the East End. Every social, industrial, and moral problem of Christendom may be found in this neighbourhood. The West London Mission has been doing splendid work here for years, and there are indications of a general movement in the Church of England to enter on a vigorous and timely crusade. Until recently the public has been largely ignorant of this hotbed of misery and vice. Now that light has been let in on the dark places, it is time that all the churches should join vigorously in a broad and strenuous endeavour to remedy the evil.

The way in which a general strike of railway operatives in the North was prevented almost at the last moment last week, by a conciliatory spirit between the representatives of the two parties, reflects great credit on both sides, and marks another step in the improvement that is gradually taking place in the management of industrial differences. It is significant that the Scripture law regulating controversy between man and man is gradually approving itself as the true method of settling these recurrent troubles. Its watchwords are (1) Conciliation, (2) Arbitration, (3) Law, as they are suggested in the following passages in Matthew :—v. 23, 4, and xviii. 15 ; xviii. 16 ; xviii. 17. When these simple verses are faithfully embodied, in their spirit, in the machineries and relations of employers and employed, we shall see an end of all industrial war, and not till then. The last twenty years has seen a great advance in their application, both in social and international disputes, but much more remains ere the ideal of the Gospel is realised. It is encouraging, at least, that the ideal is within sight, and is beginning to influence human affairs in a practical manner.

The Second National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches which holds its meetings in London next week, has issued an excellent programme. The sermons and papers are sure to be full of instruction and stimulus, but the question will be asked, "Is that all ?" In some of the large towns and country districts where the Council has been at work it has done united evangelistic work of the very best kind, and that is what it must do everywhere in order fully to justify its existence. If it makes only one more platform for eloquent speakers, earnest men will hold aloof, but if true work is done it will win them by supplying a need in part. No place has a greater need than London of "doers of the Word."

Some church officers and mission helpers take a delight in promoting the comfort of ministers and evangelists, making a particular point of meeting the needs of preachers who are away from home and friends. "An Evangelist's Wife," in a letter acknowledging such kindly ministry, refers to some of the gracious forms which it may assume. The host should see that the evangelist has time for rest and reflection, and in other ways facilitate and deepen his work. Cases have been known in which evangelists' wives have been invited to accompany them, and for once in a while to hear the Gospel from their husbands' lips. Not the least kindness is that of the friend who attends the speaker at the close of an evening meeting, giving him light refreshment in the vestry, so that he does not faint on the journey home. When "An Evangelist's Wife" gratefully recognises these services, one is impressed with the conviction that they are of greater importance than may appear at first sight.

When the French conquered Madagascar the directors of the L.M.S. carefully instructed their missionaries to be in every way friendly and loyal to the new government, and their wishes have been faithfully carried out. Steps were at once taken to have the children in the schools taught the French language. The friendly co-operation of the Paris Missionary Society was sought, and cordially given. It was expected that there would be unsettlement and trouble, but the L.M.S. has consistently and patiently counselled loyalty, as its business was to spread the Gospel, and not to interfere with politics. Unhappily its conduct, which, we allow, was only right, has not met with a kindly return, and now it feels compelled to print and publish an account of the sufferings of the Protestant Christians, and to appeal to the Christian public of the land, and to all true friends of religious liberty. It complains of a persecution carried on with a "bitterness, audacity, persistency, and unscrupulousness equal to anything that has marked persecutions in days gone by." The professions of the Government are fair enough, but behind it is the power of the Jesuits which is working all the harm.

The L.M.S., in setting forth the troubles of Malagasy Protestants, relies upon "the interest of its friends and their prayers to the Almighty Ruler of all rather than to (or even in conjunction with) representations to Government authorities." Its appeal will surely not be in vain. No more promising Protestant mission has been created in these later days than that in Madagascar, and its destruction would be a grievous loss to the island and even to the French themselves. Thus far, although defections and treachery and weakness have, in some cases, to be deplored, there is abundant cause for thankfulness in the general steadfastness of the Christians. One missionary says that "many of our people have literally suffered the loss of all things during the rebellion, and yet remain unchanged in their adherence to the praying." An evangelist robbed of his all, remains firm to his profession. Death has added its terrors but in vain. "Not a word have I heard of revenge, or even reproach against their persecutors, and as to giving up their service in the Church, no sign or hint has been given of such a thing." Such brethren, such confessors of our Saviour, claim the love and the prayers of God's people of every name, in every place.

The power of the Gospel to bring and bind together in fellowship men of different social positions, and to give spiritual authority to the lowliest of them all, is finely illustrated by a recollection which Dr. Fairbairn says he carries about with him of Presbyterian sessions composed of "the laird, the schoolmaster, the doctor, the farmer, the farm servant, or shepherd." Of these he has known the last to be the man of finest character, of most wisdom in council, and greatest spiritual weight in the congregation or parish. A moderator of a kirk session testified to him that the person "who above all others stands out in his memory as a man of delicate feeling, of clear, yet charitable judgment, was a working quarryman." Similar witness could be borne in thousands of cases; and the churches will always be following the mind of the Spirit when they seek out for office and responsibility those brethren on whom evidently rests the Divine anointing. Both within and without the Church the election to any office of the spiritually fit is an influence for good none can calculate.

A writer recently observed that the Church hardly knows how great a debt she owes to the late Mr. Spurgeon as a theologian, the depth and range of his experience qualifying him to give the teaching of the Scriptures with clearness and power. The same connection between experience and grasp of the truth is noted by Dr. Laidlaw, who, in his solid and thoughtful book on "The Nature of Man," points out the definiteness and lucidity of Puritan teachers when they are treating of the theme of man's nature, both in its fallen and in its regenerate condition. All great theologians have been men deeply taught in their hearts the things of the Spirit—Augustine, Luther, Calvin, Howe, Owen, Edwards, and others. The saying of Melanchthon is true, and shows how vitally connected are the word of Scripture and the inner teaching of the Spirit—viz., "We shall never understand Christ's work unless we recognise our own evil." Experience is the medium of Divine interpretation. Not a few who once rejected or ignored vital truths of revelation declare that they were led to embrace them through a deeper experience of their own sinfulness and helplessness.

Two of many instances may be indicated in which the Revised Version, by an alteration of the article from the indefinite to the definite, gives us striking improvement and enrichment in the meaning. (1 Cor. x. 13)—"God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it." There is only one way of escape, "the way" made by God, and the prayer of the tempted should be that they may see and find that way. The other change of translation is in Philippians ii. 9—"Wherefore also God highly exalted Him, and gave unto Him the name which is above every name." "There is noue other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Whether in heaven above or in the earth beneath, it is for men, and angels, and principalities, "the name."

Starving Hearts.

OUR attention is being called to our suffering brothers and sisters in India, who, whilst we are living in comfort, if not luxury, are starving for food. To relieve such want is indeed a Christ-like work. Let us all do our part to the utmost of our power.

The special purpose of this little paper, however, is to direct our thoughts to the "starving hearts" among us. Amid the happy family circles, the loving friendships which gladden and fill to overflowing the cup of happiness to many of us, there are those who are starving—not for material food to nourish and sustain their bodies—but for love wherewith to feed their hearts. Can we do nothing for such? It may be urged that the soul that is filled with love to Christ must be fully satisfied, and needs not to crave for human affection. But is this absolutely true? A blessed truth indeed it is, that the soul fully given up to its Lord can never be utterly lonely or sad. The joy of close communion—of sacred yet intimate friendship with Him—is indeed above and beyond all else; and when our Father Himself removes from our too eager grasp our idols, He does surely in his own marvellous, loving way give a special nearness to Himself, which comforts and binds up the well-nigh broken heart.

But did not our Lord Himself crave for human love whilst living our life and sharing our nature here on earth? And do we not need the love of our friends to help, strengthen, and give us courage to fight the battle of life? Let us see to it that we do our best to satisfy this hunger in those with whom we meet, and who are in sore need of this bread of love. Let us give freely, ungrudgingly, remembering that even in this "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

Daily are we feeding upon the love of Christ to us; daily then let us in his strength, drinking in of his loving spirit, give out this bread, the bread of pure unselfish, unseeking love, which has such marvellous power to cheer the desponding, rest the weary, comfort the lonely, and satisfy the hunger of the "starving heart."

Soon, very soon it may be to some of us, we may no longer have it in our power to render this service. Those whose lives we might have gladdened so greatly by the gift and the manifestation of our love death or distance may remove from us, or we ourselves may be taken to that other life, where, though we may serve our Lord in other ways, we shall scarcely have the opportunity for this special ministry of love to our fellow creatures. There every heart will be satisfied, there

> We find the joy of loving,
> As we never loved before,
> Loving on, unchilled, unhindered,
> Loving once for evermore.

He Thinketh Upon Me.

TEACH me, Master, to believe it,
And with childlike faith receive it
In its fulness and its sweetness,
In its richness and completeness—
The Lord, the King of Glory,
"He thinketh upon me."

Though the way be dark before me,
And the storm-cloud gather o'er me,
Evil never can betide me,
'Neath his shadow He will hide me,
The Lord, the King of Glory,
"He thinketh upon me."

Though I seem by all forsaken,
And my earthly joys be taken;
He will fail or leave me never,
For his word stands true for ever—
The Lord, the King of Glory,
"He thinketh upon me."

Time nor change his love can alter,
So I need not shrink or falter;
Every burden for me bearing,
Every moment for me caring,
The Lord, the King of Glory,
"He thinketh upon me."

Boydton Institute.—This school for coloured pupils is located in Boydton, Va., U.S.A. It has been greatly blessed in training young men and women for work as teachers, evangelists, pastors, and missionaries. Quite a large number are in active service, and are doing good work among their own people. Several former teachers are now in the foreign missionary service. Great spiritual blessing has lately come to the school. A warm interest is taken by teachers and students in missionary, Sunday-school, and temperance work.

Field Lane Institutions.—A series of interesting anniversaries have been held here. On Feb. 1 the Band of Hope held its twenty-eighth anniversary, under the chairmanship of Mr. A. A. Wood. The meeting was well attended, over 400 members and friends being present. The chairman's speech and the addresses by Messrs. W. A. Bowie and Scott France were most interesting, and were heartily applauded. The secretary's report showed that good sound progress had been the order of the year. On Feb. 5 the Girls' Friday night Bible-class and school held their annual meeting, some 550 scholars and friends assembling, under the presidency of Sir John Hutton, L.C.C. The meeting proved a thorough success, the addresses of the chairman and Mr. Kirk being most heartily received. Mr. Noel-Cox (superintendent) presented a very interesting and encouraging report on the year's work. The Sunday-afternoon Bible School held their annual meeting and prize distribution on Feb. 10, when 240 children and friends assembled in the large room, Mr. P. Platt presiding. The chairman's speech and the address by Mr. Hy. W. Bush were attentively listened to, and cordially acknowledged. The report of the superintendents for the past year was most cheering.

Courage.

Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are able to overcome it."—Numbers xiii. 30.

'APPY they who dare to be in the mino- rity, when to be in the minority is to n the right! Who amongst us can recall n the names of the ten faint-hearted spies ose evil report of the good land had conse- nces so disastrous? Whereas the names Caleb and Joshua shine out with ever- reasing lustre upon the page of history. he righteous shall be had in everlasting nembrance, but the name of the wicked ll rot."

From the various references to the early tory of Joshua we may gather that this loured servant of Jehovah was not natu- y a brilliant, nor even a public-spirited, n. Beautifully jealous indeed was he for the lour and fair fame of his beloved master, yet noble answer of Moses himself to his hasty gestion about Eldad and Medad makes suggestion itself look very small and row-minded (Num. xi. 28, 29). And from reiterated commands of God, "Be strong, of a good courage," etc., we may infer that re was a natural shrinking in the heart of hua from the divinely imposed task, and t he was not, apart from God's grace, ner strong or courageous. Out of such terials, let us remember for our own com-, Jehovah is pleased to evolve his great kers. The "weak things," the "foolish ags," the "things that are not," He not y tolerates, but they are by Him thrice nosen." Joshua was one of those "good faithful" servants who, without brilliant nts or natural capabilities of a grand er, have yet received the "well done" of Master.

How far did Caleb resemble Joshua? Had y aught in common besides their faithful- s and the truth, and their steady unswerv- determination to follow the Lord fully? cannot tell.

But in the very reticence of Caleb, in his dy acceptance of Joshua as the leader ere some might have expected there would leaders, and from many another hint in r life we find tangible proof of that her spirit" which marked him out for the cial and unqualified commendation of the d Jehovah.

Caleb it was who "stilled the people" in t critical hour of their history with the ds which summed up the resolve and the quence of two faithful hearts—"Let us p at once, and possess it." We all know sequel. We all know that the discontent but temporarily stilled, and burst forth in in the faithless cry, "We be not able o up...they be stronger than we."

Not the less because Israel disregarded it, us adopt the rallying cry of the true- rted, and say with regard to every pro- ed blessing, whether or not it seems to be hin the reach of our poor powers, "Let us p at once, and possess it."

t is quite true of us, as it was true of el, that apart from God "we are not e." "Without Me ye can do nothing" is of the first and most important lessons have to learn, and if we will not learn it ore the battle we shall inevitably learn it ur defeat. But Caleb and Joshua knew t their ability to possess Canaan did not in their own prowess, but in the Divine sence; their justification in storming the like but doomed nations lay not in bers or military tactics, but simply and ly in the Divine call. "All God's biddings enablings."

f any and every spiritual combat, how- ever unequal, to which the Lord calls us we may say, "Let us go up at once...we are well able"; and we shall assuredly have from Him that magnificent vindication of our attitude which, long years afterwards, was actually granted to Joshua, when at length the tardy nation was prepared to follow the beckoning of God. "Art Thou for us or against us?" was the challenge to the heavenly visitant; but with one brief sentence He swept the whole question of "for or against" aside. "Nay; but as Captain of the host of the Lord am I now come" (Josh. v. 13, 14).

With Jehovah as Captain, a thousand Jerichos sink into insignificance, and are but as nothing to the eye of faith. "The people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits" (Dan. xi. 32); but it is as Captain He must be recognised, and not as a mere helper and ally.

"Let us go up at once, and possess it." Shall we pass the cheering word on one to another with regard to every unclaimed promise over which our hearts have long yearned, half wondering if we dared to accept it literally? There is no risk in holy daring in this direction. God means what He has said. He is purposed to do, not less, but "exceeding abundantly above" all we can ask or think. "If it were not so I would have told you" chides every hesitating fear. Are there heights of communion which have seemed beyond our reach? Let us, in the power of the Spirit, grasp the title-deeds to these heavenly places.

Are there lingering spiritual Canaanites in the citadel of our hearts which we have not dared to expel? In the name of the Lord "let us go up at once" and win the victory of the overcomers. "We are well able to overcome," through Christ; for "I can do all things, through Christ."

"At once." Shall we not personally and very practically emphasise the "at once"; remembering what poor Israel's delay cost, through forty years of desert wanderings?

To-day, in the spirit of Joshua and Caleb, "let us go up and possess" some blessing which has long been waiting us. To-day let us plant our foot upon some new portion of our fair inheritance in Christ, in the full assurance that it is ours even as we tread it for the first time. "Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours" (Deut. xi. 24).

"Give me one grasp of your conquering right hand, and I shall do it!" cried a brave officer to whom the Duke of Wellington had assigned a difficult task. The great soldier granted his request; hand was clasped in hand, and before sunset the fort was taken, and Picton returned victorious.

Ah, but we have more than the clasp of an all-conquering Hand to nerve us; we have that Hand's constant upholding. We have more than the heart-stirring word of command, we have the presence of the invincible Commander. "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able"—more than conquerors through Him that loved us.

"We will go forth and conquer,
Depending on his grace;
The lowliest station near Him
Must be an honoured place;
And after battle, victory,
And after victory, rest—
Like the beloved Apostle,
Upon the Saviour's breast!"

Lux in Tenebris.

By Rev. Dr. BALGARNIE.

"The Light shineth in the darkness."—John i. 5.

IT was the peculiarity of the mystic Shekinah light of Old Testament times that it became visible after nightfall. "In the cool of the day" in Eden, Jehovah God made his presence felt by the fallen pair, and his light flashed forth from the leafy covering of the Life-tree like flaming swords of Cherubim. "When the sun went down, and it was thick darkness, behold a smoking furnace and a burning lamp passed between the pieces" of Abraham's sacrifice. It was most probably at night—although the time is not specified—that Moses beheld it in "the bush," or desert coppice, that seemed to burn in the darkness.

During the three days of supernatural darkness that overspread the land of Egypt, the Hebrews had time to become familiar with the Supernatural Light that shone over their dwellings in Goshen. Later, they recognised the "kindly light" of their midnight sun in the Red Sea crossing. Still more familiar with it did they become during their forty years' residence in the desert, when in a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night—the fire within the cloud, glowing and shimmering through it after nightfall—Jehovah led them forward from stage to stage in their pilgrimage. But it was in the crisis of the battle of Beth-Horon, when darkness threatened to cover the retreat of the Canaanitish armies, that its brightness culminated, and for the remainder of the night it shone forth as a miraculous "Sun" over Gibeon, and as a "Moon" in the Valley of Aijalon.

"The light shineth in the darkness." It was the brighter Light that dispelled and reversed the shadow of the setting sun, in Hezekiah's day, on the sun-dial of Ahaz. It was Isaiah's "Sun" that should no more go down, and his "Moon" that should no more withdraw. It was Ezekiel's "Brightness," as he saw it in his night visions, returning from Babylon to Jerusalem, and lighting up the temple with its ancient "Glory." It was Zechariah's "Light at eventide." It was the "Star" that led the Magi to Bethlehem, and "the Glory of the Lord" to the Hebrew shepherds. It was the light of Deity, shining through the veil of Humanity, that made Christ's face "to shine as the sun" at midnight on the Mount of Transfiguration.

The Light of Christ's Life, Sacrifice, and Work still shines in the darkness. On the dark deeds of sin it flashes the light of holy indignation and wrath, like the flaming sword of the Cherubim. On the mystery of making "covenant with God by sacrifice" it sheds the light of the Cross. In the darkest hour of the soul's spiritual captivity and bondage it reveals the way of escape. It is a lamp for pilgrim feet. It is a "sun and shield" in conflict. It dispels and reverses the shadows of life. It irradiates the valley of death; and it leads to a city where there is no need of the sun or moon to shine, for the glory of God and the Lamb are the light thereof. "Come ye, let us walk in the Light of the Lord."

Kashmir.—Rev. J. Hinton Knowles, of the C.M.S., writes: "On looking back over 1896 one feels sure that there has been real advance, and that the Divine blessing has rested on us and our labours. One notable event of the year was the completion of the translation of the Bible into Kashmiri, which is going through the press. The Bible Society will give a grant towards the expenses, but I shall require at least £50 more."

Progress in China.

By Dr. GRIFFITH JOHN.

PERHAPS some account of the recent progress of missionary work in China might interest you and your readers. Last year, about this time, I ventured to predict that the year on which we had then entered would be a year of rest and peace to the missions in this land. I felt convinced that the vigorous action taken by the foreign Powers with regard to the Sze-chwan riots and the Fuhkien massacre would, for the time being, put an end to the machinations of the officials, and that the people would prove themselves to be, what we have always known them to be, perfectly harmless in their bearing towards us and our work.

All this has come to pass. We had no riots during the past year, no massacres, and no serious troubles of any kind. The missionaries at this centre have always maintained that the officials are at the bottom of all their troubles; and the experiences of 1896 go far to show that they are right in this contention.

I ventured to predict, also, that the year would be one of exceptional prosperity to the Church in China. Having mingled a good deal with the people, and realised as I had never realised before how the missionary work was telling on every hand, I felt sure that we only required a season of immunity from official opposition and popular tumult, in order to witness a new and striking development in connection with the missionary enterprise in this land.

That prediction has come to pass. The phenomenon witnessed in these days in the Fuhkien Province, around the scene of the massacre of 1895, is something wonderful. Mr. Pitcher, of the American Reformed Church Mission at Amoy, tells us that 20,000 inquirers presented themselves during the past year at the doors of the three missions located in the Foochow districts; that out of the 20,000 inquirers 5000 have been accepted as fit candidates for Church membership; and that hundreds of families have renounced their idols, whilst hundreds of others have been asking for leaders and teachers to guide them and instruct them. That is, to my mind,

A MARVELLOUS FACT.

The progress in Shantung and Manchuria has also been phenomenal; and the same may be said of the advance in this province. I have been working in Hupeh for thirty-five years, but, so far as numerical increase is concerned, I have seen nothing like the progress of last year. During the year there were baptized in connection with the London Mission alone 434 persons—adults 337, children ninety-seven. Hundreds more might have been baptized; so these 337 adults must be looked upon as the pick of the inquirers. As to the character of the converts, I can honestly say that I have never administered the rite of baptism to any candidates with more confidence than I did to the candidates of last year. In the districts of Tien-men and King-shan the progress has been something wonderful. The native assistant from King-shan has come down to Hankow, and he tells me that the inquirers are multiplying rapidly, and that whole villages are coming in.

And the good work is extending into Hunan. There are many isolated Christians scattered over Hunan, who have been baptized at Hankow, and we have been rejoicing over them for years. But we are to-day rejoicing over a new development even in that hostile province. There are now at Heng-chow, one of the most famous cities in Hunan, between twenty and thirty converts connected with the London mission, who meet regularly for worship at the house of a Christian who was baptized at Hankow several years ago.

Mr. Archibald, of the National Bible Society of Scotland, has returned from a colportage visit to Hunan. On his arrival at Heng-chow the converts gave him a right royal reception. They had services with him on board his boat, they feasted him during his stay, and sent him on his way rejoicing. Mr. Archibald had been having rough times at Siang-yin, Chang-sha, Siang-tan, and other places. At Heng-chow, however, he met with nothing but friendliness and respect, and this is to be ascribed mainly to the converts, and to one or two of the principal gentry of whom the converts have succeeded in making friends. Mr. Archibald bears the highest testimony to the character and worth of this little band of believers. Before his arrival they had taken a house for themselves in which they might meet for worship, and whilst he was there another house was procured by them for the Bible Society. Thus the work may be regarded as fairly started at Heng-chow.

The chief of the gentry there is a Mr. Sian. He is a son of a late governor of Canton, and is a man of wealth and influence. He has sent me a cordial invitation to come and visit him, and it is my intention to go in March, when I hope to baptize these Christians, and establish a mission at that important centre. May I ask an interest in your prayers? Pray that God may keep me from danger, and help me to realise one of the great desires of my life—the desire of planting the standard of the Cross in Hunan. It will be my aim to do what I can to open Hunan more fully for all the missions. Our cry is not Hunan for this mission or that mission, but Hunan for Christ.

So much for the progress of the year in this particular line of things. God has been doing great things for us, and our hearts are glad.

Now let me tell you something about the work accomplished by the

during the year. Our circulation was enormous—the largest we have ever had. In 1895 the circulation reached the extraordinary number of 1,095,081, the highest up to that date. But the circulation of last year went far beyond this mark, having reached the magnificent number of 1,306,352. There have been years in the history of the Society when we should have regarded the mere difference (211,271) between the two as a splendid circulation. But those were in the days of the Society's childhood—days on which we look back with pleasure and gratitude, but to which we can never return.

This, however, is not all. If you want to realise what Central China has done in the way of book distribution during the past year, you must add the circulation of the National Bible Society of Scotland to that of the Tract Society. The Bible Society circulated last year: Bibles, 181; Testaments, 8220; portions, 226,800; in all, 235,201 books. The united circulation of the two societies amounted to 1,541,553. What a magnificent piece of work! Every tract and every Gospel is a preacher, an evangelist. The missionaries are few, but the books are many, and they are finding their way into quarters to which the missionary has no access. It is impossible to think of the year's work in this particular line of things without praising God for the great things which He has done.

Thus there was last year a very remarkable advance all along the line. The missionary enterprise in China occupies a finer position to-day than it ever did before. We were never so strong as we are now; our prospects were never so bright. I sincerely believe the missionary work in this land is on the eve of great developments. I believe we are on the eve of important developments in other directions also. China is not in love with the material changes that are coming upon her; she hates them heartily, and would resist them if she could. But she cannot help herself. There are mighty forces at work pressing China forward to which she must yield, whether she will or no. The world is advancing, and China must advance, too. Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that in this land. Christianity is to-day the only living moral and spiritual force in China. The native faiths have ceased to offer any vital resistance to sin, or support to righteousness and truth. Buddhism is dead; Taoism is dead; and Confucianism is dead, too. The "longevity boards" (coffins) are prepared, and the day of solemn burial is hastening on.

Are the missionaries in China, and are the friends of missions at home, prepared for the coming development, for the coming harvest? I doubt it. Speaking of the missionaries, I can only say that they do not seem to me to be fully alive to the gravity of the crisis that is come upon them. When we heard of the sudden growth of the work in Fuhkien we wondered greatly, and were inclined to be sceptical. Can the work be real? Will it stand the test of time? Are not the missionaries in that province over sanguine and somewhat hasty? The recent development of the work in the districts of Tien-men and King-shan, in this province, has been an astonishment even to me, though a missionary of more than forty years' standing. I was hardly prepared for it, and felt inclined to treat it as something unreal. These displays of divine power have taken us by surprise. And yet this is, I verily believe, only the beginning of things.

Before long, we shall see greater things than these. For our work is real, and God Himself is with us. He is working mightily in these days in China, as he has been working mightily from the days of Dr. Morrison till now. The seed-sowing has been going on all these long years, and God has been with the sowers. The harvest time is come; and God will not forsake the reapers, if they will only be true to their Lord, and to themselves as his servants.

NATIVE AGENCY.

Before I close this letter, I should like to say a word about native agency in connection with our work. Some time ago there was a tendency among the missionaries to disparage native agency. But what are we finding out to-day? We are finding out that we cannot do without the native agents; that they are the men who are doing the work, and that our hope, so far as the extension of the work is concerned, rests upon them. Where would have been the enormous circulation of Christian literature last year, but for our native agents? Where would have been our work in King-shan and Tien-men but for them? Where would have been the work around Foochow, in the Province of Fuhkien?

Look at that work at Heng-chow in the province of Hunan. To whom is it to be ascribed? A few years since a young man was baptized at Hankow. He was at the time in the employ of a Hunan official at this place. Soon after his baptism, the choice of renouncing his faith or giving up his situation was placed before him by his employer. Without a moment's hesitation he chose the latter, and returned to his native home at Heng-chow. There he began to work for Christ at once, and the result has been the ingathering of a most interesting band of Christians in the notoriously anti-foreign, anti-Christian Province of Hunan. I could tell you a great deal about what our native helpers have been doing in Central China from the beginning, but especially of late, did time permit. I have always attached the greatest value to native agency, and my appreciation of its worth has never been higher than it is now.

Still, I feel deeply that the native agent needs the foreign missionary to guide and inspire. The converts also need the foreign pastor in many ways, and especially as an instructor in the highest truths of Christianity. The native helpers can do much in the way of bringing men into the fold; but the foreign pastor is needed to tend and feed the flock. Such is the state of things to-day. No doubt the day is coming when the foreign agent may be safely dispensed with. But the time is not yet.

May I bring the claims of our work in Central China before the notice of your readers?

WE WANT A MEDICAL MISSIONARY

for Tien-men and Kings-han. Some months since I made an appeal for two men—an ordained missionary and a doctor—for these two districts. The directors of my Society took the matter up warmly, and, as a result, the salaries of both were at once guaranteed by a few earnest friends of the mission at home. The ordained missionary was soon found and sent out. He is here now studying the language, but we are still waiting for the doctor. Will you allow me to make known our need in this respect? The province of Hupeh does not possess a more inviting field than the one which these two districts present. The progress of the work in that region is wonderful, and it is only just beginning.

We want more native agents, evangelists, and teachers. The annual cost of a native agent is about £10. I feel sure that there are some among your readers who would be glad to help us by supporting one or more of these valuable helpers. If so, they may send their contributions to you, to be forwarded to the Mission House or direct to myself. Then there is the tract work. Any contributions towards this grand work will be received with great thankfulness.

A Lovedale Hospital.

PERHAPS some of your readers may recollect my letters in The Christian on "African Missions Visited." On returning home from the tour on which these were written, and before coming back to settle at Lovedale, I was enabled, through the generosity of friends, to raise some £1600 towards a much-needed mission hospital for this district.

It is customary for the Colonial Government to give a pound-for-pound grant towards all district hospitals, and we were led to believe that no exception would be made in our case, so that we reckoned on having £3200 towards building and furnishing the hospital. But the unfortunate Transvaal raid indirectly upset our calculations, for with the consequent resignation of the Cape Ministry, the Colonial Secretary went out of office, and one has taken his place who appears to have little sympathy with efforts of this kind for natives. He has refused to give us the usual grant, and we are in consequence left with a considerable deficit to make up.

There is great need for medical work here. Very many children have died in a recent epidemic owing to ignorance on the part of their parents, and to want of proper medical attendance and nursing.

A gentleman who recently visited Lovedale has sent £100 to furnish one of the wards. We want a like amount for another large ward, and an equal sum for surgical instruments, splints, bandages, dressings, etc., as well as donations towards the building fund. Then there are beds to be endowed, or supported at the rate of £12 per annum. If any of your readers have it in their hearts to help on this work we shall be most grateful.

I may say that though the Hospital is connected with Lovedale, it will be interdenominational in its working, and will, we believe, be a real help to the other Missions—Anglican, Wesleyan, L.M.S., United Presbyterian, Moravian, etc.—at work in these parts.

Prayer for China.—Rev. J. Hudson Taylor has written a letter to the members of the Women's Prayer Union for China, in which he cites many encouragements to prayer and faith. Copies of the letter can be had from the secretary of the Union, Mrs. E. Boyd, 6, Birkbeck-road, Acton, W., who will lso be glad to receive the names and present ddresses of members.

Letters from North Africa.—7.

BLACK AND WHITE.

IN some of my earlier letters from South Africa last year it was said that prejudice against colour as colour was prevalent, and was wrong. A lady replied in The Cape Times, denying the prejudice against colour as colour, and laying the scourge of her pen heavily on the coloured back. An anonymous "Anglo-Indian" also vented his dislike of his coloured brothers and sisters, and his indignation against their apologist as the editor of "an obscure journal."

I have just now before me a letter from another of our colonies, saying that the coloured people are looked down upon as much as in South Africa, and that the writer was in a measure boycotted for associating with them. One lady remarked, "I'm afraid I'm very wicked, but I do dislike those black people," adding that it was outrageous she should have been berthed in the same cabin with one of them. The "black" lady was almost as light as herself. Another was heard to say that she hated every drop of coloured blood. That sounds like a prejudice, and more than a prejudice, against colour as colour.

I refer to this because it will be read by many who may find themselves in lands among their coloured fellow-creatures; and I would warn them against insulting God, who made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the same mother earth; and thus save themselves from the retribution which must otherwise follow.

THE N.A.M. IN TUNIS.

I have entered little into detail as to the work of the missionaries, but they can tell their own story better than I can tell it for them, and as I have left North Africa and am journeying by Athens and Constantinople to Palestine, I send a letter from Miss Case, who has an adequate knowledge of Arabic, but who has been led by circumstances for the present to devote herself to the Italians. She says:—

The Italians and Sicilians of Tunis are very poor. They live from hand to mouth, and when sickness or scarcity of work comes there is absolute distress. The Roman Catholic priests get the people under their power by means of this poverty. The schools are free, books being given, I think, as well as education; the hospitals and asylums are all dominated by Rome; and poor Protestants, or those suspected of being such, are so unkindly treated that even Protestants enter the hospitals under the name of Catholics to avoid persecution.

Besides being poor, the people are very ignorant. Multitudes cannot read, especially the women. Those who have been best instructed cannot distinguish between Christ and God. A little while ago they had never seen a Bible, and a young man to whom I spoke had no idea of what I meant by "the New Testament." Thousands are without any religion at all. They have a vague belief in "God and the Holy Virgin"—not Christ—but they never enter a church, and do not send their children to school. The people generally distrust and many hate the priests. Joined to their ignorance is the light value they set upon human life. They are very revengeful, and of all Europe Italy is the country where the greatest number of murders take place.

Tunis, just across the Mediterranean, is the province which has served until now as a City of Refuge for all the unpunished robbers and murderers of Sicily and S. Italy. Until I began work among these people I little suspected the depths of iniquity daily practised by those around me. We had living with us and sleeping in our house for three months the child of an escaped murderer and forger of false money. He lived next door, and until he was himself shot by a man whom he had injured, and the trial brought out the facts, we had no idea but that he was a very nice man. Last Sunday a regular attendant at our meetings did not come. It was because the man's brother had just been assassinated. Such news is so common to us now that I might say we are daily satiated with horrors.

The spirit of Christ is so utterly unknown to these poor, untaught people that they cannot grasp the meaning at first of his commandments.

"Love your enemies!" exclaimed one young man whose mind is opening to a wish to follow Christ. "Yes, that is very well, but not all your enemies. No, sir!" he continued, rising in his excitement as another tried to explain it to him. "I am not going to love or forgive an enemy who attacks my honour."

"There is no occasion to pray any more for my grandmother," said little Grazia, one evening. We had just prayed together as usual for all her relations.

"Why not, Grazia?" "Because she has stolen some money from my mother. She is very bad, she is!"

"I should like to kill her," she said of a French lady who she thought had not treated her sister properly. This is the spirit that rules the majority of the neglected Sicilians and Italians.

Of course, being so ignorant, the people are superstitious. I was solemnly told by the friends of a poor woman who was very ill that she was suffering from the effects of an "evil eye." And yet, poor thing, she deserved the protection of the Holy Virgin, for I always notice her little shrine, when I visit her, with a light kept incessantly burning. Though this family receive us readily, and have begun to come to our meetings, I am afraid they still fast on Fridays. They were surprised to hear that eating meat on that day is not what God calls a sin. You will be prepared to hear that many Italians are extremely bigoted. The poor women in particular are afraid to enter our hall. They think they would be lost if they did. They believe that we are thoroughly bad people; and yet the number of open doors surprises us. "If you go and hear the Gospel once you want to go again," said a man, relating how his wife refused to enter with him "that Protestant place." But having once ventured, she became as eager to go to the meetings as he was. The reason is, as a dear, sweet-faced old woman explained to us: "Our priests never open the Bible and explain it to us simply as you do."

Having been without the Word of God for so long, the people seem hungry for it, and many, I know, sit up till midnight reading chapter after chapter in the first Bible they could ever call their own. Indeed, in some cases it is borrowed, and at Christmas it gave the greatest possible pleasure to two men to be presented with Bibles. One had spent evening after evening reading from his brother-in-law's; the other always came to the meetings with a borrowed Bible, carefully covered with paper, under his arm.

Two workers have just returned from an inland tour, reporting some blessed experiences. Their object was to reach Arabs and others still ignorant of the Gospel. Hearing of some mines where hundreds of Italians were working, far away among the mountains, they managed with great toil and difficulty to get to them. Their reception soon made them forget the fatigue and dangers of the way. The men bought all their books and begged for more! One gave a franc (10d.) for a New Testament price 4 sous (2d.), and would not, poor as he was, take a halfpenny change. "We were so tired," says one sister, "we had walked up mountains and down hills, where there was no path, from 7 a.m. until noon, but THEN we felt rewarded."

These are the people who, when they have heard the glorious Gospel, say, "Why don't you open a school? We want our children brought up Evangelicals. Let us have a place to send them where they won't learn evil." This is the great need of Tunisian Italians—a Protestant school where the Bible shall be an open book, and where the children, learning its precepts, shall be the means of teaching the parents that not hatred, revenge, murder, is the religion of Christ, but love, forgiveness, and salvation. Who will join us in prayer for a converted Italian schoolmaster to be found, one able to help in meetings, and one willing to trust the Lord for his support?

Who will plead with us for this great boon to a people asking for the Light, and who will continue in prayer until the answer comes? A. M. C.

Before closing this letter I wish to commend the Hôtel Bristol, Naples, for comfort, courtesy, cuisine, and economy. Again and again the proprietor, Mr. Landry, was mentioned to me as an excellent Christian; those who come once will come again.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, March 7.

"Then called I upon the name of the Lord."—Ps. cxvi. 4.

WHAT could we do without the resource of prayer? When compassed with the cords of death, and held by trouble and sorrow, what help would there be for us, who eschew methods of self-deliverance which the men of the world do not scruple to employ, if we might not betake ourselves to our knees?

Nay, but much rather let me late returning,
Bruised of my brethren, wounded from within,
Stoop with sad countenance and blushes burning,
Bitter with weariness and sick with sin.
Straight to thy presence get me and reveal it,
Nothing ashamed of tears upon thy feet;
Show the sore wound, and beg thine hand to heal it;
Pour Thee the bitter, pray Thee for the sweet.

Only let us never forget the immense importance of those five great "ifs," which include all conditions of successful prayer:—

John xv. 7, which touches our life in Him, and his in us, in unremitted fellowship.

Matt. xviii. 19, which touches our life with others, that must be clear as crystal.

Matt. xvii. 20, which concerns the vigour and health of our own soul-life.

1 John v. 14-15, which demands that we know God well.

John xiv. 14, which winnows out from prayer all that is inconsistent with the name of Jesus.

Oh, for the deep-dwelling life, spent in the secret place, where earth's voices grow faint, and God's clear.

MONDAY, March 8.

"O praise the Lord, all ye nations."—Ps. cxvii. 1.

This is an unwonted summons from Jewish lips. For the most part the Jews looked with little sympathy on their Gentile neighbours, and had no desire that they should laud Jehovah, save as they became proselytes of Judaism. But where the love of God is strong in the heart, it overleaps the bounds of custom and racial prejudice, and yearns that all the world should know and love the Saviour.

If all the world my Saviour knew,
Sure all the world would love Him too.

We all need more of the emancipating power of the love of Christ, to thaw the icy chains that hang around us, and bid words flow freely from our lips to those whom we had been accustomed to look on as outside the range of our influence. Oh, for the rush of the intolerable craving to quiver through us like a trumpet-call! Oh, to be willing to be accounted fools and enthusiasts, if only we may start to praise, lips that otherwise had remained sealed and dumb.

Are you doing all you can to kindle the nations to praise? They cannot praise Him whom they do not know. Did not our Master bid his Church evangelise all nations, and is not that bidding obligatory on us? It is mere hypocrisy to bid the nations praise Him, if we have never sought to spread, by lip or gift, the mercy and truth revealed in Jesus our Lord.

TUESDAY, March 9.

"Bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar."—Ps. cxviii. 27.

Is not this altar his cross? Shall we not ask to be bound to it, that we may never be able to start back from our attitude of consecration? There are times when life is full of roseate light, and we choose the cross; at other times, when the sky is grey, we shrink from it. It is well to be bound. Wilt Thou bind us, most Blessed Spirit, and enamour us with the cross, and let us never leave it? Bind us with the scarlet cord of redemption, and the golden cord of love, and the silver cord of Advent-hope: so will we not go back from it, or wish for another lot, than to be the humble partners with our Lord in his pain and sorrow.

The horns of the altar invite thee; the cross-piece of thy Saviour's cross, with wide-open arms, would bid thee to its embrace. Wilt thou come? Wilt thou desist from the thinking, speaking, and willing of thine own selfhood? Wilt thou place the cross between thyself and the world that entices thee? Wilt thou dwell ever in a spirit of resigned humility, and give thyself to continual repentance and tears? Wilt thou love the cross of our Lord Jesus and the contempt of the world, and take them as thy meat and drink? Then thou shalt know the life that passes through death, and is life indeed.

WEDNESDAY, March 10.

"Teach me thy statutes."—Ps. cxix. 12.

This petition occurs many times in the course of this psalm. It is urged on many pleas: because God is blessed, and therefore must want to lift us to share his blessedness; because the suppliant desires to complete the declaration of God's ways to others; because he is eager to turn them into songs; because the earth is so full of Divine mercy; because God is good, and does good; because shame will be avoided; because he would fain secure and keep the clear shining of the face of his God. Take this petition as your guide, and follow it through the psalm, and especially trace that recurring word statutes, and you will see how the whole of this splendid ode crystallises around it.

There is a heavenly wisdom, which can only be acquired from the lips of the Greatest of Teachers, at whose feet Mary sat. It is not to be acquired by the intellect, but by the heart. It will never come by emulation, ambition, or pride; but to those who live a life of perfect love, of deep humility, and of fellowship with the cross of Jesus.

Aye, and when Prophecy her tale hath finished,
Knowledge hath withered from the trembling tongue,
Love shall survive, and Love be undiminished,
Love be imperishable, Love be young.

THURSDAY, March 11.

"Woe is me, that I sojourn in Meshech, that I dwell among the tents of Kedar."—Ps. cxx. 5.

It is a bitter experience to have to live where there is no sympathy, but carping criticism and incessant innuendo. A pure-minded friend was recounting to me the other day the anguish he suffered perpetually, because his associates, knowing how acutely he suffered from the least suggestions of impurity, chose to assault his ears continually with the most prurient suggestions. There are souls which have long had their dwelling with those that hate peace. To their least sigh war is the immediate response.

O lily among thorns, this is no new experience! Thy Lord hath been through these paths before thee: see the bent twigs which prove that He has passed this way. But thy loneliness can never be quite as sorrowful as his, for thou hast always Him. And remember there is a compensation, in that the strict scrutiny of thy foes makes thee ever so much more watchful and prayerful, and drives thee oftener to the bosom of God. One confessed to me lately that he had found it easier to live a holy life in a City warehouse than in a Divinity college. Perhaps we gain much more than we know from jealous opposition and criticism.

FRIDAY, March 12.

"Shall I lift up mine eyes unto the mountains?"—Ps. cxxi. 1 (marg.).

It is not high enough to look to mountains. They are deeply rooted and permanent in their sockets. They rise like the pillars of heaven. Rivulets gush from their sides, vineyards drape their terraced slopes, eternal snows cap them with crowns of unsullied purity. The ancients thought that the gods had chosen them for their home, as on Parnassus or Olympus. To their towering steeps the eyes of their votaries were often directed to catch the first symptoms of descending help.

But the psalmist forbears to look to soaring mountains for his help. He lifts his eye above and beyond, to the Lord which made heaven and earth. Thence shall his help come.

We are all tempted to look at the mountains, to the creature rather than the Creator; to wealth, talent, or influence; to things and people beneath the heavens, instead of to Him who dwells above the heavens, in his infinite majesty, and to whom all power is given in heaven and earth.

O unslumbering Keeper! O sleepless Watcher! Shade from heat, shelter from cold, protector from assault, transformer of ill to good, escort when we go out, home when we return! We children of men, driven by the stormy wind and tempest, look to Thee, trust and rest.

SATURDAY, March 13.

"For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee."—Ps. cxxii. 8.

What the earthly Jerusalem was to the Jews, that the Holy Church, the Bride of the Lamb, the heavenly Jerusalem, which descends from God out of heaven, and includes within its limits all holy souls, is to us. Let us pray for its peace and prosperity, let us esteem them above our own good, and let us be glad if our feet stand within its gates. When the tribes of the Lord go up to give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness, let us go with them. We may be alone in some distant land, or traversing the ocean in the swift steamer, bearing us from the land of religious observances, or confined to the sick chamber; but let us never forget that we belong to the holy mystical Church; let us ascend the staircases of prayer and praise; let us mingle our rivulet of adoring love in the mighty torrent that is setting in towards the throne of God and the Lamb; let us stand with the throng of holy souls; for we are come to the City of God, to an innumerable company of angels, to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than Abel's. Wherever my brethren meet, in whatever section of the Church on earth, so long as they belong to the one Church, the Body of Christ, nothing shall stay me from wishing them prosperity and peace.

Pastor von Bodelschwingh.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of Pastor von Bodelschwingh's association with the well-known Homes in Westphalia has been celebrated. The development of the various institutions under the Pastor's fostering care has been simply extraordinary; and in this his personality and great organising ability count for much.

There are four main establishments, and many adjuncts. Bethel, with fifty houses, is the Home of epileptics. Sarepta has now almost as many deaconess sisters as the famous Kaiserswerth institution. Nazareth is the abode of the male nurses. These two portions of the great Colony of Mercy have over a thousand inhabitants. The Labour Colony at Wilhelmsdorf has various offshoots. The four Homes named include more than four thousand souls.

Then there is a Home for drunkards, a Missionary House, and a Refuge for Armenian orphans. Nine doctors and five pastors, besides Herr von Bodelschwingh, are engaged in the work; and many young men, in training for the ministry, gain practical experience by passing a year in connection with the Colony.

Mr. Radcliffe's "Recollections."—In connection with the Young People's Meeting at Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool, Miss Radcliffe recently gave an interesting account of the way in which her father, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, was led to found the Strangers' Rests which in this and other countries are so closely associated with his name. Referring to the "Recollections of Mr. Radcliffe," the pastor, Rev. Sydney Jones, said that it was not without humiliation, but also with much joy and profit, that he had read the book. To him one of the chief values of Mr. Radcliffe's life was to be found in its originality, and that originality was due to his speaking and acting as he was moved of the Holy Ghost.

Philadelphia and Home.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

NEXT to Boston and New York came Philadelphia, for which three days were reserved, Sunday to Tuesday inclusive. It was hard to tear oneself away from the great audiences and Christian kindness of New York, and especially from Mr. Moody, who came over from Boston to spend Saturday morning with me. But the train was soon speeding to the great city of the Friends, "the City of Homes." At the terminus my beloved friend Dr. Wilbur Chapman, pastor of the Bethany Church, was waiting.

Sunday was a wonderful day, with five or six addresses. The immense crowds that were willing to stand thick in the aisles throughout the services, indicated that there was a great spirit of expectation abroad. The last meeting at night was specially memorable, as a great congregation remained behind in the Bethany Church to seek the enduement of the Holy Spirit.

The marvellously-organised Sunday-school, over which Mr. John Wanamaker presides, and his Bible Union meeting, deserve description, and transplanting into English soil. For they are capable of repetition. Still much is due to Mr. Wanamaker's unique personality.

It was arranged that there should be a ministers' meeting on Monday morning, and as we entered, we found the floor of the church occupied with the ministers of Philadelphia and its neighbourhood to the number of 500 or 600, whilst the remainder of the space was crowded with Christian workers and others. They were very courteous to the stranger. Criticism was disarmed, and the Word of God had free course and was glorified.

In the evening one of the largest churches was filled with a most attentive audience representing the leading Christian sentiment in the city, many being content to stand in the aisles. The subject was the substitution of the Christ-life for the self-life, by the Holy Ghost.

On Tuesday morning, a meeting was held at the Baptist Training College, over which Dr. Weston presides; and in the afternoon and evening two more mighty gatherings, the last one of not less than 3000 people. We cite these numbers as indicating how deep the interest has been in the exposition of the doctrines of the Inner Life. It appears as though ministers and people are tired of the reign of sensationalism and criticism in the pulpit, and its copious treatment of the questions of the day, and are crying out for the sincere milk of the Word.

Mr. Moody is directing the assault in these large towns on the powers of darkness, preaching each Sunday in the Carnegie Rooms, New York; holding missions during the week in large centres like Boston or Cincinnati; selling an average of 2000 volumes a day of his Colportage Library; employing men to conduct special missions; and enabling pastors like Dr. Dixon to give all their time to evangelisation.

On Wednesday we reached New York, and came on board the Germanic. Just before starting about 100 letters were put into my hand, written at Mr. Moody's suggestion, by those who had benefited; the choir, led by Mr. Burke, filled the dining-saloon, and sang, "God be with you till we meet again." To God be all the glory! Let us plead for similar blessings for our own dear country!

The Prayer Union for London exists for the promotion of earnest, united prayer for all the inhabitants of the great city. Every Thursday its members beseech the Lord to pour out his Holy Spirit upon the people, that they may be saved and sanctified, and that those who are already followers of Christ may be stirred up to work more earnestly for Him among those in their own immediate circle. Applications for membership (with 1s. subscription to defray expenses of printing and postage) should be sent to Mrs. H. Vaughan-Jackson, Potters Bar, Middlesex.

From Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz.

IN a letter from Joseph Rabinowitz, dated February 22, referring to his recent illness, he writes:—

"My King Jesus restored me unto mine office. On Saturday, 20th inst., by the grace of God, I was able to bear again the precious seed, and to sow it upon the ridges of the hearts of my Jewish brethren. Though our streets, through the melting snow, were transformed into pools, hindering the movements of the citizens, a considerable number of Jews came early in the morning to the synagogue (Somerville Hall). It seems that many of them, feeling the want of spiritual food during that short, sad time when the doors of my mouth and of the Somerville Hall were closed, were now anxious to hear the Gospel. The subject of my sermon was the great assurance of the Apostle Paul that even in this day when the heart of the children of Israel shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. Dwelling on Prov. xxx. 5, 6, 'Every word of God is tried. He is a shield to them that trust in Him. Add not thou unto his words, lest He reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.'

"I tried to show to my hearers how Agar, by his inspired words in these two verses, gives us an exact and clear idea about true Christianity and its results, and about Talmudism and its results. From the fifth verse we learn the ground and the first principle of Christianity, that is, to know that 'every word of God (in the Scriptures) is pure,' without dross; therefore, there is no need for any human correction. Then the result of such acknowledgment: the believer becomes convinced that he (the speaker) is 'a shield unto them that put their trust in Him.' From the sixth verse we learn what is the consequence to those who, thinking that the Scriptures need some correction from the side of men, endeavour to add something unto his Word (as the rabbis of the Talmud certainly did)—namely, He (Jehovah) makes them liars, for, in the lapse of time, all men become aware, from their own words, that they, the would-be correctors, are liars.

"The English translation 'reprove thee' is incorrect. The Hebrew meaning is, prove in or by thee. The essential fault of the Talmud is in the additions which the rabbis made to God's Word in the Scriptures. By these additions they have raised a partition wall between Israel and their true Messiah, Jesus, the fulfiller of the pure word of Jehovah through his precious blood.

"In these last days we see clearly how the inspired and prophetic words of Agar are coming to exact fulfilment. All attacks from the Christian side against the Talmud are as nothing compared with the attacks against it from the Jews themselves. Many of the best of them are now crying to their rabbis with the word of Jacob to Simeon and Levi, 'Ye have troubled us, to make us by your lies to stink among the inhabitants of Europe.' Thanks be to God, the partition wall and also the veil of Moses fall more and more from before the eyes and the hearts of the Jews; and that is so because the pure Word of God, spoken by Jesus Christ and his apostles, is here and there preached unto them. The Word is like fire shining in the darkness—it purifies the heart of the Jews, making them new creatures. It will weld them together to be one nation of Jehovah in his Holy Land. Oh, I know not how I should live through this present period of Jacob's trouble and the world's calamity did I not believe in the healing and life-giving Word of God. 'Unless thy law had been my delight, I should then have perished in mine affliction' (Psa. cxix. 92)."

Thus far our brother Rabinowitz. Is there not in his burning words a warning too for our modern Talmudists, the so-called higher critics, and their deluded followers? I will be happy to hear from any who wish to have fellowship with the council for Joseph Rabinowitz and his work at Kischeneff, in helping to sustain this honoured missionary to his kinsmen the Jews.—Yours sincerely,

JAMES E. MATHIESON.

Winter Mission to India.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites, who, with Rev. W. S. Standen, is visiting missions in India, in a letter from Jubbalpore, on January 11, says:—

WE arrived at Neeravalli on December 21, and stayed in a tent erected in the centre of the village. We became the "observed" of all, every passer-by bending down to get a peep at the English missionaries. The largest meeting we had here was attended by 600 persons, including the great "Tasseldore," or head man of the district, who has 250 villages under his control. This man, and all his party, are Hindus, and worship idols; he thanked me for the good which the English missionaries are doing. At the close of the meetings sixty-four men came and wished their names put down for instruction with a view to their becoming Christians. Ten of these were Chucklers and the rest Malas, but none of them were of any high caste. It is "the common people" who "hear gladly."

On December 24 we arrived at Ellore, where we held two most successful meetings for the educated English-speaking Hindus. It was a pleasure to find 200 heathen gentlemen come into a Christian church to hear about the Lord Jesus. There was considerable excitement when a rich rajah came with his son, on an elephant, accompanied by three outriders on horseback. He listened with great and grave attention, and came again the next night. At one of our gatherings here the Cazy came; he is the head of the Mohammedans, and is born a judge among them.

At Bezwada, which was reached on December 26, the learned Baboos gathered to hear addresses in English, the head man of the town (kind of mayor) and the pleaders in the law courts shook hands afterwards.

On New Year's Day we arrived at Masulipatam, having travelled all night on the canal from Bezwada, our comfortable boat being drawn along by relays of coolies. We were cordially greeted by the European missionaries, native pastors, and a band of native Christians, garlands being placed on our necks and kindly words for a welcome spoken. Here we saw something of Zenana work. One poor woman said, "We rejoice and are thankful that though we have lost everything in this world through becoming Christians, yet we have gained everlasting riches." At a thanksgiving service five native pastors with naked feet took part. Here, with a band of native Christians, we went into the bazaar, and our words (by interpretation) were listened to with great silence. The doors are opened, the people are waiting, the time pressing, the needs are urgent; the command is clear. Why not more winter missions for India? Missionaries can always get a large and patient hearing when preparation is made.

After four weeks in the Telugu country, we have started for Calcutta, Santalia, etc.

We leave India (D.V.) on March 6. Pray for us, and thus be partners with us in the Lord's work.

Alone—Not Alone!

THE house is dark—the silent shadows fall
Around the hearth, or tremble on the wall;
The world is still, its children gone to bed;
The night is come, the day for ever fled;
The summer faded, and my fortunes cast,
With no companion but the dreary past.
No sound, no footfall, heralds love's caress—
Alone, for ever, with my loneliness.
No friend whose voice shall wake the morning song,
No hand but Care's to make the way less long;
The fire will out, and leave my heart as cold
As those dull bars that dying ash enfold.

* * * * *

The fire whose ruddy youth grew white in age
Now leaps to life, and flaming lights the page
Of Holy Writ: "They all forsook the Lord"—
Beneath the olive shade, at Kedron's ford—
"They fled"; alone, yet not alone He stood,
The Father's hand sustained the cross of wood.
The fire-light fades, the ash is white and dead;
But bright the star of hope that shines o'erhead.
God rules! the earth is his, though cold and stern.
In trust and patience I will slowly learn—
No cynic scorn shall cast contempt on love;
Faith fixed in man is good, best fixed above.
The fire dies down; I hear a gentle voice,
"Alone, my son? I come; I stay: Rejoice!"

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER SIXTH.

THE EASIEST AND BEST WAY OF LEARNING THE WORDS AND PHRASES OF A FOREIGN LANGUAGE.

1.—WORDS.

NEVER try to learn any word by repetition alone. The same objections may be urged against learning words by repetition as against learning names by repetition, and with equal, if not greater, force. See Letter Third, The Christian, January 21.

When you read or hear a new word, look at it, or think about it, for a second or two. This will impress it on your mind more than could be done by a great amount of repetition. It is thought, not repetition, that impresses. Prin. 28.

Be sure to unite the word in your consciousness with some other word. Prins. 10, 15.

(a) This will be of great benefit, even if the word with which you unite it is to some extent an unfamiliar one. When seeking the new word, you will find that the thoughts at once go to the one with which you united it. That will, by the working of mental law, in turn tend to recall the new one. "When two things have been connected, and we recall one of them, the other is almost sure to follow."

(b) If it be helpful thus to connect a new or strange word with one that is not quite familiar, it is still more helpful if we connect it with a word that is really familiar. When we do this we seldom have any difficulty, either in retaining it or in recalling it. See Prins. 22, 23.

But now the question comes, How can one word be thus united with another?

You can unite one word with another:—

1. By thinking of it, not alone, but in the connection in which you read it or heard it. Let it be united in your thoughts with at least one other word. If you do this, these two words will remain united in your mind, and one will recall the other.

This is a very important rule, especially in reference to small words, such as prepositions.

You can in this way generally learn two words quite as easily, and sometimes even more easily, than you would otherwise have learnt one.

You would find Croyez en Dieu, in John xiv. 1, almost, if not quite, as easy to remember as Croyez, even if you did not know the words which followed. If, however, you did know these words, then you would find it far easier to remember with them than without them.

Important though this is, it is not all. Had you learnt the two words apart, you would not thereby have learnt anything respecting the construction of the language. By learning them together in the form you read or heard them, you will have learnt something of this.

2. When using the dictionary, do not look at one word alone; look at the word you want to remember in connection with one or two of the words which preceded or follow it.

By this means you will unite it in your consciousness with those words, and they will help to recall each other. You will thus gain a vocabulary more rapidly than you would if you fixed your thoughts on one word at a time. If you did that, even if you retained the word in question, you would find it difficult to recall it, for it would stand to a great extent alone in your mind.

If you try the method here advocated, it is probable that you will be surprised at its results. I have known from four to six words learned in this way, by doing little more than reading them carefully through, and noticing wherein the words resembled each other in form and wherein they differed from each other in meaning. See Prin. 16.

3. You can unite two words by comparing them with each other.

There is hardly any way in which words can be so firmly united together as in this way.

If you choose, you can use this method together with either of the others. If you have not succeeded for some reason with the others, be sure to use this.

Even if at first you do not readily find a word with which to compare the new word, never mind; persevere, you will never have reason to regret the time you spent in seeking a word for this purpose. Your seeking will impress the new word on your memory, even if you do not find such a word as you seek. If you succeed, however, in finding such a word, and compare the new word therewith, this will impress it on your mind in such a way that you will not be likely ever to forget it.

On comparing one word with another thus, take care to notice (1) wherein it resembles it, and (2) wherein it differs from it.

The word with which you compare the word you wish to remember need not be in the same language. It can be some word or some name in your own language. You can compare heber with heben, or you can compare nix with nicks, or ballo with ball.

I repeat it, be sure to unite every new word with something. Mr. Kay says:—"Did an idea exist in the mind unassociated with any other idea, it could not be recalled." This is quite true. See Prin. 10.

What is true of ideas in this respect is equally true of words.

Every word which is associated with another word or phrase that we can recall, can itself be recalled. See Prins. 22, 23, 24.

2.—PHRASES.

He who wishes to learn a language quickly, and to speak it easily and naturally, ought to learn it, as far as possible, not by single words, but in phrases and sentences.

Ascham says of him who tries to learn a language, as so many do, by single and disconnected words, that he learns, "First an ill choice of words, then a wrong placing of words, and lastly, an ill framing of sentences."

He who learns a language principally in phrases, becomes easily and practically acquainted with the peculiar idioms and construction of the language.

Most languages can be learnt thus to an extent that few, who have not tried, think.

Five things need mentioning in reference to learning a phrase.

1. Where possible it ought to be heard, not seen. Mr. Kay says very truly: "The ear is the natural companion to the tongue, not the eye; and a language learned by the ear comes more readily and naturally to be spoken than one learned by the eye." A very little thought will show that the latter part of this statement must, for several reasons, be correct. See Letter 5, suggestion 11.

2. When you hear a phrase that you wish to remember, keep it before your consciousness; keep it by an act of the will, sounding, as it were, in your ear.

This is both mentally and mnemonically more helpful than repetition. A phrase so treated is seldom forgotten, especially if it be recalled once or twice shortly after being heard.

This will help, too, in securing, and in being able to give, the right pronunciation.

3. It will help you greatly both in retaining and in recalling a phrase if you compare it with some other phrase which you already know.

4. If you cannot find any other phrase with which to compare it, compare or contrast one part of it with another part. This will answer the same purpose. (See Letter 4 in Life of Faith, Feb. 3.)

5. If you cannot carry out either of the last two suggestions, then notice carefully with what word the phrase begins. If you have carried out suggestion 2, and then do this, you will seldom fail to recall the first word. This will generally be so united in your mind with the whole that it will seldom fail to recall that whole. "The beginning is the better part of the whole; and this once found, what follows is a small matter" (Aristotle).

By these means phrases can generally be learnt almost as quickly as single words. A phrase is always much more profitable than a word.

Mr. Kilburn in a recent letter expresses much gratification in learning that classes for the study of the lessons appearing in our columns have been formed in connection with some Y.M.C.A.'s. He suggests that if this plan were more generally adopted, it would have the effect of inducing many young men to join the ranks who would otherwise stand aloof. The same applies to Bible classes and other gatherings of young men and young women.

We are asked to insert replies to some questions which have been addressed to Mr. Kilburn:—

There are many, of whom I am one, who are desirous of learning Greek and Hebrew, so that we might better understand the truth of God, and be better fitted to teach the same. Could you kindly help us?

Though my great aim in the present course is to help those who are trying to learn living languages for the sake of working through them, yet many of the suggestions the course contains have been applied with striking results in the acquisition of both Greek and Hebrew.

Would you advise me to adopt your method in the study of Greek, instead of that prescribed by our professor?

Decidedly not. Follow the prescribed plan and use my suggestions in addition as far as they can be so used.

Will the lessons be reprinted?

Yes, but it is not decided yet in what form.

Some are writing to ask for private lessons, and sending fees for them. I am very desirous of helping as many as I possibly can, but my hands are too full to permit of my taking up private courses. I will gladly, however, answer any questions bearing on the course as far as I can.

Would you advise us to send our children to the Continent for the study of French and German?

By no means. The languages might be more easily learnt, but there are so many moral and spiritual dangers connected with life on the Continent that it ought only to be resorted to under most exceptional circumstances.

Is it well to begin the study of two languages at the same time?

Not if you want to master either of them easily and thoroughly.

Newton Abbot Convention.—Revs. J. Nisbet Wallace (of Torquay), J. J. Luce (of Gloucester), and W. Hope Gill (of the China Inland Mission) took part in this short but helpful convention. Mr. H. G. C. Bishop acted as chairman throughout. At the two early morning meetings goodly numbers were present. Four meetings were held on Tuesday, February 16, while a missionary meeting on the 17th closed the series. Various local friends gave short accounts of the societies with which they were acquainted, and Mr. Hope Gill told of the wonderful results and of the difficulties of the work of the Gospel in China, where so many years of his life have been spent. It is but three months since our first convention was held, and we are able to give praise for many of the children of God who are now walking in a clearer spiritual light than heretofore. Mr. Luce's evening address will long be remembered with thankfulness.

William and Lucy Johnson.

MADAGASCAR MISSIONARY MARTYRS.

APART altogether from the fact that these godly labourers were called on to suffer a cruel death, a quarter of a century's quiet, devoted service in Madagascar renders their memory dear to many. Their "tragic death" proclaimed their names far and wide, but the story of their consecrated lives is one which beautifully illustrates the self-denying service, heedless of the applause of man, even now being rendered in pagan lands by many who serve the Lord Christ and wait his sure "Well done!"

William Johnson was born in Chelmsford in 1842. His parents, being Friends, sent him at the age of eleven to the Ackworth School, where he is described as "a merry, lively boy, by no means studious." School-days over, he remained some years at Ackworth as junior teacher. At this period the conviction formed in his mind that his future sphere of service lay in the mission field. Still he was content to bide quietly God's time. Entering on a business engagement at Gloucester, his sympathies were drawn out to the watermen and corn-porters, and he, with F. Sessions, was the means of founding an adult school. Many and hard were the initial difficulties, but after all, these helped materially in training him for the work of later years. On his removal to Leeds—to study architecture, for which he had a marked talent—he was again found zealously active in similar Christian work.

All the time his "concern" for foreign missions was deepening, and at length, in 1870, when Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Clark gave themselves to service in Madagascar, William Johnson felt himself called to go with them. His offer was accepted by the Friends' Foreign Mission Association. It was arranged he should accompany these friends in the spring of 1871, and his joy is described as great and buoyant.

Meanwhile his happiness was crowned by finding a fitting life-companion. While visiting Hitchin, on missionary business, he was introduced to Lucy Sewell, the daughter of a missionary then working in Madagascar. A warm attachment was formed; the conviction grew upon their minds that they were meant for each other; but after a few weeks' happy intercourse they parted—he for Madagascar, whither she hoped to follow.

While William Johnson had been manifestly prepared and fitted by God for his life work, so also had she who was to stand at his side for twenty-three years in the mission field, and to share with him the martyr's glorious crown. When she was but a girl at the Mount School, York, her mother was taken from her, leaving a deep impression on her young heart. By-and-by she had, to some extent, to take her mother's place in the family, and to become mother-sister at home. While faithful in these domestic duties, she was ever ready for loving ministry and willing helpfulness to all around. Bright and buoyant in spirit, she yet manifested much seriousness, passing at one time through a very deep spiritual experience, finding herself "all wrong somehow," until there flashed on her remembrance the Christmas message, "To you is born a Saviour."...She took it as meant for herself, and from that moment this Saviour became her chiefest joy, and his will her guide. In 1867 her father went to Madagascar as a missionary, leaving his family in due and responsible care. In the marvellous leading of God Miss Sewell was also called to give her life for Madagascar, where, at Tamatave, she was married, in September, 1872, to William Johnson. They started at once for Antananarivo, where the husband resumed his labours, while his young wife, although suffering from the lassitude induced by the trying climate, gave herself to "making a home," acquiring the language, and ministering in many ways to the missionaries—having a rare aptitude for nursing—as well as to the natives around her.

Meanwhile, Mr. Johnson was full of activity, superintending the boys' school—founded by his father-in-law, Mr. J. S. Sewell, in the hope (largely justified) that it would become a training school for native preachers and missionaries. The Lord's Days were spent in evangelising in the villages around the capital. Owing to a serious illness it became necessary for Mrs. Johnson to return home in 1879, while two years later her husband also came home, bringing with him two Malagasy youths for training in England. After three years' rest at home—marked by busy labours in missionary matters and public speaking on the theme so near their hearts—the way opened in 1884 to return to Madagascar. Brief was the notice, hard the necessity of leaving their children behind them, but strength was given to accept gladly the call.

Dark days were impending. The French had invested Tamatave. Difficulties were raised about their landing. But at length, understanding they were "Friends," Admiral Miot gave them permission to land. In December they were at the capital, being welcomed warmly "by everybody." Their old servants—one, at least, having in the meantime established a good business—all demanded to be taken back, attesting thereby the love they had won.

Some years of devoted service followed, as superintendent of an outlying district at North Ankaratra. This involved toilsome journeys, long absences from home, serious discomforts, disheartening experiences; but all were joyfully accepted for Christ and the Gospel's sake. These itinerations are described by Mr. Johnson in his letters (penned with a true artist's touch), but while delighting in the beauties and marvels of nature his deeper concern for men may be read in every line. He seems to have been impressed with the sadly low level of Christian life, the superficiality of much of the Christianity professed, and he gave his energies to "lead them to deeper, truer knowledge of the love of God in Christ." Again and again he expressed "a growing sense of disappointment in results." This he largely attributed to the unrest and terrible disorganisation caused by the French invasion. Lawlessness, suspicion, distrust of foreigners, made themselves felt in many disconcerting ways. For two years (1887-8) he had charge of the Ambohitanely Chapel in the capital, where, in answer to prayer, a revival came "as streams of refreshing."

In 1890 little "Blossom" was born, and in 1892 Mrs. Johnson's health compelled a return home. In the autumn of 1894, however, they sailed again for Madagascar, leaving once more their children behind, save little "Blossom," from whom they could not part. They reached their post only to find the war-clouds once more gathering. Scarcely had they settled at Arivonimamo when news came of renewed invasion, and of an evident design to complete the conquest of the island. Anxious, indeed, were the times, in the terrible unrest of the natives, who declared that "Christianity had caused all this trouble." Driven from their homes, decent people became bandits from sheer necessity; lawless bands, ready for any deed of violence, traversed the country. Many made haste to the comparative security of the capital, but Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, confident in the love of the people around them, and assured that in God's hand all must be well, resolved to stay at their post, and leave the issue with God. Their position is thus described by Mrs. Johnson: "We are hemmed in on all sides." Right to the last their letters breathe intense yearning over the poor, dark, bewildered natives around them. In one of her last letters Mrs. Johnson graphically delineates the disorganised state of things, and speaks with calm confidence that "He will be a very present help in our direst need." "The sifting time had come," and, as Mr. Johnson wrote, "Good men and true must show the faith that is in them."

How soon he knew not then! A few days after—one summer morning (November 22, 1895) a wild rabble burst into the mission-house, destroying in reckless fury all within, and murdering these devoted missionaries and their sweet "Blossom," whose lives had been consecrated so truly to the welfare of the Malagasy. It is consoling to know that "their faithfulness saved the lives of others"—measures being adopted for their safety—"and no other missionary lives were sacrificed."

For the facts given above we are indebted to an admirable memoir* just published. The book is singularly attractive. No praise of man is sought. The story is graphically told, while the rich, full, vivid letters given afford, simply and naturally, delightful glimpses of the intense devotion and deep spirituality underlying the modest and reserved bearing of those devoted missionaries who now wear the martyr's crown.

The Indian Famine.

THE Pundita Ramabai, writing from Jubbulpore on Jan. 5, says:—

I left home on Dec. 22, and have been travelling from place to place in this part of the country ever since. Famine has caused a great deal of distress in Central India, and I have come here to see if I can do some work for young widows. The Lord has enabled me to help some; I have sent twenty-seven girls to Poona. I have sixty-seven widows, and thirteen non-widow girls in my school now. This is the largest number I have ever had at one time, and if God gives me three hundred girl widows from this famine-stricken part I am willing to have them, and am praying for them to come.

The question comes—how shall I feed and educate all these girls? I get from my friends in England and America money enough to support and educate sixty girls, and now the number of inmates of my Home has and will hereafter enormously increase. It may seem very unwise on my part to try and get more widows under the circumstances, but the Lord has put it into my heart to get three hundred widows, and if He sends such a large number of girls to me, He is sure to send me the money wherewith to support them all.

It is not right for us to sit still at home and think that as the Government have started relief work and are helping the poor people, therefore we need not do anything for them. I take a special interest in them, and feel for them as no one who has not suffered like them can. In the beginning of the last great famine, twenty-two years ago, my father, mother, and sister all died of starvation, and I was ready to commit suicide for fear of falling into the hands of wicked people had not my brother been spared to me at that time. I shall never forget that terrible time; and the present distress into which the young girls of this part are brought, brings the old sorrow with freshness to my memory.

Major-General Haig writes from Redhill:—Kindly allow me to state that the amount which I have received for the Koi Famine Relief Fund is now about £290, and not £200 only, as stated in my recent letter to you.

A few weeks ago I wrote of the one hundred famine children that had been offered us, and that we were unable to take any because of lack of funds. Since then kind friends have sent us some help, and we decided we could take twenty boys and twenty girls. I myself went to Jubbulpore to bring them. Many orphan boys had to be left in the poor-house. How they did beg to go with me! What a joy it is to bring comfort to these little waifs. Yesterday our weakest girl passed away, and to-day a boy. The others seem to be gaining strength, so we hope we shall lose no more.

No one has any idea of the care they all require. They have so little strength that all sorts of troubles attack them—sore mouths, bronchitis, pneumonia, bowel troubles, etc. One does not dare to give them all the food they need. They must be fed little and often. Already a great change has taken place in them. The gifts we have received will be spent in a few weeks; then what shall we do for these needy ones? We want to take in fifty more. (Mrs.) J. C. Lawson.

American M.E. Mission, Aligarh, N.W.P. India.

Colonel S. Dewé White, 37, Upperton-gardens, Eastbourne, who long resided in India, writes us setting forth what he believes to be a practical and effective means for feeding the millions now starving, and for coping with future disasters of this sort. He maintains that by taxation not called for in the best interests of the people, we have wrung many millions of pounds from India, and he suggests that we should now make a refund in part compensation. Moreover, he urges the establishment of a famine fund for possible eventualities, and to extend the sphere of irrigation works. Lastly, he suggests a day of special prayer for the perishing people in all the churches of the United Kingdom.

Mexico.—Protestantism has of late made great progress in Mexico, where fifty years ago there was neither church nor school devoted to the Evangelical faith. There are to-day 441 organised churches, with 171 pastors, 164 evangelists, 244 teachers, and about 50,000 professing Protestants. Such is the result of the efforts, mostly within the past twenty-five years, of missions which have for the most part been founded by United States societies and workers.

Mr. R. Burn's Farewell.

THE crowded gathering in the Aldersgate-street Lecture Hall last Monday at noon indicated the deep and general solicitude felt in the departure of Mr. Robert Burn from his accustomed post by the chairman's side. More remarkable than the size of the company was its constitution. There was quite a host of well-known pastors, evangelists, Y.M.C.A. secretaries, and Christian workers of both sexes. Everybody seems to feel they are losing a valued friend by the retirement of Mr. Burn from this central city Christian meeting-place. The president's chair was occupied by Mr. M. H. Hodder, who referred to his lengthy association with Mr. Burn, and spoke warmly of the helpful brotherly fellowship which had been cultivated at Aldersgate-street throughout his term of office.

Mr. Burn being called on to speak, gave some interesting reminiscences of the past, his words ever and anon being marked by repressed emotion. He told most thankfully of the many loving tokens of esteem he had experienced during recent weeks, though he was only too conscious of personal defects and short-comings. He gratefully referred to two absent friends, Sir George Williams and Mr. R. C. Morgan, and to two departed friends, Mr. Robert Paton and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, as some, out of many, who had been closely associated with him during his work at Aldersgate-street, and who had imparted to him much stimulus and help. At this common meeting-place for mutual prayer and praise, Christian ministers, evangelists, and brethren all over London, as well as from other parts, had rallied without reference to denomination. Mr. Burn expressed special satisfaction at the presence of so many Y.M.C.A. co-secretaries, as an indication of the fraternal spirit existing among the official workers of that institution. After some hearty words of commendation expressed on behalf of Mr. Basil Hewer, his successor, who was present, Mr. Burn concluded a touching farewell address by wishing for all the threefold apostolic benediction.

Some very hearty expressions of loving goodwill, and of best wishes for Mr. Burn's future prosperity and usefulness, were uttered by Pastor Fuller Gooch, Mr. F. L. Smith (of New York), Mr. Taylor (of Aylesbury), and Mr. C. Cook. Mr. Basil Hewer, in a few modest, well chosen sentences, desired an interest in the prayers of friends in view of his shortly undertaking the responsibilities relinquished by Mr. Burn. Several brethren subsequently led in earnest prayer for both the leaving and coming secretaries, and for a rich blessing on the work of the Y.M.C.A.

Armenian Rescue Fund.—Sir,—The committee of the Armenian Rescue movement earnestly appeal to the friends of humanity to help in the work of removing the suffering Christians in Turkey from the cruel dominion of the Sultan, and to establish them in homes, where they may live out their blighted lives in peace, and a certain measure of content. It is impossible to speak plainly here, but to anyone who will communicate with me I will give information of what has already been done in the past, and of what they hope—with due support—to accomplish in the future. The treasurer of the fund is Mr. Edmund Wright Brooks, a well-known member of the Society of Friends. He will gladly acknowledge any donations forwarded to him; or they may be sent to Lloyd's Bank, Limited, 72, Lombard-street, E.C.

Tower Hamlets Mission.

AT the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, last week, the twenty-eighth anniversary of this Mission was celebrated. Mr. F. N. Charrington, hon. supt., in presenting the year's report, traced the history of the Mission, from its inception in a hayloft to its location, after several moves, in its present magnificent home. The hall has been open for 7600 consecutive nights, and since its formation over 4000 members have been admitted to the church. The Sunday-school, the largest in London, is now nearing 2000 scholars and 100 teachers. The Band of Hope has 500 members. A temperance organisation, known as the "Crusaders," has taken 1811 pledges during the year, 219 of which were taken at the watch-night service. The Children's Hall, another branch of the work, has been holding successful meetings every night during the year. The Forest Country Home at Leytonstone, under Mrs. Kerwin's superintendence, had received and cared for many little ones, and the Rosslyn Rest at Brentwood had provided needed change for women broken-down in health. Many other agencies for the elevation of the people had been instituted.

The branch of the Y.M.C.A. has been making good progress, and benefitting a large number of artisan young men, and the Y.W.C.A. is also an active and flourishing institution, carrying on a number of Bible-classes and meetings for young women. Other branches of work include the distribution of food amongst the poor, sick-benefit clubs, provident club (which since its opening has received deposits amounting to £5626), and the book saloon for the supply of good and wholesome literature. The influence exerted through all these agencies is a thing not to be gauged, and the results cannot be told in any statistics. It is sufficient to say that the presence and power of the Holy Spirit are constantly in strong evidence. Cases of true conversion are frequent and numerous, and there is a healthy vigour and spirituality pervading all the efforts which are made in connection with the Mission, to bring about the moral reformation of the people of East London by the dissemination of the Gospel.

Mr. John Colville, M.P., moved a resolution (which was heartily adopted) urging that the Diamond Jubilee of the Queen affords a fitting opportunity to make a special effort to clear off the mortgage of £20,000, which rests as a heavy burden upon the work. The other speakers included: Mr. Edwin H. Kerwin, Mr. Thomas Richardson, Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver, Mr. J. Clarke, Mr. George Nokes, and Mr. Seagram, who presided.

United Missions.

Conventions for the deepening of the spiritual life abound on every hand. While this is a matter for deep thanksgiving, there does not appear to be a corresponding and resultant increase in the number of united Gospel missions to reach the unsaved.

In the town where I reside we have never had a convention, but the Nonconformist ministers and the vicar of one church are uniting this week in a great Gospel campaign. God is owning their faith and activity. Night after night men and women are coming forward into the inquiry rooms, where a band of workers from the various churches are waiting to lead them to the Saviour.

What the churches need to-day is to be baptized and permeated with the evangelistic spirit, so that by all means they may save some. If the people cannot be induced to enter churches, chapels, and halls, let us hire theatres, public buildings, drill halls—in fact, anything, that we may lay hold of the people for Jesus Christ. This will need prayer and faith and a good deal of organisation, but it can be done; "all things are possible to him that believeth." W. Monro Collings.

Gosport.

Christian Community.—At a meeting of workers in the Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, the time was devoted to hearing reports. The result was most encouraging, as showing that much blessing had been everywhere realised. In the open-air good audiences had been secured of the classes for whom such services are intended. Nor was the work less favourable in the lodging-houses, where the labours of fifty years produced wonderful results. In the several mission halls the work is progressing. The conversions and other interesting incidents related were such as to inspire the workers with more faith and zeal.

Christian Endeavour Week.

Text for Sunday: "Let us consider one another to ovoke unto love and good works" (Heb. x. 24).
Hymn: "Songs and Solos" No. 119.

WHAT long word "Endeavour" need frighten no one; it only means to try, trying to do something the Saviour who has done so much for us. This not one of those things which we need to try and again because they are so difficult, but something which we may succeed every time, if we ly ask God to guide us.

All around us there are people who want r help. The sad ones, young and old, ed our merry laugh and beaming faces. ie sorrowing ones need our arms round eir necks with loving words of sympathy. ose in darkness need our lights to burn ghtly. The sick ones need our visits, and e presents and flowers we can take them; do the old, and the poor who have few ends. Our fathers and mothers, our ler brothers and sisters, our teachers and ardians, all need our ready and cheerful edience and careful attention, that amid e anxious times that come to them, with all eir cares, they may be encouraged and lped. Our younger brothers and sisters ed us to help and protect them. Our play-ates need us to be true to God and them. All these are ways in which we may try to rve Christ and grow like Him, by Christian ideavour. Another time we may say mething of the wider fields of usefulness before us, t if we have not learnt to properly tend our own ay gardens, how can we hope to do work in the en? And always remember that if we would deavour for Christ, we must first become his by elding ourselves to Him who has bought us by his vn blood. We cannot work for Him till He and He ly is our Master, and we have been born again.

I daresay many of you are already members of me Christian Endeavour or kindred society, and if , I should like to know what you are endeavour-g to do. But if you do not so belong, you ought at ce to make enquiries if there is one in your urch or anywhere near it, and join there, that you ay have the advantages of working by the side of hers and sharing their prayers. If you cannot ar of one, you should ask your minister or Sun-y-school teacher if they are not going to start ie, for these societies are quite as important as nday-schools. If any of your parents or grown-friends want particulars about them, they can be tained from the C.E. Secretary, 56, Ludgate Hill, ondon, E.C.

"Moved with Compassion."

THESE were the words which met my eye on entering the Ragged School Union Cripples' Home at Southend-on-Sea a short time since. It was because the Saviour was "moved with compassion," and healed the cripples and helpless ones who were brought to Him, that His disciples try to restore and heal the afflicted little sufferers of to-day.

But you ask, "Is it possible to restore crippled children?" I should like you to put that question to the kind matron at Southend! Her eyes open wide at the very suggestion, and her mind at once goes back to many poor boys and girls who to her knowledge have really been made well, and in some cases returned home without their crutches, after a stay in the Cripples' Home.

I should dearly like to tell you of some of the children I met there, but I must content myself by relating one case. Poor Tommy! He is nine years of age, and lives in South London, his only play-ground—except the street—being the "leads" on the roof of the house, where his mother dries the clothes after washing. Here Tommy was one day playing, and, like most boys, took to climbing. While trying to get from one wall to another his foot slipped, and he fell to the court below, a distance of sixty feet! When he was picked up, it was thought that he was dead, but he soon showed signs of life, and every care was taken of him. He was in the hospital many months, and he spent a month at Southend, but though he had much improved, yet it is doubtful whether he will ever have the use of his legs again.

However, it is a fact that many of those who have visited the Home have been restored; but there is one thing which has been found to be of special benefit to these afflicted children—and that brings me to the object of my letter to you. A bathing machine is much needed for the cripples. Sea-bathing has done wonders for those who have been able to enjoy this luxury; but without special provision of the kind proposed, it is impossible, on account of expense. The cost will be about £10 and this amount I feel confident you will gladly give. Will you kindly send in your subscriptions to this object to the care of the Editor, I propose that the machine shall have the following lines painted in bold characters on the top or side:—

R. S. U. CRIPPLES' HOME
BATHING MACHINE.
PRESENTED BY THE YOUNG READERS OF The Christian.

And when you next visit Southend you must be sure and call at the Home, which is situated on the sea-front of South-church Beach, just beyond the Marine Park. Permission has already been obtained for the machine to stand on the beach in front of the Home, and the first year's rent for the space needed—10s.—has already been paid to the authorities. If you would like further particulars of the Home, they will gladly be sent by the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Personal.

The Indian Famine.—It has given me great pleasure to have received so many letters saying what you are giving up for the starving millions of India. One is going to ask for all her birthday presents to be given her in cash, that she may send it on; another is going to do without a new toy boat, and adds: "Perhaps I shall think of something else"; one will give up the twopence her mother gives her for sweets on Saturday for nine weeks; and others are going to give up their jam, cakes, etc. But I find it impossible to acknowledge all your contributions under the names of things given up as I had intended

I am afraid that some of you found the Searcher too long last week, so I am making this one shorter; but you did very well, and we do not know what we can do till we try.

Last week I was unable to give the exact number of Protestant missionaries among the 400 millions of Chinese, but I can now give it as 2600, belonging to fifty-one societies. Reckon how many Chinese that means to each missionary.

Several of my nephews and nieces forget to give their age. I want it written under the signature every week.

Gladys Isaac.—You should write your letters in ink, unless under ten, or in bed. Any tidy paper may be used. Margery Smart.—I do not give stars when you find the questions hard, only for neatness, etc. Lancelot Knight, Texas.—If you post your answers the first Monday after you get The Christian you will be all right. I am glad to have a nephew in San Antonio. You might introduce some more. Miss Williams.—I am so glad your girls find the Searchers so helpful, and do indeed sympathise with them. I wish we could make a special class for children who have had little or no education, but it would be very difficult. Helen Gartshore.—I hope Leslie will soon be stronger and able to keep pace with the Searchers. I hope, Gertrude Kingerlee and Annie Fosten, you may soon be blessed with restored health; but sickness, when sent, is also a blessing if we can thank God for it. Kathleen Shackelton.—Many thanks. Your pretty letter would have been much prettier if you had written your name straight. Theodora Hill.—I am glad you realise that if the questions are sometimes hard they help us to get on better. Every difficulty overcome is a step up. Frances Bennett.—It is a good plan to read the Bible with a commentary, but it is more important still to meditate upon its truths and seek the promised guidance of the Holy Spirit. God will bless you for your wish to be a missionary, and as soon as He means you to go He will open the door, but there is very much to learn and practise first. Francie and Aileen Figgis.—I am sorry to hear you are both ill. Louie Penny.—Your paper was very neatly done. Flora Simmons.—By all means write your letter on a separate piece of paper.—G. and R. Brookfield.—Please write your names and ages at the top of the paper, not on a separate sheet. D. A. Bennie.—What you sent did very well, but narrower ribbon is better. Miss Gurney.—The papers shall be examined, and indexed accordingly. Queenie Dale (Bombay).—By the time you read this I hope you will be quite well again. Maria H. Lister (S. Africa).—Try and write your paper in ink, as the pencil marks become so faint I can scarcely read your answers. Trevor Matthews.—Your name was inserted for January 28 in my private list. R. H. Williams—Make your answers more readable; leave a margin, in which write the references, and leave a space between each answer. E. E. Quick.—The name you mention was not intended for you. S. Douglas-Jones.—I have noted the error in your name. Mrs. Wood and Mr. Moir.—Thanks for your letters: see the key given this week. One mistake excludes the name from the "correct" list. Christine Arnold.—The sooner you can send the better it will be.

Young Abstainers' Union.—The post of Central Secretary of this important society—the aim of which is to influence children not permitted to attend Band of Hope meetings—has been accepted by Mrs. Dukes, a lady of some years' experience in the mission field. The central office is at 23, Exeter Hall, W.C.

Evangelistic Notes.

A TWELVE days' mission has been conducted by Rev. William Backhouse, at Astley, Lancs. Prior to the mission a week of prayer was held, and on the first night several young women were led to surrender to Christ. On Sunday, January 17, the mission proper commenced. In the afternoon a young people's service was held. The evening service will long be remembered, many coming out as inquirers. Not one day's service passed without conversions. A pleasing feature is that many young men and women have given themselves to Christ.

At Newbottle, one of the most successful month's missions ever experienced in the village has been held by two young evangelists (Messrs. Bradford and Braithwaite) with the Gospel mission car. These began work on January 17, and for a month every night, without exception, the chapel has been crowded out. There was not a single service held but sinners came to seek pardon.

Listowel, co. Kerry, has a population of 3000, not more than 100 of these being Protestants. It has eighty public-houses, doing a thriving trade. In the midst of this darkness Messrs. T. M. and W. H. Carleton, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have carried on a Gospel campaign for nearly two months. The meetings were held in one of the society's wooden halls erected in the market yard. Crowds of Roman Catholics attended, and many professed to find cleansing in the precious blood. Rev. G. C. Grubb was present at the closing meetings, and his address on "The Unsearchable Riches of Christ" will not soon be forgotten.

Mr. C. H. Judd writes: "Praise the Lord for much blessing on three weeks' mission in Broxburn, near Edinburgh. A number of souls professed decision, and many believers have been helped forward. I am now holding a similar mission, specially for believers, in Wishaw."

A ten days' Gospel mission has been held at Christ Church, Forest Gate, by Mr. Henry Thorne, Feb. 13 to 22. God has used his servant in telling out the old, old story to the conversion of many souls. Even at the close of the mission, a boy—whose father is an atheist and a blasphemer—who had never been taught to pray, came humbly to the vestry door, wanting to know more about Jesus.

C. G. P.

A three weeks' mission has been held in Springburn, Glasgow, the Sighthill Free, Springburn U.P., and the Springburn North Free Churches uniting in the effort, and the evangelist being Mr. Samuel McKenzie. Despite the severity of the weather the meetings were well attended, the interest increasing to the close. Mr. McKenzie would be described as a "solid man," one who "ploughs deep." Before he has uttered many sentences the hearer finds that he is feeling for his conscience. His lucid and faithful presentation of the old Gospel, and his stirring appeals to the heart, have been much blessed, and many will never forget his visit, for from it they will date their new life. A. G.

Rev. C. H. Yatman's Mission in Belfast has been continued with growing interest. The week-night attendances have gradually grown until on Friday night the great Grosvenor Hall was crowded to excess. The Sunday services began with an early-morning workers' "love-feast." At the morning service Mr. Yatman spoke on faith, at the afternoon service for women only on "Lot's wife," and in the public service he based his address on a card distributed to the audience. The card contained the following covenant: "Helped by the Holy Spirit, I will, this day, turn from all my sins unto God; I will trust Jesus Christ as my Saviour; I will confess and follow Him; and this I do freely and for ever." The evening service was the crown and climax of the remarkable gatherings of the mission. At 6.30 o'clock the surging masses had permeated every available spot of the building, and it was with considerable difficulty the preacher himself could make his way to the platform. There must have been 3500 people in the building, whilst many were obliged to turn sadly away for want of room. The after-meeting in the minor hall is described as an altogether a remarkable scene. While yet later, a "men's" service held in Ginnett's Circus was also followed by many tokens of blessing. The mission concluded with a farewell meeting held with much enthusiasm on Monday evening.

Miss M. H. Haddon has concluded a ten days' mission services in the Wesleyan Chapel, Coxley. Many of God's own people were greatly revived and quickened, and several young men and women were led to decide for Christ. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. The prayers of your readers are asked for on behalf of the Bible-class and the continuance of the work. R. B.

A ten days' mission has been held in St. Patrick's Church, Newry, by J. P. Cushing, whose discourses night after night were listened to by overflowing congregations. The mission aroused much interest in the town, and many were deeply impressed for good by the services. During the meetings Gospel addresses were delivered in the afternoon in the Institute, Hill-street, and these were also largely attended.

The united revival meetings led by Rev. B. Fay Mills, in Kokomo, Indiana, have grown to large proportions. On the second Sunday the meeting-houses were full in the morning, and at the Opera House, which was packed largely with unconverted persons, Mr. Mills gave an address of great power, and 100 rose for prayer. In the afternoon meeting about 400 pledged themselves to a better life. At night Mr. Mills preached to 2000 men, while an overflow meeting was held in the Christian Church. One week-day the business houses throughout the city closed in the afternoon. As many as 700 persons have remained for the inquiry meetings. The work is reaching the non-church-going classes.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a nine-days' mission at Monmouth. The services were continued for two evenings longer, and the ingathering of souls has been most cheering.

Mr. Lane at Birmingham.

THERE are few places where young men are harder to reach than the "Hardware city" of the Midlands. Mr. Lane is strongly of opinion that there are hundreds who will not enter the door of a church or chapel, or even of a Y.M.C.A., and he urged the local friends to secure a hall away from the Association, in order that some of them might be reached. This course was adopted, and the Exchange Hall in New-street was taken for the purpose, the wisdom of the step being amply justified by subsequent results.

The Mission which was preceded by a week's prayer meetings, commenced on Feb. 19, with a social gathering of members and associates, at which Ald. White acted as host. As the outcome of Mr. Lane's impressive address, based on the question, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost?" a goodly number signified their desire to follow Christ. Saturday evening was well occupied with a gathering of workers. On Sunday afternoon the missioner addressed nearly 1000 men at the P.S.A., and in the evening conducted a large mixed meeting in the Town Hall, after the ordinary services in places of worship were over.

From the Monday to the Friday, crowds of men, most of them young men, assembled each evening, the numbers varying from 300 to 600, and a very deep sense of the presence and power of God was manifested. On one evening alone, forty stood up in the after-meeting, in a quiet, solemn manner, without excitement, saying in answer to the invitation to follow Christ, "By the grace of God I will." At one meeting the need of personal purity was dealt with, and at another Mr. Lane gave an impressive account of his conversion, Brief addresses were given by the evangelist at the United Daily Prayer Meeting, which is held at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., and many Christian friends were gathered together, and deeply enjoyed the season of spiritual refreshment.

Nyasa Industrial Mission.—The Executive Council of this Mission have decided to carry forward the work solely by the aid of the actual gifts of God's people, and without loans. They have determined to repay the small amounts placed at their disposal as free loans, at the earliest possible moment.

Ecuador and the Gospel.

At the Noon Prayer Meeting last week testimony was given by Rev. George S. Fisher, secretary of the Gospel Union, a missionary organisation with headquarters in Kansas City, U.S.A. Amongst several interesting items he gave a brief description of the way in which Eucador, that has been closed against evangelisation for three centuries, was in the providence of God suddenly opened up for the preaching of the Gospel.

The Roman Catholics have held unlimited sway in this province, controlling the civil government and keeping the people in spiritual darkness and bondage. Fresh accessions of priests have been drafted into the country from Spain and Italy, and the doors have been fast locked against the light of the Gospel.

The breaking out of war between China and Japan does not, on the face of it, appear to have any close connection with the spiritual liberties of the Ecuador; but it so fell out. In the course of the war China felt her need of increased naval armament. The South American Republic of Chili possessed an ironclad, for the purchase of which negotiations were opened by a Chinese envoy. The President found himself unable to consent to sell, being bound by the comity of nations. But what could not be done directly was done by a circuitous process. Chili offered the President of Ecuador £80,000 if he would act as middleman between herself and China. He consented; the ship was transferred from Chilian waters to those of Ecuador. The Chilian flag was hauled down and the new colours were hoisted; and the small and negligeable country of Ecuador transferred the ship to China.

In this transaction a very important factor was left out of the calculation, the people of Ecuador. They rose in their wounded pride as one man, declaring that if Ecuador was a little country she was still a gallant country, and they protested against their flag being sold for gold. Before their anger the president and his accomplices fled, and a devoted reformer who had been expatriated for preaching and demanding liberty for Ecuador, was informed by cable that if he would return at once to his native country he should be placed in the presidential chair. This he accordingly did, and a tremendous revulsion at once took place. Instead of papal bondage and exclusiveness, Ecuador at last breathes the air of freedom. Amongst the first to avail themselves of the change was the Gospel Union of Kansas City, which has already established two mission stations in the country, with three missionaries in each.

There is manifestly an urgent need for believing prayer that this gallant little Republic may be delivered from the plots and revolutions to which these South American States are subject, and the glorious Gospel of liberty and salvation may at last have scope to win its way in Ecuador.

Young Christians' Missionary Union.

A gathering in connection with this organisation took place on Saturday evening last, at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. The area of the building was crowded, and several hundreds were in the galleries. The proceedings were preceded by a public tea in Hawkeston Hall followed by a conference at which about 250 were present.

The chair was taken by Rev. F. B. Meyer, the President of the Union for the current year. He expressed his intense interest in the movement, and announced his intention of endeavouring during his year of office, to bring it under the notice of the young Christians of all the London churches. He considered that independent churches should each have their own missionary, and that the Young Christians' Missionary pledge should be placed in the hands of all our young church members.

The succeeding speakers followed very largely upon these lines in speeches which were marked by much intensity and power. A copy of the "Young Christians' Missionary Pledge" having been placed in the hands of all present, there was great promise that in many cases a sincere response would be given to the call for consecration to the missionary work

A similar gathering will be convened in another part of London about a month hence.

In response to an invitation from Gloucester Friends, it is intended to hold the Spring Conference of the Friends' Temperance Union in that city, on the 22nd and 23rd March. A very interesting programme has been prepared.

American Evangelism.

In a summary of Evangelistic work, the New York Voice of Feb. 18 says:—

Mr. George C. Needham is still labouring in Brooklyn at the First Baptist Church and with good results. Rev. Thomas Harrison, better known as the "boy preacher," has begun evangelistic services in the North Second-street Church. Meetings will be held every night for at least a week. At the Union M.E. Church, revival services have been held nightly for three weeks, with increasing interest. At the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Rev. James H. Gilbund, pastor, revival services were begun on Sunday evening, which will be continued for two weeks.

A most remarkable revival season came to a close last week in Augusta, Ga., where Rev. Mr. Gales has been holding evangelistic services for over two weeks. The spiritual life of the people has been quickened, and many new converts have united with the various churches of the city. On Sunday Mr. Gales began a revival campaign in Baltimore, and that city will experience a great awakening. Rev. Sam P. Jones and Rev. George R. Stuart are in Nashville. They are doing for that city what they did for Boston. Immense crowds flock to to hear them, and conversions are of nightly occurrence.

Returning to New York, Rev. Dr. Dixon has resumed the daily meetings in Cooper Union. Commander Ballington Booth, of the American Volunteers, holds a noonday meeting in the Metropolitan Temple, Seventh-avenue and Fourteenth-street, every Tuesday. These meetings are attended by business men, clerks, shoppers, workmen, and representatives of the unemployed. Much interest is manifested, and the meetings, which are purely evangelistic, promise to become a feature of the permanent religious life of the city. On Sunday afternoon Mr. Moody preached as usual in Carnegie Music Hall. His sermon was based on the parable of the rich man (Matt. vi. 20). At the Seventh-street M.E. Church on Sunday evening Amanda Smith, the coloured evangelist, began a series of extra meetings, at which much interest was manifested.

Romanism in Spain.

A Christian worker in Spain writes:—

Years of residence in Spain have opened our eyes to the character of Roman Catholicism where she holds the supremacy. Christians who never leave the British shores can have no conception of the true nature of the system. By petty, but incessant and cruel, persecution Rome "wears out the saints of the Most High" here in Spain. It exasperates all one's sense of justice to read such letters as that of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick in a recent issue of The Times, asking "Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen of England to grace the celebration of her 'Diamond Jubilee' in Ireland by completing the work of Catholic emancipation." The bishop speaks of "perfect religious equality," and pleads for a Catholic university to be founded and endowed. O England, how thou art gulled! By thy worship of liberty thou wilt sell thine own freedom.

In Spain to-day archbishops and parish priests cry out for the return of the "Holy Inquisition" to "rid the land of Protestant heretics." The cry of Viva la Virgen; muera los Protestantes ("Live the Virgin; death to the Protestants") rings daily in our ears, and the mob has stoned us while three priests stood by to encourage them, many shouting, "Kill them, kill them; no one will punish you, the Queen is on our side," meaning that she is a Roman Catholic. Think not this conduct is the fault of the poor oppressed Spanish people. No; they are a noble race, but their misguided Government upholds Romanism while the whole nation writhe and groan to be free from the cruel tyranny. We are daily conversing with Spanish Roman Catholics, and can prove all we state.

Our Wild Birds.—The report of the Society for the Protection of Birds describes the constant efforts made for the preservation of the bird-life of the land from ruthless extermination. Some progress is recorded, but the excessive destruction of larks and lapwings, the passion for wearing "ospreys," involving the cruel slaughter of the white heron and similar barbarous practices are still to be deplored. The secretary of the society is Mrs. F. E. Lemon, Hillcrest, Redhill.

Bible Society of Scotland.

The annual public meeting of this society was held last week in the saloon of the Royal Hotel, Edinburgh. There was a good attendance. The Earl of Moray, who presided, spoke of the progress of the work of the society, especially since the amalgamation of the eastern and western societies thirty-six years ago.

Rev. James S. Nisbet, visiting secretary, submitted the report of the past year, which with regard to finance stated that the full income had been £19,182, which, with returns from Scriptures sold, made the entire revenue £31,070—an increase of £2093, due to legacies and donations. The expenditure necessitated by the society's expanding work fell short of the income by £45. With regard to the issues, the report stated that Bibles, Testaments, and portions to the number of 705,610 were circulated during the year in more than thirty different lands by the hands of 490 colporteurs and 170 agents and missionary superintendents. For the first time for many years there was a decrease in the issues, but it was in portions, was practically confined to two countries, and arose from exceptional causes.

Rev. Dr. Williamson said that never perhaps had the Bible been assailed more vigorously and more fiercely than in the course of this century by sceptics, by agnostics, and by different classes of the enemies of the Divine truth. He made bold to say that every archæological discovery which had been made in Chaldea, in Egypt, and in Palestine had gone to attest the truth of the historical parts of the Scriptures which they had. The nations that had disappeared from the face of the earth long, long ago, had given up their testimony to the truth, and they knew what had been brought from Egypt to attest the truth of the Word of God. The Bible is the engine of civilisation. If they were to change the face of a country; if they were to bring a barbarous tribe up to the standard that they would desire, they could not do it by legislation, they could not do it by education. It was simply by presenting to that people the truth as it was in the Word of God. Some people who sneered at that still marvelled at the achievements which that Word had effected. Alluding to the city of Benin, he expressed the hope that through the agency of Christian missionaries in years to come that terribly vast, howling wilderness might yet be turned into a garden of the Lord.

The other speakers included Dr. Duff, Rev. Mr. Henderson, Sir John Cowan, and Rev. Mr. Hamill.

Sandgate Soldiers' Institute.

The report of the Soldiers' Institute, Broadway, Sandgate, founded in 1858 by Miss L. J. Papillon, tells of the opening of the new Home in July last. Since then the work has gone on with much encouragement: "We have already had much blessing in the new Home, both among soldiers and civilians, and all feel that our move is of the Lord. Many soldiers, of course, come into our Home and make use of the downstair rooms who do not come up to the meeting. To these we give a friendly invitation, which is often accepted. They are also drawn up by the singing. A remarkable instance of this occurred on September 22 in the case of a young soldier who was passing and felt impelled to come in. He came up to the meeting and afterwards, as he seemed to be in trouble, he was spoken to. He said he had for three years been trying to live a good life, or, as he expressed it, trying to be good. But upon being shown that the Lord Jesus could alone make him so, he listened eagerly to the texts quoted to him and finally, with two or three other Christians, knelt down, and in the self-same words of Peter of old, cried, 'Lord save me or I perish.' The cry was graciously heard and answered. This was the commencement of a remarkable wave of blessing among the Provisional Battalion lads who attended."

Copies of the report may be had of the secretary, Mr. F. P. Moore, 52, Guildhall-street, Folkestone.

Dockhead, S.E.—The report of the Percy Mission Hall shows that the first year's work in the new hall has been most encouraging. Special missions have been held, also Sunday evening Gospel services, indoor and outdoor, and visitation from house to house. With these are carried on a wide variety of missionary and S.S. operations among the poorest of the poor as well as relief-work, often sorely needed. The secretary is Mr. W. Bustin, 13, Priter-road, Bermondsey, S.E.

Letters to the Editor.

THE JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

Dear Sir,—May I suggest that all Christian friends who take a helpful interest in various branches of the Lord's work at home and abroad should exercise special care at the present time, when large funds are being raised for national and philanthropic objects, lest works of a definitely spiritual character should suffer from diversion into other channels of the support usually afforded to them. May I even go further, and suggest that the Lord's people should, in giving expression to their thankfulness for the peace and prosperity the nation has so long enjoyed under the wise rule of our loved and honoured Queen, in their sympathy with our fellow-subjects in India in their sore distress, be careful that their gifts are entrusted to those who will consider the needs of the soul as well as the body, and will seek to administer the Word of God in its simplicity and entirety.

The homes, orphanages, medical missions, and other efforts of a spiritual and evangelical character, which much need strengthening, are in great danger of suffering through the large commemoration funds, etc., now being raised. Ought we not to feel our responsibility to stand by our brothers and sisters in Christ, who are devoting their lives to such work for God?—Yours faithfully, A. B.

OUR INDIAN TROOPS.

Sir,—With respect to the terrible condition of our Indian Army in regard to contagious disease, I venture to suggest, as a means whereby this monster evil might at all events be held in check, that an earnest, zealous chaplain be associated with a like-minded medical officer, and that they be detailed to inaugurate a crusade together—the one taking the spiritual, the other the physical side of the question. They should visit various large cantonments and hold meetings among the men.

I feel sure that commanding officers would afford all reasonable facilities to the men to attend; and if the experiment were crowned with success the agency might be indefinitely extended. Father Mathew, single-handed, wrought a wondrous reformation in Ireland in regard to drink, and I believe that a like reformation would be wrought throughout our Army were the means suggested put in force.—Your obedient servant,

W. D. Chapman, Captain
(Late Madras Staff Corps).

Mr. F. Murphy in Boston.

Any one in the vicinity of Dock-square at high noon, during the last few weeks, would have noticed a decided drift of the humanity that ebbs and flows through that historic breathing-place toward Faneuil Hall. On the platform, flanked by local ministers and Christian laymen, is Francis Murphy, who for twenty years has been an apostle of temperance. At every gathering Mr. Murphy appeals to those bound by the rum habit to break their shackles and to come into the liberty with which Christ makes men free. Perhaps the most interesting part of the service is when he brings forward his reformed men, all quite new to platform speaking. But the transformation through which they have passed makes their simple words of testimony more moving than studied eloquence. They tell of a new joy and life in the place of despair, of the gratitude of wives and mothers for their rescue, of scenes around their family firesides such as have not been witnessed there for years, and of their intention, with God's help, to take their old places again in society and business.

Mr. Murphy, in his seven weeks' campaign in Boston, claims to have received not less than 7,000 signatures to his temperance pledge. He has transferred his evening meetings from Berkley Temple to Park-street Church.—Congregationalist.

The "Dayspring" Missionary Ship, which was wrecked in October last on a coral reef near the New Caledonia Islands in the South Seas, will, in all probability, have a successor. From the latest issue of "Quarterly Jottings from the New Hebrides," we learn that the insurances effected on the vessel amounted to £5000, and as she originally cost £7000 there is a dead loss of £2000. On the wreck being reported, friends of the work came forward with promises amounting to £1300. It remains with the New Hebrides Mission Synod and the churches immediately responsible to say whether a new vessel shall be procured.

Temperance Notes.

The Temperance Permanent Building Society reports an increase of £59,134 in the advances made during the year.

Principal Owen, who has been appointed to the See of St. David's, will be an addition to the number of teetotal Bishops.

A Bill for exempting the Houses of Parliament from the licensing laws has been introduced into the House of Commons by Lord Stanley.

The Lord Mayor has placed the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House at the disposal of the National Temperance League on March 27 for an afternoon meeting on "Total Abstinence and Commercial Life."

The great National Prohibition Convention to be held in Newcastle-on-Tyne will extend from April 3 to 9 inclusive. In addition to the convention proper there will be great meetings each evening in Olympia, the largest building in Newcastle.

American newspapers significantly report at the end of a month of special revival effort in Boston that the liquor dealers of the city are complaining seriously because business is bad. May it grow worse, until every saloon door has been shut by the Gospel!

The Women's Total Abstinence Union held an afternoon meeting for Hospital and other trained nurses at Grosvenor House on Wednesday week. A large company assembled, the chair being taken at 3 p.m. by Lady Elizabeth Biddulph. Prayer was offered by Mrs. Servante and addresses were delivered by Mr. A. Pearce Gould, F.R.C.S., an Miss A. W. Richardson, B.A.

Frank Dymond has been conducting a temperance mission amongst Radnorshire villages with much success. On the 14th ult., he was at Llandrindod Wells, at each of which he had very acceptable service. A united and well attended Gospel Temperance meeting was held at the Presbyterian Chapel. On the 15th and 16th he held meetings at the Llanyre meeting-house, breaking virgin soil, these being the first total abstience meetings ever held in the parish. On the 17th inst. the Lower Assembly Room, Llandrindod, was crowded.

The Liquor Commission at its last week's sitting heard evidence from Mr. Macdonald, Chief Constable of Hawick, who laid much stress on the intolerable evils of the clubs. Rev. W. Mantle, of Devonport, urged that the Chief Constable should have a free hand in dealing with publicans and infringements of the law. Mr. Bielby, Superintendent of Constabulary in the West Riding of Yorks, found the bonâ fide traveller his chief difficulty. Tied houses and their evils were spoken of by Rev. J. T. Lockwood, of Widford, and Mr. Richardson, of Lincoln.

Open-Air Mission.

The South London Auxiliary of this Mission celebrated its fortieth anniversary by a crowded and enthusiastic meeting at Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, on Tuesday evening, February 23. The chair was occupied by Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., whose address delighted the audience by its sympathy and geniality. Earnest and helpful addresses were also delivered by Rev. W. Williams, pastor of the church, and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch.

The report of the auxiliary, read by Mr. G. E. Arkell, hon. secretary, showed a wonderful record of work accomplished on the microscopic income of £50. South London appears to be covered by a network of open-air services under the auspices of the auxiliary during the summer, while the training and edification of the preachers is by no means neglected.

The Christian Cabmen's Association represents an interesting work among a large class of men. Three city missionaries regularly visit the fifteen thousand cabmen of London, in their homes or shelters. The association unites in Christian fellowship and evangelistic work a body of earnest men. It has five branches, in the work of which several devoted ladies and gentlemen lend a hand. The general secretary is Mr. Thomas Gent, 68, Warlock-road, St. Peter's Park, W.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing in connection with mission to begin in Orange Hall, Raphoe, on March 7 next, to be conducted by Mr. Crawford.—For a mission to be conducted by Mr. Fredk. Hart at Langwathby and Edenhall, Cumberland, March 6 to 15.—For an eight days' mission in Deptford, March 7 to 14, conducted by Mr. Henry Hall and a band of Christian soldiers.—For a three-weeks' mission at Polruan Wesleyan Church, Cornwall, by Mr. S. W. Clegg.—For a mission at Byron-hill Chapel, Harrow, February 28 to March 4, conducted by Mr. Newton Jones.—For much blessing on a mission to Jews and Gentiles to be held in Southsea from March 7 to 21 by Messrs. J. Clancy and E. Samuel.

International S.S. Lessons.

Saul the Persecutor Converted (Acts ix. 1-12, 17-20).

Golden Text.—1 Tim. i. 15.

With this lesson we begin the story of the life of Paul, which will largely occupy our attention throughout the year. His conversion may be properly described as a miracle performed by Jesus after his resurrection. It would be a gigantic miracle if the waters of Niagara were suddenly made to flow in the opposite direction; in the presence of such a phenomenon we should eagerly seek for the cause. Not less remarkable is the fact which this lesson describes. It shows us Saul of Tarsus as he was, rushing with all the impetuosity and force of his nature in one direction; it describes the method in which his strange course was arrested, and it shows us the beginning of an entirely new life, having a different end, and influenced by different motives, than he had known before.

Before studying the story, let one of the scholars read 1 Tim. i. 14-16, giving special emphasis to the words "for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe." It is important to know that Paul was converted, and how, but it is much more important to seek a similar experience ourselves. The other accounts of this event as given by Paul himself should be read in connection with this. Acts xxii. 3-16; xxvi. 9-18.

I. Saul as a Persecutor (1, 2).—It is not the first time he appears in this character. He was probably one of "them of Cilicia" (vi. 9) who disputed with Stephen; and he had his share in the condemnation and stoning of Stephen (vii. 58; viii. 1). He threw his whole heart into the work of persecution. He "breathed threatening and slaughter" (R.V.), as though he lived for that purpose alone. Compare his own statements (xxii. 4, 5; xxvi. 10, 11). He went to "the high priest"—either Jonathan, or Theophilus, sons of Annas, and brothers-in-law of Caiaphas—and obtained letters which were his authority for persecuting the saints unto strange cities. Damascus was about 140 miles north-east of Jerusalem, and was one of the most ancient cities in the world. Its population at that time was very great, and included not less than about 50,000 Jews. It is proof of the severity of the persecution that saints fled so far away; and proof of Saul's zeal that he pursued them to so great a distance.

In all this Saul was perfectly sincere. He was one of those alluded to by Jesus (John xvi. 2). He regarded Jesus as an impostor, and the saints as his dupes, and believed he was doing right in seeking to rid the world of a foolish and wicked superstition. But sincerity did not excuse his conduct. Often as he refers to it in after life, he never makes light of it. And though it was forgiven, yet the remembrance of it remained with him to the end.

II. The Persecutor's Course Arrested (3-9).—There were possibly other things which affected him before this remarkable vision. His journey toward Damascus had led him through some of the scenes of our Lord's ministry. Were these recalled to his mind as he journeyed? Stephen's disputation, and his appeal to the Word of God, and especially the spirit in which he died, must have impressed Saul. Had the question been already raised—"Is this the Christ after all?" And was this the reason why he persecuted all the more cruelly?

If the doubt was there, it was now to be settled for him. Tell the story—of the bright light—the voice and its message, the effect on the people, and on Saul himself. What did all this reveal to him? That Jesus was not dead, but was living in glory, whose splendour mortal eye could not behold; that Saul and his bitter hostility was fully known to Jesus, and was regarded as persecution directed against himself; that so far from visiting upon Saul the punishment which his sin deserved, there was rather an invitation to repent, and to cease kicking like an ox against the goad. During the three days of blindness (9) what visions he beheld! Perhaps then Jesus showed him his future work (xxvi. 16-18), and foretold some of the sufferings he would endure for his sake (16). The lessons for us are these:—He saw his own sinfulness; he saw Jesus as his Saviour, and he surrendered to Him. This is what conversion means.

III. The New Life Begun (10-20).—Of Ananias we know only what is here. He was a true brother to this new convert. In three things the evidence of conversion appears—(1) Prayer. "Behold, he prayeth" (11) as a cry is the first evidence of life in a child, so is prayer the first sign of spiritual life. (2) Confession. He "was baptised" (18), not in order to cleansing, but as an acknowledgment that Christ had cleansed him. (3) Service (19-20). He preached Christ, whom he had persecuted before (2 Cor. v. 17).

The Y.M.C.A.

NEW MADRAS BUILDINGS.

The foundation-stone of the New Madras Y.M.C.A. buildings was laid on January 29 by Sir Arthur Havelock, Governor of Madras. The ceremony aroused much interest, and was marked by cordial and appreciative speeches by the Governor and others. Miss Lucy Guinness sends an account, in which she remarks that "The new Y.M.C.A. building of Madras is an interesting illustration of the unity of the kingdom of Christ. Destined to serve India, it is being put up by England, India, and the United States. Friends in Great Britain have provided Rs.25,600 to buy the ground; over Rs.5000 have been paid and promised in India for the foundations; already Rs.25,000 have come from America for the superstructure, and Mr. Wanamaker (late Postmaster-General U.S.A.) has promised the balance required for the building, less the Government grant-in-aid."

BRIEF NOTES.

The German Y.M.C.A. in Finsbury-square has contributed over £30 for the relief of the famine-stricken in India.

The new building in Sackville-street, Dublin, is nearing completion. Over £2000 has been received towards the needed £7000.

The annual meeting of the Surbiton Association was held, by kind permission, at the Gables, on Thursday, Feb. 25. An encouraging report was presented by the secretary, Mr. Arthur Hill.

The Ipswich Association has had one of its most successful years, financially and otherwise. The Association is now out of debt, and the support it has received from all quarters is most encouraging.

A "thanksgiving celebration," in connection with the extinction of the mortgage debt, was held by the Bath Y.M.C.A. on February 24. The general secretary, Mr. A. H. White, presented a gratifying report of the work for the past year.

The annual meeting of the Camden Town Association took place on the evening of the 24th ult., under the presidency of Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P. Canon Aitcheson and Mr. Quintin Hogg, M.P., were among the speakers, and the report presented by the committee showed that much useful work had been accomplished during the past year.

Under the auspices of the N.E. Metropolitan District Union, a series of three great mass meetings for men have been held in the Victoria Theatre, Walthamstow, during the past week. Dr. H. G. Guinness spoke on "Impurity," Rev. Hugh Price Hughes dealt with "Gambling," whilst Canon Fleming spoke on "Drink." The Stratford Y.M.C.A. male choir and the Mile End Y.M.C.A. brass band led the singing. About 1000 men were present at each meeting, many of whom expressed an earnest desire to lead a new life.

A magnificent meeting was held in the Shaftesbury Hall on February 22, the occasion being the annual gathering of the Bournemouth Association. The hall was crowded to its utmost limits, many being turned away. The Dean of Norwich presided, and delivered an eloquent and impressive address on the power of the Gospel of Christ. The president, Capt. W. H. Dawson, briefly stated the needs of the Association financially, and the secretary, Mr. W. H. Aldis, gave a short report of the work of the past year which showed progress in all departments, the spiritual work being specially blessed. Rev. Dr. Pentecost gave an address.

The police or Burton-on-Trent have published the description of a man "giving the name of Wagstaff, about twenty-two years of age, 5ft. 9 or 10in. high, fair complexion, bold eyes, large nose, clean shaven, has slight impediment in his speech, dressed in black jacket and vest, grey trousers, of gentlemanly appearance." Apparently this man is working the Associations of the country. He presented a Birmingham Y.M.C.A. ticket at Burton (where he stole £6 in money and some blank tickets), and has evidently visited a number of other Associations intent upon felony. Association secretaries are advised to be on their guard, as there is a long catalogue of offences against "Wagstaff" for which he is "wanted" by the police.

The Salvation Army.—At the conclusion of the performance at the Prince's Theatre, Portsmouth, on Saturday night, Miss Ada Ward, the "leading lady," called her company together, and told them that she had renounced the theatre for ever in order to join the Salvation Army. She had cancelled all future engagements, she added, and would never enter a theatre again except to preach. Miss Ward, who had already donned the Salvation Army emblems, divided her wardrobe and jewellery among the company, and on Sunday night, attired in full army costume, preached at the local headquarters to a crowded audience.

The Y.W.C.A.

The anniversary meeting of the Wigtown branch was held on the 18th ult.

Mrs. Montgomery Boyle gave an interesting address on temperance to a large audience on Thursday last at a meeting of the members of the Taunton branch.

At the recent meetings of the Tobermory branch, Rev. D. Cameron delivered an address on "The Duties of Women," and Rev. W. Torrie Lismore on "Woman's Place in Society."

A public meeting for women in connection with the Arnside branch was held in the Institute on the 18th ult. Miss Entrican, travelling secretary, gave an earnest Bible address.

Mr. Llewellyn N. Tyack recently gave an illustrated lecture on "How Worlds are Made," at Clifton, in aid of the funds of the Morley House Y.W.C.A. Home and Registry Office.

At the quarterly social gathering of the branch at St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, an address was given by Miss Morley on the work of the Y.W.C.A. The members have increased from fifty to one hundred during the last two years. Great interest is being shown in the Bible classes and meetings.

A large gathering assembled in the Hall on the 17th ult., when the annual meeting of the Wisbech Y.W.C.A. took place. Miss Peckover, president, gave the opening address. Miss Gardiner, secretary, submitted the annual report, stating that they now had 65 members on the books. Miss Reynolds gave an address on the work of the Y.W.C.A. throughout the world.

The usual quarterly meeting of the Montreal branch of the Y.W.C.A. was held last month. Mrs. Stevenson, president, took the chair. Excellent reports relating to the various branches of the work were presented. 196 girls had been received at the Home, and situations found for 53. The training-school shows a steady work to be going on. All the various classes were in full operation, and the children had by no means been neglected. The new building is rapidly approaching completion.

Christian Endeavour.

Floating C.E. societies have been formed at Swansea and Newport.

A C.E. society in West Chester, Penn., has been holding a series of revival meetings of wonderful spiritual power, in which many persons have been led to Christ.

Mr. T. Roosevelt, president of Police Commissioners in New York, addresses, in the Golden Rule, a telling message to Christian Endeavourers on the duties and privileges of good citizenship.

The annual meetings of the Bradford and District Union have been held at Mannville Chapel. At the afternoon session Rev. Harri Bevan read a paper on "The Pledge and its Obligations." The report showed fifty-five societies affiliated with the Union and eleven junior societies, the total number of members as 2549.

Congregational Endeavourers in the States have for some time past supported Miss Abbie G. Chapin, of China, and Miss Annie Stockbridge, of India, missionaries under the Woman's Board of Missions. It is proposed they should also help support the American College for Girls in Constantinople and the Institute for Girls in San Sebastian, Spain.

A convention of the eighty-two societies comprised in the Nottingham Union has been held in Addison-street Chapel. At the afternoon workers' conference a paper was read by Rev. A. H. Sharman, on "The Christian Endeavour and the Temperance Movement." An interesting discussion followed, and the conference was brought to a close by the reading of a devotional paper by Miss Ross, on "Some Foes, and How to Conquer Them." At the evening meeting Rev. J. Calvert took the chair, and addresses were delivered by Revs. E. Fletcher Denton and E. Abbott.

Girls in Brighton.—That excellent institution The Girls' Shelter, Leopold House, Buckingham-road, Brighton, has for the last ten years been quietly doing a most important preventive work by rescuing young girls in circumstances of danger, and enabling them to obtain respectable situations. No one of the large audience which filled the music-room of the Pavilion at the recent annual meeting presided over by the Countess of Chichester, could have listened to the stirring appeal of Prebendary Webb-Peploe without being convinced that such a home is needed in Brighton. As one result of that appeal a friend has promised a contribution of £50 if nine others can be found to do the same, so as to clear off the £500 of purchase-money needed to make the house the property of the committee. The hon. treasurer is Mr. D. Neve, 3, Hervey-terrace, Brighton.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

OXFORD.

Last Sunday week the Archdeacon of London occupied the University pulpit, and at the special service in the evening for members of the University the address was given by Rev. Winnington Ingram.

The head of the Oxford House, Bethnal Green, Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., delivered a lecture on Friday in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., in connection with the Protestant Reformation Society, on the subject of "The Two Papal Bulls of 1850 and 1896." On Sunday morning he preached at St. Peter le Bailey on "Altar and Sacrifice," and in the evening at St. Aldate's on "Confession and Absolution." Such subjects are needed in Oxford just now, and Dr. Wright is just the one to deal with them.

A meeting has been held at Mansfield College on behalf of the London Missionary Society. The chair was taken by Dr. Fairbairn, and speeches were delivered by Rev. W. H. Harwood and Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P.

The report of the Church Army Labour Home here seems very satisfactory. The number of men who entered during the year was 113, and a very good proportion of them have turned out well.

CAMBRIDGE.

A meeting was held on Thursday, Feb. 25, in the Henry Martyn Hall, by the Cambridge Association for Promoting Social Settlements. Dr. G. Herron, Professor of Applied Christianity in Iowa College, U.S.A., delivered an address on "The Religious Element in the Social Movement of the Western American States."

On Friday last Bishop Tucker gave an interesting and helpful missionary address at the C.M.U. meeting in the Henry Martyn Hall.

Scottish Notes.

At the annual meeting of the Curr Night Refuge, Dundee, it was reported that during the past year over 7000 men had been admitted, and over 2600 women. The Working Girls' Home is a most useful adjunct of the institution. There are twenty two inmates in the Working Boys' Home, which continues to do a valuable work. Some of the speakers said the Refuge was not only a place for needed relief but a preventive to crime.

The annual meeting of the West Coast Mission was held last week in the Religious Institution Rooms, Glasgow. Dr. James Black, chairman, said the report of the mission for the past year was exceedingly gratifying. The work carried on by the agents was being attended with much blessing; copies of the Scriptures were given to persons who were without them. Christian literature is distributed, and occasionally suitable tracts have been translated into Gaelic. The more he knew about the work of the mission and the benefits it was conferring upon so many old and sick persons in the Western Islands, the more he felt that it deserved liberal support.

At the Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, last week was a very busy one. "Founder's Day" brought a large gathering to the annual meeting of the pioneer missions, which are quite a feature of the evangelistic work. Rev. William Ross gave a short sketch of the three missions, in which six Christian women laboured constantly with very wonderful success. He also gave an account of the work of the year, which had been upon the whole the most fruitful they had yet had. After a short time spent in giving personal testimony to the good received in connection with the missions by several of the audience, Lady Overtoun gave a touching address on the "Friendship of Jesus." Lord Overtoun expressed his delight at the continued prosperity attending this remarkable and necessary work. Mr. John Galloway gave several illustrations of the power of the Gospel. On Wednesday there was a very large audience at the communion thanksgiving service, and next night the Pillar Hall was filled with the members of the Bible-class and their friends.

Italian Evangelization.—In a recent letter Mr. E. C. Newbery writes: "I have found no surer way of reaching Italians than by free distribution of God's Word and tracts, and am convinced that no other means is so good; it opens up hearts and minds to us; before we ever open a hall I flood a place with truth, and deal individually with any I find waked up by God's Word. I distributed for ten months on and off here (Nice), before I opened a hall, and we have now full meetings. At Villefranche one of my helpers did the same for seven months, and there we cannot find room for the people. At San Remo I closed because there are now four denominations, and we were too many."

The Student Movement.

Over 2000 students, representing more than 200 colleges, have been present at the twelve conferences conducted by Mr. Mott, college secretary of the International Committee of the Y.M.C.A., in India, China, and Japan. There have also been present at these conferences nearly 100 missionaries and over 1000 Asiatic Christians. In India and China alone over 200 students volunteered to devote their lives exclusively to Christian work among their people.

Four conferences were held last autumn in China —at Cheefoo, Peking, Shanghai, and Foochow. This series not only marks the beginning of student conferences in China, but also of conferences for the deepening of spiritual life. One great purpose of these conferences was to consider the important part which Christian students of China must have in the evangelisation of their own country. 999 Chinese students, 235 Chinese teachers, 147 Chinese pastors, and 1001 other Chinese Christians, besides many missionaries and some other foreigners, were present —nearly 3000 delegates in all. Notwithstanding the difficulties of travel in China, nearly every province having missionaries was represented, from the borders of Mongolia to the southern province of Hainan, and from as far west as Shan-si and Sz-chuen. Fully 700 Chinese delegates have been led to covenant with God to keep the morning watch. Seventy-seven young men have decided to devote their lives to work for Christ among their own people. Others are having a great battle.

Mr. Donald Fraser writes from Livingstonia, telling of his recent tour through the South African colleges:—

"Education is yet in a very undeveloped condition in South Africa. The country is young, and the college life younger still. There are only three or four institutions in all South Africa which can properly be called colleges, and in these the number of students is very limited. But in the schools there is a very large number of young men and women, who have begun their education rather late in life, and many of whom are preparing for college. There is a great future before the Christian associations. They have gained a recognised position at the very start of the new educational era that is opening, and by the grace of God they will keep it. At Wellington not less than ten Bible study groups have already been formed among the men, and at Stellenbosch more than twenty-five. The girls' schools are ripe for a great work only a lady can do. She will find everywhere open doors, and hearts that long for Christ."

Richmond-street, Walworth.

The additional new building of the Richmond-street Mission having been opened by H.R.H. the Princess Christian in December, the annual meeting followed last week. Mr. J. T. Dunn presided. An encouraging report of the year's work was read by Mr. C. G. Barr, and Mr. T. W. How, the hon. secretary, gave an account of the building fund, from which it appeared that the new works had cost £3000, of which £300 had still to be raised. As the committee had undertaken to open the building free of debt, an endeavour to raise this within three months was to be made, several friends present undertaking to help clear off the amount. Addresses were given by Revs. J. Waite, an "old scholar" of Richmond-street, E. J. Davis, Messrs. A. Ross and A. H. Ward. The report for the year showed that the Sunday evening schools had an average attendance of 474 children and thirty-seven teachers. The afternoon school has 700 scholars and forty-six teachers, and several conversions in the senior classes were reported. Services for scholars are held on Sunday mornings and Tuesday evenings, as well as prayer meetings. Miss Cole conducts a Bible-class for the elder girls, and also has a servants' registry for obtaining them situations in Christian families. The Band of Hope has 379 members, a Society of Christian Endeavour for both juniors and seniors is carried on, while the members of the Evangelist Society conduct services in the open-air and in common lodging-houses.

The Evangelical Alliance.—It has been arranged to hold the fifty-first annual conference of this Society in Cambridge at the end of September next. No previous conference of the Alliance has taken place in this University town, and the proposal has awakened much interest. Principal Handley Moule, Dr. Moulton, and other leading Christian people of Cambridge have united in forming a representative committee for the local arrangements. The date fixed for the conference is September 27-29. The programme and other details will be supplied in due course by the secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS O. BEEMAN.

This devoted minister of Christ passed away on Sunday week, at his residence, 182, Earl's Court-road. He was known as an earnest Protestant, as well as a spiritually-minded man, and held with uncompromising fidelity the truths which were so dear to him. Mr. Beeman was a descendant of a Huguenot family, while his wife's ancestors shared in the persecutions by the Duke of Alva. He formerly occupied a position as a clergyman at Leicester, where his ministrations were greatly valued, and he subsequently filled his father's post at Cranbrook, Kent, where he was esteemed and loved by his people. In his later years he has been disconnected with the Church of England, though taking the liveliest interest in all recent church matters. He was one of the earliest members of the Committee of the Protestant Alliance. By pen and word he upheld the cause of the Saviour whom he loved.

REV. JAMES SMITH, TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

The death of the pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle, Tunbridge Wells, has caused great sorrow not only to the members of his own congregation, but to all members of the Christian Church in the town and district. About three weeks ago Mr. Smith was seized with a paralytic stroke, which affected the left arm and the right side of his face. Since then he was confined to his room, yet hopes were entertained that he would eventually recover. He, however, gradually got weaker, and passed peacefully away. At the close of his college career he accepted an invitation to Redhill, where he had been previously working as a student-pastor. Next he went to Haddenham, which was the scene of a prosperous ministry. He next became pastor of the church at York-road, Leeds, and at the conclusion of four years' ministry there he removed to Tunbridge Wells, where for the past sixteen years he has laboured with earnestness and success.

MR. STEPHEN SHIRLEY.

The venerable founder of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union passed away at his residence at Hendon on Wednesday, Feb. 24, after a severe attack of pneumonia, followed by other serious complications. Mr. Shirley became identified with the temperance movement so long ago as 1840. In May, 1855, he convened at his own residence a gathering of the most active Band of Hope workers in the Metropolis, and at this meeting it was decided to form a Band of Hope Union. The new organisation grew rapidly, until it developed into the present institution with its wide-spread influence, many departments of effort, and nearly three millions of members and workers. During the early years of the Society's existence Mr. Shirley's house was its home, and his time and thought were freely devoted to the promotion of its interests. He long held the position of chairman of the Union's committee, only vacating that office in May, 1892, and continuing to discharge until the end, his duties as a member of that body.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER.

The death is announced of Rev. Robert Hunter, M.A., LL.D., in his seventy-fourth year, at his residence, Forest Retreat, Epping Forest. Having graduated in Arts at Aberdeen University, and studied theology at the New College, Edinburgh, Dr. Hunter went as a missionary of the Free Church of Scotland to Nagpur, India, where he did several years' noble service. For some time after his return he resided in Edinburgh, and there he devoted himself to the preparation of a school "History of India," and a "History of the Missions of the Free Church." During the years 1864-66, he was resident tutor in the Theological College, Queen-square, London. On his retirement from that position he devoted himself to the great work of his life, "The Encyclopædic Dictionary," and after seventeen years' unremitting labours the work was published by Messrs. Cassell and Co. More recently this useful work was widely circulated under the title of "Lloyd's Encyclopædic Dictionary." During the progress of the dictionary, Aberdeen University conferred on Dr. Hunter the title of LL.D. He had since written a "Concise Bible Dictionary," also issued by Cassell and Co.

SIGNOR VARNIER, MESSINA, SICILY.

This devoted Sicilian evangelist fell asleep, aged 66, at Messina, on February 2. He had been ailing for some time, but the end came very unexpectedly. He was quite conscious, and his dying words to his son and to the son of his late colleague were "Let not the preaching of God's Word cease after my death." This last charge the two young evangelists, Signors D. Scuderi and Varnier, have resolved to carry out, looking for support and guidance to the Great Head of the Church. Signor Varnier directed that his body should be laid to rest near that of his late devoted fellow-witness to the truth, Rev. G. Scuderi, also a convert from the ranks of the Italian priesthood, so that both lie awaiting the resurrection at Mandaniei, where they first planted the standard of Scriptural truth in opposition to Romish error. The esteem in which these truly-converted priests were held was shown in a most marked manner at the funeral. The young evangelist, D. Scuderi, writes: "At the railway station a great number of people assembled to meet us, and they crowded sadly but decorously round the bier to bid the last farewell to their old teacher and friend. A great crowd followed us to the grave weeping." It ought not to be forgotten that Signor Varnier cheerfully chose a life of persecution, self-sacrifice, and, and poverty with the people of God in preference to ease and affluence in the Church of Rome. He leaves a widow and daughter, who are, it is to be feared, in financial difficulties.

Personalia.

Rev. F. B. Meyer will resume his Bible talks to young men at Aldersgate-street on Saturday afternoon next, March 6, at 3 p.m.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, organising secretary of the C.S.S.M., left England on Feb. 15, with a small party of friends, for a tour of about two months in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria, returning by Greece and Italy.

Mr. I. D. Sankey, en route for the Pacific Coast, held meetings in Chicago, St. Louis, and other cities, holding the attention and interest of large audiences with his addresses on "Sacred Story and Song," with illustrations rendered by himself.

Mr. J. H. Greene (of the Children's Special Service Mission), who spent last winter in mission work among the young people of India (chiefly at C.M.S. mission stations) will be prepared to conduct a few missions for children and young people in England in April and May. Where desired, the missions might end with a missionary meeting, with personal experiences. Mr. Greene's address is Engadine, Croham-road, South Croydon.

Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, has, we regret to learn, arrived in England from South Africa in very feeble health. He went, by medical advice, to Beaufort West, Cape Colony, last September, hoping to benefit from the warm dry air of the Karoo. In December however, he unfortunately contracted typhoid, and his medical man advised his immediate return to England as the only means to prolong his life. Will the Lord's people kindly remember our afflicted brother and his family at the throne of grace? He is staying at "Beaufort," New Clifton-road, Norbiton, Surrey.

"Liberator" Relief Fund.—The issue of fourth annual report has been unavoidably delayed through my somewhat serious indisposition since Christmas. I am thankful to say it is now in the printer's hands, and will be ready shortly. Of the 2770 cases now upon our books, 1450 are widows, or lone women, and 1360 are over sixty years of age.

J. Stockwell Watts, Hon. Sec.

The Lockhart Mission.—The Canning Town branch of this mission, Victoria Dock-road, reports continued steadiness and growth. Temperance work is kept well to the front, while Sunday-school and other operations are reported as well maintained. The grand aim of the whole is to win the people to Christ, and in this much encouragement has been granted. The superintendent is Mr. G. H. Driver, 8, Percy-road, Canning Town, E.

Progress in Shantung.—Dr. Thos. C. Paterson, of the Baptist mission in Shantung, China, writes from Ts'ou-ping: "The work here continues to prosper, and my colleagues have had the joy of receiving into church fellowship in this district 400 men and women during the year. Mr. Smyth, at present in England, who has carried on the medical mission since it was established here, is, I am glad to see, receiving the support of our society in getting the wherewithal to erect a hospital suitable to the requirements of his medical work, to which he returns next autumn."

The Aldenham Institute.—On Saturday night the annual meeting was held at the Institute, Goldington-crescent, Mr. Evan Spicer, L.C.C. presided. The eighteenth annual report showed that the roll at the close of the year numbered 325 members. The year had been one of decided progress. In connection with the Christian Workers' Union evangelistic work had been carried on, while breakfasts had been instituted for the needy poor on Sunday mornings. These breakfasts having been successful, were renewed on the last Sunday of November, and up to the end of December, 656 breakfasts had been given, or an average of 131 each Sunday. The educational classes, the clubs, and other agencies, had all been successfully continued. The report concluded by rejoicing at the decided advance of Christian work amongst the poor of the neighbourhood. Addresses followed by Mr. W. Noble and Rev. A. Connell.

THE BOOK WORLD.

MARCH MAGAZINES.

The Osborne Magazine (3d. Partridge) gives an illustrated sketch of Chief Justice Way, of South Australia, a distinguished member of the Bible Christian Connexion.

The Fireside, edited by Rev. C. Bullock, B.D. ("Home Words" Office. 6d.), has established a reputation for wholesome home reading. The issue for the month is lively, varied, and readable on every page.

Travel (3d. Horace Marshall & Son) finds its cycling commissioners in Persia, where they have had plenty of hazardous experiences. "Tlemcen, the City of Roses," is the theme of an illustrated paper, and there are the usual varied "Notes and News."

The Temple Magazine (6d. Horace Marshall & Son) has a paper, fully illustrated, by Justin McCarthy, M.P., on "A Night in the House of Commons," and tells the life-story of Florence Nightingale. The Home Service, conducted by Dr. Joseph Parker, is a feature of this monthly.

An article of special interest at the present time in Good Words is "In a Hospital Receiving Room." The institution referred to is the London Hospital in Whitechapel-road, and the reader cannot fail to realise what priceless public boons these great palaces of mercy are.

The Boys' Own Paper opens with a large coloured plate, "The Boys' Own Fowl Yard." Mr. R. A. R. Bennett writes admirably on the making of electric toys. Account is rendered of an interview with Canon Taylor Smith. The general contents are entertaining and instructive. (6d. R.T.S.)

The Sunday at Home. (6d. R.T.S.) Sir E. Maunde Thompson's illustrated paper on the Tell el-Amarna Tablets is concluded in this number. Dr. Monro Gibson writes on "Facts of Experience and Truths of Life"; and among other important articles, are "Life in West London," and "Inside the Church Missionary House."

The Expository Times has a very thoughtful article by Professor Alex. Stewart, of St. Andrews, on the "Homelessness of Christ" (Matt. viii. 19, 20). "Point and Illustration" is a department well worthy to rank with the Great Text Commentary, which still deals with John's Gospel. The archæological communications and critical discussions will greatly interest students. (6d. T. and T. Clark.)

The Quiver for March opens with an article by Lord Kinnaird on the Y.W.C.A., giving an outline of the varied and valuable work centering at the headquarters, Hanover-square. There is besides much good matter adapted to divers tastes. Papers by the Bishop of Derry and Dr. Parker will attract many. With the March part a fine plate is given of Holman Hunt's famous picture "The Light of the World."

Sunday Hours (Religious Tract Society) seems to be taking hold among the young folks. Many will find special interest in the results of the hymn competition, given in this number, in which over four thousand young people (classified according to age) took part. It is interesting to observe that the different sections agree in several leading hymns, and specially in pronouncing Mr. Midlane's "There's a Friend for little children" the most popular hymn of the day.

The Reporter's Magazine (4d.) and The Phonographer (3d.) each have memorial articles on the late Sir Isaac Pitman. The sketch in the former is profusely illustrated and of special interest. The latter magazine gives part of a letter written by Sir Isaac a few months ago, in which the veteran reformer says: "As there is no possibility of getting at the broken valve of the heart which is the cause of my weakness, I must expect a continual decrease of strength until the heart gives its last pulse and the angelic messengers who wait on the dying draw out the spiritual body from this one. Then I shall have a sound heart and get to work in my new sphere of life."

The Sunday Magazine is giving a series of sketches on "Answers to Prayer." Last month some of the wonderful experiences of Wm. Quarrier were related; this month it is Rev. Hugh Price Hughes who testifies. The instances he cites relate to mission work, and to financial needs, and are well calculated to strengthen the faith that God heeds the cry of his faithful servants and sends relief. As Mr. Hughes well remarks, "Such experiences are the commonplaces of real and active Christianity." The brief but beautiful sketch of the late Horatius Bonar, by his daughter, Mrs. Dodds, will be all the more welcome, because no full biography of the great Christian hymn-writer has been or is ever likely to be written. It was his express wish that no set memoir should be published.

Blackwood's Magazine is this month of very varied and well-sustained interest. The opening article is a sympathetic sketch of the services rendered in the Soudan by Col. Stewart, Gordon's staff officer at Khartoum. Like his chief, he bravely met death in the performance of duty. The writer of the sketch describes Gordon as "a man who sought guidance from above, and earnestly tried to follow, in great matters and small, what he believed to be the path indicated by the Almighty in answer to his prayers." Another article of timely import is "Saladin and King Richard—The Eastern Question of the Twelfth Century." The same Eastern question is with us still in all its tragic intensity—a fact which shows how little human progress can do to heal the sores of the world. (Blackwood. 2s. 6d.)

"The Strength and Weakness of Present-day Preaching" is the title of a thoughtful paper in The Preacher's Magazine (4d. C. H. Kelly) by Thomas Puddicome. He deals mainly with the modern complaint against dull and lengthy discourses, and thus sums up his sensible review: "Long or tedious sermons are largely due to imperfect preparation. Being uncertain of his ground, the preacher begins by apology or padding, and when he gets to his subject the time is well advanced. All this shows a bad workman. There has not been that thorough dealing with the subject which has rejected all that is important and compacted the sermon into one organic whole. As one said to me: 'If preachers only knew how much a good sermon is appreciated, they would try to give of their very best.'"

A NEW TESTAMENT HELP.

No New Testament help can compare in point of antiquity with the version in the vernacular of the social circle in which our Lord moved, which was also the domestic idiom of the Apostles and their contemporaries in Palestine and Syria generally. Not only for this reason, but on grounds of critical and exegetical utility, scholars have universally acknowledged the value of this venerable help. Therefore we welcome a seventh edition of The Syriac New Testament, translated into English from the Peshitto Version, by James Murdock, S.T.D. (10s. Boston, U.S.A.: H. L. Hastings; London: Marshall Brothers.) This work represents a direction of study which does not secure sufficient attention; and as we peruse its pages, we often realise the Oriental spirit more readily than is possible in the language of the Greek original. Those who study the Peshitto text will be glad to possess this version, as well as that of Etheridge (in two volumes), different alike in aim and treatment, and now very scarce. Dr. Murdock's translation follows the text of Buchanan and Lee, not overlooking other editions; and, accordingly, he gives from later Syriac versions those portions of the New Testament not found in the Peshitto itself. Prefixed to the translation, which is clearly printed in bold type, is a very instructive introduction on the Syriac version and its story, as well as a biographical sketch of the distinguished translator into English. These are from the facile pen of Mr. Horace L. Hastings, of Boston, and bear evidence of wide reading. There are two appendixes—one showing the distribution of the Syriac New Testament into lessons read in public worship in the Syrian churches; the other, by Isaac H. Hall, Ph.D., Litt.D., giving an account of the various translations of the New Testament into Syriac. As a witness to the antiquity and integrity of the New Testament records, almost certainly going back to the apostolic age, the Syriac version, often called "the Queen of Versions," is of priceless worth. This translation, with useful marginalia, is a goodly volume. It should be in all theological libraries, and private students will find its pages helpful in a high degree.

Enlisted: or, My Story. In noticing this book, in our last issue, a printer's error ascribed the authorship to Miss "Elsie Sanders," instead of Miss Elise Sandes, so widely known for her devoted work among soldiers.

Words of Advice for Seekers. By C. H. Spurgeon. (2s. Passmore & Alabaster.) Here are twenty readings, none of them long, but all of them pointed and terse, and sure to have many readers. And seekers who read the pages prayerfully will declare the advice sound and helpful.

Heroes and Heroines of the Scottish Covenanters. By Rev. J. Meldrum Dryerre. (1s. 6d. Partridge.) A capital handbook, outlining a great and glorious story in a striking way. The witness for God and conscience, borne by men and women in the days gone by, should not be forgotten, and this latest addition to the series of "Popular Biographies" will keep the memory alive among those who cannot read larger works.

Canada is the latest issue in the "Story of the Nations" series, and it is by J. G. Bourinot, C.M.G., LL.D., D.C.L., clerk of the Canadian House of Commons. (5s. T. Fisher Unwin.) There is romance in the past history of the Dominion, and the author of this book gives us many a glimpse of it. Coming to comparatively recent times, he deals with matters more distinctly within common knowledge, and whether estimating men or narrating critical occurrences, Mr. Bourinot shows a spirit of generous fairness.

The Witness of History to Baptist Principles, by W. T. Whitley, M.A., LL.D., Principal of the Baptist College of Victoria, is obviously controversial, but the pages are characterised by a reverent and courteous spirit. In addition to studies on distinctive teaching, there are chapters on sacerdotalism and sacramentalism, the right of private judgment, and the authority of Scripture—all of them well worth reading. (Alexander & Shepheard. 2s.)

The Old Faith or the New—Which? Teachings from the Epistle to the Hebrews. By C. E. Stuart. (3s. 6d., E. Marlborough & Co.) An excellent piece of work. Mr. Stuart combines introduction, criticism, interpretation, in a series of lucid chapters Christ is shown to be the centre of the Epistle, and the larger divisions set out by the author of this work are—The Person of the Son; His Official Position; The Sanctuary; The Sacrifice; Exhortations. Mr. Stuart holds Paul to have been the writer, and his exposition is replete with instruction on the first principles as well as the deeper teachings of the Gospel of Christ.

How to Preach with Power. By Rev. William Henry Young, Ph.D., sometime Professor of Homiletics in Acadia University, Nova Scotia. (Elliot Stock.) These pages are elementary, but that is nothing against them. They are practical, and that is in their favour. There are many hints on preaching with intelligence and efficiency—but as to the power? Well, the author does not overlook the place of natural endowment and the need for Divine equipment. Therefore, his book, though containing trivial as well as weightier things, will prove of service to some who cannot obtain more direct and complete instruction.

A History of Lay Preaching in the Christian Church. By John Telford, B.A. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) Perhaps this is, as the author thinks, the first attempt to tell the story of lay preaching. Our French brethren, in fighting clericalism, are delighted to inform priest-ridden Roman Catholics that our Lord was a "layman." The Gospel knows no caste clericalism; all believers are priests unto God, and those who have gifts are expected to use them in ministry. Mr. Telford knows no race or denominational limits in his narrative, but writes under the influence of a praiseworthy enthusiasm. His book deserves a wide circulation, for it is not only full of information, but a constructive argument for "liberty of prophesying," or freedom to preach, for the further development of which present-day needs constitute an urgent call.

An excellent map to illustrate the Cretan question is issued by Messrs. W. & A. Johnston, of White Hart-street, Warwick-lane. (1s. coloured, 2s. cloth.)

In our issue of Jan. 28 we gave an extract from an admirable booklet entitled, "The Spirit of Life." The author's name was given as J. H. Ball instead of J. H. Batt.

Religious Equality: In its Connection with National and Religious Life. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. This lecture, delivered in 1871, has been reissued in a handy booklet by Alexander & Shepheard. (4d.)

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier will publish during the spring a book by Rev. James Jeffrey, M.A., Trinity U.P. Church, Pollokshields. It is entitled "The Personal Ministry of the Son of Man: Studies in the Saviour's Application of his Own Teaching."

Lost Treasure Found. By I. R. C. (2d. London: Partridge. Birmingham: Caswell.) A choice booklet, specially for backsliders. By Scripture exposition, practical illustration, and practical appeal, the writer seeks to win back to the Father's house those who have gone astray.

Lay Workers and Their Training. By Rev. Edward C. Unmack, M.A., Rector of West Horsley, Leatherhead. (4d. Elliot Stock.) This booklet is pointed and brief, and one of its excellencies is that it gives inquirers an idea as to the directions in which to go for additional instruction and advice.

Messrs. Novello & Co. have published a collection of Twelve Hymns with Tunes suitable for use at services in commemoration of the Queen's long reign. The hymns have been expressly written by well-known writers, and the tunes in most cases are also specially composed. The selection may be heartily commended to all loyal singing folk. To be had in either notation price 2d.

The Search for God, by G. Sherrington-Morris, is a booklet in its second edition. It narrates a conversation, which took place some years ago in Madrid, between a Christian colporteur and an unbeliever who thought himself philosophic. The pages are likely to help some who hold infidel opinions or are distressed with doubts. (1s. 6d. per doz., post free, from 113, Merton-road, Wimbledon.)

Missions to Jews: a Handbook of Reasons, Facts, and Figures, for the pulpit and the platform, and for all interested in Church Missions to the Jews. By Rev. W. T. Gidney, M.A., Assistant Secretary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. The collection has been made with wisdom and diligence, and the result is a little book well worthy the attention of all who study Gospel work among the Jews. (6d. London Jews Society's House, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.)

On Some Disputed Points of Interpretation relating to the Prophecies recorded in the Book of Daniel and of the Last Days. (1s. Nisbet & Co.) This long title introduces an anonymous essay, all in one chapter, and not too clearly conceived. The author leaves little or no room for "Futurism" in his reading of Daniel. He regards Antiochus the Great as fulfilling the part of the Horn of the He-goat of Dan. viii. 9, and as precursor of the Mohammedan power of subsequent times. Hence it is obvious that the fortunes of the Holy Land have a special significance in the author's interpretation of prophecy.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

A missionary mission has been held with much interest in Nottingham.

An interesting mission has been concluded at Meads, Eastbourne, by Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence.

A Palestine Exhibition is being held this week in St. Helens, Lancashire, in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A.

The Bishop of Liverpool preached on behalf of the C.M.S. to a crowded congregation at St. Peter's, Warrington, on Sunday week.

Rev. E. Carr-Glyn was consecrated last week as Bishop of Peterborough; and at the same time Canon Trefusis as Bishop Suffragan of Crediton.

The Bishop of Chester consecrated on Thursday the new Parish Church of St. George, Heaviley, Stockport, erected at a cost of some £40,000 by the Christy family.

The anniversary festival of the Leeds Auxiliary of the C.M.S. was held on Tuesday week. The Bishop of Newcastle preached on behalf of the Society at the Parish Church.

At St. Stephen's, Coleman-street, during Lent, mid-day addresses will be given on Fridays by Rev. E. J. Kennedy, on "Foundation Truths of Christianity." The service will be from 1.15 to 1.45.

Rev. R. L. Allwork, who is resigning the curacy of St. Ann's, Stamford-hill, on account of delicate health, will be much missed in the parish. He has accepted the senior curacy of St. Mary's, Southampton.

The Bishops of London and Rochester and Bishop Barry gave addresses on "Social Purity" at midnight services for men last week in St. James's, Piccadilly. The services were arranged by the White Cross League.

On Monday, the Duke of Connaught opened the new St. George's Church Mission-rooms in the Camp at Aldershot, which have been built by subscriptions, which includes £1,000 given by Miss Brice as a memorial to her father.

A well-attended meeting of the Islington Ruridecanal Conference was held at the Wilson Memorial Hall on the evening of Tuesday, February 23, when Sir Paget Bowman clearly demonstrated the need for and described the origin of "The Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund."

Canon Trench, the new vicar of Kendal, calls attention in his monthly letter to the insufficient liberality of many members of his congregation. He states that on a recent Sunday evening 491 out of 557 coins which were collected were either pennies or half-pennies, only one coin was above a shilling, and of shillings there were only six.

A great loss has been sustained by the Church Army in the very sudden death of Captain Woodhouse, the evangelist in charge of the "Hereford No. 1" Mission Van, which occurred at Eye, Leominster, last week. He had gone from Eye to Hereford to assist at some special mission services there in connection with the Church Army on Friday, and on returning to Eye Vicarage complained of feeling unwell, and retired to bed. Pneumonia rapidly developed, and he passed away on Thursday morning full of peace and trust in the Master whom he had so faithfully served.

The missions in the Selkirk diocese cannot be efficiently conducted at a less expense than from £1800 to £2000. Of this the C.M.S. provide £1200, leaving at least £600 to be provided from other sources. In fact, the salaries of the mission agents now engaged in the diocese, and unprovided for by the C.M.S., amount to £600. An effort is being made to raise £300 per annum in Canada, and a like sum in England. Bishop Bompas would gladly welcome two or three more missionaries if only their salaries could be guaranteed. Communications may be made to the secretaries of the C.M.S., Salisbury-square.

Congregational.

Rev. Owen Enoch has entered on the pastorate at Shaldon.

Rev. J. Thomson has been recognised as pastor at Toller, Kettering.

A series of mission services held at Brigg have awakened much interest.

Rev. W. A. H. Legg has been recognised as pastor at King-street, Maidstone.

Wellingborough Chapel reports 729 members. In the Sunday-school are 1567 scholars.

Rev. Henry Gardner has been recognised as pastor at Tettenhall Wood, Wolverhampton.

The church at Lion Walk, Colchester, reports much vigorous work, and four outlying mission stations.

Moat Chapel, East Grinstead, reports that the membership had more than doubled during the past four years and a-half.

Rev. W. F. Clarkson's church, Above Bar, Southampton, reports 356 members, of whom forty were received during the past year.

Rev. F. Longman, eldest son of the late pastor at Heytesbury, and who has spent seven years in India as a missionary, is visiting his former home, and conducted the services at Heytesbury Chapel.

The annual meeting of the Rev. J. P. Gledstone's congregation at Streatham Hill showed many features of encouragement. It was noted by the pastor that the affiliated work at Horselydown and the mission at Gedling-street were full of activity and life. Details of many phases of Christian and personal effort were given, indicating a vast amount of inspired enthusiasm.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, speaking at the annual meeting of Carr's-lane Church, held in Birmingham Town Hall, stated that they had completed the purchase of the chapel in Moseley-street, belonging to the Methodist New Connexion. They intended to turn the chapel into a mission-hall, to be open week evenings as well as on Sundays. There is to be a thorough canvass of the neighbourhood, which is one of the poorest in the city.

Calls.—Rev. A. F. Bartlett, late of Backup, to Queen's-walk, Nottingham; Rev. R. M. Ross, to Old Chapel, Stroud; Rev. D. Williams, of Carmarthen, to Shenandoah, U.S.A.; Rev. Morgan Daniel, of Yale, to Hirael, Bangor.

Resignations.—Rev. G. P. Jarvis, of High Wycombe; Rev. D. M. Jenkins, of Craven-hill, Bayswater.

Baptist.

Mr. J. Homer has been recognised as pastor at Stanton-road, Barnes.

Rev. W. Maynard, of Syston, has been recognised as pastor at Sileby.

At Ilfracombe, Rev. T. Philpot has been conducting a series of evangelistic meetings.

Rev. J. Mountain's new charge at Tunbridge Wells, St. John's-road Free Church, is to be opened early this month.

Rev. F. Oliver, of Meltham, has conducted a successful mission at Mills Hill, Chadderton, Lancs. On the 14th of this month he will take the oversight of the church for three months.

Rev. Wm. C. Miniſie, who recently resigned the pastorate of Lansdowne, Bournemouth, has accepted an invitation to Sion Jubilee Church, Bradford, and will commence his ministry there in April.

Rev. and Mrs. Lawson Forfeitt have arrived in England on furlough. Rev. William Forfeitt, with his wife, left Bopoto station on December 24, expecting to leave Matadi by the February Antwerp Mail.

At Potter's Bar the 107th anniversary and the thirteenth of the pastorate of Rev. Jesse Dupée, were celebrated on the 21st and 23rd ult. Revs. G. Twentyman, Percy J. Smart, Mr. Reuben Baughen, and the pastor took part.

At the annual breakfast meeting of the Zenana Society, to be held in the Holborn Restaurant on April 28, Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., will preside, and the speakers will include Miss Isabel Angus, Miss Ewing, and Miss Farrer, M.B., of India.

Rev. Thomas Lewis reports scarcity of food in the district of San Salvador, Africa, owing to repeated visitations of locusts. "The prospect," he writes, "for the coming year is getting very alarming. From all the towns in the district we hear the same tale: "The locusts have eaten up all our corn and cassava."

The Baptist Zenana Mission has accepted the offer of service in India of Miss Edith Peel, late of Agra, who will be stationed in Dacca. Miss Foord has left Southampton for Tai-Yuen-Fu in Shansi, North China, intending to devote herself mainly to refuge work among women suffering from the opium curse.

The annual meeting of the church at Salter's Hall, Islington, N., proved a successful gathering. The church being without a pastor, the chair was occupied by Mr. James Skinner. After a careful revision of the church roll, the number of members is 310. The reports of the various societies were all encouraging.

The Baptist Chapel, Kirton-in-Lindsey (Rev. W. Smith), being very old and out of repair, and requiring more Sunday-school room, it has been decided to take down the house and bring the school and chapel forward, and also to reseat the latter and make it more comfortable. The society dates from 1663. The members (chiefly working class) have raised a little over £100.

The arrangements for the Spring Assembly of the Baptist Union have now been made. On Monday afternoon, April 26, Rev. E. G. Gange will open the Home Mission Centenary Bazaar in the King's Hall, Holborn Restaurant, and in the evening will preside at the first session of the Assembly in Bloomsbury Chapel. At the second session, on Wednesday evening, in Bloomsbury Chapel, the President will deliver his address. At the third session, on Thursday morning, Rev. F. J. Benskin, of Huddersfield, will read a paper on "Hindrances to Spiritual Life in the Present Day." This will be followed by resolutions on public questions, and an address by Dr. McLaren on church extension.

Calls.—Rev. F. Fells, of Hartley-row, to Beccles; Rev. J. W. Humbly, of Clayton, Bradford, to Portmahon, Sheffield; Mr. A. T. Brainsby, to Barnoldswick; Rev. B. A. Evans, of Preston, to Barmouth.

Resignations.—Rev. T. S. Fidge, of Fleet, Hants; Rev. I. H. James, of Heywood.

Methodist.

A new Gospel car has been started in Exeter district.

Stirring missionary meetings have been held in Cardiff Wesleyan chapels.

Evangelistic services are being conducted at Redruth by Sister Ethel, of Bowron House.

At Kingsley Park, Northampton, a twelve days' mission has been held by Mr. R. M. Seager.

At Copperhouse Chapel, Hayle, Mr. W. Sampson is continuing his mission with good results.

Rev. Edward Davidson has concluded a mission at King-street, Derby, followed by many tokens of good result.

The Primitive Methodists have of late made marked progress in Cardiff, one of the most vigorous centres being at Sparkhill.

Miss Bowden has conducted a mission at Cheriton Fitzpaine, many inquirers being reported. The mission is being continued by Rev. J. Mules.

Mr. George Hooper has conducted a mission at the Paradise Chapel, Blackburn. Large congregations assembled every night, and many went into the inquiry-room.

At Norfolk-road Chapel, Brighton, the work is reported as flourishing and full of promise. Special meetings, held in connection with the reopening, have been marked by much enthusiasm.

Examinations have been held in connection with the scheme for the religious and denominational instruction of the young people of Free Methodism; 1193 were present, as compared with 871 last year. The first prize was taken by a London scholar.

The members of the Manchester Mission, at the Central Hall, Oldham-street, presented, last Friday, Rev. S. F. Collier, superintendent of the Mission, with a substantial memorial of his ten years' service in Manchester, together with an illuminated address.

Presbyterian.

The work at Trinity, Swindon, is reported as prosperous.

The third anniversary of Rev. David McQueen's pastorate at East India-road, Poplar, has been celebrated.

The Ealing congregation reports great encouragement and steady progress. Dr. Thain Davidson is full of activity and hopefulness.

Willesden reports 118 additions during the year, the net increase being 69, leaving the membership at 531. The schools, societies, and missions in connection show increases on the previous year, and are reported as being in a flourishing condition.

Mr. W. M. Christie, missionary teacher at Aleppo, in connection with the Presbyterian Church of England Foreign Mission, is now home for a short time, and is engaged in visiting the churches in the interests of his work among the Jews and the Armenians. He was in the thick of the Armenian massacres.

Rev. William Watson, of Trinity, Claughton, having received an invitation to succeed Dr. Drummond at Belhaven, Glasgow, has announced that he had come to the conclusion that it was his duty to remain at Claughton. This decision gave great satisfaction, as his labours at Claughton have been most abundant in result.

Three conferences on the Christian Endeavour movement have been held by London Presbyterians; the first in Bow-road Church, the second and third in Notting-hill and Regent-square Churches. Rev. E. J. Gilchrist, of Ipswich, was the principal speaker at each. The conferences were mainly attended by Sunday-school teachers and workers, the object being to learn how the societies progressed in other places, and inquire as to the desirability of their adoption by churches generally.

Calls.—Rev. T. G. Taylor, of Eyemouth, to Zion, Kendal; Rev. S. Beerie, of Firth, Orkney, to Arthur's-hill, Newcastle; Rev. J. Cairns, of Glasgow, to Crieff (assistant); Rev. J. W. Henderson, to Kinnoul, Perth; Rev. J. E. McOuat, to Logiealmond (U.P.).

Fallen Asleep.
